Later, party representatives explained their views. The RPP [Republican People's Party] spokesman said the RPP would vote in favor of the proposal to extend martial law in 18 provinces by 2 months and would vote against the declaration of martial law in Izmir and Hatay. The spokesman of the other parties said they would vote in favor of both proposals.

The voting on the declaration of martial law in Izmir and Hatay was carried out by a show of hands and reading of names. The proposal on the 2-month extension of the martial law in 18 provinces was passed unanimously.

DEMIREL ADDRESSES PARTY LEGISLATIVE GROUPS ON ANARCHY

TA201838 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 20 Feb 80 TA

[Text] Justice Party leader and Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel has noted that Turkey is faced with the need for an administrative method which lies between martial law and normal order. Demirel said this today at the joint meeting of his party's National Assembly and Senate groups.

Demirel said there was a need for a state of emergency law and a change in the Constitution. Demirel then continued: What we want to accomplish in this way is to bolster the state's democratic authority. No one should worry about a totalitarian regime emerging. If the state's authority is eroded and a void is created, then the bandit will fill it with terror and with an arbitrary administration. This is a situation which must be handled by the state. The state's survival is at stake. I consider it exceptionally important for the state of emergency law to be passed by our parliament with a great consensus.

Pointing out that Turkey was being disturbed by others and not by itself, Demirel said that ruthlessly confronting those disturbing the country and destroying these centers of treason were the only way to insure peace and tranquillity.

Demirel stressed that everyone would have to take a definite stand and declare on whose side he is. Everyone must declare whether he is on the side of the state or the bandit so that the people can see, Demirel said. He added: No more support should be given to the bandit. Pointing out that the treacherous gangs disturbing Turkey were not stronger than the state, Demirel said that the struggle waged through loyalty to the laws, the state and the republic and within the framework of the law would definitely be successful.

Demirel recalled that the government had brought before the parliament most of the bills it said it would bring within the first 100 days of its rule and that most of them had already been enacted.

Emphasizing that a great struggle is being waged to apprehend perpetrators of incidents who are still at large, Demirel said: We shall deal with these gangs of anarchists, including their leaders and followers. Our strategy and plans have been proven correct. We are mercilessly dealing with the treacherous centers disturbing Turkey as a state. The roots of the treacherous centers will be dried up. It is when this is achieved that Turkey will be relieved.

RPP'S ECEVIT REVIEWS RECENT DEVELOPMENTS

[Text] Ankara, 20 Feb (AA)--The threat against the regime and the rights of the working people "is no longer on the horizon or at the threshold, it has already entered the building in the form of a Trojan horse called the (recently-announced) economic measures package," Republican People's Party [RPP] (main opposition) leader Bulent Ecevit told a press conference today.

Terming Prime Minister Demirel's recent statement that the package was not "political" as an "illogical argument," Ecevit said: "This is a potentially dangerous argument. Certain circles may start saying, if the decisions taken are not of a political character, then there is no need for political parties, politicians, politics, political rights and freedoms in order to solve the problems. One wonders whether Mr Demirel indeed intends to have those circles reach such a conclusion."

Turkey has two alternatives, Ecevit said, stressing that one (words indistinct) the society hand in hand with workers or hand in hand with those exploiting the working people. "The Demirel government has made its choice, and democracy and the rights of the working people have been put into jeopardy," he said.

The RPP established a workers committee as the first step towards the drive to rally workers' support, with organization efforts to [passage indistinct] certain interest groups." It was the government's attitude which provoked such incidents, Ecevit said, adding that the RPP had an important mission which could only be accomplished hand in hand with the workers. The RPP would fight against "the threat that the economic measures package would lead to a different political regime" through peaceful and legal channels and do its best to protect the workers from the "plots" in the making, he noted.

It would be quite unfair to blame the "youth and the children" for the developments in Turkey since those developments could not possibly be isolated from the injustices of the existing economic and social order, Ecevit said.

Referring to the "government's provocations," Ecevit said the government had done its best to provoke and leave unsolved differences between employers and workers in many plants. "For example," he said, "they postponed the strike at the Turkish Airline (THY), but failed to postpone the enforcement of the lock-out announced by the Turkish Airlines officials." There was "something being plotted" at the THY. "They may be trying to hand over to the private sector some of the most profitable THY lines," he stressed. In TARIS [the agricultural sales cooperative union] and in the state monopoly's cigarette factories there were similar "plots," he added.

Turkish Army

The Turkish Army would not become a tool for the imposition on Turkey of a "South American model," Ecevit said, adding that those who aspire to bring that model were aware of that fact and [words indistinct] were trying to organize certain organizations "some of them legal, (?some) of them illegal."

LE MONDE CARRIES TEXT OF EEC MINISTERS' STATEMENT ON AFGHANISTAN

[Unattributed report: "The Text of the Statement"]

1--The Nine devoted the main part of their deliberations to examining the situation created by the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan;

2--They noted their unanimity on the analysis of the situation and on the conclusions which should be drawn from it. In this respect they think that the declaration they issued on 15 January is still fully valid;

3--They stressed in particular that the objective is still to obtain the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan, and they intend to try to create the right conditions for this withdrawal;

4--They also hope to find ways of restoring a situation in keeping with the resolution passed by the UN General Assembly on 14 January calling on all states to respect the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of Afghanistan and its status as a nonalined state and to refrain from any interference in the country's internal affairs;

5--They think that, in this spirit, a constructive solution to the present crisis could be found in a formula enabling a neutral Afghanistan to be placed outside the competition between the powers;

6--Consequently they decided to examine this point in greater detail and discuss it with friendly countries and allies and with all countries concerned for the region's balance and stability.

UK FOREIGN OFFICE SPOKESMAN CITED ON EEC 'DIFFERENCES'

LD211552 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1505 GMT 21 Feb 80 LD

[Text] The American secretary of state, Mr Cyrus Vance, arrived at Heathrow this afternoon following his visits to Germany and France. Accompanied by his wife, Grace, he was met by Ambassador Kingman Brewster and drove off to his talks with the foreign secretary, Lord Carrington. He declined to make any statement. A spokesman for the United States Embassy said the talks were "part of an on-going series of consultations on Southwest Asia," but he added that discussions on an Olympic boycott were likely to figure at the meeting.

The Foreign Office today acknowledged "differences" among the nine Common Market countries on a boycott of the Moscow Olympics. But the spokesman declined to comment on a report from Paris that France was in a minority of one in blocking a Common Market call for a boycott at a meeting of foreign ministers in Rome on Tuesday. A spokesman said that differences among the Nine were clear from their publicly stated positions. Mrs Thatcher's support for a boycott made Britain's position clear. In Whitehall it is acknowledged that France is largely isolated among the Nine, but the British Government, it seems, feels that little will be gained by acknowledging this in public.

Mr Vance is visiting London for 1 day as part of a European tour to seek a coordinated response to the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. After talks this evening at the Foreign Office, Mr Vance will be Lord Carrington's guest at dinner.

STUDENTS BRIEFLY OCCUPY SALVADORAN CONSULATE IN ANTWERP

PA211501 Madrid EFE in Spanish 1431 GMT 21 Feb 80 PA

[Text] Antwerp, Belgium, 21 Feb (EFE)--Students of Antwerp University today occupied for several hours the Salvadoran Consulate in support of the Salvadoran people's struggle for democratic freedoms. After speaking with local authorities, the 12 occupiers peacefully left the consulate when they received assurances that their demands would be transmitted to the Belgian Government.

In a communique, the students said their action was meant to express "solidarity with the workers, peasants, priests and students struggling for justice and democracy in El Salvador." They also criticized "the atmosphere of terror which is currently reigning in El Salvador, where 13 students were recently killed in a clash with the National Guard."

The unarmed occupiers placed placards in front of the consulate asking for the release of political prisoners, the establishment of democratic freedoms and the agrarian reform and the end of U.S. interference and CIA activities in El Salvador. The students also asked for a review of the diplomatic relations between Belgium and El Salvador and the suspension of Belgian arms sales.

Before the occupiers abandoned the consulate, the local authorities promised they would make these demands known to Belgian Prime Minister Wilfried Martens (Christian Democrat) and Foreign Minister Henri Simonet (Socialist).

A demonstration by some 20 persons was also held in front of the consulate in support of these demands at the same time the occupation was occurring.

VAN AGT RETURNS FOR DEBATE ON FINANCE MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

LD211700 Hilversum Domestic Service in Dutch 1630 GMT 21 Feb 80 LD

Debate Postponed

[Excerpt] The letter in which Minister of Finance Andriessen requested his resignation will not be submitted to the Second Chamber, as the minister's request for resignation is being held over for further consideration.

This appears from a statement by Prime Minister Van Agt which was read out in the chamber by Chairman Dolman. Opposition leader Den Uyl insisted this afternoon that the chamber should be allowed to inspect the resignation letter. The Second Chamber will continue its debate in about an hour, following the verbal statement which the chamber has been promised by Prime Minister Van Agt.

Van Agt Statement

LD212044 Hilversum Domestic Service in Dutch 1905 GMT 21 Feb 80 LD

[Live relay of address by Netherlands Prime Minister Andreas Van Agt before the Second Chamber of the States General]

[Text] Mr Chairman: In my letter to you of 20 February, I informed you that the finance minister had told me of his request to be relieved of his duties. In themeantime, Mr Andriessen has asked her majesty the queen to accept his resignation as minister of finance. The secretary of state for finance has made the same request. The queen has held these requests for further consideration.

I appreciate being given the opportunity to make a statement about this. Last Monday the cabinet reached agreement on the main features of the necessary adjustments to the 1980 socioeconomic policy. This was followed by further deliberations with the group chairmen of the Chrsitian Democratic Appeal and the People's Party for Freedom and Democracy in this chamber. These further deliberations were considered desirable because not all ministers had been able to agree with the decision of the Cabinet Council.

Yesterday, the finance minister decided to ask that he be relieved of his duties. The Cabinet Council was then convened for an emergency meeting to reflect on the situation. The remaining ministers have not found any reason to make alterations in the conclusions concerning the 1980 socioeconomic policy, which the Cabinet Council adopted on 18 February.

Mr Chairman, while observing the good custom of not supplying information concerning the progress of consultations in the Cabinet Council, I am willing to state that the discussions which the council has conducted in the past few days, especially yesterday, concerning the consequences which Mr Andriessen believes will result from the decision taken, have been characterized by the express desire to make yet another attempt to retain Mr Andriessen as minister of finance. We can only respect Mr Andriessen's decision to maintain his request to resign, but we also regret it because he is not only a capable minister but a highly valued colleague and, for many of us, a personal friend. Mr Andriessen's request to resign does not alter the basis of the cabinet.

Meanwhile, the Cabinet Council has continued consultations on the 1980 socioeconomic policy. Today the discussions within the cabinet were concluded, and their results were expressed in a letter which the minister of social affairs has sent to the Labor Foundation and to the Council for Consultation for Trade. Mr Chairman, you and the members of this chamber have received a copy of this letter for your information.

SCHMIDT: RELATIONS WITH FRANCE, U.S. EQUALLY IMPORTANT

ID221226 Hamburg DPA in German 1019 GMT 22 Feb 80 ID

[Text] Stuttgart--Chancellor Schmidt has stressed that the Federal Republic's relations with France and the United States rank equally in importance. In a speech before the SPD Party Council in Stuttgart, a shortened version of which was published today, Schmidt said that the Federal Republic would be failing in an important sector of crisis management "if we allowed situations to arise in which we had to choose between our most important allies, let us say between France and the United States." Even so, the link with the United States is the core of German security.

Reviewing the position of the Federal Republic in the present crisis during his speech to the "little SPD congress" last night, the chancellor emphasized the need to uphold German interests. However, this can only be done in cooperation with the European Community, with the North Atlantic alliance, "especially with the United States and France."

There is no country, the chancellor continued, whose national interests correspond to the policy of equilibrium and detente as much as the Federal Republic. "We have the greatest interest in keeping the present international crisis under control by deescalating crisis management."

As specific elements of German policy in this situation, the chancellor mentioned, among other things, the strengthening of defense capability, a joint concept for the political and economic stabilization of the Third World countries mainly affected by the Soviet action, and efforts for progress on arms control. Concerning economic measures, the principle for the Federal Republic is "not to seek advantages from measures of the other parties in the alliance but observation of agreements." Regarding the Olympic games, it is a matter of appealing to the sense of responsibility of the USSR "to create prerequisites allowing the Olympic games to take place in Moscow."

Schmidt was optimistic about the chances of overcoming the crisis. As during past major East-West crises, there is a realistic chance of creating a new, stable equilibrium, "for this we need imagination, determination, willingness to make sacrifices, mental and political discipline and, above all, commonsense to evaluate matters." Schmidt warned against creating fear in the present situation, "for in a state of fear commonsense can disappear."

From people present at the meeting it was learned that Schmidt, apparently in the face of speculations about disagreement between himself and Federal Foreign Minister Genscher, emphasized the "exemplary degree of cooperation and harmony with Genscher during the past 8 weeks."

Schmidt suggested that the West's response to the action of the USSR should take the form of a division of labor. Coordinated moves by the West would be made easier, and the possibility of their having an effect on the USSR increased, he said, "if the Western countries were to come to an understanding on a distribution of roles and division of labor."

The aim of the Western response, Schmidt said, is the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan and the stabilization of Southwest Asia and the Middle East. The aim of the West's long-term policy is a stable balance of strength and a clear containment of the Soviet's reach into the Third World, especially in the Middle East.

STRAUSS INTERVIEWED ON FOREIGN POLICY ISSUES

DW211400 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 1915 GMT 20 Feb 80 DW

[Excerpts from Bonn correspondent Friedhelm Ost irterview with Franz-Josef Strauss, Bavarian minister-president, CSU Chairman and CDU/CSU candidate for chancellor, on the program "Balance"--recorded]

[Excerpt] [Question] You said that we as the Federal Republic of Germany must make a contribution to European solidarity and Transatlantic unity in order first to confront the expansionist trend of the Soviet Union and, second, to find an answer to the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. What kind of an economic and financial contribution do you have in mind, actually?

[Answer] A bunch of measures are involved. First there is the achievement of a sensible division of labor with regard to military defense. That will not work, however, without intensified efforts on all sides--including our side as well. Then the problem of trade with the East must be resolved by common action. I do not believe that trade with the East ought to be ended, but I believe that give and take must be balanced and that, most of all, our exports must not be increasingly financed in advance.

Moreover, we must take on certain commitments such as, for example, restoring Turkey economically as well as militarily. It must be a stable element in the community of Atlantic nations. In the community of NATO alliance partners, we must be prepared to render economic assistance to Pakistan, economic assistance in the widest sense of the word. Then a particularly close intermingling of Arab and European interests is probably necessary. These are two spheres of partnership that can complement each other very well.

[Question] Particularly the U.S. Government is pressing the Federal Republic of Germany to consider taking certain boycott measures against the Soviets in trade with the East. Do you see an opportunity to become politically involved in that business at a time when German large-scale industrialists and bankers are negotiating new, great projects with the Soviet Union?

[Answer] I believe we must not be and cannot be the squad leader. The Western industrial states of Europe and North America ought to agree on a new or old opinion, but at any rate an opinion that must be newly formulated. There has been an embargo list for strategic goods before; there have been common rules for our conduct; but in such a case the others must cooperate also. The Americans must give us a credible guarantee that they will not demand a hard policy today and tomorrow initiate a soft policy without coordinating with the allies. In other words, our policy must be continuous, reliable and predictable.

[Question] But isn't there a danger that we will receive a very poor reply from the Soviet Union if we engage in economic boycott measures--such as new unrest in Berlin or a discontinued gas supply?

[Answer] I believe the interests of the Soviet Union in economic cooperation with the West will continue in the future, maybe even more than before. For economic reasons the Soviet Union, last but not least, has switched its cold war policy to detente policy. Cold war and detente are two sides of the same coin. I believe--and I know that this is a hard phrase--that trade must subordinate itself to the flag. We cannot expect the West--particularly not America--to support and readily render assistance in the hour of need, if we on our part say: Business first. That must be balanced. The services of the West should not be greater than those of the East, and they must be made at the same time.

[Question] Relatively large projects are being negotiated between the Federal Government and the East Berlin government. Would you be in favor of postponing a large-scale project in this situation?

[Answer] I do not know whether the fact that Helmut Schmidt's invitation was canceled rather rudely ought to be taken as a reason to be particularly diligent with regard to promoting these large-scale projects between the Federal Republic and the GDR. We know that the Warsaw Pact states, despite their great economic and social problems, follow only political priorities. Helmut Schmidt's visit to East Berlin has been canceled; Mr Genscher's Prague visit has been called off; and Mr Albrecht's visit to Warsaw is off. A visit to Moscow by Helmut Schmidt could not take place under pleasant auspices either, although he tries very hard again to solicit benevolence there. Occasionally he is cross with his foreign minister because the latter stresses the necessity of having close ties with the United States, so much so that Helmut Schmidt, with his detente policy ideas, and the leftists of his party naturally begin to sweat and see difficulties.

[Answer] I do not see much sense in his going to Moscow now; but we have shown much readiness to maintain an invitation, to accept an invitation, and to assume there was an invitation even if none was extended. I believe we ought to have a bit more self-confidence. After so many questions on what is appreciated, we ought to ask what is correct.

[Question] Great efforts are being made. The federal finance minister was in Turkey and Greece to grant financial aid. Do you think this makes sense? In what framework should this take place?

[Answer] Economic aid for Turkey is necessary, last but not least because of the extremely difficult situation that has been created in Turkey by the increased oil prices. Turkey cannot pay for its oil imports, even with all its foreign trade income. I think we could be very helpful to Turkey in satisfying the country's economic needs and reestablishing a social balance in the country. That will be a long-term and certainly a costly program.

Things are not going too well in the southeastern corner of NATO if we think of Cyprus, the Greek-Turkish antagonism and the unresolved Arab-Israeli problem. We ought to support Turkey militarily, too, not by dispatching troops--there is no need to do that--but by creating a better material situation there. Despite all my affection for the United States, I considered the arms embargo imposed on Turkey in part out of moral considerations--it has been said--a real political mistake. I have no reason to revise that opinion.

[Answer] We are not a Christmas goose that one can pluck or disembowel, but Turkey must be in a position again where it can become politically stable, an important military factor, and able to fulfill its function as the southeastern pillar of NATO.

[Question] You also believe that closer contacts ought to be established with the Arab countries, the oil countries. Do you believe that concrete beginnings have been made in this direction?

[Answer] I regard economic and military security as identical. The one who endangers our economic security also endangers our military security, and vice versa. Our economic security, our economic stability, depends on our economic system--market economy--and on the diligence, ability and achievements of the people. It depends on a sufficient supply of energy and raw materials, even if they are used most carefully and efficiently at acceptable prices. We cannot say that often and clearly enough to our Arab friends.

Anyone who lays a hand on our vital oil lines or the raw material bases in Africa to make us dependent, to make us susceptible to blackmail, must count on our serious defense and resistance. But that calls for solidarity between our Arab and African friends, on the one hand, and the Europeans and particularly the Federal Republic of Germany, on the other. We--I do not mean the Federal Republic especially--must give the oil countries a guarantee that they will not fall victim to the next helpful action.

BOELLING DENIES PROMISING TO PARTICIPATE IN OLYMPIC BOYCOTT

[Text] Bonn--Government spokesman Klaus Boelling today described as false those reports that the chancellor and Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher had promised U.S. Secretary of State Cyrus Vance in Bonn that the Federal Republic would take part in an Olympic boycott. The Americans certainly clearly knew that Bonn would stand by the side of the United States if political developments prevented the Olympic games, Boelling said in an interview with Westdeutscher Rundfunk.

Boelling described as absurd any competition between government and opposition for domestic political reasons under the slogan "Who Is the Better American?" He said that "Washington is not Byzantium. For this reason there should be no competition in Byzantinism."

The United States naturally had always been aware that partnership in the alliance is not expressed by approval with everything and everybody. It was one of the great qualities of the United States that, contrary to other alliance systems, it did not want yes-men, but partners bringing their own views and thoughts into a Western concept.

GENSCHER, LORD CARRINGTON TO MEET IN BONN 26 FEB

[Text] Bonn--Lord Carrington will meet with Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher in Bonn next Tuesday to discuss the international situation. This was confirmed by the FRG Foreign Ministry today. The most important topics will be the consequences of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan and London's desire for a reduction in its contribution to the Common Market budget.

The meeting will also prepare the next German-British summit between Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and Mrs Thatcher in London on 28 March. The summit will be attended by Genscher, Carrington and other ministers.

DEFENSE MINISTER RESTATES POSITION ON EXPANDING NATO AREA

DW221118 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 2000 GMT 21 Feb 80 DW

[Peter Kustermann interview with Federal Defense Minister Hans Apel--apparently recorded in Bonn]

[Text] [Question] The Soviet news agency TASS primarily links the planned voyages of the cruisers Leutjen and Bayern--and I quote TASS verbatim--with the intention of the United States to include its NATO partners in the dangerous war preparations outside NATO's area of activity. How do you assess this statement?

[Answer] This is pure polemics. The Soviets know just as well as we that ships of the Federal Navy undertake voyages to other countries and other continents every year. This voyage was planned long ago. Next week the Federal Security Council will define its stand on the subject, but I am convinced that we will go through with the voyage because I fail to see why friendship visits by the German Federal Navy which have nothing to do with topical problems in the region, should be called off.

[Question] In any event, you will advocate the view in the Federal Security Council that the two cruisers should sail?

[Answer] Exactly.

[Question] Are there any emerging NATO forces that are trying to extend the present range of tasks?

[Answer] No, there are no apparent forces. We are in agreement. My American colleague Harold Brown also pointed out that we ought to limit ourselves to the NATO area, and that nobody intends, for example, to use Federal German troops outside the NATO area. We will decisively resist that, although it is not necessary because nobody expects us to do anything like this.

[Question] NATO staff exercises have been called off, allegedly at the request of the German side. Is this information correct, and what were the reasons?

[Answer] First, they have not been called off, only postponed. Second, it is definitely wrong to say that this was done at German request. NATO has made a political assessment and considers it advisable to postpone that exercise. I also consider it advisable, in view of the international tensions which keep us sufficiently busy.

TV CORRESPONDENT EXPELLED FROM YUGOSLAVIA

[Summary] Belgrade--Yugoslav authorities today expelled the Vienna-based ARD [first German television service] correspondent, Peter Miroschnikoff, and banned him from entering Yugoslavia until the end of the year for arranging an unauthorized television interview with Franjo Tudjman, a retired Yugoslav general living in Zagreb. In the wake of the 1971 political crisis in Croatia, Tudjman had been arrested with other Croatian intellectuals on charges of nationalist activities. Miroschnikoff left Belgrade for Frankfurt this afternoon. His two cameramen also have to leave Yugoslavia.

VANCE ENDS TALKS; U.S. ENVOY 'CRITICIZES' FRANCE

LD211328 Paris Domestic Service in French 1300 GMT 21 Feb 80 LD

[Text] American Secretary of State Cyrus Vance finished lunch a few minutes ago. He is at the moment on board a plane bound for London, the last leg of his European tour. This morning Cyrus Vance held pre-lunch talks with the minister of foreign affairs, Jean Francois-Poncet. The two men discussed the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan. Cyrus Vance noted there was similarity of views between the two countries, but also certain differences.

In a speech at the American Club last night, the U.S. ambassador to Paris, Arthur Hartman, spoke about the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan in a way which was not much to the liking of the Foreign Ministry. He apparently criticized France for its lack of solidarity toward Washington regarding the crisis over Afghanistan.

GREMETZ HITS MITTERRAND STAND IN SOCIALIST INTERNATIONAL

[Unattributed report: "Socialist International Supports Imperialism's Interference"]

[Text] Speaking recently at Villeneuve-Saint-Georges, Maxime Gremetz, PCF Politburo member and Central Committee secretary, mentioned in particular the Socialist Party's [PS] alinement with Giscardian positions. This alinement, he pointed out, was confirmed at the Socialist International meeting in Vienna.

In the adopted resolution the superficial references to detente and dialog could not hide the essential point: the similarity between the Socialist International's attitude and the declaration published after the Franco-German summit.

Although information on the opinions expressed only filtered through in dribs and drabs it is significant. The leaders of the Socialist International, of which Francois Mitterrand is a vice president, were unanimous in their condemnation of the Soviet presence in Afghanistan, which they described as "monstrous."

To be honest, this was to be expected from the Socialist International. This organization tries to disregard the vast peoples' liberation movement which characterizes our era, and it supports repeated interference by U.S. or French imperialism. However, how can we fail to see the social democratic leaders' hypocrisy?

While they talk of the "monstrous" situation in Afghanistan they politely inform--and only in a semiofficial way--Israeli Prime Minister Begin that some measures he is taking are complicating the situation in the region. The occupation of the West Bank and Gaza, the confiscation of theArab population's land, the forced colonization, the ban on political activities and the prosecution of mayors is not monstrous!

The existence of 5,000 to 6,000 Palestinian political prisoners rotting in Israeli prisons and subjected to ill-treatment and torture is not monstrous!

The case of Intisar Qasim, the 15-year-old Palestinian girl arrested for demonstrating against the imprisonment of the Nabulus mayor, who was beaten for hours by Israeli officers and is now in prison without having been tried and without being allowed to see a lawyer, is not monstrous!

The occupation of southern Lebanon, the bombing of Tyre and An-Nabatiyah, the tens of thousands of refugees in the camps is not monstrous! I have seen the refugee camps, the poverty, the hundreds of thousands of Palestinians stripped of a homeland. What the Socialist leaders regard as monstrous is peoples liberating themselves....

Francois Mitterrand also distinguished himself in Vienna by approving the increases in the West's defense budget, once again siding completely with NATO positions.

There is worse to come--if that is possible. While Carter, Schmidt and Giscard d'Estaing are now trying to postpone and even cancel the Madrid conference on European security, Francois Mitterrand goes even further. He is resorting to blackmail by saying in essence: We must make our participation in this conference dependent on obtaining concessions from the USSR. It is clear that Francois Mitterrand does not give a damn about security, detente and disarmament; what matters to him is strengthening what he calls the Western camp, in other words the camp of exploitation and imperialism, and he wants to do so by veritable blackmail of the USSR.

It is clear how Francois Mitterrand is alining himself, whether in Vienna or in Paris, and his avowed objective is to weaken our party, hence these direct appeals to Communist militants in an attempt to lure them away from the PCF. From this viewpoint there is a definite continuity in these objectives.

It was at another Socialist International meeting in Vienna in 1972 that Francois Mitterrand explained that he had signed the joint program with the aim of taking 3 million votes from the PCF. Experience has shown that that is not so easy. Both Giscard d'Estaing and Francois Mitterrand have tried but both have failed.

'CONVOLUTED' APPROACH TO INTERNATIONAL SITUATION SCORED

LD210745 Paris FRANCE-SOIR in French 16 Feb 80 pp 1, 8 LD

[Benoit Rayski editorial: "France Must Speak Up"]

[Text] War or peace? For some time--to be exact, since the beginning of the Afghanistan crisis--the world has seemed to vacillatebetween two poles, so acute has the tension between the USSR and the United States become. As for France, it maintains that it is anxious to prevent the former (war) and preserve the latter (peace), and with this end in mind it has shown great caution with respect to American reactions, which have been deemed excessive, clumsy and even hysterical.

Thus, the idea of a Western summit in Bonn has been wrecked by Paris putting forward the assertion that it would be a provocative gesture toward the USSR. Also in Paris, some credence has been attached to Soviet pleas explaining the Kabul coup by a desire to break alleged encirclement by China.

Thus indications that the Soviets could withdraw some of their troops from Afghanistan have been viewed very seriously in Paris. And thus, finally, some people in Paris wonder whether Carter's firmness, shown recently, is not largely due to electoral considerations.

You will have realized that in the background can be detected a certain irritation with the Americans (and the way in which Cyrus Vance invited Western countries to Bonn was certainly no example of diplomatic finesse) and also an avowed and perfectly legitimate desire not to seem to be alining oneself with the United States. [paragraph continues]

However, it would be terrible if this debate and these reproaches were the only matters occupying the minds of our political leaders, since it is necessary to skim away the froth in order to take a cool look at the essence of things--that is to ascertain what the Soviet Union wants to do and can do.

What the USSR wants is to continually extend its domination since this is simply in the nature of that state, which has combined its big power imperialism with a special kind of messianism. However, what the USSR can do is only what we will let it do and allow it to do.

Anxieties

In this sphere Paris' attitude seems much too convoluted in view of the existing situation, which undoubtedly calls for a little less refinement in analysis and a little more instinct in reaction. Would a summit in Bonn have been provocative? Maybe, but it is undoubtedly because the West has been unwilling to engage in this kind of provocation that the USSR has repeatedly been able to indulge in provocations....

Will the Soviets withdraw some of their troops from Afghanistan? Maybe, but how can any importance be attached to "gestures" of this kind which were made in the past in Czechoslovakia and East Germany without in any way changing the situation of those countries?

Is Moscow afraid of being encircled by China? Maybe, but before accepting these "anxieties" as genuine it would undoubtedly be advisable to realize that it is in the interest of the USSR to convince the West that they are....

Is Carter trying to appear tough to impress his electorate? Possibly, but the Soviets have, after all, not invaded Afghanistan merely to facilitate the reelection of the present U.S. President....

Permissive Policy

Nonetheless, it is perfectly legitimate to wonder about the reliability of Carter, who in the past has often shown himself to be hesitant and erratic. Nonetheless, the United States has long pursued a very permissive policy toward the USSR (let us note that at that time no one accused it of alining itself with France...). Nonetheless, the Americans have occasionally been clumsy and the Soviets have often been skillful.

This is why France's policy must be determined completely independently and freely, and Valery Giscard d'Estaing is right in trying to do this. However, such a policy calls for a clear vision and firmness, and the denunciation of the two-bloc system seems to us to lack these two attributes. For there is only one strong and disciplined bloc marching to the sound of guns whenever necessary--the bloc which makes its tanks advance without any qualms in places as far apart as Prague and Kabul and Angola and Ethiopia. It is that bloc--because it does exist and has shown that it does by gaining ground throughout the world--that must be contained and denounced. As for the other, Western, bloc, it only exists on paper--in any case, the independence of France (not to mention any other country) would be sufficient to prove this.

This is why when it comes to choosing targets it is necessary to insure that our priorities are right. This is why the idea of detente, which has given good results as far as domestic policy is concerned (since this idea has emanated from a camp sufficiently strong to be generous and open), cannot be applied at the international level--in the face of the Soviet bloc France is not a powerful country and it must therefore talk to that bloc in a loud, very loud, voice....

DC'S GRANELLI URGES 'NEW APPROACH' TO PCI IN GOVERNMENT

[Report on Robert Sole interview with Italian Christian Democratic Party international relations bureau chief Luigi Granelli in Rome: "The Communist Question Must Be Approached in a New Way"--date not specified]

[Text] Rome--The Christian Democratic Party [DC] has almost always bluntly rejected PCI government participation on principle. Is it reconsidering this veto? You would be justified in thinking so after the interview granted to us by Senator Luigi Granelli, a member of the ruling party's leadership and chief of its international relations bureau.

Our interlocutor did not say that the PCI meets the necessary conditions for holding ministerial portfolios. However, he refused to accept the principle that those conditions do not exist. According to Mr Granelli, "the Communist question must be approached in a new way. The parties should sit down at a table and see whether there is any possibility of an agreement without anticipating the conclusions of the meeting and also without ruling out the formation of a government."

In saying this the DC leader was answering a recent statement by Mr Berlinguer: "We will only take part in negotiations," the PCI secretary general essentially said, "if we are regarded as a governmental force." In other words, the DC must start by lifting its veto. Mr Granelli retorted: "There is no veto. However, we should work together to see whether conditions are right for Communist participation. It is impossible to draw conclusions from a negotiation which has not taken place."

"Overcoming the Blocs"

In fact nobody in Rome predicts an imminent Communist entry into government. The Communists themselves do not seem very anxious to hold ministerial portfolios in such a tricky international period. The only real question is to establish how the main parties can resume contact and cooperate. Mr Granelli, who belongs to the DC's leftwing, thinks this cooperation is vital: "Neither numerical positions nor political conditions enable us to govern without an agreement with the whole left at the moment. The truce which gave birth to the Cossigna cabinet is coming to an end. A government crisis seems inevitable after the recent decisions by the Socialist Party. What other alternative is there for insuring that the country can be governed during the rest of this parliamentary session?"

The DC is not asking the PCI to abandon its character. "The structure of the parties, their programs and principles do not enter into a government negotiation. After World War II Alcide De Gasperi governed with a Stalinist PCI. The reason he broke with the Communists was that they opposed Italy's entry into NATO. From our viewpoint, government agreements can always be called into question. That is why we reject the historical compromise which presupposes something irreversible."

On the other hand, the DC thinks that some conditions must be met in both domestic and foreign policy. In order to govern with the Communists it is vital to "agree on the economic recovery program and the means of fighting terrorism."

What about foreign policy?

"Italy's European and Western commitment must be absolutely clear," Mr Granelli replied, "and so must the consequences of NATO membership. The PCI has made significant progress but many problems remain, especially concerning the view we have of the alliance with the United States by a Europe which, in our view, cannot take a stand equidistant from the two superpowers."

Asked to explain his views further with regard to the Afghan crisis, Mr Granelli said: "The PCI's condemnation of the Soviet invasion is certainly important. Its reservations about the steps taken by the United States are less understandable. These steps aimed at discouraging and ending aggression cannot be put on the same level as the invasion of a state. With each new episode the PCI is gradually showing its disagreement with the USSR on both internal and international questions. However, it has not reached an overall verdict on the reasons which lead the Soviet Union to violate the Helsinki agreements."

The DC expects the PCI to show "explicit solidarity" with Italy's allies. "We do not think," Mr Granelli said, "that in a cold war regime the Communists should change camp. But they must accept Europe and the West without reservations. It is not true that a Europe which is 'neither pro-Soviet nor pro-American' would favor detente. Europe is an ally of the United States and a friend of the Soviet Union. In our view that is the only way of safely working to overcome the blocs."

PCI'S CHIAROMONTE EXAMINES ZACCAGNINI CONGRESS SPEECH

[Apparent text of PCI Secretariat member Gerardo Chiaromonte 15 February statement; first paragraph is L'UNITA introduction]

[Text] Comrade Gerardo Chiaromonte, who is head of the PCI delegation to the Christian Democratic Party [DC] Congress, has commented as follows on the DC secretary's speech:

Deputy Zaccagnini's report to the 14th DC Congress certainly contains some very interesting parts, for instance that concerning the new task of a party which wants to maintain a democratic Catholic inspiration in the situation of moral crisis which Italian society is now experiencing. It almost completely lacks any real reflection on the DC's responsibility for our country's situation. The analysis of the crisis in Zaccagnini's report is very often efficient, but there is not one single point on which the secretary of a party which has been governing Italy for over 30 years managed even to hint at any kind of self-critical argument. And what is more, when discussing the period 1976 through 1979, the responsibility for the termination of the democratic unity majority is placed arbitarily on the PCI, though other parts of the report do acknowledge the Communists' decisive contribution to the defense of democracy during the tragic Moro affair, to the economic and financial recovery and so forth. The DC's serious responsibilities for the termination of national solidarity are mentioned in a very veiled and superficial manner. Above all, a clear option for resolving the political crisis is lacking. The negative prejudice against forming a government with the PCI (which has been reasserted so many times in recent weeks, even by figures close to the DC secretary) has at last been dropped from Zaccagnini's speech; this is a positive and important factor. But he fails to draw from it any political conclusions or practical pointers which could make it possible to overcome the present very difficult situation. Indeed, one gains the impression that an effort is being made to place various kinds of obstacles in the path of the formation of an emergency government. For instance, we found the economic policy pointers rather general and the foreign policy pointers unilateral in their uncritical alinement on many points with the U.S. Government's present stances.

We shall see over the next few days how the congress will develop this political reasoning.

SA CARNEIRO HITS DETENTE 'MISTAKE,' USSR; CRITICIZES EANES

LD220915 Lisbon EXPRESSO in Portuguese 16 Feb 80 pp 1, 16 LD

[Unattributed report: "Government Will Free Private Sector From 'Ghetto'"]

[Text] No denationalization measures will be carried out, but all sectors of the economy will be opened up to private enterprises, with the state retaining control over basic sectors but allowing the play of free competition, Prime Minister Sa Carneiro announced Thursday evening during a live interview lasting about 50 minutes which he granted to Spanish television journalist Joaquin Soler Serrano.

Speaking in Spanish, Sa Carneiro said that his government's stand on the issue of Afghanistan was dictated not only by reasons of principle but also by the need to reduce the influence which the USSR enjoys in Portugal through the Portuguese Communist Party.

According to Sa Carneiro, who acknowledged that the Portuguese stance is perhaps the toughest of all the European countries, the government regards Soviet influence in Portugal as excessive, and, although it is prepared to maintain economic relations with the USSR, it will not continue cultural cooperation with Moscow.

The issue of Afghanistan also enabled the prime minister to state that, in his opinion, the policy of detente was a mistake.

Sa Carneiro believes that detente was a political propaganda operation aimed at reducing the damage caused by the indignation provoked in the West by Khrushchev's [secret] report to the CPSU [1956 Congress] and the publication of [Solzhenitsyn's] "Gulag Archipelago." The operation was highly successful, and the consequences of detente were merely an increase in the USSR's influence in Europe and the weakening of Europe's defense capability. Europe must now strengthen its unity in all fields, including the military field, and should restrict cooperation with the USSR in favor of a greater rapprochement with the United States, China and African and Arab countries, he stated.

At all events, the Portuguese Government will give top priority to entry into the EEC (an enormous challenge, but also an economic and historical necessity), cooperate closely with NATO and put an end to whims about special relations with the Third World and with the nonalined bloc.

Foreign policy, which took up much of the interview, was, moreover, the area concentrated on by Sa Carneiro to exemplify points of disagreement with the president of the republic. His relations with Eanes are--he said--"very cordial," and the disagreements, which are always "discussed openly," do not prevent them both from seeking "an at least working institutional solidarity."

With respect to domestic policy, Sa Carneiro acknowledged the extremely important role played by Eanes in reorganizing and disciplining the armed forces which emerged from the situation experienced in Portugal until 25 November 1975, but criticized the fact that Eanes sometimes addresses civilians like a military man and military personnel like civilians, causing unnecessary trouble in both sectors.

However, the prime minister acknowledged that this attitude on the part of Eanes is due above all to the combining of the roles of president of the republic and commander of the armed forces stipulated by the Constitution.

The present text of the Constitution was one of the biggest "casualties" of the statements by Sa Carneiro, who openly advocated its very radical revision in accordance with a plan which could be summarized in the following threefold formula:

--Deideologize (he stated that one of the text's shortcomings is its excessive ideological content);
--Pluralize (he contended that the Constitution must guarantee the freedom to choose sociopolitical systems other than those of socialism and Marxism);
--Simplify (he maintained that the Constitution should be confined to a broad framework of the organization of the state and citizens' relationships with the state).

The prime minister held the Council of the Revolution in general and some unspecified Council members in particular responsible for many of the country's political difficulties, but expressed his conviction that the Council of the Revolution is one thing and the armed forces are another, and that the latter will accept without difficulty the ending of their direct participation in the state bodies. With respect to the current Council members who persist in engaging in politics, Sa Carneiro can see no course open to them other than that of operating as members of political parties.

However, he was emphatic in upholding the need for the supremacy of the civil power, and asserted: "There are no military democracies."

The issue of the military personnel also enabled the prime minister to express his preference for a civilian candidate for the presidency of the republic.

When asked whether he himself had already chosen the ideal personality in his heart of hearts, Sa Carneiro smiled broadly and replied: "Of course, the answer must be 'no'...."

With respect to the government he heads, Sa Carneiro stated that he is confident it will fully accomplish its aims.

A failure on the part of the Democratic Alliance, especially in this field, would be--he said--"a very grave danger for the democratic system."

Decolonization and the agrarian reform were also discussed. With respect to the former he criticized the governments of Salazar and Caetano for not being able to decolonize in time, making it necessary for the task to be carried out in a revolutionary period.

CUNHAL SAYS VISIT TO ANGOLA 'FRUITFUL AND POSITIVE'

LD171514 Lisbon in Portuguese to Angola Mozambique and Sao Tome and Principe 1200 GMT 17 Feb 80 LD

Cunhal stated that the visit had very positive and fruitful results and enabled the two parties to engage in a broad exchange of views and impressions on the situation in the two countries. I would like to emphasize, he added, that at a time when certain forces in Portugal are interested in worsening relations between the two countries, we note with satisfaction the identity of views between the Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola [MPLA] and the PCP regarding the need to strengthen relations between the two countries on the basis of equality and mutual respect for national sovereignty and independence. According to Cunhal, the PCP delegation had talks with the MPLA leaders, visited a number of factories and went on a trip to Benguela and Lobito, meeting with dockers in the latter port.

PROPOSAL FOR FRIENDLIER PCE-PSOE RELATIONS 'CLARIFIED'

LD151425 Madrid MUNDO OBRERO in Spanish 13 Feb 80 p 9 LD

[Editorial: "Our Proposal to the Spanish Socialist Workers Party (PSOE)"]

[Text] Perhaps we should clarify once again our Central Committee's proposal for a resumption of friendlier relations with the PSOE comrades, because some of these comrades have misunderstood it--that is to say, they are replying to us as if we were advocating a global leftwing alternative to the Union of the Democratic Center [UCD] government's rightwing policy. And for the sake of what they call their "autonomous" blueprint, their response is negative.

We should clarify our proposal once again to see whether we can achieve a more accurate approach to the issue by both sides.

There is no question now of a leftwing government alternative. If the constitutional timetable is observed, elections will not be held until 1983. That will be the time to consider global alternatives. What if the socialists want to contest those elections with an autonomous alternative? That is their right. Whether or not such an alternative is realistic is another matter and is open to question. But this is not something to be discussed now; at best we consider such a discussion very premature.

There are now other very distressing worries. It is a matter of carrying out political activity in all constitutional contexts to prevent the swing to the right which the UCD is imposing on the country and the aggressive resurgence of the extreme rightwing forces which directly threaten the democratic freedoms.

This situation, with its consequences in terms of terrorism and civic insecurity and its effect on all the negative aspects of the economic crisis, is now of much greater concern to the average citizen and leftwing party member than the 1983 elections.

It is a matter of creating a climate of political combativeness, of democratic determination, in opposition to the despair, resignation and fatalism which the UCD is irresponsibly encouraging. And there is nothing that demoralizes the left more than to see its two main parties' inability to reach an understanding even on those topics on which they agree.

Because it is true that there are some important topics on which we do not agree, such as the workers statute and the framework agreements, and we are unlikely to agree on them. In this connection the General Workers Union has sacrificed a great deal to its very problematical conquest of trade union hegemony. And let it be clear once and for all: There is no "two-faced" attitude on the Communists' part allegedly consisting of a very cautious attitude to criticism "at the top," within the leadership, and a very aggressive attitude "below." Some "top" Socialist leaders have demonstrated an aggressiveness and lack of moderation consistent with unleashing an anticommunist offensive among the grassroots and have even threatened to break the municipal agreements. We, on the other hand, have tried to pacify the polemic and to convey a message of calm and rationality to our members: This has been our "two-faced game."

And it has not been dictated by fear. The municipal agreements are in the Socialists' interests at least as much as in our own. Above all, they facilitate maintaining a greater political balance in the country. Likewise, the future existence of left-wing-based autonomous governments has the same objective. When the right talks about a possible autonomous government which would bring a different model of society to Catalonia, we feel this is a mystification which we Communists should not be alone in rejecting. A Catalonian government with a broad leftwing basis could and undoubtedly would pursue a much more progressive policy; but this is a far cry from changing the model of society. A state government might be able to change the model of society but not an autonomous government, whose scope is very precisely circumscribed. Therefore, the role of a leftwing-based autonomous government would be to impart a greater balance to Spain's general policy. In this context, the left must not fall into the snare of the "anti-Marxism, which is now being used--with grave irresponsibility--even by nationalist forces which fail to realize that the generic charges against Marxism in Spain are the prelude to their own condemnation as "red separatists."

Though we now diverge widely in trade union and social policy, we will not transform what we hope is merely a battle for hegemony in this field into a general swing to the right which will make a radical break with all class stands in the most diverse fields. Let us maintain the bridges of cooperation and dialog on all those aspects in which our stands coincide.

Both Socialists and Communists are now equally worried about what seems to be the country's return to the right, because unemployment is spreading, because prices are rocketing, because the education laws mark a clear regression with respect to the Constitution and because the extreme rightwing groups are becoming bolder and are attacking people with impunity.

When the individuals who brutally assassinated a 19-year-old girl are arrested and it is discovered that one of them is an electrical engineer who possesses a whole arsenal of weapons and explosives as well as technical instruments used by the state security bodies and a computer--connected to what terminal and storing what information?--all this country's democrats realize that the conspiracy against the democratic freedoms has ceased to be a trifling matter, as we were led to believe. Since the ETA [Basque Homeland and Freedom] continues to assassinate military chiefs, civil guards, policemen and ordinary peasants, the size of the threat emerges in all its worrisome scale. The bugbear of a coup arises from time to time, and as if that were not enough, they are witnessing the growing threats to detente and the return to the threat of cold war, which made a decisive contribution to the dictatorship's survival.

This is what members from the ranks of both parties are witnessing and what really worries them. We do not propose drawing up any kind of overall leftwing strategy. We propose cooperation in various fields in which we coincide, so as to halt the swing to the right and contain the extreme rightwing. This policy is in their interest, in our interest and the country's interest. We also propose extending this cooperation to the democratic forces as a whole, with no exceptions.

This does not rule out any autonomous blueprint for the 1983 elections. If anything, it insures that in the 1983 elections there will be various blueprints which can be compared and on which the voters can decide in absolute freedom.

SOGAARD CITED ON DEPOTS FOR U.S. HEAVY EQUIPMENT

[Mogens Auning report: "United States Wants Arms Dumps in Denmark"]

[Text] Defense Minister Poul Sogaard has told BERLINGSKE TIDENDE that fuel and ammunition depots for allied airborne reinforcements are being constructed on a number of airbases. "The Americans have also requested the creation of depots for army equipment but the government has not yet reached a decision on this," the defense minister said. He was unwilling to go into details but BERLINGSKE TIDENDE understands that the question concerns the storage of heavy weapons, including tanks and artillery.

The American wish for the forward storage of weapons and equipment in a region where American reinforcements could be expected to intervene in a crisis or war situation should be seen against the background of the very great Soviet naval buildup in recent years.

Transportation by Sea Abandoned

The Americans have changed their tactics so that calculations no longer include the deployment of reinforcements from the United States to Denmark, for example, by sea. According to the new tactics reinforcements will be transported here by military airlift. However, this presupposes that heavy weapons such as tanks and artillery are already in place in the regions where the American troops will operate. This is the backdrop to the BERLINGSKE TIDENDE report yesterday on the creation of depots with U.S. heavy weapons in Norway for a force of 8,000-10,000 men.

Reinforcements Now Under Discussion

The government continued talks yesterday with the Social Democratic Party, the Conservative Party, the Liberals, the Radical Liberals, the Center Democrats and the Christian People's Party on the next Danish defense plan. After the meeting Defense Minister Poul Sogaard told BERLINGSKE TIDENDE that the talks as yet are only "preliminary fencing." Those engaged in the talks have received a number of notes, including one which details defense goals and tasks. "The note leads [word illegible] conducting talks [word illegible] the parties on the problems involved with reinforcements, a subject I believe we have made progress on at Tuesday's meeting," the defense minister said.

At yesterday's defense talks the party representatives were briefed, among other things, on the fact that in the past 5 years defense has spent 110 million kroner on improving working conditions and on the fire service.

PRESS COMMENTS ON TALKS ON U.S. ARMS DEPOTS IN NORWAY

LD211428 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 0920 GMT 21 Feb 80 LD

[Press review on U.S. Arms Depots in Norway]

[Text] The Center Party paper KAINUUN SANOMAT and HELSINGIN SANOMAT [independent] examine the crisis touching the north in connection with Norway's talks with the United States on arms depots to be sited in Norway.

The Center Party paper KAINUUN SANOMAT, published in Kajaani, notes that Norway's talks with the United States on arms depots and the Soviet reactions to this are one step in the sharp change in international contacts. The rattling of arms is, however, the most dangerous of the features of the developments, KAINUUN SANOMAT notes. The events in Afghanistan seem to have started a series of events in which the United States will soon have used almost all possible countermeasures against the Soviet Union, with the exception of a military conflict, the paper says. At least now is the time for consideration and restraint, preferably for a gradual retreat as well. According to KAINUUN SANOMAT's estimate it is a matter of secondary importance which one of the superpowers takes the first step. The main thing is to gradually have at least gestures in the direction of easing the crisis. The path of gradually hardening the countermeasures has undoubtedly come to an end, according to the paper.

Norway is naturally acting in accordance with its best considerations and its security needs. KAINUUN SANOMAT says that it would be worthwhile for the Norwegian Government, however, to examine very carefully whether the current talks must necessarily lead to the setting up of permanent U.S. arms depots in Norway. They have nothing in common with real security. The transfer of the weapons of one brigade--of about 8,000 men--would make no difference in a real situation, but tends to deteriorate neighborly relations considerably, KAINUUN SANOMAT stresses.

NATO EXERCISE TO TAKE PLACE AS SCHEDULED

[Olav Trygge Storvik report: "NATO Exercise Schedule Unaltered Here"]

[Excerpt] The NATO exercise "Anorak Express," to be staged in Troms 28 February through 27 March, is absolutely in accordance with the exercise schedule for allied forces in Norway, north Norway commander Lt Gen Tonne Huitfeldt told AFTENPOSTEN. The situation in Afghanistan has not led the Norwegian defense authorities to consider changes in the military exercise schedule this year. Within the existing limitations we see no reason to depart from the planned exercise program, Huitfeldt said.

Norwegian defense policy is based on attempting to maintain a credible deterrent at the same time as "reassuring" the Soviet Union that allied forces will not operate in Finnmark.

A change in the exercise schedule in one or the other direction could easily be interpreted as a security policy signal. The Norwegian side is unwilling to do anything which could appear as such a "signal." AFTENPOSTEN understands that in any case it would be difficult to change the planned exercise schedule, even were it desired.

KOIVISTO, FALLDIN DISCUSS REGIONAL, INTERNATIONAL ISSUES

LD211121 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 13 Feb 80 pp 1,5 LD

[Ingmar Lindmarker report: "Finnish Disarmament Proposals"]

[Text] SVENSKA DAGBLADET understands that the Finnish Government has proposed a program for European disarmament. The "manifesto" has the full support of the Swedish Government and the measures for its implementation were discussed in Stockholm Tuesday by Prime Ministers Koivisto and Falldin.

The detailed program has been sent to the two superpowers. The initiative is part of Finland's attempt to keep detente alive and prevent a cold war after Afghanistan.

The Finnish message to the states participating in the European security conference concerns disarmament in Europe in terms of both nuclear and conventional weapons. The idea is that it should be worked out in the preparations leading up to the CSCE followup meeting in Madrid in the fall.

The Swedish Government received the final text of the program about 3 weeks ago. According to observers the Swedish have no difficulty in fully supporting all the ideas, but the reaction in Moscow and Washington in the harsh climate since the Soviet march into Afghanistan could be crucial.

"We are always prepared to help interrupt the current trend in international relations," Prime Minister Koivisto said at a Stockholm press conference Tuesday.

Following the discussions with Falldin and Foreign Minister Ullsten, Koivisto, who is here on an official visit, said "there is every reason to be concerned at current world development."

However, in reply to a question, Koivisto said he finds no cause for concern in the storage of U.S. weapons and heavy equipment in Norway. He also said that "we in Scandinavia have the opportunity to avoid most of what other people have experienced."

The news of an imminent Norwegian-American agreement on stockpiling in Norway for the U.S. Marine Corps was not further discussed in the talks between Falldin and Koivisto. The Finns and the Swedes both believe that the arrangement does not change the basic conditions of the Norwegian base policy, which prohibits nuclear weapons and foreign troops in Norway in peacetime.

Sensitive Questions

Koivisto, who is well ahead as favorite for the next presidential elections according to all opinion polls (unless Kekkonen carries on), cleverly ducked sensitive questions on neutrality and the Finnish pact with the Soviet Union.

"I have not had occasion to compare with the Soviet pact with Afghanistan," Koivisto said. "But I have heard that there are substantial differences. We are very satisfied with our treaty with the Soviet Union with its basic principles for relations between our countries."

Koivisto went on to say that the heavily increased defense costs have been criticized in Finland. However, he added that Finland is becoming militarily weaker than states which spend substantial sums on bribery [mutning] but did not say which states he had in mind.

Wednesday Koivisto is visiting the Stockholm Peace Research Institute and will have luncheon with the king. The talks between Koivisto and Falldin were held in a fraternal atmosphere and at the press conference Koivisto refused to be provoked: Our economy used to be worse than the Swedish economy but now we can allow ourselves the luxury of being more satisfied.

GOVERNMENT WARNS AGAINST FOREIGN INTERVENTION IN RHODESIA

[By Tom McMullan PA diplomatic correspondent]

[Text] The British Government warned today against any foreign intervention in Rhodesia after next week's independence election. The warning followed reports apparently from South African military sources, suggesting that their country's troops would be ready to intervene if civil war breaks out after the election. A Foreign Office statement said: "We have always made clear that we do not wish to see any external intervention in Rhodesia. We deprecate any statement which holds out the prospect of such intervention." A spokesman said the British mission in South Africa would be seeking to establish the exact position.

COMMONWEALTH ASKS UK TO 'RESTORE BALANCE' IN RHODESIA

[Tom McMullan, PA diplomatic correspondent]

[Excerpts] Commonwealth Secretary-General Mr Shridath Ramphal is to seek a meeting with Lord Carrington to express a "crisis of confidence" felt in the Commonwealth at the situation in Rhodesia. Mr Ramphal was instructed to take this action after a meeting of more than 30 Commonwealth high commissioners in London today.

According to Commonwealth officials the foreign secretary will be asked to order the governor of Rhodesia, Lord Soames, "to restore a balance" between the parties in the country as set out in the Lancaster House agreement. Commonwealth leaders want Lord Soames to order the Rhodesian security forces and auxiliaries back to their bases.

Tanzanian high commissioner, Mr Amon Nsekela told the London meeting today that at the Lancaster House conference Lord Carrington had pleaded "trust us." Mr Nsekela added: "We did so. But over the past weeks that trust has become progressively harder to sustain in the face of mounting evidence that the governor himself is not honouring the agreement. Perhaps he is unable to."

Tanzania felt that the situation in Rhodesia was "fast escalating" into a serious threat to international peace and security. He urged Britain and the Commonwealth to take joint responsibility for supervising the elections. But this proposal, according to officials, was not accepted by the meeting. It was felt that it was now too late for the Commonwealth to intervene in this way and that the damage had already been done.

Home Secretary Mr William Whitelaw today thanked the British police officers who have volunteered to supervise the Rhodesian elections. In a letter to chief constables Mr Whitelaw said the response to this "difficult and sensitive task had been overwhelming." A total of 540 officers representing all the police forces in England and Wales and most of the Scottish forces will fly from Heathrow to Rhodesia tomorrow. Many more applied for a place on the team.

THATCHER: EEC DECISION ON BUTTER TO USSR 'DISGRACEFUL'

ID211604 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1539 GMT 21 Feb 80 ID

[Text] The prime minister today attacked as "disgraceful" and "offensive" the Common Market's decision to resume sales of cheap butter to Russia.

Mrs Thatcher said at question time in the Commons: "It is disgraceful that sales of subsidised butter are to be started once again to Russia. It is not only offensive to politicians of all parties but every housewife who would like to have a similar opportunity in this country."

Mrs Thatcher's remarks were met with loud cheers from Tory MPs and she told Mr John Farr (C Harborough) she planned to make her views known to the EEC. The decision to resume sale to both Russia and the Eastern bloc was taken yesterday in Brussels by the EEC Commission.

LABOR PARTY ISSUES STATEMENT OPPOSING OLYMPIC BOYCOTT

[By PA political staff]

[Excerpts] The Labour Party officially announced today its opposition to an Olympic boycott as U.S. Secretary of State Cyrus Vance arrived in London for talks with Lord Carrington. Mr Denis Howell, shadow minister for sport, warned British sporting bodies in a letter that a boycott of the Moscow games would destroy the Olympic movement. His comments followed Mrs Thatcher's advice to British athletes not to take part in the Moscow Olympics.

Mr Howell said: "There is a clear distinction between the associaion of sport and politics on the one hand and actually using sport as a political weapon. That is what is being proposed by the governments of the UK and the U.S., and sport should resist such an incursion into their independence."

Mr Vance arrived at Heathrow this afternoon after visits to Germany and France and went immediately to meet the foreign secretary. He declined to make any statement, but a U.S. Embassy spokesman said that discussions on an Olympic boycott were likely to figure at the meeting.

Mr Howell said in his letter to sporting bodies: "Governments are entitled to offer advice, but in a free society they cannot prevent their citizens from exercising their rights to participate in sporting competition, or to travel abroad to do so, otherwise they are repeating the evils of the countries we criticise for refusing their citizens such basic rights."

"Governments are entitled to ask sport to participate in a total strategy against another country. They are not entitled to call upon sport to take action in isolation while trade and tourism continue without interference. The time to have objected to Moscow was in 1974 when the games were awarded to them in the absence of any alternative bid. Until now governments have not raised these questions," he said.

"In any case the games do not belong to Moscow, the Soviet Union, or any other country. They are the property of the International Olympic Committee." Mr Howell said it was also nonsense to suggest that to participate in Moscow would be to condone Russian policy. "The consequences of such a boycott are enormous," he warned. "They will destroy the Olympic movement by dividing it into two halves--the consequences will inevitably repercuss upon all international and world championships, and European championships will suffer the same fate."

"Sport has a duty to resist such a destruction."

Meanwhile, the British Olympic Association is holding back on its appeal for cash from industrial sponsors until the question of Britain's attendance at the games is finally resolved next month. Despite the political controversy surrounding the Olympics, the appeal has raised 600,000 pounds sterling already of the 1 million pounds sterling needed--proportionately more of the target than had been raised at the same stage before the 1976 Montreal Olympics.

VANCE LEAVES LONDON AFTER TALKS ON OLYMPIC BOYCOTT

ID221044 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1012 GMT 22 Feb 80 LD

DAILY TELEGRAPH QUESTIONS NEUTRAL AFGHANISTAN CONCEPT

ID211221 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 21 Feb 80 p 18 LD

[Editorial: "Why Save Soviet Face?"]

[Text] Europe's Afghan plan, under which Russia would be urged to withdraw her troops, whereupon the country would be "neutralised" under international guarantees, is the highly questionable product of military weakness and political diversity. It looks too much like the reaction of the European Community's assembled foreign ministers to mounting cries of "don't just sit there." Not even united backing for President Carter's Olympic boycott or cut-off of technology, just a trendy nostrum out of the diplomatic bag of tricks calculated to win unanimous support. Why should the West try to "save Russia's face"--the plan's main selling point? Surely we should seek to discourage her from further adventures by causing her to lose face!

If Russian troops ever leave Afghanistan it will not be because of appeals from the West or anybody else plus helpful blue-prints for the future of that country, but because the Afghans, with world-wide support, make prolonged occupation too costly in blood and treasure. Another danger of this plan is that European public opinions and governments may really believe in it, and as a result neglect rapid military build-up--of which in most cases there is little sign at present--which alone can make the world safe against Russian aggression.

Furthermore, the plan carries some dangerous implications. It promotes the probability that Russia is really only concerned with security and is not after the oilfields. It implies that Russia is entitled to ensure that contiguous countries become "buffers" and "neutralised," but tries to persuade her to achieve this by international arrangement rather than invasion. But perhaps Russia's neighbours would rather stay just as they are and be left alone. Or, how about America suggesting this treatment in her sphere--starting with Cuba? Again, supposing this "neutralised buffer" analogy on the Soviet bloc's borders were applied to West Germany? This is a long-standing Russian device to break up NATO. The whole precedent would be a one-sided recipe for endless Russian expansion.

ROLANDHIS DEPLORES TURKISH OFFICIAL'S STATEMENTS

[Text] Foreign Minister Rolandhis has stressed that the statements by Mr Caglayangil, speaker of the Turkish Senate and former foreign minister, made day before yesterday [13 February] in the Turkish sector of Nicosia are not conducive to the efforts now being exerted for the resumption of the intercommunal talks nor to their being conducted constructively in the suitable atmosphere. Mr Rolandhis added that these statements are unfortunate and that their content, and the place and time they have been made, as well as Mr Caglayangil's position, give rise to many questions about the true intentions of the Turkish side.

Mr Caglayangil had stated that the mission of the Turks is to make Cyprus their motherland. He also said that Turkey's aim is to make the present division of the island final by transforming the de facto state of affairs into a de jure one. Mr Rolandhis has stressed that these statements completely contradict the positions that were recently supported in Islamabad by Turkish Foreign Minister Erkmen, who said that Turkey does not put up with a neighbor imposing his will on another neighbor by force.

I MAKHI CLAIMS BREACH WITHIN GOVERNMENT, RULING PARTY

NC210930 Nicosia I MAKHI in Greek 21 Feb 80 pp 1, 8 NC

[Excerpts] There are wide breaches both within the government and the ruling Democratic Party [DI.KO.]. These breaches will be very difficult if not impossible for President Kiprianou to mend. He is in his most difficult position since assuming his presidential duties. This was stated yesterday by progovernment sources who hold key positions in DI.KO. and who are familiar with the intergovernment and interparty state of affairs.

The same sources added that some of his ministers and close associates--who are leading members of the ruling DI.KO.--will desert the president of the republic unless he shows determination and clears up the situation by removing from the government those ministers who do not belong to DI.KO. and who, in many cases, follow a policy serving other parties. Another indication of the whole situation prevailing within the government is the fact that Greek Cypriot interlocutor Yeoryios Ioannidhis no longer attends the cabinet meetings, where he always participated in them before, even after his appointment as interlocutor.

The government spokesman stated yesterday that no resignation has been submitted by any minister, nor has anyone expressed the intention to resign. Commenting on this statement, progovernment DI.KO. circles have pointed out that the spokesman says what the government tells him to say and in many cases he finds himself in a difficult position because his statements are contrary to fact.

Government Denial

NC211200 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 21 Feb 80 NC

[Text] An official statement released today denies press reports that interlocutor Mr Ioannidhis has resigned. The statement stresses that the question of Mr Ioannidhis resigning has never been raised. The statement adds: Mr Ioannidhis is the Greek Cypriot side's representative at the intercommunal talks and because of his duties at this post the justice minister has been acting for him as minister to the president. Another official statement denies reports about breaches within the government and the intention of ministers to resign. The statement describes these reports as totally unfounded.

GOVERNMENT REJECTION OF ROGERS PLAN REPORTED

[Text] The Greek Government hardened its position toward NATO by definitely rejecting, in toto, the proposals of General Rogers, even refusing--despite a relevant agreement--to allow General Gratsios [chief of the National Defense General Staff] to go to Brussels in order to present the Greek Government's reply. At the same time the government sets the well-known Haig-Davos agreement as an imperative condition for continuing the dialog with the Atlantic alliance. This agreement will be the exclusive basis for our country's acceptance of any new negotiations.

The Greek Government yesterday dispatched its reply to the supreme military commander allied forces, NATO, General B. Rogers. With this reply, drafted after repeated meetings under Prime Minister Karamanlis, the Greek Government rejects the Rogers proposals in toto and draws the attention of the Atlantic alliance to the fact that any resumption of negotiations can only be undertaken on the basis of the agreement between the former chiefs of the Greek and NATO armed forces, General Davos and Haig.

As a result of this severance of dialog, dictated by the rejection of NATO's proposals, it was not considered necessary to have the Greek reply presented personally by General Gratsios as originally agreed. This fact is stressed in the text of the Greek reply as an indication of both the tactics as well as the determination with which our country will handle the question of its reintegration into NATO's military wing in the future.

As reported by I KATHIMERINI last Sunday, the most unacceptable point of the Rogers proposals, which also became the reason for their rejection, refers to the large scale move of the east limits of the Athens FIR (area for flight responsibility) at the expense of our country, a fact which means the final alteration of the limits as demanded by Turkey. Another point which is equally unacceptable refers to control of Aegean seaspace by abolishing regions of responsibility by local commanders, accepting instead implementation of the "task force concept" within the limits of responsibility of the Greek Naval commander. This implementation strips the Greek commander of his responsibilities for command and control of the Aegean which he has at present.

Previous Agreement

The Haig-Davos agreement which was the result of their meeting at Mons in March 1978, resulted in a favorable, at that time, recommendation by General Haig (19 June 1978) known as an "assessment" of Greek positions, which he addressed to the chairman of the military committee, Norwegian General (Z. Guntersen).

General Haig's recommendation supported, among other things, the Greek viewpoint that discussion of certain problems, among which was the operational control of the Aegean, should be circumvented. General Haig's support in his recommendation to the military committee is based upon his description of Greek positions as a "good framework for Greece's return to the unified military command under temporary military arrangements in expectation of final decisions on the remaining issues."

It must be noted that it is after this agreement that Turkey appeared on stage and rejected its content through a "veto." The result was that General Haig worked out changes on certain basic points, which even at that time were considered unacceptable by the Greek Government. In a statement at the time the Greek Government accused Turkey that it is Turkey's position and not the position of Greece, which prevented the reintegration of the Greek Armed Forces into NATO's military wing.

Turkey demanded from the Greek side, via NATO, to accept that the status prevailing prior to our withdrawal from the Atlantic alliance should no longer apply. Furthermore, in order to withdraw its "veto," Turkey demanded and continues to demand:

1--That airspace should be defined first--naturally according to its own proposals--before Greece can return to NATO's military wing. In case our country did not accept such an arrangement then Turkey accepted, indirectly, Greece's return but without any boundaries for Aegean air control.

2--That for Aegean operational control Greece should: Either accept abolition of the area of responsibility of local commanders and to agree that such command would not go to a Greek officer, or that boundaries for such operational control over the Aegean should be abolished.

GREEK, ROMANIAN PRESIDENTS EXCHANGE MESSAGES ON ANNIVERSARY

[Text] Today is the 100th anniversary of diplomatic relations being established between Greece and Romania. On this occasion the presidents of the two countries, Tsatsos and Ceausescu, exchanged warm messages, stressing the friendship and mutual esteem of the two nations.

In his message President of the Republic Tsatsos stressed that relations between the two countries are developing harmoniously in all sectors and that they have reached a very high level. We intend to pursue this policy systematically and with firmness not only because it responds to the mutual interests of the two countries and the requirements of the times, but also because it contributes to establishing a climate of peace and mutual trust in our area.

Tsatsos expressed the belief that a broader, deeper and more diverse cooperation between the countries of the Balkan Peninsula is a necessity of our times. With this spirit, he concluded, we believe that we must firmly pursue this goal so that our peninsula may become an arena of peace and cooperation.

Romanian President Ceausescu in his message to Tsatsos stressed that Greek-Romanian relations have strong and common traditions of struggle for national liberty and the independent development of the two countries and the two peoples. These relations have a continued and perpetual development based upon mutual esteem and mutual respect, the principles of full equality of rights, respect of independence and national sovereignty and nonintervention in internal affairs, not using force or the threat of force.

Concluding he expressed the belief that the fruitful relations of sincere friendship and constructive cooperation between Romania and Greece will also develop in the future to the interest of peace, detente and cooperation in the Balkans, in Europe and the world.

SUBVERSIVES ARRESTED IN CRETAN HIDEOUT ARRAIGNED

[Excerpts] Seven persons arrested at Khania, Crete, last Sunday were arraigned today. They were arrested on information received by security forces that they constituted a cell of the subversive organization known as the Revolutionary Peoples' Struggle and that they established a hideout in a house rented by Alexandhra Yeoryiou Langadhinou, widow of Khristos Kassimis, at Khania.

Those arraigned are: Alexandhra Yeoryiou Langadhinou, widow of Khristos Kassimis, age 31, OTE [Greek Telecommunications Organization] employee; Yeoryios Evstathiou Langadhinos, age 26, her husband, commercial representative; Efrosini Dhimitriou Evstathiou, age 25, private employee; Vasiliki, wife of Yeoryios Kotsou, age 35, assistant lithographer; Dhimitrios Aristotelous Ioannou, age 24, student; Yeoryios Nikolaou Ikonomeas, age 23, newspaper correspondent; and Evdhokisis Mikahil Kotsou, age 30, interpreter.

Athens security forces today released supplementary details on the illegal activities of the subversive group. According to the statement, security forces received information that a cell of the subversive organization known as the Revolutionary People's Struggle had established a hideout at Khania in a house rented by Alexandhra Yeoryiou Langadhinou, widow of Khristos Kassimis, who was killed in 1977 in a clash with the police near the Rendis vegetable market, in Athens. The purpose of the cell was to plan and to carry out arson, bombings and other terrorist acts. Members of the cell were also supplied with the necessary materials for their purpose. According to the same reports, Alexandhra Langadhinou was the leader of the group.

Last Sunday police officers carried out a surprise search in the Langadhinou home at Khania, where they discovered the constitutional charter of the group known as the Revolutionary People's Struggle. The charter propagates and adopts armed and revolutionary struggle for the overthrow of the democratic regime. Other items discovered were: Proclamations of the organization accepting responsibility for bomb incidents in Athens, together with leaflets of the revolutionary group known as the Khristos Kassimis accepting responsibility for other incidents in the past; 24 volumes of the pamphlet "Counterinformation" [antipliroforisis] organ of the Revolutionary People's Struggle, together with hand-written notes; a student's identity card belonging to an Italian member of the Italian Anarchist Federation; an agenda with names and addresses of Italian extremists in Italy; written evidence referring to the two police officers who in 1977 clashed with the Kassimis group at the Rentis market; written evidence referring to the night watchman of the AEG [General Electric] Company, the offices of which are near the market, with a postscript that the two policemen and the night watchman are targets for the organization; a long range wireless radio-telephone apparatus capable of receiving the wireless networks of the armed forces and the security forces. Other items found are seven 20-liter cans full of gasoline; one gas mask; wirecutters and 3 high-speed cameras with telephoto lenses.

The Athens prosecutor's office filed charges against the seven arrested persons for violation of Law 774 of 1978 on suppression of terrorism and protection of the democratic regime. Specifically, charges were filed against them for forming a terrorist group and for participating in a terrorist group, both crimes punishable with from 5 to 20 years' imprisonment; for lauding terrorist activities through publications, in reference to the leaflets of the Revolutionary People's Struggle, punishable with imprisonment from 2 to 5 years. Apart from these general charges which cover all the accused persons, separate charges were filed against several of them who are charged with illegal possession of arms; illegal possession of a wireless apparatus and violation of the press law. Regular Athens Prosecutor Vasilakis was placed in charge of the case.

NEW U.S. ENVOY ARRIVES IN ANKARA; INTERIM STATUS EXTENDED

[Text] Ankara, 21 Feb (AA)--The new U.S. ambassador to Ankara, James Spain, arrived in the Turkish capital this afternoon and told reporters at Ankara's Esenboga Airport that the Turkish and American governments were about to complete an important mission to the benefit of both countries with the recently initialled Turco-American defense cooperation agreement. In reply to a question he said he did not know when the agreement would be signed. Outgoing Ambassador Ronald Spiers, in Ankara since July 1977, has been appointed to another post.

Interim Status Extended

Meanwhile, the Turkish cabinet announced today that the status regulating the American participation in the activities of the Turkish Armed Forces installations on an interim basis was extended until 31 March pending the signing of the defense cooperation agreement which would end the interim status. A cabinet statement said the extension would enable the two sides to complete the technical work on the documents involved, and James Spain would be able, in the meantime, to present his credentials to President Fahri Koruturk of Turkey so that the former could sign the agreement as an accredited ambassador.

VOTCP GIVES DETAILS ON U.S. BASES IN COUNTRY

TA220845 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 22 Feb 80 TA

[Text] The provisional status of U.S. bases on our soil expires on 22 February. The Washington government is making efforts to replace this status with a permanent one; thus to guarantee its sovereignty over our country and, as a result, over our region and to intensify Turkey's involvement in the U.S. arms race and its efforts to increase tension. To this end, the U.S. and Turkish governments held discussions in Ankara at the beginning of January. As can be seen in the agreement initialed between the two countries, the parties have reached an agreement on the permanent status of the U.S. aggressive bases on our soil. This slavery agreement also stipulates that with the granting of permanent status of these bases, the United States will extend to Turkey military aid worth $2.5 billion.

Dear listeners, the presence of aggressive bases on our soil primarily means trampling our national independence and sovereignty and threatening regional peace and security. Our people are opposed to the granting of permanent status to these bases and are asking for the dismantling of these bases and the tearing up of the bilateral slavery agreements. They are intensifying their struggle to this end.

Pointing out that the reactionary and antipeople Demirel government had agreed to the use of the U.S. bases and installations under conditions that contradict our national interests, 51 deputies of the Republican People's Party [RPP] have submitted a motion to the National Assembly requesting a parliamentary investigation of the prime minister on this issue. As the RPP deputies recall in their motion, the U.S. bases in Turkey are grouped in four categories: 1. strike bases and installations, 2. electronic intelligence bases, 3. communication bases and 4. training and support bases.

The largest intelligence monitoring bases are the Sinop and Karamursel bases. The Sinop base is a radar monitoring and communication center, in which information about Soviet sea and air activities and missile testing is collected. The Karamursel monitoring and communication center monitors the Soviet sea traffic in the western Black Sea and the Bosporus region. The Diyarbakir base is one of the important intelligence bases. This base is equipped with a long-distance, over-the-horizon radar and communication complex, and monitors missile tests conducted in Soviet missile centers as well as other Soviet military activities.

There is a seismographic research center at the Belbasi base in the vicinity of Ankara which monitors Soviet nuclear tests. Spread all over Turkey, there are a large number of U.S. defense communication terminals and 14 NATO early warning centers. The network of communication centers, which covers our entire country, are integrated into the U.S. satellite communication system after converging at the Diyarbakir base.

Until spy satellites were perfected, Turkey was used as a base for U-2 spy planes. The great dangers confronted by our country following the shooting down over Soviet soil of the U-2 spy plane, which had taken off from the Incirlik airbase, have not been forgotten.

As pointed out in the motion submitted by the RPP deputies, as a result of work and arguments over the neutron bomb, the issue of the U.S. base in Turkey--especially the strike bases--will reach great dimensions once more. Experts note that because of its nature, the use of the neutron bomb against the Soviet Union is more probable from countries which border on it. This makes it clear that, as the NATO country with a long mutual border with the Soviet Union, Turkey is one of the most suitable countries in this organization for the use of the neutron bomb. Undoubtedly, the government acceptance of requests for deploying the neutron bomb in Turkey could transform our country into a nuclear cemetery.

The slavery agreement initialed in Ankara has not been brought before the parliament for approval. It is being kept secret from our people in flagrant contradiction of the fourth article of the Constitution, which stipulates that no individual or institution can assume state authority that has not been indicated in the Constitution. As long as the bases agreement is not passed by the parliament, it will have no legal basis.

As it is well known, a nuclear attack, will affect a great part of our material and cultural existence and 20 percent of our people will vanish.

Granting U.S. bases permanent status will cause concern among the Middle East countries--mostly among Turkey's neighbors--and Turkey will be in a situation over which it has no control and which contradicts its national policies and interests. Turkey has reached a historic turning point: Either, the future generations will live in a country that maintains good relations with its neighbors and coexists with them by creating conditions of peace among the Middle Eastern countries, with which it is connected with historic ties compatible with its national interests, or they will live in a country with U.S. bases and installations, with the probability of turning it into a nuclear graveyard in case of a war. U.S. imperialism should not be allowed to profit from Turkey in a nuclear war that might break out in the Middle East for the sake of U.S. interests. The bases must be removed and the bilateral slavery agreements must be torn up.

IMF APPROVES LOANS, PLEASED WITH GOVERNMENT MEASURES

[Text] The IMF Board of Executive Directors has approved a loan to be extended to Turkey from the fund's compensatory financing facility. Turkey will be able to use its second special drawing right, worth $100 million, in accordance with the standby agreement. Turkey will also be able to receive a loan of $71.6 million from the fund's compensatory financing facility. In short, Turkey now has a special drawing right of $171.6 million.

Our correspondent Berna Kulac reports from Washington that the IMF Board of Executive Directors convened at 1800 Turkish time today to discuss Turkey's situation and the loans it will receive from the fund. A statement issued at the end of the meeting, which lasted 3 hours, said that the loans were approved.

IMF officials said that the meeting was conducted in a very favorable atmosphere and that the executive directors were pleased with the stability measures taken by the Turkish Government.

ECEVIT GOES TO DENMARK TO PARTICIPATE IN WORKERS CONGRESS

[Text] RPP leader Bulent Ecevit flew to Copenhagen today as the guest of the Danish Social Democratic Party and the Workers Training Union Congress.

In a statement at Ankara Esenboga Airport, Ecevit said the education and adaptation of foreign workers would be discussed at the meeting. He stated that the strengthening of Turkish-Danish relations through the workers would also be raised at the meeting. He added that he would attend a meeting with the workers in (Yulcrant) Island, where there is a large population of Turkish workers. He said he would then go to Hamburg for talks with the officials of the West German Social Democratic Party. He then noted that he would arrange meetings with the Turkish workers in the FRG. Ecevit will return to Turkey on 26 February.

RPP DEFENDS MEMBERSHIP IN SOCIALIST INTERNATIONAL

[Text] RPP Secretary General Mustafa Ustundag has said that his party joined the Socialist International in order to become more useful to the country and the nation. In a written statement issued in Ankara, Ustundag said that some of the main aims of the Socialist International were social justice, social security and freedom, and it was opposed to capitalism, fascism, all kinds of dictatorship, terrorism, violence, cruelty and communism. The RPP secretary general recalled that his party had unanimously decided to join the Socialist International at its 23d Congress in 1976. He stressed that the organization's decisions were not binding and no party was forced to abide by the decisions of the majority. Noting that the Social Democratic Party--the governing party in the FRG--was also a member of the organization, Ustundag said: The West German finance minister, Matthoefer, who is trying to insure aid to Turkey, is a member of this party which, in turn, is a member of the Socialist International.

Ustundag added that one of the principles of the Socialist International is: We are as opposed to the spiritless despotism of communism as we are opposed to the generous injustice of capitalism.

BREZHNEV REMARKS ON AFGHANISTAN DRAW MIXED REACTIONS

Government Spokesman

[Text] Bonn--The Federal Government believes that the speech by Soviet head of state and party Leonid Brezhnev today does not yet signify that the tension that arose following the Soviet Union's march into Afghanistan "is to relax quickly." In a first statement on Brezhnev's remarks, Government Spokesman Klaus Boelling said in Bonn tonight that it is clear that Bonn will begin "even today to analyze and assess" the general secretary's speech.

"We believe it is an important speech, and one should not make the mistake of regarding it as mere propaganda," Boelling underlined. As far as the conditions which Brezhnev mentioned for a withdrawal from Afghanistan are concerned, the Federal Government, together with its allies, will look very carefully at how the general secretary's formulations relate to the statement made by the EEC foreign ministers in Rome. That statement expressly said that Afghanistan was to be respected as a nonalined country, and that all states should refrain from intervening in Afghanistan's internal affairs.

Boelling pointed out that Brezhnev spoke of the Soviet Union's desire to continue the policy of detente. Such an assurance "will, of course, gain in credibility if the Soviet Union creates the conditions for Afghanistan to go its own way as a nonalined country."

According to Boelling, the speech confirmed the Federal Government's view that all possibilities for talks would have to be seized in the interest of reestablishing the balance of power, first through the great powers but also through the Europeans. As everyone knew the situation is difficult and serious, and hence no effort should be spared to contribute to overcoming the conflict "which, however, has come about through the clear intervention of the Soviet Union in Afghanistan's internal affairs," Boelling said.

Schmidt: Moscow Is Reflecting

[Text] Ravensburg--In the opinion of Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, the statement by Soviet party chairman Leonid Brezhnev on the conditions for withdrawal from Afghanistan indicate that "the process of reflecting has also begun in Moscow." Addressing an SPD election meeting for the Baden-Wurttemberg diet, the chancellor said in Ravensburg on Friday that the Brezhnev statement has been the "most interesting reaction" so far in connection with the EC neutrality proposals. However, the Brezhnev proposal has provided "no result yet."

Schmidt saw his own position of not rushing the other side in a crisis situation confirmed. The proposals resulted from that attitude, "since we wanted to give the Moscow leadership time to make good what it had perpetrated unlawfully." A decision on participation in the Olympic games has also been delayed in order to support the establishment of conditions "which give everybody the chance to participate in the Olympic games."

Genscher: Worth 'Serious Consideration'

[Text] Ludwigsburg--The statement by Soviet party and state chief Leonid Brezhnev that Russian troops would be withdrawn from Afghanistan under certain conditions must be considered seriously according to Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher (FDP).

At an election meeting held by his party in Ludwigsburg tonight, Genscher said the great powers should get into direct contact now. In Genscher's view, "every thread" should be used in times of crisis. Addressing the Soviet Union, the foreign minister said that now is the time for deeds to follow words. Genscher recalled the latest statement by the EEC foreign ministers in Rome, according to which the Western powers do not intend to violate Afghanistan's independence and nonalinement.

Further Remarks by Genscher

[Excerpt] Bonn--FDP Chairman and Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher has asked the Soviet leadership to be more specific about their condtional offer to withdraw troops from Afghanistan. Speaking to the FDP National Executive in Bonn on Monday, Genscher said that the more specific Moscow is concerning the arrangements of a withdrawal, the easier it will be for all concerned to see what kind of contribution the Soviet leadership is willing to make toward implementing the UN resolution in January. The UN General Assembly demanded the complete withdrawal of Soviet troops.

Kohl Scores Offer

[Excerpt] Mannheim--CDU Chairman Helmut Kohl has described as "cynical" the offer by Soviet head of party and state Leonid Brezhnev to withdraw Soviet troops from Afghanistan under certain circumstances. The Kremlin head was operating according to the old "communist tradition: It is up to the murdered man to show why he was murdered," Kohl said at a CDU/CSU congress for exiles in Mannheim.

OLYMPIC COMMITTEE CHAIRMAN DAUME SEES 1984 GAMES AT RISK

[Interview with National Olympic Committee Chairman Willi Daume on conclusion of Olympic games in Lake Placid]

[Excerpts] Lake Placid--Willi Daume believes that not only the Olympic games in Moscow but also the 1984 summer games in Los Angeles may be at risk. Daume, currently favored as successor to IOC President Lord Killanin, sharply criticized the policy of the American President. Daume describes the alternative games to the Moscow summer Olympics proposed by the White House as "idle talk" and a "foolish idea." The German IOC member accused U.S. Secretary of State Vance of having made a (?coarse) speech at the opening of the IOC General Assembly in Lake Placid. Here is his interview:

[Question] What effects will Lake Placid have on the Moscow summer games?

[Answer] As far as sport itself is concerned none, but politically an awful lot. This is something President Carter cannot be proud of. His ultimatum was ill-considered since it raised only unrealistic expectations. An anti-Olympic demonstration, carried right into the American games!

The (?coarse) speech which the usually so pleasant Secretary of State Vance was condemned to make at the IOC opening session was marked by irrational political feeling which cannot lead to anything good; certainly it will not produce any help for poor Afghanistan, but rather a deterioration of the international atmosphere. The Moscow Olympic games are now in dire distress; there is no telling what will happen to the future of the Olympic games overall.

[Question] Based on talks with (?partners) in Los Angeles, was the impression in Lake Placid that the 1984 summer games are seen quite independently of the arguments over Moscow? What consequences could arise from an American boycott of this year's summer games?

[Answer] I have no doubt that the crisis will affect them. (?Not enough people are aware of that). Neither the IOC nor the many national Olympic committees everywhere are going to stand idly by if Washington attacks the Olympic idea on a broad front. During the past few days it has been openly discussed whether the 1984 games could then still remain in Los Angeles. It is certain that this question will be seriously posed unless the White House soon stops its idle talks of so-called "alternative games." Rarely has there been such a foolish idea in international sports, and it must founder if only because of the international sports associations. It is hence totally unrealistic and will lead to nothing but further unpleasantness. I wonder who has been advising the President? Well, the coming weeks will not be easy for the national Olympic committees. Agreed, they too have political responsibility; but politics in turn has an Olympic responsibility. Irreconcilable? It remains to be seen.

Athletes Oppose Boycott

[Excerpt] Lake Placid--Nine Olympic competitors from the Federal Republic today cabled Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, asking him to help insure "that our Olympic team can take part in the summer games in Moscow." The message, signed by all Lak Pacid medal winners, says: "For all our condemnation of Soviet aggression in Afghanistan, we believe that an Olympic boycott is the worst possible reaction. It does not help the Afghan people, it heightens strife in the world at large and it imperils the future of the Olympic movement." The message expresses the hope that there is still a way for "our American friends, who were such good hosts here, to be present in Moscow."

BRANDT ASKED TO MEDIATE BETWEEN USSR, WEST

DW251205 Hamburg DER SPIEGEL in German 25 Feb 80 pp 19-20 DW

[Unattributed SPIEGEL report: "We Must Start Talking Again"]

[Excerpts] U.S. President Jimmy Carter as well as the Soviets have probed whether Willy Brandt, the former chancellor, will be available as mediator between the Kremlin and the Western alliance. But the SPD chancellor, of whom the Russians think more than of the Bonn chancellor, wants to go to Moscow only if Helmut Schmidt wants it.

The official part was over. Headed by former German Chancellor Willy Brandt, the International North-South Commission had submitted its report. Then U.S. President Jimmy Carter took his guest Brandt aside to have one more confidential talk.

On the Friday before last, the President told the SPD chairman that he ought to be prepared to take a trip to Moscow as mediator: With his good relations with Party chief Leonid Brezhnev, Brandt could get the disrupted East-West dialog going again.

The mission of such a renowned politician as Brandt would meet with "positive interest" in the United States. Carter said urgently: "Please start out from the assumption that we must have talks again."

The Nobel Peace Prize winner has guarded. It was fascinating for him after his role in North-South politics, which had experienced worldwide attention, to probe whether there existed a way after the Afghanistan invasion by the Soviets and the Olympic boycott by the Americans that would lead to a continuation of the policy of detente. But Brandt found that caution is called for first of all.

He told Carter that such a round of probing must be well-considered, and the expected result ought to be predictable. It would not suffice to return with a new theory about the motives of the Soviet invaders. Moreoever, he must also consider the interests of the Bonn government. At the end of the talk he let the U.S. president know that he, Willy Brandt, would be the right man for the Moscow trip: "I would be welcome there."

The Social Democrat, could mediate in the East-West conflict because after the beginning of the Afghanistan crisis relations between the Soviets and the Bonn SPD Party leadership did not cool off as much as contacts between the Kremlin and the Federal Government.

A firmly agreed visit by the federal chancellor to Moscow has again become uncertain, and his visit to GDR state chief Honecker was postponed. On 31 January Chancellor Helmut Schmidt dictated a 4-page letter to Soviet state and party chief Leonid Brezhnev. He could not conceal, wrote the chancellor in the confidential dispatch, that "the people in our country are concerned that all that has been built up in the past 10 years between us could be endangered." Bonn's ambassador to Mosocw, Hans-Georg Wieck, had to wait in the anteroom for days before he was permitted to deliver his mail. Last week there was still no answer.

Soviet Ambassador Vladimir Semenov, however, appeared in Bonn's SPD headquarters as early as 4 February. He handed to Willy Brandt a paper of several pages in German--more exactly a "nonpaper" as it is called in diplomatic language, a text without an addressee or a sender, which according to diplomatic rules permits an informal exchange of ideas.

Brandt ought to read the text, requested Semenov, saying that he was prepared to make additional explanations. The SPD chief found a long list of things Moscow considers violations of detente headed by NATO's decision to close the arms gap, made on 12 December last year. But Brezhnev's actual message to Brandt stood at the end, hedged by clauses as is proper: One has discussed difficult problems before which turned out to be useful.

The Russian asked cunningly: "Mr Chairman, did you read the last sentence?" Brandt made an evasive answer because he did not want to be tied down, and he did not want to invite himself to Moscow with a thoughtless agreement: "Yes, I can assure you that I feel exactly the same way."

At any rate, Brandt wants to avoid giving the impression that he wants to be received in Moscow prior to the federal chancellor--as if he were the better German for peace and against missiles in Central Europe. The SPD chairman knows only too well the rightist agitationists of the opposition wait to play the chancellor against the SPD chief. Brandt said forebodingly: "That would go as far as a charge of high treason."

For Brandt, however, it is certain: Despite the Kremlin invitation and the request from Washington, he will go to see Brezhnev only if Schmidt wants it. Brandt: "If our own government says it will not work, I will not do it. I do not want to promote myself."

FIREBOMBS THROWN AT AEROFLOT OFFICE IN PARIS

[Text] Unidentified persons attacked the headquarters of the Soviet airline Aeroflot in the Champs Elysees in the heart of Paris a short time ago. About 30 people threw firebombs at the building's windows. No one was hurt and damage is slight. The attackers managed to escape. No group has yet claimed responsibility for the attack.

FRANCE-SOIR VIEWS 'BLANKS' IN QOTBZADEH'S VISIT

LD251017 Paris FRANCE-SOIR in French 21 Feb 80 p 5 LD

[Jean-Louis Morillon article: "Qotbzadeh's Mysterious Dealings in France"]

[Text] What was the Iranian foreign minister's purpose in coming to Paris? The last stage of Sadeq Qotbzadeh's European tour after Athens and Rome seems shrouded in mystery.

Apart from meeting with his French counterpart Jean Francois-Poncet at the Quai d'Orsay on Saturday morning, the Iranian diplomatic leader's program has numerous "blanks" between his arrival at Orly on Friday afternoon and his departure for Tehran on Tuesday morning. These unexplained absences have given rise to many rumors all linked to the interminable U.S. hostage affair.

Even if his many memories of his long exile in France bring him back here, nobody imagines that Mr Qotbzadeh can have spent a quiet weekend resting in Paris at a time when the Washington-Tehran crisis is entering its decisive phase with the imminent arrival in Iran of the UN commission of inquiry into the "Shah's crimes."

Did secret negotiations take place? This is quite credible since the name of Hamilton Jordan, White House secretary and one of Jimmy Carter's closes collaborators, came to fore on Tuesday. Where was he last weekend? Apparently no one saw him publicly at the United Nations.

Certain reports state that he secretly came to Paris precisely to meet Mr Qotbzadeh.

A Plot

There has been nothing to confirm this theory. On the contrary, Mr Qotbzadeh has denied it. In his view, this news is a plot to discredit him in Tehran where it is never good to be suspected of talking with President Carter's righthand man.

Washington also categorically rejected this report, but this attitude is reasonable if one is trying to preserve a minimum of discretion on eventual contacts.

Even the French lawyer considered likely to have organized the meeting between the emissaries of Carter and Khomeyni spoke out strongly against such an account. "I met Mr Qotbzadeh at 1100 hrs at the Iranian ambassador's residence in Paris, but we did not talk about the Tehran hostage affair. We talked in general terms, especially about the problems between France and Iran," said Maitre Miquel, well-known for his work for those reported missing in Argentina and the POLISARIO's French hostages.

A Significant Move

The exiled Argentinian businessman Hector Vilallon also denied loaning his Paris apartment for this meeting, as had been suggested.

Nevertheless, Mr Qotbzadeh seemed greatly preoccupied with the Tehran hostages while in France, and this is not surprising. In that respect his lightning trip to Bordeaux on Tuesday morning seems quite significant. In fact, he went to a hospital to visit Rifaat al-Asad, the influential brother of the Syrian president.

Now by a curious coincidence, Adib Daoudy, the Damascus number one's personal foreign policy adviser is one of the five people due in Tehran at the end of the week to investigate the shah's crimes as part of the commission appointed by the United Nations.

Mr Qotbzadeh's visit to the Gironde Department [of which Bordeaux is the chief city] was surely not solely on humanitarian grounds and gives credence to the parallel dealings theory.

In all events, the truth is only likely to emerge after the hostage affair is over, in 10 or 15 days at the earliest. Those who will have helped to resolve the crisis will no longer have any need to remain silent. On the contrary, they will be prepared to make the most of it.

LE MONDE REPORTS U.S. ENVOY'S AMERICAN CLUB ADDRESS

LD221615 Paris LE MONDE in French 22 Feb 80 pp 1, 4 LD

[D. report: "According to U.S. Ambassador to Paris, Search for Third Path Between Washington and Moscow Is 'A Neutralist Absurdity'"]

[Excerpt] U.S. Ambassador to Paris Arthur Hartman, addressing the American Club Wednesday evening about Afghanistan and the "trouble we have had in this connection with our European friends," said in particular:

"Just imagine what would have happened if there had been no American reaction.... Those people in Moscow who only think of extending their power whatever the consequences would have concluded that they had won their bet with complete impunity. Finally, many of those in West Europe who are now whispering that the Americans have reacted too vigorously would have cried that the United States had dropped another country...."

After pointing out that in similar circumstances all American presidents had tried to confirm that U.S. allies shared its views, Mr Hartman continued: "American presidents deemed it necessary to meet with their allies to exchange views and assessments and to organize their strategy. It seems that in certain European circles people are reacting in the opposite way. Since the United States is a relatively big and powerful country and since the European nations, taken individually, regard themselves as small and relatively weak, the Europeans (especially the French) tend to try and keep away from meetings at which, they believe, political opponents could accuse their leaders of yielding to American pressure. I am afraid that this situation will persist until the EC's economic power (which is almost as great as ours) is transformed into useful political and decisionmaking power.... Some people in Europe criticize our actions which they regard as inappropriate. I am waiting to be given a list of actions which are deemed appropriate....

"A Western approach should not sacrifice the strength which stems from our political diversity but it should be based on the common interests and objectives which unite us with our allies. I think we found that spirit in the statement issued by President Giscard d'Estaing and Chancellor Schmidt reaffirming France's and the FRG's loyalty to the Atlantic alliance.... [paragraph continues]

In this respect the assertions of some political leaders that Europe should be 'de-NATO'ized' and that France 'should find a new path between the superpowers' can only be described as a remnant of neutralist absurdity. It reminds me of an episode in 1939 just before Hitler launched World War II when Belgium organized military maneuvers aimed at France in order to show its neutrality. I think it is important never to forget which side we are on."

PSYCHIATRISTS DEMAND END TO SOVIET ABUSE OF DISSIDENTS

[Amber Bousoglou report: "At Hamburg Forum Soviet Delegates Maintain They Are Unaware of Any Human Rights Violations in Their Country"]

[Excerpt] In Washington the White House issued a statement Wednesday 20 February describing the treatment inflicted on the Nobel Peace laureate [Sakharov] and his wife as "deplorable." The United States calls on all people "here and abroad to join the efforts being made to persuade the Soviet Union to allow Mr Sakharov to pursue his intellectual and professional work in accordance with the guarantees laid down in the Soviet Constitution and the Helsinki Final Act."

A report from Moscow that same day announced that writer and translator Raissa Orlova, wife of the writer Lev Kopelev, had just been expelled from the Writers Union and the CPSU.

In Paris Wednesday the Committee of French Psychiatrists Against the Use of Psychiatry for Political Ends, the Union of Hospital Psychiatrists, the National Union of Private Psychiatrists, the Union of French Psychiatrists and the French Confederation of Doctors Unions held a press conference to hear the testimony of Dr Aleksandr Voloshanovich, consultant psychiatrist of the Moscow Committee of Inquiry Into the Abuse of Psychiatry for Political Ends who emigrated from the USSR just 2 weeks ago.

At this press conference "a solemn appeal" was launched "to French psychiatrists and doctors to join the action to obtain the release of Aleksandr Podrabinek and Vyacheslav Bakhmin, both members of the Moscow committee." The appeal's signatories hope that the committee "will be able to pursue in full independence the work of objective information and humanitarian defense it has been carrying out for the defense of freedom since 1977."

Of course, there is a committee of inquiry which was set up 2.5 years ago by the sixth psychiatry congress. It met for the first time a few days ago and will meet again in 6 months "to consider a case" which has been submitted to it. However, the inquiry will be entrusted to the psychiatry society in the country in which the victim is living. It is easy to imagine the result of an inquiry by the Soviet psychiatric society.

L'UNITA REPORTS BERLINGUER ADDRESS TO PCI FLORENCE RALLY

LD221459 Milan L'UNITA in Italian 18 Feb 80 pp 1-2 LD

["U.B." report on PCI Secretary General Enrico Berlinguer 17 February address to PCI rally in Florence: "Rally of 200,000 in Florence for Peace"]

[Text] Florence--"This great demonstration was necessary. It is very important that thousands and thousands of men and women from all over Italy--and even delegations from European cities to which Italians have emigrated--have come here to demonstrate loud and clear the desire of millions and millions of people to defend peace, to combat rearmament and war."

PCI Secretary General Enrico Berlinguer addressed about 200,000 people gathered in the squares of the ancient city center of Florence (San Firenze, Piazza della Repubblica, Il Porcellino) which were linked to the rostrum by a massive public address system: Certainly they would not all have fitted into Piazza Signoria. As Mayor Comrade Elio Gabbuggiani pointed out, it would of course have been possible to choose different sites, larger spaces, which are available in the city. But this square was chosen because for so many times over the past 30 years, from the times of the "cold war" to the congress of "mayors of the entire world" organized by La Pira and the great Vietnam demonstrations of the sixties, we have gathered here to talk about peace, and this is another crucial moment, another "high spot" in the dramatic issue of peace versus war.

Berlinguer was preceded by PCI Florence Federation Secretary Ventura, the city mayor, a young student of the Italian Communist Youth Federation from Naples named Pulcrano, and a female worker named Mellace, who all said just this.

This rally, Berlinguer continued, after thanking the great crowd for having responded to the PCI's appeal, is and must be just one element in a mobilization which must steadily grow and become a permanent phenomenon, so that concerns and fears for the fate of peace can be transformed into an active intervention by the masses in the policy of the parties, the government and the states.

Peace is a supreme asset and one that belongs to everybody. In order to guarantee this asset it is essential that action be taken both by individuals and by organizations and institutions of all kinds, both national and international. This is a battle in which we must unite all forces, irrespective of differences of class, ideology and political orientation. But why, Berlinguer asked, do we need such a broad and unitary mobilization now? The reason is now obvious: It is that, while it is true that war is not inevitable, it is also true that it is not impossible and right now this is a danger which has drawn nearer. I am not talking, Berlinguer said, only about the albeit atrocious "local" wars which in recent years have bloodied--and are still bloodying--so many parts of the world, causing destruction, death and suffering for so many people, so many families and for entire peoples, generating increasing tensions in international relations.

I am talking about something more tragic; I am talking about another world war which, however, would not now have the already terrible characteristics of the ones which we ourselves have known and which so many of you remember and by which so many are still marked and caused to suffer. I am talking about a war, Berlinguer stressed, such as mankind has not yet experienced by which, if it did ever experience it, would certainly be its last, because it would imply its end.

Comrade Berlinguer explained as follows: The destructive power of weapons, he said, has now reached such a deadly level that it is difficult even to manage their effects and is difficult to truly comprehend. The only instance which mankind has yet had of this destructive power was at the end of World War II with the explosion of two nuclear bombs over Hiroshima and Nagasaki. Each of these bombs literally razed an entire city to the ground and killed 100,000 people--some immediately and the rest after months or years, as the result of the inexorable effects of atomic radiation.

But the fact is that now such a terrible event would pale against the destructive capacity of the nuclear weapons available to an increasing number of states. There are now in the world thousands and thousands of nuclear bombs and warheads which can be delivered by aircraft or missiles. Each one of these bombs or warheads has a destructive power 10, 20 or even 100 times greater than the two bombs dropped on Hiroshima and Nagasaki 35 years ago.

The two major powers alone, the USSR and the United States, Berlinguer continued as the silent and attentive crowd followed his words, now have nuclear arsenals capable of destroying the entire planet no less than seven times over. Yes, he explained, no less than seven times over.

Berlinguer pointed out that Togliatti was one of the first to understand the profound, definitive and dramatic nature of the "innovation" of nuclear warfare. Recalling his 1954 and 1963 speeches, he cited the following passage: "So here we are faced with the terrible 'innovation'; now mankind can not only kill and destroy other men, as in the past, it can kill and destroy the whole of mankind.... The history of mankind is acquiring an unprecedented dimension.... And peace, which has always been regarded as an asset, is becoming something more and something different: It is becoming a necessity, unless mankind wants to destroy itself.... In view of the specific threat of shared destruction, the awareness of our shared human nature is emerging more forcefully."

For many years, Berlinguer continued, people thought that the apocalyptic nature of another world war would be enough in itself to prevent it. They talked about a peace based on the balance of terror, such as the peace which existed (and still exists) as a result of the equal U.S. and Soviet capacity for destroying each other.

There was and there still is an element of truth in this belief, insofar as the balance based on the nuclear deterrent has certainly helped to prevent irreparable acts by both superpowers. But how long can such a guarantee last? A guarantee which, among other things, Berlinguer added, by nature cannot inspire tranquility and trust? And how can this guarantee be regarded as adequate in view of the present resurgence of a rivalry between the two superpowers in testing and producing more and more improved and sophisticated defensive and offensive weapons? And how can the balance of terror be sufficient if the United States and the USSR are no longer the only nuclear powers?

Berlinguer pointed out in this connection that France, Britain and the PRC have also been nuclear powers for some time. Moreover, he said, there are already no less than 22 countries with reactors producing plutonium, which is the raw material for building nuclear devices. It is forecast that at the present rate in 10 years' time there could be at least 50 countries capable of producing nuclear weapons. These "potential" producers already include India and other countries such as Israel, Egypt, Pakistan, South Africa and other states in both Africa and South America.

This alarming process of the increasing number of countries capable of providing themselves with nuclear weapons, the PCI secretary general continued, poses once again and renders urgent the need for great national and world movement effectively mobilized by the following single objective: Let us halt the arms race and let atomic and nuclear weapons be banned. There is no man, woman or young person, Berlinguer exclaimed, who cannot be won over to this cause. The arms race has now reached proportions which are multiplying and increasing daily the danger of armed conflicts and are causing the squandering of resources on an intolerable scale, in a world in which hundreds of millions of individuals are suffering and dying as a result of underdevelopment, backwardness, famine, malnutrition, drought, disease and ignorance. Even in the industrialized countries the economic crisis, which is gripping the populations in an increasingly tight vise, demands the utilization of all existing resources and their increase, instead of their squandering on producing military equipment.

Berlinguer cited some very eloquent data regarding this tragic "squandering." In the past 15 years world military spending has increased 42 percent. World military spending is now about $400 billion, that is about 350 trillion lire. There has been a 300 percent increase in spending in Africa and a 400 percent increase in the Middle East. The world arms trade has increased greatly. There has been an annual increase of 30 percent in the past 5 years and a 70 percent increase between 1977 and 1978--and this with an increasing development in trade in the most modern weapons--missiles, supersonic aircraft, ships and armored vehicles. Italy is by no means divorced from this trade and is indeed one of the countries where arms trafficking and clandestine importation is most intensive. Our almost daily discoveries concerning the Italian terrorists' weaponry are further evidence of this kind of trafficking. At the same time, Italy is one of the major arms exporting nations.

People tell us, Berlinguer said in this connection, that arms production guarantees jobs for thousands of workers in some provinces. But could these jobs not be guaranteed and indeed increased and these workers' and trained personnel's professional capabilities be used in the production of very different commodities of benefit to the Italian economy and for exporting goods which are not instruments of death, but of life; which will serve to improve the quality of life; which will serve the peaceful development of the peoples and countries to which they are sent?

The alarm bell being rung by nuclear proliferation, the arms race and the increase in the arms trade and trafficking, Berlinguer said, has now become louder. This is a result partly of the armed or latent conflicts in so many areas of the world (the Middle East, Southeast Asia, Africa, some areas of Latin America) and partly of the state of international political relations, especially U.S.-USSR relations. The greatest danger at present lies precisely in the tension between the two major powers. For some years now, and particularly over the past few months, there has been a move away from relations albeit difficult but still inspred by the spirit of detente and the quest for negotiation and understanding, toward conflict, the quest for unilateral solutions, attempts to extend areas of influence, acts of force and threats of deep ruptures. This has seriously upset the entire international climate, lending strength to all the forces which set their sights on cold war and the division of the world.

Concern over this situation and these dangers, Berlinguer continued, has inspired our stances on the latest international events and particularly on certain moves and decisions made by the United States and the USSR, in our desire to help to dispel them.

Following the request that NATO decide to start producing and deploying Pershing-2 and cruise missiles in Western Europe, we stated clearly as follows: Let this decision be postponed and at the same time let the USSR be asked to halt production and deployment of the SS-20's, let a meeting take place to verify the real state of nuclear armaments in both blocs and let negotiations be started to reduce them. Berlinguer pointed out that unfortunately the government and the parties that support it preferred to ignore this proposal, which in fact had the same aim as the stances adopted by all the most important Italian Catholic organizations (including Catholic Action) and by other European countries, parliaments or governments (in Holland, Denmark and Belgium). In this way uncritical approval was given to the NATO Council's decision in Brussels. But it is clear, the Communist secretary general added, that the point which we raised --negotiations for nuclear arms reductions in Europe--remains valid and we will continue to support it.

Dealing next with the subject of the military intervention in Afghanistan, Comrade Berlinguer said that in all circumstances and at any time the Italian Communists would have denounced that action. Indeed, it violated a principle which we consider inviolable in international relations and this is one reason why we have asked and we still ask that action be taken for the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan. It is the principle of the inviolability of the independence and sovereignty of every country for which the PCI has always fought absolutely consistently--something which cannot be claimed by other parties which now presume to lecture us or "examine" us. You only have to cite the silence and "understanding" which accompanied the U.S. exploits in Vietnam or others, such as the active support for Iran under the shah: When did the Christian Democratic Party [DC], not to mention the Italian Social Democratic Party [PSD] or the Italian Republican Party [PRI], ever denounce aggressions and violations of sovereignty on such a scale?

Are these perhaps abstract principles? How can one say such a thing? Are the reality of nations, national feelings, every people's desire to build their own order mere abstractions?

One of the characteristics of our time, Berlinguer continued, is precisely the revival of national feelings in continents and countries which for centuries have had to suffer the yoke of colonialism and imperialism. One cannot oppose the reality of the resurgence of nationalism; it must be respected and, if anything, care must be taken to create an international framework in which these national thrusts will constitute a free contribution of peaceful energies to the development of worldwide cooperation.

Yes, this principle was violated in Afghanistan. It does not seem valid to invoke the treaty existing between the countries because in fact it does not seem that any Afghan state body requested Soviet aid. Nor is it valid to state that the intervention helped or is helping the Afghan people's revolution. We do not believe, Berlinguer said, that a real people's government can stand and consolidate itself if it depends on the support of another country's army.

But leaving aside all these arguments, the PCI secretary general said, tackling the essential significance and the more general consequences of the Soviet intervention in the present situation, the fact remains that in the present international situation any violent intervention by one state in another state's life--especially any intervention by one of the major powers, which shoulder the greater responsibility in the world--deals a very heavy blow to detente.

Of course it is true--and we have emphatically stated and repeated this--that the detente crisis does not stem from the Kabul events. We have expressed reservations and criticisms regarding other foreign policy moves in Africa and Asia by the USSR and other socialist countries friendly with the USSR.

We have also expressed reservations and criticisms regarding various aspects of the PRC's policy in both Asia and Europe. But having said that, nobody must close their eyes to the U.S. administration's conduct, which has been characterized by a series of acts contrary to the principles and requirements which must form the basis of detente and international cooperation. Next Berlinguer discussed the gravity of some of the actions carried out by the United States, which the PCI has already denounced and firmly condemned in the past few weeks. The U.S. administration's approach to the human rights issue has been and remains dangerous and unilateral. There can be no doubt that full respect for freedom and democracy in every country is a problem that does exist and one which exists in a tragic manner even in several socialist countries: We have never hesitated to acknowledge and denounce this. But the Carter administration has spoken and acted as if the United States were completely innocent of violating these rights both in its own country and in the rest of the world. But is such presumption credible? How can one forget--to mention just the most recent events--the support, interventions and backing given to dictatorial and bloodthirsty regimes ranging from Chile and other Latin American countries to Iran?

Factors in Deterioration

On the basis of this "presumption of innocence" on the United States' part the human rights issue gains entirely distored and dangerous characteristics. Indeed, if the human rights issue is posed in terms of an agitation aimed solely against the Soviet Union (and again an attempt is being made to do this) it enters into conflict with the detente policy. This does not facilitate even a development of democracy, either in the socialist countries or in the other countries of the world--a development which is closely linked to the advance of detente.

Next Berlinguer recalled other initiatives taken by the United States which have been further factors in the deterioration of the international climate and of detente. He cited the entire affair of the Camp David accrods between Egypt and Israel, which nullified [svuotavano] the previous Gromyko-Vance agreements, excluded the USSR from the negotiations and in no way resolved the key problem of the Palestinians. He cited the whole stunt over the "case" of the Soviet soliders in Cuba, which appeared in the midst of the Havana nonalined conference. Nothing further has been said or heard of that "case": It seems clear that it was an artificial pretext created "out of the blue" by the United States.

Coming to more recent events, Berlinguer said, it is clear that the present Washington administration's initiatives in "response" to the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan are mistaken and dangerous.

Berlinguer cited in particular the following "responses": the assertion that the United States is and must remain the world's strongest military nation, the "foremost power," with the consequent rejection of the concept of balance which is one of the cornerstones of a detente policy; the announcement that certain areas of the world, even ones very distant from the United States, are of "vital and direct" interest to the United States and the decision--consistent with that announcement--to send Marines to the Persian Gulf; the failure to ratify the SALT II agreements, which the very government which underwrote them decided to stop promoting in Congress, at least for the time being; the many grave U.S. economic retaliations against the USSR, whether direct or indirect, through the request to "allied" countries to follow suit exactly; last, the decision to boycott the Olympics--an absurd presumption from both the sporting and the political viewpoint. This is a gesture which could jeopardize any future world sports competition, which reduces sport to an instrument of authoritarian political decisions, which smacks of hostility not only to the Soviet Government but to the entire Soviet people, moving in an entirely opposite direction to detente and understanding among the peoples.

Berlinguer described as shameful the motion passed a few days ago in the Strasbourg parliament by the conservative, Christian Democratic, liberal and even some socialist and social democratic deputies, for an Olympic boycott. Next he warmly welcomed the International Olympic Committee's recent decision not to accept the American diktat and to suggest going to Moscow in observance of the true Olympic spirit.

Berlinguer asked: What does the sum of all these elements prove? It proves that a negative spiral of actions and retaliations has begun between the two major world threatening to become uncontrollable, to nullify the results of detente and to magnify hugely the dangers to peace. He said: So what must be done? How must we act?

We always proceed from the acknowledgement of the decisive world role of both the United States and the USSR with regard to maintaining peace and resolving the major problems of world developments. We therefore must not hinder this role. Nevertheless, events are showing that the direction in which relations between the two major powers are moving is not bringing the world any nearer detente, but toward increasing tension. It is essential, therefore, that there be a contribution in the form of initiatives by other states and other forces capable of acting for detente to facilitate as rapid a resumption as possible of the dialog between the two major powers, with the aim of outlining a disposition of not only coexistence but peaceful cooperation involving the free and autonomous contribution of all states, both large and small.

Which or how many states should this involve? Berlinguer's first answer was that these forces include the nonalined movement, within which our neighboring and friendly Yugoslavia plays a prominent role. May that country's peoples, who are experiencing with sorrow but also with fortitude their grief and anxiety concerning Comrade Tito's life, feel emanating from this corner the solidarity of the Italian Communists--a solidarity which expresses among other things an affinity of political inspiration in the international workers movement. Our party is sure that Yugoslavia will remain steadfastly on the path which it has autonomously chosen under Tito's guidance--the path of building an original form of socialism, the path of independence and unity, the path of a foreign policy of nonalinement and active participation in the struggle for detente and peace.

But the forces which can fight for peace and detente also include religious authorities, institutions and movements and above all the Catholic Church, which has made its voice heard internationally in favor of disarmement, negotiation and international cooperation.

Those forces certainly also include Western Europe and in particular its workers movement. For how many years have we heard Italian party leaders and representatives of other West European countries' political forces talking about Europe and Europeanism? And for how long have we had to listen to them lecturing us--and with what arrogance? Well, many of them now--at a time when it really is a matter of asserting an autonomous European position because it has become indispensable instead of encouraging East-West disputes and specualting on them--many of them are now passively and wholly alining with the most extreme U.S. stances. Of course not all European government representatives are pursuing this line, whose standard bearers are Mrs Thatcher, Strauss and the very Kohl who yesterday addressed the DC Congress in such an arrogant and provocative manner, Berlinguer said. The positions of other parties, including many socialist and social democratic parties, are different, more cautious and prudent with regard to the fate of detente. Different too is the stance adopted 2 days ago by the Confederation of European Trade Unions, which launched an urgent appeal to the European governments to work actively for detente and disarmament. How are we to assess the Italian Government's stance. The least we can say, the PCI secretary general replied, is that it has not been striking with its spirit of independence or initiative. [paragraph continues]

Without reaching the extremes of Thatcher or Strauss, the Italian Government has nevertheless essentially obeyed the U.S. demands. The PSDI, the PRI and even the DC--despite a few exceptions--regard membership in the Atlantic alliance (which nobody is calling into question--not even us) as uncritical adherence to all U.S. theses, even ones which could jeopardize the vital interests of the national economy (in which trade with Eastern Europe plays such a major part) and even ones which deprive Italy and Western Europe of the chance to develop their own initiatives for reestablishing the East-West dialog and for opening up Western Europe and Italy to more intensive and positive relations with the developing countries.

Above all, Berlinguer continued, the Italian Government and certain Italian parties are overlooking, in the positions they have adopted, the fact that in the United States there is a preelection situation which is greatly influencing the conduct of the President and his administration (though we are well aware that the latter's present line is certainly not linked solely to the imminent presidential elections). The nature of election time (we are talking about the presidential) in the United States is nothing new. Even back in the early 19th century the great French historian Alexis de Tocqueville, author of the famous book "The Old Regime and the Revolution," wrote in his book "Democracy in America": "The time of the election of the U.S. President can still be regarded as a period of national crisis.... Long before the appointed time arrives, the election becomes the major--and so to speak--the sole occupation dominating people's minds.... The incumbent President is preoccupied with defending himself. He no longer governs in the interests of the state, but of his reelection; he humbles himself before the majority and often, rather than resisting its pressures as is his duty, he supports its whims."

Unanimous Effort

Is this not exactly the impression which the present U.S. administration's conduct creates today? And do not the leaders of certain political parties believe that the duty of Italy and Europe is to help reduce--through a moderating role and a constructive initiative--the lasting dangers which certain "temporary" stances of the U.S. leaders could create in international relations?

All this means, Berlinguer then emphasized, that the task of championing and carrying forward the cause of Europeanism--that is, of a positive world role for Europe in our time--cannot be performed by the old ruling groups. This task is passing to--and should be increasingly undertaken by--the workers movement and the popular and democratic forces of every persuasion.

Berlinguer then broached the topic of the necessary mobilization of all forces desiring peace.

We believe, he said, that the forces of widespread people's masses in Italy and Europe which identify with the communist, socialist, social democratic and secular democratic movement and those belonging to democratic Christian and Catholic currents can today perform an active and positive role.

Each of these forces certainly has its own view of the world. But it is important and crucial that each of them, with its own heritage of ideas and its own tradition, should attempt, together with the others, to seek a broad basis of agreement for an effective peace initiative.

There are some points--and Berlinguer recalled that he had already outlined them in his recent speech in Terni--on which this unanimous effort is possible. In the first place--this is the first of those points--we propose that a stance of condemnation and opposition with respect to every act of force and every threat of the use of force, from whatever quarter, against other peoples and other states be adopted; and this also entails the rejection of every policy based on retaliation.

Second, an active moderating role vis-a-vis the United States and the USSR must be performed, urging the two biggest powers to rediscover the logic of detente in their relations. This is not a matter of contemplating a "third force" role for Europe. It is a different issue: that of a European political initiative to insure that the dialog between the USSR and the United States is resumed. Moreover, it is only in this perspective that conflicts can be resolved through negotiations. It is only in this perspective that other peoples and states in addition to the two big powers can have significance and a role. . Only in this way can there be a real enhancement for every state and every people of their positive participation and activity in a world which is tending increasingly to be multipolar.

It is necessary--this is our third proposal--to promote a powerful mass movement and political and diplomatic initiatives in order to check the rearmament race and instead carry out true arms reduction measures in a gradual, balanced and controlled manner. This is possible because there are already steps which can be taken and forums in which a fruitful initiative to this effect can take place.

It is therefore necessary:

1--To demand that the United States promptly ratify the SALT II treaty; 2--to reopen as soon as possible the negotiations on medium-range missiles in Europe--a vitalilty important matter; 3--to give new impetus and bring to positive conclusions the Vienna negotiations on the reduction of conventional weapons; 4--to achieve a regulation of the international arms trade.

We wish to emphasize, Berlinguer said, the value which proposals to this effect put forward by various states could have. Over the last few weeks France has put forward the idea of a European conference on detente and disarmament put forward by Comrade Gierek at the recent Polish communists' conference is equally significant and worthy of attention. We must strive to insure that these proposals are heeded by everybody and that Italy also undertakes an initiative of its own to this effect.

Next we propose that our country work--this is the fourth point, Berlinguer stressed--to insure that the EEC political forces and governments adopt unanimous stances to insure the success of the CSCE conference which will take place in Madrid in the fall and which is to take up again the topics of the 1975 Helsinki conference. Last--this is the fifth point--the effort aimed at tackling and surmounting the economic causes of the current international tensions and establishing a new system in relations with the Third and Fourth World countries is crucially important. Here the PCI secretary broached the great and dramatic topic of world balances and North-South relations. One of the most dramatic contradictions, he said, or rather, the most dramatic in the present-day world and, in short, the most explosive, is posed by the imbalance and the very profound disparity between the group of economically developed countries and the Third and Fourth World countries. There are really vast differences in the people's living and survival conditions. However, the new development of this era is that these peoples are on the move and no longer accept political subjugation and economic subordination. But--this is the point--a new balance has not yet been found. On the contrary, attempts are being made to maintain old positions of domination in new ways and to continue to enjoy those countries' raw materials and to control their peoples' developments. Instead, it is necessary, Berlinguer said, to move resolutely toward a new balance and a new system of economic and political relations. The old logic is still widely operative, and is based on two cornerstones--using this underdeveloped world's raw materials and markets and paying those countries a predominantly monetary compensation. [paragraph continues]

This is not and cannot be a real relationship among equals. Indeed the old relationship has entered a crisis with consequences--unless a new balance is achieved--which could explode in forms and on a scale such as to overwhelm the entire world.

A new system of relations should be based on criteria of bilateral and multilateral economic cooperation. These should be criteria of equality and mutual advantage. The developed world (we have in mind Europe, Italy and the United States itself) can continue to have oil in sufficient quantities and also at tolerable prices only if the quality of the exchange is changed. The industrialized countries can create a new basis for economic relations by supplying plants, advanced technologies and finished goods to the countries from which they import oil, so as to help their real economic take-off and at the same time to create new employment opportunities here. This should also be the goal of the possible investment of monetary resources, especially in the case of areas lacking raw materials--that is, the areas termed the "Fourth World."

Nevertheless, Berlinguer continued, a change in political relations is also necessary in order to bring about this fundamental change in economic relations with the Third and Fourth Worlds. Essentially, it is really a matter of thoroughly superseding the era of "areas of influence" or so-called areas of "vital interest" for this or that industrial power. The policy of "areas of influence" is increasingly a source of tension and imbalances because it intensifies the rivalry among the big powers, tends to stifle the independence of various peoples and states and makes the socioeconomic probelsm of what we term the third and fourth worlds really insoluble.

Berlinguer stated at this point that political actions, such as recognition of the PLO and an involvement and initiative to insure that the elections in Rhodesia take place in a regualr manner and that their outcome is respected, would also be very valuable for opening up new paths toward a positive relationship with these peoples.

Of course, surmounting the policy of "areas of influence" does not mean an absence of relations between the big powers or the industrialized countries and the vast areas of Asia, Afriaa and Latin America. Rather, it means a new conception of political relations between these different realities in the world. If there is to be a "presence" of the two big powers or of other industrial countries in the Third and Fourth Worlds, this should be based on the search for fair and trustful cooperation and should be negotiated with the peoples and states concerned. The peoples and states in these areas should really attain the role of protagonists and not that of subordinate satellites.

Comrade Berlinguer approached the conclusion of his speech. This, he said, is a demonstration which should prompt you to conduct an intensive campaign of information, mobilization and initiative concerning the issues of peace and disarmament: effective, widespread and imaginative unified--above all--and mass initiatives. Berlinguer gave an example, citing the initiative undertaken by women in Rome's 16th district of gathering signatures for a people's petition in support of peace and disarmament which was subsequently taken to the European Parliament in Strasbourg. This is a field in which we should extend our creative ability, which is so great, ranging from radio to television, concerts, debates, sitins, gathering signatures, patient door-to-door canvassing, the press and sending letters to the newspapers. Everybody--women, workers, young people and citizens--should become mobilized to this end, involving as many people as possible, even knocking on the doors of parishioners and debating wherever people and young people gather together, in bars, stadiums and discotheques.

We are aware--and must make everybody aware--of the dangers confronting mankind today, Berlinguer said, but we are also full of confidence in the wisdom of the peoples and also of many leaders. We summon from Florence--which is the heart and center of the highest expressions of Italian civilization and which is the city which has been able to display its individual sensitivity and ability to unite different worlds in a common aspiration for peace--we summon from here all Italians to a great struggle for peace.

We do this from our Italy, which has a long-standing and strong tradition--a tradition which has characterized the socialist, communist and trade union movement for over a century--that of taking in part in struggles against wars. From this Italy which is the seat and center of the Catholic Church and in which one of the strongest and most esteemed communist parties in the world lives and struggles--precisely from here a powerful and intelligent contribution to the victory of peace can, should and will come in order to insure it for ourselves, the younger generation and the generations to come.

RUFFINI TO HOLD TALKS IN EUROPEAN CAPITALS

LD231922 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 1800 GMT 23 Feb 80 LD

Minister of foreign affairs Ruffini is to carry out from Monday, the 25th, to Thursday, the 28th, a rapid round of consultations in five European capitals in an attmept to solve the question of the British contribution to the EEC budget. Ruffini will also discuss the European attitude on international affairs following the recent meetings held by U.S. Secretary of State Cyrus Vance. The five stages of the journey will be Bonn, Copenhagen, Brussels, Dublin and The Hague.

CARRINGTON TELLS VANCE OF NEED FOR BETTER COORDINATION

[David Adamson report: "Carrington Raises 'Bungles by U.S.' With Vance"]

[Excerpt] The need for better coordination between Britain and America on Afghanistan and other issues was raised by Lord Carrington last night with Mr Vance, secretary of state. Britain and other Western European countries have become increasingly irritated by what they see as American bungling, with initiatives being launched without proper consultation.

The first issue to cause European ire was an American call for European support for economic sanctions against Iran over the hostages. The Europeans claim the proposal was then dropped by the Americans without consultation. Next in the list of major complaints came President Carter's announcement of an Olympic boycott unless the Soviet Union withdrew from Afghanistan by last Wednesday. The allies were not consulted in advance. Bungled communications were blamed again over the collapse of Mr Vance's plan for a five-power meeting of foreign ministers in Bonn on Wednesday. The French took umbrage when they heard the date had been announced in Washington before they were informed.

A specifically British complaint concerns Rhodesia. The foreign secretary did not consider it helpful, to put it mildly, that the United States voted in favor of a United Nations Security Council resolution which called on Britain to be impartial in its administration of Rhodesia. Britain refused to participate in the Feb. 2 debate on the resolution, which was passed by 14 votes to nil.

Meanwhile the EEC proposal for a neutral Afghanistan was welcomed by Mr Vance in London last night as a "profound and important suggestion." But he avoided giving too firm an endorsement to the idea. He was in "general agreement with the concept," he said. His comments came after an hour-and-half session at the Foreign Office with Lord Carrington with the talks continuing over dinner and well into the evening.

CARRINGTON SPEAKS ON DETENTE'S FUTURE AFTER AFGHANISTAN

[By Chris Moncrieff, PA political staff]

[Text] Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington warned in London today that Third World countries would resent any crude attempt to buy their loyalty in the East-West division. He told the Royal Institute of International Affairs that they would not even welcome help in strengthening defences against the Russians if it also complicated their own relationships. "The Christmas invasion by Russia of a non-aligned developing country beyond the borders of the Soviet empire marked a qualitative change in the pattern of world affairs," he said. "The Russians argue that Afghanistan was threatened by external subversion and said they could not tolerate turbulence on their frontiers.

Lord Carrington said they claimed they had a right and a duty to support by force any regime those choose to call "socialist" even if that regime was under threat only because it was unacceptable to large sections of its people. "These are feeble justifications for the use of massive armed force against a small neighbour which posed no conceivable threat to the security of the Soviet Union itself. They are far more like the classical excuses of an imperial power seeking to expand." He claimed it would not be easy for the Russians to restore the myth that they are the particular friends of the developing world, and that the West are its particular enemies.

"But we should not assume from that that the Third World has now swung round, that is now on our side of the East-West division. They do not want to be sucked into the East-West vortex. They want to be left alone to run their affairs." Lord Carrington predicted that they would look out for and resent any crude attempt to buy their unquestioning loyalty in a dispute which they still hoped would pass them by. "And they will not welcome even assistance which strengthens their defences against the Russians if it also seems likely to complicate the relations among themselves."

Lord Carrington asked what would be the future for detente after Afghanistan. "For the West, detente meant a general relaxation of tension, and avoidance of dangerous adventures by one side in areas which impinged on the interests of the other. For the Russians, as for us, detente was a way of avoiding nuclear war. It was also a way of acquiring Western grain and technology to bolster their inadequate economic system. But detente was not for them a reason to abandon their attempts to spread their influence in the Third World by fair means or foul."

Lord Carrington said the West was now taking measures over grain supplies and other economic relationships of interest to the Soviet Union. The Olympic games would now bring the Russians no propaganda bonanza. "These measures have increased the cost of the Afghanistan adventure beyond what the Russians expected. I believe that if the Russians face consistent, determined and sustained Western and international opposition to their expansionist ambitions, they will be less assertive in pursuing them and readier to look again for agreement in areas of mutual interest."

Lord Carrington said his own proposal for a neutral Afghanistan represented the most hopeful way of repairing the damage. "For weeks the Russians have been saying that they would withdraw once the reason for their incursion no longer existed." He added: "There is no need for the East-West relationship to be a zero sum gain. Indeed, detente, like the caucus race in "Alice in Wonderland" should be a game which everyone can win and where everyone has a prize--but we need to see some major changes in Soviet attitudes before we can be sure that is true."

COMMONWEALTH ASKS FOR MEETING WITH CARRINGTON ON SOAMES

[David Adamson report: "Protest Over Role of Soames"]

[Text] An urgent meeting with Lord Carrington to discuss a "crisis of confidence" over Lord Soames's administration of Rhodesia was requested yesterday by Sir Shridath Ramphal, Commonwealth secretary-general. Sir Shridath is understood to have asked for a meeting today, but there was no immediate response from the foreign secretary.

The call came after a meeting yesterday of more than 30 Commonwealth high commissioners in London. Their concern centred on the alleged lack of impartiality shown by Lord Soames regarding political parties engaged in next week's elections. The African front-line states, led by Tanzania, believe that he is discriminating against Mr Mugabe whose ZANU [Zimbabwe African National Union] supporters have been blamed for most of the pre-election violence and intimidation. Sir Shridath is expected to ask Lord Carrington to instruct Lord Soames to order the Rhodesian Army and Bishop Muzorewa's auxiliaries back to their bases.

Mr Amon Nsekela, Tanzanian high commissioner, said yesterday that at the Lancaster House conference Lord Carrington had pleaded "trust us." "We did so but over the past week that trust has been progressively harder to sustain in the face of mounting evidence that the governor himself is not honouring the agreement. Perhaps he is not able to do so."

PALESTINIAN, ISRAELI PRISONERS EXCHANGED AT LARNACA AIRPORT

[Text] It has been officially announced that Cyprus authorities, following an International Red Cross request, have allowed a prisoner exchange to take place here. The exchange involved two Palestinian men and an Israeli woman who were detained by both sides outside Cyprus.

The exchange was held today at Larnaca Airport under the supervision of the International Red Cross and Cyprus police. The authorities express their regrets for any inconveniences or hardships that may have been caused to the public as a result of the special security measures that were taken for this reason at the airport.

AFP REPORT ON KIPRIANOU'S UPCOMING EUROPE TRIP

NC251022 Paris AFP in English 1014 GMT 25 Feb 80 NC

[Text] Nicosia, Feb. 25 (AFP)--Cypriot President Spiros Kiprianou will leave here tomorrow to visit Paris, London and Rome for talks with government leaders on recent developments in the Cyprus question.

He told AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE that he would discuss with French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing how France could play a more active role over the Cyprus issue and contribute in a more positive way to the search for a solution. Other matters of common interest with the three countries would also be discussed during his tour, he said.

SPOKESMAN AFFIRMS UN OFFICIAL NOT EXPECTED TO VISIT

NC231143 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 23 Feb 80 NC

[Text] In answer to a relevant question, the government spokesman said that Perez de Cuellar, under secretary general for special political affairs, was not expected in Cyprus for the time being. The spokesman added that in the meantime, consultations aimed at promoting the resumption of the talks as soon as possible were being continued both in Nicosia with the UN secretary general's special representative and at UN headquarters.

In answer to another question, the spokesman replied that as long as the consultations continued, it was not wise to make any further statement.

DENKTAS REITERATES 'TWO AUTONOMOUS' ADMINISTRATIONS EXIST

TA231257 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1215 GMT 23 Feb 80 TA

[Text] President Denktas has said that those who wanted a negotiated settlement of the Cyprus problem should accept the reality that two separate autonomous administrations existed on the island. He was commenting on a statement by Lord (Trefgarn) that the British Government recognized one government in Cyprus. President Denktas stressed that this stand of the British Government would not contribute to a solution of the Cyprus problem. He recalled that the British Government was one of the guarantor states, which had declared at the Geneva meeting that two autonomous administrations existed in Cyprus. President Denktas stated that the Cyprus problem was the result of a vile attack by the Greek Cypriots on the Turkish Cypriot community in 1963 aiming to annihilate the Turkish Cypriot partner in the bicommunal Republic of Cyprus and to gain control of the whole island. He added that the coup in 1974 was aimed at completing the work started by Archbishop Makarios but that the Turkish Cypriot community had defended its rights on both occasions.

GOVERNMENT OFFICIALLY REJECTS ROGERS NATO PROPOSAL

[Text] Greece has rejected the Rogers proposal for its return to NATO. The following government statement was released after a meeting held today under Prime Minister Karamanlis with the participation of appropriate ministers and officials. The Greek Government today announced to General Rogers that it does not consider his proposals a satisfactory basis for the reintegration of Greece into the military wing of the alliance.

At the same time, the government informed General Rogers that Greece would have accepted its reintegration into NATO on the basis of the arrangements agreed upon by Generals Davos and Haig in May 1978. With this position the government believes that, on the one hand, it strengthens the national interests of Greece, and, on the other hand, it once again offers to contribute toward restoration of the unity of the southeast wing of the Altantic alliance. The government wants to take this opportunity to make the following statement:

Greece did not withdraw from NATO's military wing because it is against the Atlantic alliance. It withdrew its protest when a member of NATO, Turkey, invaded Cyprus and occupied nearly half the island's territory. Since then Greece has considered that both its own interest as well as that of the alliance dictated Greece's return to NATO's military wing under the form of special relations.

Following a Greek proposal, Generals Davos and Haig jointly worked out the form of these relations and agreed in May 1978 on specific and detailed arrangements which permitted the direct reintegration of Greece into the alliance. These arrangements were considered satisfactory both by the Greek side and by the military command of the alliance.

Turkey, however, raised objections to these arrangements. Obviously in an effort to remove these Turkish objections, Generals Davos and Haig submitted repeated counterproposals to Greece. The latest counterproposal was that of General Rogers on 11 February 1980. All of these counterproposals move away from basic points of the Davos-Haig agreement. They include arrangements which are not considered satisfactory by the Greek Government. For this reason they were rejected.

As already stated, the Greek Government continues to believe that the Davos-Haig agreement offers the solution to the question of Greece's reintegration into the military wing of the Atlantic alliance. It is prepared to accept this solution.

It is now up to the alliance to consider its priorities and to judge whether the unfounded objections of only one of its members can overshadow the need--particularly under current conditions--for restoring the unity and effectiveness of the alliance.

Papandreou Statement on Rejection

AT231523 Athens AKROPOLIS in Greek 23 Feb 80 p 9 AT

[Text] Referring to the rejection of the Rogers plan and to Turkey's decision to withdraw NOTAM 714, PASOK Chairman A. Papandreou claimed in a statement made last night:

"'A package solution' for the Aegean is being planned. It is clear that the negotiations between Greece and Turkey which are being held under the auspices of the United States and NATO have advanced significantly and are nearing their final stage.

"It is especially interesting and revealing that exactly at the time when the Greek Government has officially and publicly rejected the Rogers plan Turkey proceeds with the 'generous' act of rescinding NOTAM 714.

"How is it possible for one to explain the coincidence of the Greek Government's 'tough' stance toward NATO and the United States with the simultaneous Turkish offer to lift NOTAM 714? Is Turkey making offers without anything in return?

"We warn the government that the official opposition will not consent to any agreement with Turkey that in any way changes the status of the Aegeans as it has been established by international treaties and agreements."

KKE (Ext) Statement

[Text] Last night the KKE (Ext) Central Committee press office published the following statements:

The government does not give up the policy of our country's reconfinement to military NATO with the rejection of the Rogers plan. At the same time it admits that, in the name of the Atlantic alliance's 'cohesion' and 'effectiveness', it seeks to return to NATO with the inevitable consequence of the sacrifice of national interests, which life itself has proven to be completely irreconcilable with the intersts of the imperialist NATO alliance.

"The issue for all democrats and patriots is not the form of the various plans for reconfinement to NATO promoted by the government, but the immediate severance of the relevant talks, our country's withdrawal from NATO and the abolition of the foreign bases. This is the only national policy, the only policy which contributes to the advancement of peace in our area and the world."

GOVERNMENT LIFTS AEGEAN AIR TRAVEL RESTRICTIONS

[Text] Following instructions by the government, NOTAM 1157 was lifted today. Freedom of air travel in the Aegean has now been restored and will be conducted as in the past on the basis of the established regulations and procedures of the competent international organization ICAO [International Civil Aviation Organization].

Foreign Minister Ballis had made the following statement: I express my satisfaction with the Turkish Government's decision to lift NOTAM 714. This decision contributes to normalizing air travel in the Aegean and, moreover, to improving the atmosphere in relations between the two countries.

Report on Turkish Rescission

[Text] Turkey has cancelled NOTAM 714--Warning to air navigators--which obliged aircraft flying in the airspace of the Aegean to communicate with the zone of Turkish air control. The warning was adopted by the Turkish Government during the landing of Turkish forces in Cyprus in 1974. It is recalled that Greece reacted by prohibiting all flights over the Aegean. The decision, adopted unilaterally by the Turkish Government, is a gesture of good will, said Turkish Foreign Minister Erkmen.

Earlier reports transmitted from Athens by the French news agency mentioned that according to diplomatic circles, the fact that Turkey unexpectedly decided to lift this obstacle to flights is considered a gesture of good will aimed at smoothing difficulties for Greece's return to NATO's military wing. The same observers stressed that the announcement of this step takes place at the time when negotiations between Greece and NATO have reached an impasse.

The Turkish news agency reported the following exclusive statement by Turkish Foreign Minister Erkmen:

With this decision we have made it clear that the Aegean airspace is not a danger zone. Consequently, we expect the Greek Government to cancel its own NOTAM by stating that its own airspace is not a danger zone. Turkey is sincerely in favor of a peaceful resolution of differences.

As reported at 1300 today, the Turkish Foreign Ministry, in an official statement, announced the lifting of NOTAM 714 implemented on 6 August 1974, which declared Turkish airspace a danger zone.

GDR DEPUTY FOREIGN MINISTER IN ATHENS ON VISIT

AT231430 Athens NEWS in English 23 Feb 80 p 4 AT

[Text] The East German alternate foreign minister, Mr Kurt Nier, currently on a visit to Greece, yesterday concluded his talks with the director general of the Foreign Ministry, Ambassador Fridas, and the director of East bloc affairs, Ambassador Mazarakis. They reviewed bilateral and international subjects.

Later, the East German official called on the foreign minister, Mr. Yeoryios Rallis, and the foreign undersecretary, Mr. Andreas Zaimis. He will visit various archaeological sites today, and fly back to East Berlin tomorrow.

Meeting With Rallis

LD221140 East Berlin ADN International Service in German 0949 GMT 22 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Athens--GDR Deputy Foreign Minister Kurt Nier, who is currently in Greece, was on Thursday received in Athens by Greek Foreign Minister Yeoryios Rallis. Both ministers stressed their governments' readiness for the further development of relations between the GDR and Greece on the basis of the principles of peaceful coexistence.

Kurt Nier had before discussed topical international and bilateral questions in official consultations with State Secretary Andreas Zaimis and with the director general for political affairs in the Greek Foreign Ministry, Aristotelis Frydas. Both sides agreed that the maintenance and the continuation of the process of detente demand now from all states determined actions and increased efforts. The ending of the arms race as well as real disarmament steps are urgently necessary.

ROMANIAN FOREIGN MINISTER TO PAY OFFICIAL VISIT

[Text] It was announced last night that the Romanian foreign minister, Mr. Andrei, will pay an official visit to Greece from March 1-3 for talks with Greek Foreign Minister Rallis on issues of interest to the two countries. During his visit, the Romanian minister may also have discussions with Prime Minister Karamanlis.

GENERAL STAFF LIFTS AEGEAN AIRSPACE RESTRICTIONS

TA221657 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 22 Feb 80 TA

[Text] The chief of the General Staff's office has issued a statement saying that the note numbered 714 issued on 6 August 1974 in connection with the Aegean Sea and the Mediterranean is no longer effective as of 1300 today. With the note in question, Turkey had declared a reporting line [rapor hatti] in the Aegean Sea and the Mediterranean in order to insure its security in accordance with the conditions prevailing then. The statement on the issue says that in accordance with the conditions which have presently changed there is no longer any need to continue this reporting line and that, following the discussion of the issue at the National Security Council, a decision has been taken to abolish this line without waiting for the return of Greece to the NATO military wing. The statement further adds: It is believed that this decision, which once more proves our good will, will enable the civil air transport in the Aegean airspace to return to normal conditions and will also facilitate the flights of state aircraft, on the other hand, with the increase of mutual trust, it is also believed that the bilateral negotiations between the two countries which have been advancing slowly will be speeded up. The last part of the statement says: This decision should not be regarded as a change in Turkey's determined attitude in securing its rights and interests in the Aegean. Any change in the Turkish principle of freely using the Aegean international waters and the Aegean airspace is out of the question.

Greek Cancellation Reported

[Text] Foreign Minister Hayrettin Erkmen has said that following the Turkish decision to cancel the note numbered 714 issued on 6 August 1974 in connection with the Aegean Sea and the Mediterranean, Greece has also canceled its note on the issue. Erkmen said that he was informed about the Greek decision on the issue by the Greek ambassador to Ankara.

Replying to criticisms leveled against his ministry's budget at the National Assembly, Erkmen said that Turkey had cancelled the note in question as a gesture of good will. He added that this decision was not connected with efforts exerted to obtain loans from the West or with the recent visit to Turkey by FRG Finance Minister Matthoefer. In reply to a question on how Turkey would benefit from this decision, Erkmen said: The Aegean has been opened. He added: This was a security measure taken during the Turkish peace operation. There is no need to keep this note in effect as a tool for threatening another country. This decision was taken by Turkey alone without the persuasion of anyone because it was no longer useful.

The Foreign Ministry budget was accepted at the National Assembly after the speech delivered by Erkmen.

RPP Criticism

TA231549 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1510 GMT 23 Feb 80 TA

[Text] Ankara, 23 Feb (AA)--Republican People's Party [RPP] Secretary General Mustafa Ustundag said it was "unfortunate" that the lifting of NOTAM 714 restricting overflights in the Aegean has "coincided" with negotiations on foreign aid to Turkey.

It was difficult to understand why the government had felt the need for a "goodwill gesture," he said at a press conference Saturday: at a time when Greece was "reinforcing with arms and mines" the Aegean Islands which should be demilitarized, and maintaining its de facto position contrary to international law over Aegean airspace.

Turkey's decision might be interpreted as complying with the desire of Greece to have Turkey's rights and responsibilities in the Aegean limited to territorial waters as a condition for its return, to NATO's military wing.

The RPP secretary general called on the government to announce clearly the following so as "not to cause misinterpretations," that Turkey will never accept restricting its rights and responsibilities in the Aegean to territorial waters, that the mutual aegis of responsibility for Greece and Turkey be divided at a median line in the Aegean, and that there could be no question of a third state or group of states to have areas of responsibility in the Aegean.

Justice Party Reply

[Text] Justice Party deputy leader Yigit Koker has said that the criticism leveled by the RPP deputy leader and secretary general, Mustafa Ustundag, in connection with the lifting of NOTAM 714 are unfounded and groundless. In a written statement in Ankara, Koker said that the decision by the chief of staff's office to lift the NOTAM should be considered a gesture of good will aimed at equitably solving Turkish-Greek disputes through mutual good will.

Koker said: The government believes that--contrary to the claims of the RPP and its leader, whose behavior and attitude is not in Turkey's interests--the world public will assess this decision in accordance with the views of the government of the republic. The aim of the government in making such a move--as clearly noted in the statement issued by the chief of staff's office yesterday--is to begin determined and persistent work to resolve Turkish-Greek disputes concerning the Aegean without damaging our national interests and in accordance with the principles of justice and equity.

BOMB EXPLODES IN FRONT OF SOVIET CONSULATE IN ISTANBUL

[Text] Istanbul, 23 Feb (AA)--There was a minor explosion in front of the Soviet consulate in Beyoglu, Istanbul, this morning when unidentified persons threw a bomb at the front yard. There were no casualties, but some windows were broken next door. Police were conducting a wide search for the culprits in the vicinity.

In Ankara, police defused a bomb planted in the basement of a hotel used as a boarding house by American citizens in the district of Kucukesat last night.

EMBASSY ATTACHE IN CAIRO KILLED BY COLLEAGUE

NC221919 Cairo Domestic Service in Arabic 1830 GMT 22 Feb 80 NC

[Text] A Turkish national working as an attache at the Turkish Embassy in Cairo was shot today. The killer was arrested and confessed his crime.

While a police patrol car was moving along the games club street in Ad-Duqqi at about 1530 today, the police heard the sound of firing and went to the scene, where they found a person lying on the ground opposite 77 Musaddaq Street in Ad-Duqqi. He had been killed by several shots. The patrol saw a car with a diplomatic license plate attempting to flee from the scene. The patrol car chased the vehicle and arrested the driver, who was carrying the firearm used in the killing. It was revealed that the murder victim was 'Aziz Taner, a Turkish national working as an attache at the Turkish Embassy in Cairo. The murderer was Mustafa Soweilu, also an attache at the Turkish Embassy in Cairo. He confessed that he had killed Taner because of differences between them.

Ozal and the accompanying team of officials will attend a session of OECD's second working group in order to brief the group on Turkey's medium-term economic policy and the recent talks held in Ankara with Federal German Finance Minister Hans Matthoefer, who is responsible for coordinating foreign aid to Turkey.

The working group is expected to review preparations for the "pledging conference" scheduled for 25 March on OECD-sponsored aid to Turkey.

SPRING WATER TO BE SOLD TO ARAB COUNTRIES FOR OIL

TA241735 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 24 Feb 80 TA

[Text] State Minister Metin Musaoglu has said that the Tasdelen and Karakulak spring water works in Istanbul will operate at full capacity. The two springs belong to the [word indistinct] Directorate General.

The minister was at the Tasdelen springs today. He said: Our aim is to sell our spring-water to the Arab countries and buy oil from them in return.

He said that the Tasdelen spring had a daily capacity of 70 tons and the Karakulak spring 40 tons. He added that contacts were being held to export this water in bottles or tankers to Arab countries.

PARTY SPOKESMEN ON GREECE'S RETURN TO NATO MILITARY WING

TA221508 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1430 GMT 22 Feb 80 TA

[Text] Ankara, 22 Feb (AA)--Spokesmen for various political parties concur on the need for a settlement of disputes over the Aegean before the return of Greece to NATO's military wing.

JDP's Mandalinci

Asked to comment on the question, Justice Party Deputy Zeyyat Mandalinci (Mugla), member of the assembly foreign affairs committee, considered the so-called "Rogers plan", proposing to leave a zone in the middle of the Aegean under a new NATO command, "unacceptable" for Turkey, as it would raise new problems for Turkey in the future.

Turkey was not against Greece's return to NATO's military wing in principle, he noted, but this could not be done on pre-1974 conditions. The "FIR" [Flight Information Region] line and commands in the Aegean should be reorganized in keeping with the interests of both coastal states, he said. Yet a third problem which had to be settled before the return of Greece could be considered was the demilitarization of the Dodecanese Islands, which Greece had turned "into arsenals" in violation of the Lausanne Treaty.

RPP's Isik

RPP Deputy (Bursa) and former Defense Minister Hasan Esat Isik said his party was "in favor" of Greece's return to the military wing of the alliance "regardless of Greece's past behavior," but asked that conditions for this return be established "realistically."

The conditions should be such that Greece's return should strengthen NATO's southern flank, he noted and added if Greece tried to grasp unfair rights for itself in the Aegean instead [word indistinct] would be to Turkey's disadvantage, which would not be to NATO's advantage either.

Isik believed the respective areas of responsibility and control for Turkey and Greece should meet "somewhere in the middle of the Aegean" and there was no need for a third to [words indistinct] responsibility.

NSP's Battal

National Salvation Party Whip in the National Assembly Sener Battal (Konya) called the Rogers plan a "scheme to impose on Turkey indirectly Greece's designs on the Aegean."

He noted seismic surveys had shown the Aegean oil deposits were closer to the Turkish coast. Hence there was an attempt under way, he claimed, to establish the extent of territorial waters as a status quo, and then negate Turkey's demand for a return to the status quo after the oil is actually found and produced, as had happened with Mosul oil. Battal hoped NATO countries would stop favoring Greece.

NAP's Guner

National Salvation Party deputy leader Agah Oktay Guner (Konya) said it was "unthinkable" for Turkey to say yes to the Rogers plan. Before Greece could return to NATO's military wing, Guner noted, existing disputes between Greece and Turkey had to be settled, otherwise, he predicted, Greece, with its impending membership in the EEC in 1981, could try to leave Turkey face-to-face with certain "faits accomplis."

Guner charged Greece with closing Aegean air space to Turkey, violating the Lausanne Treaty by settling militarized zones on the Aegean Islands, and not allowing the Turks of Western Thrace to exercise their rights under the Lausanne Treaty.

ENERGY MINISTER CITES 1980 OIL CONTRACTS

TA201750 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 20 Feb 80 TA

[Text] Energy and Natural Resources Minister Esat Kiratlioglu has said that all Turkey's crude oil contracts for 1980 were signed by the Demirel government. In a news conference held at the parliament, Kiratlioglu replied to statements by former Energy and Natural Resources Minister Deniz Baykal by saying that his statements did not reflect the truth. Kiratlioglu said Turkey's yearly crude oil import contracts were signed with Iran on 1 January 1980 for 1.5 million tons, with the Soviet Union on 3 January 1980 for 800,000 tons and with Libya on 9 January 1980 for 2 million tons. Recalling that according to a pipeline agreement signed in 1973, Turkey should receive 12 million tons of crude oil yearly from Iraq, Kiratlioglu said as a result of an agreement signed during the Ecevit government this amount was reduced to 5 million tons. Kiratlioglu emphasized that this violated the fundamental principles of the agreement between the two countries and that efforts would be made to secure its implementation.

STATE MINISTER SAYS RELIGIOUS AUTHORITY 'INDISPENSIBLE'

TA201449 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1440 GMT 20 Feb 80 TA

[Text] Ankara, 20 Feb (AA)--Minister of State Muhammet Kelleci stated today: "It is indispensible that the nation should be brought together around a religious authority rather than individual ideas." Kelleci added: If the state department in charge of religious affairs were strengthened in respect to authority, regulations, personnel and financial possibilities, this institution would become most effective in liberating the country from the current crisis.

Kelleci was speaking in the parliament during the debates on the [redacted] Budget.

KREISKY ANNOUNCES PROBABLE FOREIGN MINISTERS MEETING

LD221438 Hamburg DPA in German 1306 GMT 22 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Vienna--The foreign ministers of Great Britain, France, the United States and the USSR will probably meet in Vienna in May. The occasion will be the 25th anniversary of the Austrian State Treaty of 15 May 1955.

Chancellor Bruno Kreisky told journalists in Vienna today that the invitations issued by the Austrian Government have been favorably received by the former occupying powers. Asked whether in view of the international situation the presence of the four foreign ministers might result in a summit meeting, Kreisky said that Austria will not "force" a summit conference on anyone.

SOCIALIST PARTY ATTACKS GOVERNMENT MEDIA POLICY

LD242252 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1300 GMT 24 Feb 80 LD

[Text] The Socialist Party [PS] yesterday accused the government of "having taken over the state-owned news media and turned them into mere vehicles for its propaganda."

The PS also accused the Confederation of Portuguese Industries of "putting all its economic weight behind a bid to control the privately-owned press."

These accusations were contained in a motion passed at a meeting of the PS's national political committee, in Santarem.

At another point, the motion says that the government is trying to bring about favorable conditions for changing the very nature of the regime.

The motion further states that "there can be no democracy without freedom of information and pluralism in the media, nor with the limitations that the Democratic Alliance government is seeking to impose on the enlightenment of public opinion."

The PS expressed the greatest solidarity with all journalists and other mass media workers and pledged to fight for the restoration of freedom of information.

The meeting opened with a 45-minute speech by Mario Soares in which he analyzed the political situation and the prospects for next year's presidential elections.

The National Committee elected the party's Executive and Technical Electoral committees. Antonio Esteves, Luis Filipe Madeira, Teresa Portugal, Jorge Campinos and Rui Vilar, members of the old Executive are not in the new one. The new members are Manuel Alegre, Jaime Gama, Tito de Morais, Fernando Vale, Francisco Macedo and Duarte Caldeira.

The outcome of the vote is described as a victory for the so-called historical faction.

The new Technical Electoral Committee is chaired by Antonio Guterres and its other members are Soares Louro, Nuno Santos, Torres Marinho, Cardoso da Silva and Fernando Barroso.

The meeting also approved the party's activities program and budget.

TREATY ANNIVERSARY MAY BE OCCASION FOR 4-POWER MEETING

AU260920 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 23 Feb 80 p 1 AU

[Unattributed report: "State Treaty Anniversary in May Makes Possible Afghanistan Meeting in Vienna; Foreign Ministers of the 'Allies' Reacted Positively to Invitation"]

[Text] A meeting of the foreign ministers of the four big powers and former allies--the United States, Soviet Union, Great Britain, and France--might materialize on the occasion of the 25th anniversary celebration of the Austrian State Treaty in Vienna in May. As was learned yesterday [22 February] in Vienna, the four states have reacted positively to an Austrian invitation. This reaction could have been substantially influenced by the wish especially of the United States and the Soviet Union to hold talks at the ministries' level in view of the Afghanistan crisis. Even the possibility that the decision about the U.S.-propagated Olympics boycott might be made at such talks cannot be excluded. As is known, the deadline for entering Olympics contestants is 24 May, and the State Treaty anniversary celebrations will be held on 15 May.

As REUTER reported yesterday, Chancellor Kreisky has declared in this context that it is difficult to predict whether the ministers will use their stay in Vienna for talks on the Afghanistan crisis. Austria will not undertake any initiative of its own, he said, but it will simply try to create a good climate for such talks.

The celebrations on 15 May will, among others, include a festive commemoration at the Vienna Hofburg Palace, the unveiling of a memorial tablet at the Belvedere Palace, cultural events and a thanksgiving service. Moreover, any signatories of the State Treaty who are still alive are to be personally invited to Vienna.

ARBEITER-ZEITUNG REJECTS NOVOYE VREMYA CRITICISM OF KREISKY

AU251715 [Editorial Report AU] The Vienna daily ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German on 23 February 1980 carries on page 4 the text of a TASS dispatch--containing extensive quotations from last week's NOVOYE VREMYA review of Chancellor Bruno Kreisky's book published 2 years ago, "The World in Which We Live"--with the headline "Bruno Kreisky's Book From a Soviet Viewpoint: Praise and Criticism for the 'Reformist'." The paper carries on its front page in the same issue a commentary by Chief Editor Manfred Scheuch, headlined "A Book Review From Moscow." After noting that the NOVOYE VREMYA review praised Kreisky's initiatives for detente and economic cooperation, Scheuch continues:

"The Soviet critics like far less what they describe as 'anticommunist stereotypes' in the political attitude of the Austrian Socialist Party [SPOe] chairman. I believe that this should not grieve the author of the book, nor the Austrian Socialists altogether. In that respect, we do not want to be liked by the communists. Because of the firm position vis-a-vis the communist dictatorship, the 'calling a spade a spade'--something which Kreisky, incidentally, has never been afraid to do even in communist countries--is something that must be maintained by a social democratic movement which is conscious of its historical position and its desire to move society toward social democracy.

"That is not contradictory to detente, and the Soviet communists themselves are witnesses to it: Even in the euphoric climate in Helsinki they made clear that there cannot be any ideological detente. Hence it should be a matter of course that social democrats also claim for themselves the right to represent their ideological position offensively. They have the great advantage that they will appear as the most credible representatives of democracy, because they have never done anything to harm it. The review of Kreisky's book is what was to be expected from that side--it contains nothing surprising. However, one may well ask whether there is any special reason for its being published at this particular time."

BRANDT 'MEDIATION' ROLE BETWEEN U.S., USSR DEBATED

Spokesman Rules Out Mediation

LD251553 Hamburg DPA in German 1511 GMT 25 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Bonn--Apparently there are differences of opinion between the Federal Government and SPD Chairman Willy Brandt on possible mediating efforts by Willy Brandt to reestablish Soviet-American contacts. In contrast to information from the SPD leadership, Government Spokesman Klaus Boelling told the press in Bonn on Monday that as far as he knows neither side has expressed a desire for Brandt to act as mediator.

However, a report in DER SPIEGEL which said that American President Jimmy Carter asked the SPD chief about possible efforts to establish contacts between the two great powers, in view of Brandt's foreign and especially Eastern-policy experiences as federal chancellor, was confirmed by SPD leadership circles. Party circles also confirmed that Vladimir Semenov, Soviet ambassador in Bonn, handed Brandt an unofficial message which also made reference to a possible mediating role by Brandt.

Boelling said that a mediating role would be too much for the FRG to take on; it does not accord with its international stance. He assumed that there is full agreement on this between Brandt and Schmidt, the government spokesman said. Bonn does not stand between frontiers but has its clear place in the Western alliance, and does not vacillate between the two great powers.

Boelling stressed that what is now important is above all a dialog between the two superpowers and not the Federal Republic's function as intermediary. The government spokesman described it as conceivable that apart from the connection with the current East-West crisis, attempts could be made to utilize the worldwide regard for former Federal Chancellor Brandt. No one has approached Brandt, however. He would only think in terms of mediating if the chancellor, the foreign minister and the whole government regarded this as useful.

CSU group leader Friedrich Zimmermann described the SPD chairman in a prereleased interview for BILD-ZEITUNG (Tuesday's edition) as "wholly unsuited" to mediating between Carter and the Soviet party leader, Leonid Brezhnev. Brandt is a Western party leader who is not yet even prepared, vis-a-vis the United States, to show verbal solidarity.

SPD Manager Egon Bahr also expressed Brandt's basically skeptical attitude toward the possibility of mediating between Moscow and Washington. In an article for the SPD weekly VORWAERTS, Bahr described it as "silly to think that one person could serve as a mediator between the two superpowers." Even the Federal Republic would be taking on an intolerable burden. Bahr also stressed that there had been no Moscow invitation to Brandt. There could be no justification, however, for avoiding a possible desire for talks.

Bahr Clarifies Brandt Stance

[Text] Bonn--SPD Chairman Willy Brandt remains ready to be of political assistance as far as he is able to revive [wiederbelebung] the talks between the U.S. and Soviet leaders on the Afghan crisis, but he does not see himself as being in a position to play the role of mediator.

This was stated this evening in Bonn by SPD Secretary General Egon Bahr in connection with the differences between Brandt and the Federal Government on the SPD leader's recent contacts with U.S. President Jimmy Carter and Soviet Ambassador in Bonn Vladimir Semenov.

Bahr made it clear that Brandt is now awaiting to see whether he will be invited by the Soviet side to hold talks in Moscow. He stressed, however, that as yet there has been no such invitation. Bahr drew attention to references by Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher for the need to use all opportunities for talks, especially in times of crisis.

Bahr gave a different description of Brandt's talk with Carter in Washington to the one given earlier today by Government Spokesman Klaus Boelling. According to the SPD politician, Carter had expressed to Brandt his readiness for a continuation of the dialog with the Soviet Union and had stated that he, Carter, thought it was a good idea if, given the opportunity, Brandt could make U.S. interests clear to his Soviet discussion partners on the basis of his own experience.

Boelling had stated that Brandt had not been approached with regard to mediation efforts either by the U.S. or Soviet side. Since this had not been the case, there had been no reason to brief the Federal Government on the content of Brandt's talks with Carter and with Soviet Ambassador Semenov.

In contrast to this, Bahr stated that Federal Chancellor Schmidt, as well as Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, had received reports of the discussion between Brandt and Carter and had been briefed on the unofficial paper handed to Brandt by Ambassador Semenov and of which Boelling said he knew nothing.

With regard to Brandt's intentions, Bahr stressed that no one had wanted mediation between East and West. No one had wanted or could want it. Mediation would be too much for an individual and also for the Federal Republic. Carter had neither envisaged anything of this nature, nor was Brandt thinking along the lines of mediation.

Press Comment

DW260900 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany
0605 GMT 26 Feb 80 DW

[Press review on SPD Chairman Willy Brandt's reported mission to act as mediator between the USSR and the United States]

[Text] NEUE OSNABRUECKER ZEITUNG deals with the report on Brandt's mission as mediator: If one follows the almost cross reactions of Government Spokesman Boelling, neither of the two big powers has expressed a desire for Brandt to act as a mediator in the Soviet-American conflict. Equally strong denials cannot be heard from the SPD. It seems that truth, as so often, is to be found in the middle. The word mediator certainly was one size too big for the function Willy Brandt was supposed to take over. But both sides would probably like it if the former chancellor, because of his continuing close contacts with the Soviets and the Americans, could warm up the atmosphere a bit behind the scenes. So there will be more atmosphere and maintenance of contacts than mediation. Everything going beyond this would be completely unrealistic anyway. Any German politician--and even the Federal Republic--would be straining himself if he desired to work between the power blocs in trying to set up new bridges.

BRAUNSCHWEIGER ZEITUNG states: The reaction of the Federal Government was clearly negative. This is not surprising. Granted, at the moment Brandt does not hold any state office though, as the chairman of the larger government party, he is so close to the government that it would inevitably be affected, and overtasked, by a potential German attempt to mediate between East and West. It is the very policy of the chancellor to stay covered to the best degree possible and to prevent Bonn from being exposed. Besides, the Federal Republic would not have the independence required for such a mediation.

SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG asks Brandt to define his stand on the subject. The paper maintains: He cannot be interested in being connected with a mission which is obviously nonsensical at this time. If the superpowers really had something to tell each other surely they would not need to resort to intermediary Brandt. If the offer had been very serious, both sides would have had to offer a bit more than just interest in a Brandt role as mediator. A mediator without a clearly defined mission and without any chance of success runs the risk of failing and of losing credibility himself. Allegedly this is what Brandt told the U.S. President to keep in mind. If this was the case, then he should now say so aloud.

The daily DIE WELT declares: Willy Brandt as mediator between Washington and Moscow--an intriguing idea for Social Democratic election campaigners. Presumably this was what inspired the information for which the magazine DER SPIEGEL must be grateful--the vision of a peace angel Brandt getting Carter and Brezhnev together. The project was not able to stand up to the rough political realities for long, however. This is why Government Spokesman Boelling noted yesterday with visible signs of displeasure: Nobody called on anyone. Even SPD Manager Bahr found himself compelled to state: It would be foolish to believe that a man could serve as mediator between the two superpowers. Neither Willy Brandt nor President Carter believes he could. But even if there is nothing to this mediation action, the SPD does not want to dispense with the peace-promoting election campaign argument.

DATE FOR SCHMIDT-HONECKER MEETING NOT YET FIXED

[Excerpt] Bonn--The date for the planned meeting between Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and GDR State Council Chairman Erich Honecker cannot yet be fixed. In an interview for the BERLINER MORGENPOST (Sunday edition) which was published in advance by the Federal Press Office today, Government Spokesman Klaus Boelling said that the meeting between Schmidt and Honecker was still regarded as important for the further development of intra-German relations.

Boelling said that the chancellor and the man responsible in the GDR could not dissociate themselves completely from the world surrounding the two German states. The meeting should take place under circumstances which were favorable for substantial progress in relations between the two German states. Boelling noted that the Federal Republic had the impression that the GDR leadership, just like Bonn, wanted to contribute to an illusion-free policy of detente in Europe by means of a policy of practical cooperation advantageous to both sides.

GENSCHER, RUFFINI DISCUSS AFGHAN CRISIS

[Text] Bonn--Italian Foreign Minister Attilio Ruffini arrived in Bonn on Monday for talks with Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher.

The most important topic to be discussed was the increased pace of work in drafting an overall concept by the West to combat the crisis triggered by the Soviet march into Afghanistan. The European Community, of which Italy is currently chairman, has proposed Afghanistan's neutralization. Ruffini is to leave for Copenhagen tonight. Subsequently, the Italian foreign minister is to visit Brussels, the Hague and Dublin.

[Text] Berlin--Referring to the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan, British Defense Secretary Francis Pym has affirmed his country's "boundless commitment" to Berlin's security and to the freedom of its citizens. When signing the Golden Book of Berlin Pym said at Schoeneberg Townhall on Monday that he came to Berlin in order to affirm the allies' rights and responsibilities for Berlin as a whole and to underline his country's intention to insist on the strict adherence to and the full application of the Quadripartite Agreement.

Pym emphasized that it was fitting that the first visit to Berlin by a Cabinet member of the new British Government should be that of the defense secretary, "especially in view of the deep shadows cast by the latest events in Afghanistan on the whole decade ahead of us."

The Quadripartite Agreement, a "cornerstone by the three powers (?which helped to support) the Federal Government's Ostpolitik," has brought benefits to the city and inaugurated a period of peace in and concerning Berlin. It is the British Government's objective to guarantee that these advantages remain.

The minister emphasized that the recent events have shown that the policy of detente requires vigilance and reciprocity and can be pursued only from a basis of security. "However, they have not invalidated this policy. A firm and balanced reply to Soviet actions does not contradict the continued quest for greater stability in East-West relations. On the contrary, it is a precondition for such stability."

Pym held a press conference this afternoon and said that considering the situation, he hoped a signal for detente would soon come from Moscow. However, there were as yet no indications of this. The speech by Soviet party leader Leonid Brezhnev, which had indicated the prospect of a withdrawal from Afghanistan under certain conditions, could not yet be given a final assessment. It did not appear that the Soviets are ready to leave the country. On the contrary, there is much to indicate that Moscow wanted even stronger domination in Afghanistan.

In response to a question on whether he saw a link between the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan and the controversial NATO decision on deploying medium-range missiles, Pym said he was convinced that Moscow had planned the intervention in Afghanistan in advance and had postponed it until after NATO's decision.

GROUP CLAIMS RESPONSIBILITY FOR AEROFLOT ATTACK

NC251400 Paris AFP in English 1337 GMT 25 Feb 80 NC

[Text] Paris, Feb 25 (AFP)--A group calling itself "The Collective for Moral Order and Anti-communist Youth" today claimed responsibility for yesterday's attack on the Soviet airline Aeroflot's office in central Paris. "This action is the beginning of a long series until the total disintegration of Marxist groups in France," the group said in a communique to AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE.

In yesterday's raid, 30 youths used metal barriers to smash the windows of the Aeroflot office in the Avenue des Champs Elysees. Once inside, they wrecked everything in sight in less than a minute, and threw several molotov cocktails before fleeing. The only policeman guarding the entrance was unable to stop the attack and had no radio to call for help.

FRANCOIS-PONCET DESCRIBES MIDDLE EAST INITIATIVES

JN231317 Amman Domestic Service in Arabic 1200 GMT 23 Feb 80 JN

[Text] French Foreign Affairs Minister Jean Francois-Poncet has said that in a European initiative, France might call for an international conference to discuss the Middle East issue. However, this possibility is premature in the present stage and is one of several possibilities.

In a statement to the members of the Jordanian press team in Paris, the French foreign affairs minister said: France would like to remind all the members of the UN Security Council that sooner or later, it will be necessary to complement UN Security Council Resolution No 242 with a new resolution which clearly affirms the rights of the Palestinian people, rights which were ignored in the resolution issued in 1967.

The French foreign affairs minister added: The first result of such a new resolution will be to define the bases for a comprehensive solution to the conflict. All the parties concerned, including the Palestinian people's representatives, will be invited to draw up a formula for a peaceful settlement through collective and comprehensive talks in accordance with a modus operandi drawn up and approved by the concerned parties themselves.

The French minister added: France has clearly and unequivocably understood that UN Security Council Resolution No 242 enjoins Israel to withdraw from the territories occupied in 1967. He said: For more than 10 years, France has been exerting major efforts to define the conditions for a lasting peace, because it believes that a lasting peace responds to the legitimate demands for justice and security for all the parties concerned. These conditions, which have become clear and are recognized by the international community, presuppose comprehensive talks in which all the parties concerned, including the Palestinian people's representatives, should participate.

The French foreign affairs minister said: France is ready to promote the peace process alone. However, it cannot take any measure except in agreement with the concerned parties. It will listen to everything that the Arab world has to say. President Valery Giscard d'Estaing's trip to several Gulf states and Jordan carries this important significance.

GOVERNMENT SEEKING RAPPROCHEMENT WITH ARAB STATES

LD260310 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 0000 GMT 26 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Portugal and Saudi Arabia could soon establish diplomatic relations at the ambassadorial level, the ANOP news agency reported tonight quoting semi-official sources. This possibility is said to have been at least put forward at a luncheon which the prime minister hosted yesterday in his official residence for the Saudi Arabian ambassador to Madrid, currently in Lisbon at the invitation of the Social Democrats.

During their meeting, the two reaffirmed their identity of viewpoints on international issues and highlighted the clear rapprochement between their two countries. Foreign Minister Freitas do Amaral and Pinto Balsemao, minister assistant to the prime minister, were present at the luncheon.

The Saudi diplomat's visit, which is to be followed by those of the Kuwaiti and United Arab Emirates representatives in the Spanish capital, is connected with Portugal's rapprochement with Arab countries, advocated by the Social Democratic Party, and one of the government's foreign policy priorities.

SOARES INTERVIEWED ON POLITICAL SITUATION, ELECTIONS

LD251348 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 0001 GMT 25 Feb 80 LD

[Text] The Socialist Party [PS] held a meeting in Cantanhede this evening to launch its campaign for the next elections. The PS is very active, Secretary General Mario Soares stated, adding to a reporter who had inquired about the party's state of health:

[Begin Soares recording] It could not be better. The PS feels very fit indeed. It has done us a lot of good to be in opposition. [end recording]

Earlier, the PS secretary general granted an interview to Portuguese radio on the present political situation, particularly on the practical results achieved by the party during its rest cure in opposition--one of the fruits of which might be the formation of the Progress Front:

[Begin Soares recording] We believe the Portuguese people must not be restricted to two alternatives--both of which are extreme and negative in our opinion. These are the rightwing, conservative and reactionary grouping on the one hand, and communist totalitarianism on the other.

A third choice must therefore be provided--a choice broader than that provided by the Socialist Party alone, although with the Socialist Party as its nucleus and (?initiator). A choice such as that will give this country an advanced type of democracy, a democracy open to major social reforms, a progressive democracy based on a large bloc of left and center-left forces that will one day govern this country, as I believe is the wish of the majority of its people.

It so happens that the Social Democratic Party [PSD] has moved markedly to the right in its agreement within the Democratic Alliance [AD]. Granted, I recognize that the PSD is not a cohesive bloc, that within the PSD too there exist different currents, and that among those who support the PSD--such as the Reformists Group and others--there are various tendencies.

At any rate, I do not believe the PSD militants find this rightwing coalition a pleasing experience; they especially cannot be happy with the fact that the coalition's public image is increasingly rightwing, nor with the fact that the AD is increasingly being forced to repay the favors of its supporters and of the extreme rightwing pressure groups as is currently the case.

It is therefore understandable that there should be some dissatisfaction within the PSD itself. Be that as it may, the essential thing is that this new nucleus, aimed at building a vigorous democratic left totally dissociated from the Communist Party--and, of course, from the unrealistic left--should in fact be capable of putting down roots and providing the country with a viable alternative.

It is therefore necessary to engage in dialog with political groups, groups like the Independent Social Democratic Association [ASDI], the Union of the Left for Socialist Democracy [UEDS], like the Social Democratic Movement [MSD], but not only with political groupings--with individuals as well, indviduals with a recognized political role to play. [end recording]

Mario Soares was quoted 24 hours earlier as expressing reservation with regard to the question of General Ramalho Eanes standing for another term of office. Obviously, it is imperative to raise the question of the presidential elections. [Begin recording]

[Soares] We Socialists are in no hurry on that score. We are in no hurry because we believe we have some appreciable trump cards. Suffice it to say, for example, that anyone, will find it difficult to be elected president, very difficult indeed who lacks the support of the Socialist Party.

But we have already said that as far as the presidential elections are concerned, as far as choosing a candidate is concerned, our present stand is one of great openness, free from preconceived ideas. We consider two possibilities: One is the possibility of backing a Socialist Party member for president.

[Answer] Well, as I said a few days ago at the news conference, that question does not arise on my political horizon. I stand by that statement. So it might be either a Socialist candidate or a nonsocialist one--soldier or civilian--backed by the PS. We are very openminded on this question.

Now, as far as the AD is concerned, and in view of its internal problems, the question of the presidential elections is a very hot potato indeed. So we shall let them deal with their hot potato before we announce our stand. They will have to do it sooner or later.

[Question] At your news conference last week I believe you spoke of an identity of goals between the PS and General Ramalho Eanes. Might this mean that the PS is considering the possibility of backing the present incumbent should he decide to stand again for the presidency?

[Answer] We have never ruled out that possibility. The PS has never ruled out that possibility, even during the most difficult period in 1978 when the second government--and I myself--were dismissed. Even in those difficult times of tension between ourselves and General Ramalho Eanes--we do recognize that such a tension existed--even then we never ruled out that possbility. Mind you that we never said we would support him either.

[Question] The newspaper JORNAL DE NOTICIAS said that at the Santarem meeting you were reticent on the question of General Ramalho Eanes deciding to stand again.

[Answer] What newspaper was that?

[Question] JORNAL DE NOTICIAS. The same paper also quotes you to the effect that.... [Soares interrupts]

[Answer] I do not know where the JORNAL DE NOTICIAS goes for its sources, but I am bound to think they cannot be wholly reliable since the question was not raised at the Santarem meeting.

[Question] I might add that the same paper quotes you to the effect it would be essential to arrive at a political compromise between the PS and the presidential candidate it eventually choses to back.

[Answer] Of course, that is quite obvious. Naturally, representing roughly one third of the electorate, if the PS decides to back a nonsocialist candidate, a very serious political understanding must be established beforehand.

[Question] On what bases would that understanding be established?

[Answer] It would be very premature, far off, for us to start playing that game at this stage when the elections are still very far off. The game must eventually be played--and we do have a trump card in hand. [end recording]

On the suppression of the celebrations of the 25 April anniversary, criticized by Dr Soares, he had the following to say:

[Begin Soares recording] I regard that as a profoundly negative attitude, profoundly negative and symptomatic of the tendencies of certain quarters of the Portuguese right who do not conceal their hostility and contempt for what 25 April represents.

Here, too, we must recognize the existence of differences with the government coalition. In effect, there are many people in the AD who are faithful to the spirit of 25 April and who want to defend it. And there are others who (?do not). We must not forget that this difference is an extremely important crack in the fabric of the AD.

It is quite symptomatic that this question should have reached a deadlock in that the government should admit it. It is equally symptomatic that the Socialist Party should be the party that best identifies itself--as has always been the case--with the spirit of 25 April, of 25 April as a whole--that is, 25 April proper and the 25 April as reaffirmed on 25 November, the 25 April that stands for democracy, that stands for a Socialist blueprint--but a democratic, antitotalitarian and antidictatorial socialism; the 25 April that stands for the defense of human rights, for decolonization, for progress for this country at home and in the international scene. [end recording]

SOARES CONFERS WITH GONZALEZ, CITES PS STRATEGY

[Text] Felipe Gonzalez and Mario Soares will meet 3-4 March in Luxembourg during the meeting of EEC socialist parties which they will attend despite the fact that Portugal and Spain are not yet EC members. This was announced at the conclusion of the meeting held by the two leaders this weekend in Madrid. [paragraph continues]

Soares, who stated that he "cherishes hopes that the [Portuguese] Socialist Party [PS] will recover in the next elections," made a stopover to meet with Felipe Gonzalez while returning from Vienna, where he took part in a Socialist International meeting which the Spanish [party] leader was unable to attend due to illness.

During this weekend's meeting in Madrid, which lasted 1 hour, the two Iberian socialist leaders analyzed peninsular and international political developments. The two leaders condemned "once more every kind of violation of human rights, as well as the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan." They also assessed the situation in the Mediterranean area and the repercussions of Tito's imminent death. Soares and Gonzalez also expressed the complete identity of viewpoints of the parties which they lead with respect to the need not to intensify the policy of international tension.

Speaking to the press during his visit to Madrid Mario Soares stated that his party "cherishes hopes of clearly regaining its position in the next elections." He added: "The Portuguese people are learning what a rightwing government is like, and this will have electoral consequences. Moreover, the myths upheld by the Democratic Alliance have been totally destroyed after 6 weeks, and this will facilitate the PS' position vis-a-vis the electorate."

Mario Soares also talked about the strategy laid down at the recent PS meeting in Oporto, and stressed: "We are an opposition party which has an extremely critical stand, as it could not fail to be, with respect to the present government's policy in all its aspects, believing that this policy serves not the interests of the Portuguese people but those of the ruling oligarchies. The present Portuguese Government is seeking to serve the power of big capital, which, for its part, wishes to regain the positions lost as a result of 25 April [1974] and the majority of the Porguguese people are, of course, opposed to this--and not only the working classes properly speaking but also skilled personnel and progressive employers who, as is natural, are demanding a line independent from the hegemony of big monopoly capital."

Relations With Communists and President of Republic

With respect to relations with the Portuguese Communist Party, Mario Soares reaffirmed that "our stance is one of total demarcation, since our blueprint is independent and incompatible with that of the Communist Party--an incompatibility which recent international events have made extremely clear." He continued: "The Portuguese Communists approved the invasion of Afghanistan, and this means that they have an acquiescent policy with respect to the Soviet Union's international policy and one of dogmatic approval of that line."

Concerning stands with respect to the president of the republic, Mario Soares said: "There is some objective agreement when the president adopts a line of defending the Constitution and the system which emerged from 25 April," but as far as the next presidential elections are concerned, the PS secretary general explained that his party "has not yet defined a stand on that matter, partly because we lack information for doing so, even with respect to the choice between a civilian or military candidate."

NORWAY

GENERAL HAMRE INTERVIEWED ON INCREASED DEFENSE COSTS

LD251922 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1530 GMT 25 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Denmark's unwillingness to increase its defense expenditure at a rate desired by NATO has given rise to criticism in Norway. The commander of the Norwegian defense forces, Sverre Hamre, says that Norway may have to increase its own defense expenditure by the same amount that Denmark wants to save. In the view of General Hamre, Norway may also have to reconsider its policy with regard to bases and to use more funds for increasing the defense readiness of southern Norway.

Here is a report by Ulla-Maria Johansen in Oslo:

The commander of the Norwegian defense forces is primarily worried about the Danish generals' estimate that Denmark, with a smaller defense budget, will give preference to the defense readiness of Jutland rather than Zealand. Within NATO, Denmark is the first line of defense in the south for Norway, and Zealand and the straits around it are of primary importance for the defense of southern Norway. According to the Norwegian defense forces commander, Sverre Hamre, Norway may have to increase its defense expenditure and invest more funds for southern Norway, while Denmark wants to reduce its expenditures. General Hamre also thinks that in this situation Norway should reconsider its policy with regard to bases and the question of storing NATO military equipment in Norway. General Hamre also notes, as Danish generals did earlier, that a weakening of Denmark's defense will lead to a situation in which it may soon be necessary to deploy foreign troops in Denmark.

In an interview with AFTENPOSTEN, General Hamre notes that there are limits to how far it is possible to go in weakening defense before the bases policy has to be reexamined and defense budget weaknesses removed through other means such as by opening bases. In this connection, the Norwegian defense forces commander stresses that a possible reduction of Denmark's defense expenditure does not necessarily mean the weakening of the area's defense capability if the West Germans are entrusted with the major part of the defense or if the Americans come nearer on a larger scale. The commander's statements have so far not been commented on by the Norwegian Government.

[Text] The government has now decided to propose to the Riksdag that an aircraft system JAS--which means an intercepter, attack and reconnaissance aircraft--should replace the Viggen system in the 1990's. According to Defense Minister Erik Kronmark the new combat aircraft will provide an opportunity for the Swedish aircraft industry. The government proposes that 200 million kronor be used by the turn of the year 1981-82 for the study and development of the JAS system.

THATCHER HOLDS TALKS WITH SCHMIDT IN LONDON

LD251526 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1220 GMT 25 Feb 80 LD

[Report by David Healy, PA political staff]

[Text] Mrs Thatcher had a surprise meeting, lasting nearly two hours, with West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt at 10 Downing Street today.

The two leaders discussed the Common Market budget and Britain's demand that the EEC should cut Britain's 1,000 million pounds sterling net contribution to the budget. They also discussed East-West relations and the Anglo-American move to have the Olympic games moved from Moscow. The talks followed a weekend private visit to London by the chancellor and were apparently at his request.

After the meeting only the sketchiest details of what the two leaders discussed were immediately available. But the West German chancellor is a key figure in Mrs Thatcher's continued attempts to get a reduction in Britain's net contributions to the Common Market budget. So far the West Germans have largely sided with the French in opposing any major reductions in Britain's net payments. Herr Schmidt is understood to have returned to Bonn immediately after the meeting.

A Downing Street spokesman said the meeting was "not secret." It was, in addition to next month's meeting, in London, one of his twice yearly consultations with Mrs Thatcher.

Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington, who was not at this morning's Downing Street meeting, had private talks with Herr Schmidt over the weekend. No details have been released. Lord Carrington will fly to Bonn tomorrow for a pre-arranged meeting with his West German counterpart.

The foreign secretary also had a meeting this morning with Gaston Thorn, the Luxembourg foreign minister. They discussed Afghanistan and the Olympics, and Britain's 1 billion pounds sterling net payment to the EEC budget. Luxembourg takes over the presidency of the Common Market for the second half of this year.

GOVERNMENT UNDERTAKING REAPPRAISAL OF DEFENSE POLICY

[Clare Hollingworth report: "Defence Rethink After Pym Wins Battle of Cuts"]

[Text] Mrs Thatcher has ordered a reappraisal of defence policy, and this is now being undertaken separately by members of the government and service chiefs. It will not, however, be completed in time for the defence white paper which, it is hoped, will be presented to Parliament on March 19.

This document is expected to give a far more readable account than has so far been presented to the public of the Russian threat to Britain and her Atlantic allies.

The white paper, which should have been produced in mid-February, has been delayed because certain members of the government, supported by the Treasury, wanted to see cuts across the board in every sector of public spending, including defense. Mr Pym, defence secretary, had a hard time convincing his Cabinet colleagues that Britain was already pledged to increase expenditure by three percent, in real terms.

Having won his point without an overt threat of resignation, Mr Pym has been bogged down in financial dealings with the Treasury.

The Labour government was hesitant to disclose details of the noose the Russians are laying around the oilfields of the Middle East and the Persian Gulf in case this would offend Moscow and damage detente.

But the Russian invasion of Afghanistan, combined with Tito's illness, have changed the scene, and a new philosophy and a new world have been introduced into NATO: burden-sharing. So far it has been used largely by the United States and the Germans, but it will certainly figure in Britain's defence re-thinking.

The Germans do not want to emerge as a great power and for this reason are willing to aid Turkish acquisition of arms and equipment. But Bonn is not prepared to assist in military projects outside the narrow confines of Atlantic treaty territory. West Germany expects that the French will increase their defences and the size of their fleet in the Mediterranean.

The British hope the Germans will extend burden-sharing to Rhine army, which boasts some L700 million a year in foreign exchange. It is hoped the Germans will at least contribute to the upkeep of British rear echelons. The defence reappraisal is being undertaken under four main headings:

1. Polaris replacement or--even more fundamental--the question of whether Britain needs an independent nuclear deterrent and whether Germany, say, or other NATO powers who applaud it will help to support it financially.

While it seems most likely there is a consensus in the government for maintaining Britain's own nuclear deterrent, will the Trident be chosen as a replacement for the Polaris submarine-based missile? The Trident would cost between 4,000 and 5,000 million pounds and by the time it is operational in the 1990s the Russians are almost certain to have solved the problem of how to detect the location of submarines. They are know to be spending millions annually in research on this.

This will give rise to discussions on whether or not Britain should have her own mobile land-or air-based cruise missile. There is, too, real concern in Europe on whether we can now depend on the United States or whether there will be a "de-coupling." In this connection an Anglo-French nuclear deterrent will be discussed, but it is most unlikely to be adopted.

2. Central front: The design for a new main battle tank and gun for Rhine army must be decided within a few months.

Unfortunately, owing to time-table, it appears impossible to cooperate with either America or Germany in this. But the main issue will be cost of Rhine army because, if there is not sufficient money to maintain it in Germany, at least a part will have to be brought back to Britain and the troops then rushed out in an emergency. This would have a bad effect on the morale of the alliance as a whole and Germany in particular.

The army is already complaining about "chronic overstretch" mainly caused by the requirements of service in Northern Ireland. But, despite all this, the morale of the troops is high.

3. Defence of United Kingdom base: This has been neglected in recent years. It must be decided how many troops and aircraft are now considered adequate to defend the home base. Certainly more missiles are required for defence of airfields, communication centers, and vital industrial plant.

4. East Atlantic: Under the "burden-sharing" formula it is hoped that the United States will take over some of the responsibility for keeping the Atlantic sea lanes open in times of crisis.

This would be in exchange for British help in the Gulf and the Indian Ocean area, where it is thought all three British services can play a useful role in combating the Russian threat to the oil supplies of the West and Japan.

Naturally not all the decisions taken by the government and the defence chiefs will be published. But a more open policy can be expected.

THATCHER SUPPORTS SOAMES IN LETTER TO AFRICAN LEADERS

[David Adamson reports: "'Cool It' Plea Over Soames"]

[Text] Mrs Thatcher has sent letters to four African leaders in an attempt to cool down the growing row over alleged bias by Lord Soames in favour of Bishop Muzorewa.

The four are President Nyerere of Tanzania; President Kaunda of Zambia; President Shagari of Nigeria; and President Machel of Mozambique.

The move follows last week's meeting of Commonwealth high commissioners in London at which it was claimed there was a "crisis of confidence" in the governor's handling of the elections.

Mr Machel, who has supported Mr Mugabe's ZANLA [Zimbabwe African National Liberation Army] army, expressed his views in a letter to Mrs Thatcher to which she replied this weekend.

There is considerable concern in British circles that some African leaders will cry "foul" to any election result which does not give Mr Mugabe a majority.

Dr Nyerere, in particular seems to be putting himself in a position to do this. He has recalled his high commissioner in London, Mr Amos Msekela, for consultations, and during the weekend called in Mr Peter Moon, the British high commissioner in Dar es Salaam, and the ambassadors of Nordic countries for talks. Mr Msekela was one of the loudest critics of Lord Soames at last week's high commissioners' meeting in London.

KIPRIANOU LEAVES FOR EUROPEAN TOUR, MAKES STATEMENT

[Text] President Kiprianou today began a West European tour during which he will discuss Cyprus developments. President Kiprianou's first stop will be Paris, where he will have talks with French President Giscard d'Estaing. The president will also visit Britain and Italy for talks with Prime Minister Thatcher and President Pertini. He will also meet the pope. President Kirpianou is accompanied by Foreign Minister Rolandhis.

In a statement prior to his departure President Kiprianou stressed that his tour of West European countries coincides with a delicate phase of the Cyprus problem during which efforts are being exerted for the resumption of the intercommunal talks. He voiced hope that his talks in Paris, London and Rome will be helpful in this direction and useful for the sake of the Cyprus cause.

Referring to this meeting with French President Giscard d'Estaing, President Kiprianou said that during this meeting they will explore the possibility of France playing a greater role to promote a Cyprus solution and that every effort will be exerted to strengthen further the ties of friendship between Cyprus and France.

In connection with his meeting with British Prime Minister Thatcher in London, the president said that, apart from the Cyprus problem, they will discuss a number of pending issues as well as other questions of common interest. President Kiprianou stressed Britain's commitments toward Cyprus and added that this country has an important role to play in the Cyprus problem from the standpoint of its being a former colonial power, a member of the Commonwealth and the Security Council and a guarantor power. He said: We will exchange views with the British prime minister in order to establish how Britain can contribute more actively to and play a greater role in moving toward a solution to the Cyprus problem.

Referring to the talks that he will have in Rome with Italian President Pertini and [Prime] Minister Cossiga, the president said that Italy as well can play a serious role in the Cyprus problem if one takes into consideration Italy's ties and relations with Turkey, as is the case, of course, with the other two countries.

President Kiprianou also said that his meeting with the pope will be important because the pontiff can play a major role, particularly in the case of such humanitarian problems as that of the missing persons.

FRG RADIO INTERVIEWS RALLIS ON BALKAN STABILITY

[Text] Bonn--The Greek Government does not fear that the present balance of power in the Balkans will be upset following the departure of Yugoslav President Tito from the political leadership of the country. The Greek foreign minister, Yeoryios Rallis, said in a Deutschlandfunk interview today that this balance is of crucial importance not only for good relations between the states of the region but also for security in general and for peace. Athens has confidence that its Yugoslav friends will not irresponsibly jeopardize the unity and independence that have been achieved with such a struggle, nor will they permit outside harassment. The minister said that a contrary development would naturally have a destabilizing effect, which would also alarm Greece.

Rallis confirmed that Greece is willing to return to the integrated NATO command, but no not if the price is a renunciation of the rights it is entitled to. Rallis was thereby alluding to the dispute between Turkey and Greece over air control in the Aegean. Over the question of air control Greece demands nothing more than the arrangements which were in force before it left the NATO military alliance. The interview was preleased by the station.

PUBLIC OIL CORP FINDS NATURAL GAS IN KATAKOLON

[Text] Yesterday in Katakolon, Ilia, natural gas was located that can be utilized and is a "good omen" for the existence of oil.

According to TA NEA, the pressures that were recorded in this third drilling of the Public Oil Corporation in the Pirgos area strengthen the case for the existence of an extensive oilfield in the area. A supporting element in this instance is the fact that there is no hydrogen sulfide in the area, but mainly methane.

The combustion test which was completed last night at 2100 so far has given satisfactory results regarding gas, although it took place at a depth of 1230 meters.

In a related statement issued late yesterday, the Public Oil Corporation said that the drilling in Katakolon has reached the final depth of 2520 meters and that after the results from the first measurements, exploration will continue to ascertain the size of the field and whether it is exploitable.

According to reports from Pirgos, the findings at Katakolon and the measurements from the combustion tests which will take place today and tomorrow could change the exploration program in the area. Already investigators consider the Mirtia-Oinoi-Katakolon triangle to be a critical area.

PARLIAMENTARY PARTIES REJECT ROGERS' NATO PLAN

NC260726 Istanbul GUNAYDIN in Turkish 23 Feb 80 p 5 NC

[Text] Ankara--Competent officials of the four political parliamentary parties have expressed identical views on the plan drafted by Bernard Rogers, supreme allied commander in Europe of the NATO forces, aimed at Greece's return to the military wing of NATO. All four parties said the plan is unacceptable to Turkey.

Justice Party Deputy Zeyyat Mandalinci said: "The Rogers plan means that Greece's proposals on the Aegean are being indirectly imposed on Turkey. It is impossible for Turkish public opinion and the Turkish Government to comply with such a fait accompli. Should this plan be accepted, it will create serious issues in the future from Turkey's standpoint."

Commenting on the Rogers plan, Bursa Senator Hasan Esat Isik said the following on behalf of the Republican People's Party: "These efforts are not likely to strengthen NATO. They can only create a buffer zone between Turkey and Greece and keep the two countries apart. The areas of responsibility and control of Turkey and Greece over the Aegean should be determined somewhere in the middle of the Aegean."

Speaking on behalf of the National Salvation Party, Sener Battal, deputy for Konya and spokesman of the party's parliamentary group, said: "This is a trick which has been contrived to impose indirectly on Turkey Greece's claims over the Aegean. Seismic research has proved that oil reserves in the Aegean are close to the Turkish shores. Under these circumstances, this is an intrigue aimed at definitely fixing the distance of the territorial waters of the oil areas and then embarking on oil production. When all the installations are constructed, Turkey's claim will be rejected just as happened with the Mawsil oilfields. We, therefore, cannot accept the Rogers plan."

As is known, Athens has also rejected the Rogers plan. General Rogers is expected to visit Ankara and Athens sometime next week to discuss the situation with the governments.

VOTCP CARRIES POLITBURO STATEMENT ON PARTY ANNIVERSARY

TA260823 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 26 Feb 80 TA

[Statement issued on 20 February by the Politburo of the Turkish Communist Party Central Committee on the occasion of the party's 60th anniversary]

[Text] At its last meeting, the Politburo of the Turkish Communist Party [TCP] Central Committee decided to mark the 60th anniversary of the founding of the TCP by waging a yearlong struggle in a bid to strengthen the party, increase its political effectiveness and promote its ties with the masses. In its 60th year, the TCP--the Marxist-Leninist and international leader of the Turkish working class--is progressing along its glorious course by waging a difficult struggle under the guidance of [such leaders as] Mustafa Suphi. The Communists are struggling in the best tradition of the Turkish people's national and democratic struggle.

Born of the effects of the Great October Revolution and our national war of liberation, the TCP--a party with a countrywide organization--has now become an inseparable part of Turkish political life. The TCP is struggling to fulfill the historic and basic task of the working class and for its unity. It is making efforts to unite all popular forces in a national and democratic front and to lead the progressive democratic revolution to victory, which in turn leads to socialism. No ban has been able to halt the TCP's struggle to this end; no ban will ever be able to do so.

All the organizations of the TCP will greet the 60th anniversary of the party with the slogan: Join the TCP to strengthen it. The ardor for action that will be expressed by our cadres during this memorable year will further intensify the struggle by all our people for peace, national independence, democracy and socialism and against the imperialists, the collaborationist and monopolist bourgeoisie and the militarist clique.

[Signed] TCP Central Committee Politburo, [dated] 20 February 1980

TURK-IS ISSUES COMMUNIQUE ON DOMESTIC ISSUES

TA241549 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1505 GMT 24 Feb 80 TA

[Text] Ankara, 24 Feb (AA)--The Turkish Confederation of Labor, Turk-Is, has expressed "concern" over the "critical" circumstances facing the country. In a communique issued following a 4-day special session, the Turk-Is board of directors noted inflation, while impoverishing the poorer working masses, benefited the capitalists. Economic measures taken must be accompanied by social measures, it noted.

Acknowledging there was need for amendments to the laws regulating political life and elections, the Turk-Is communique warned "economic anarchy," manifesting itself in the form of blackmarketing, profiteering, smuggling and tax evasion, might hurt the democratic regime.

The inconsistent quarrelling of political leaders had made political life "unbearable," reaching proportions that might deal a blow to the democratic regime, the communique noted. It warned any blow to the democratic regime would directly affect members of parliament themselves.

To dismiss workers "because of their political views, beliefs and religious sect" or to separate them from their families by undue transfers of posts was, in a sense, "murder in the abstract," it charged. It added Turk-Is had decided to warn certain managers and ministers against this kind of practice.

Tax reform should aim to tax the evaders who have paid no or very little tax so far and should discriminate between wages earned and profits gained on capital.

Turk-Is "unconditionally" supported the strike at Turkish Airlines [THY] and considered the management's lock-out delcaration a contradiction of article 42 of the Constitution, it said. This was not a simple question of a legal right, the communique noted. The state should be an arbiter, not an employer declaring a lock-out, and the cabinet members who represent it should not back a lock-out, which was a "social disaster." The fact that the authorities have not used their right to postpone the THY employees' strike had created doubts in the minds of Turk-Is board of directors as to whether the THY dispute was really an economic one.

Turk-Is also categorically opposed the transfer of any state enterprises, from mines to cigarette manufacturing, to the private sector. The current economic ailments of state enterprises were due entirely to the partisan behavior of past governments and to bureaucrats blindly supporting them, it said.

The Turk-Is board of directors called on all political parties to support the passage of a draft law extending social security to farm and forest workers, which is now before parliament.

It advised against the use of social security funds as a source of financing by a series of governments.

11 LOCALLY HIRED STAFF QUIT EMBASSY IN MOSCOW

LD252310 Montreal in English to Europe 2200 GMT 25 Feb 80 LD

[Report by Dennis Baxter, Canadian Broadcasting Corporation correspondent, from Moscow]

[Text] The game of diplomatic tit for tat between the Soviet Union and Canada has taken a new turn. Eleven of the locally hired staff of the Canadian Embassy in Moscow have quit. The sudden departure of one-third of the Soviet staff is seen as harassment by the Kremlin and will probably seriously hinder the normal functioning of the Canadian mission. Dennis Baxter explains:

The Canadian Embassy in Moscow normally employs a complement of about 35 Soviet citizens hired through a Moscow central agency from which all foreign diplomatic, business and journalistic operations secure office help.

Canada's decision to expel two Soviet military attaches and a driver several weeks ago led to the expulsion of the Canadian military attache from Moscow and a counter retaliation by Canada of expelling a Soviet commercial attache from Ottawa. But the resignation of five embassy drivers, a commercial assistant, a translator, two consular assistants, a charlady, a carpenter and a member of Ambassador Robert Ford's personal staff, adds up to a severe limitation of the embassy's ability to carry out its work.

Although an embassy spokesman refused to comment on the 11 resignations, they are seen as a clear attempt by an angry Soviet Union to get even with Ottawa by making things more difficult for Canadian diplomats in Moscow. Relations between Canada and the Soviet Union chilled considerably over the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, and trade and other relations ground to a halt.

A poor relationship was made all the worse with the discovery of Soviet espionage operations against the United States being carried out from Canada. Moscow retaliated by expelling the Canadian military attache and Canada responded by expelling a Soviet commercial officer.

But the resignation of nearly one-third of the Soviet staff working at the Canadian Embassy in Moscow, though severely damaging, falls short of expelling another Canadian diplomat from Moscow. There's no telling if and when the Canadian Embassy will be able to get its complement of Soviet staff back up to normal, but there have been strong hints in the Soviet press that the Kremlin is a lot happier with Mr Trudeau returning to power than they were with Mr Clark. The Conservative leader was described as a man who led a party of extremists who had jumped on the U.S. bandwagon of anti-Soviet hysteria.

In spite of events in Afghanistan, Mr Clark was blamed for causing the current state of poor relations between the Soviet Union and Canada.

BRANDT RULES OUT MEDIATION BETWEEN U.S., USSR

[Excerpts] Bonn--SPD Chairman Willy Brandt, in agreement with the Federal Government, has ruled out German mediation between the United States and the Soviet Union in the Afghanistan crisis, because it would "greatly" overtax German political resources.

Addressing the SPD Bundestag group today, Brandt dealt with the confusion surrounding alleged suggestions by President Carter and also from the Soviet side that he should play the role of mediator, and he made it clear that he was keeping himself available for possible political assistance in reviving the dialog between Moscow and Washington.

According to some of those present at the meeting, Brandt emphasized that he was not angling for the role, and also did not want to provoke a Soviet invitation.

According to the same sources, the SPD group heard a five-point statement by Brandt referring, inter alia, to the recent Vienna conference of party leaders of the Socialist International at which it was urged that all opportunities for contacts with the aim of detente and an improvement in U.S.-Soviet relations should be used.

The SPD chairman underlined his full agreement with the foreign policy stand expounded last week in 16 points by Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt to the SPD Party Council. Alluding to his readiness to help in East-West contacts, Brandt said that this agreement did not exclude each individual adding something to it in his sphere.

The controversy about alleged requests to Brandt to mediate indicated in the view of the CDU/CSU opposition that the unity of German foreign policy was threatened. CDU Deputy Alois Mertes said that the Soviet Union was trying to make use of different currents in German politics. There was not in Bonn a "secondary Social Democratic foreign policy."

CDU Spokesman Guenther Henrich said that the SPD had taken an opposite course to that of the government and the chancellor.

Brandt said that it was quite correct that he had not been asked by either the American or the Soviet sides to "mediate." Describing his meeting with Carter, he said that the American President had suggested to him how important it was for him personally that Brandt knew of Carter's interest in returning to a point from which one could again negotiate between East and West.

Contrary to statements made by Government Spokesman Klaus Boelling yesterday, Brandt emphasized that the chancellor as well as Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher had been briefed in detail not only about his meeting with Carter, but also about his activity in recent weeks when--in parallel with government activities--he had twice briefed Soviet discussion partners, giving his assessment of the situation.

Hinting at Boelling's statement, he said that if the impression had been created that he had not briefed the government, then this was due to misunderstanding.

BAHR REFUTES SPECULATION ON MEDIATION ROLE FOR BRANDT

DW261103 Hamburg ARD Television Network in German 2130 GMT 25 Feb 80 DW

[Bonn correspondent Schaaf Interview with SPD Federal Manager Egon Bahr in Bonn--recorded; date not given]

[Text] [Question] What is there to a mediation role for Willy Brandt in the East-West conflict?

[Answer] Nothing, absolutely nothing, really. To begin with, an individual cannot mediate at all; secondly, even the Federal Republic as a country would be overtasked were it to mediate between the two giants. They must do the essential things themselves.

[Question] This means that Jimmy Carter did not ask Willy Brandt to resume the dialog with Moscow?

[Answer] In his conversation Carter deemed it interesting to utilize the contacts of the SPD chairman for the continuation and alleviation of the East-West dialog, if the opportunity were to arise. But this is not a request for an action, which itself is impossible if only because the chairman is aware, of course, that he would not be in a position to negotiate at all without holding state office. But it is a foregone conclusion that there is talking going on, and it would be irresponsible to dodge it if the opportunity arose. Mr Strauss would like to talk, too, if he could or were to be invited, but no invitation has been issued.

[Question] But there was a hint, a suggestion for talks from Moscow which the ambassador to Bonn, Semenov, handed over.

[Answer] No, this was not a call for talks. This was a reminiscence of old times.

[Question] May this not be interpreted to mean that Brezhnev also wishes to resume the dialog with Willy Brandt which he began years ago?

[Answer] There has always been an exchange of opinions now and then without the form of a personal meeting. But you cannot interpret reminiscence of old opinions as an invitation for a visit.

GENSCHER URGES AFGHAN NEUTRALIZATION, WESTERN COORDINATION

LD261615 Hamburg DPA in German 1534 GMT 26 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Bonn--In the view of FDP Chairman and Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, intensive Western efforts for neutralizing Afghanistan on the basis of the EEC foreign ministers' proposal are needed to overcome the present East-West crisis. Speaking to the FDP Bundestag group, Genscher stated in Bonn today that the Third World states must also be won over for this initiative. The demand for Afghanistan's nonalinement and independence proves afresh that the West is striving neither for dominance nor spheres of influence but respects and supports the aims of the nonalined movement.

The FDP leader once again affirmed that the success of the European initiative depends on Moscow explaining more precisely the modalities for a withdrawal of troops from Afghanistan. Only then would a reliable assessment of the substance and goals of the recent speech by Soviet party and government leader Leonid Brezhnev be possible.

Even before Genscher's statement the FDP group had endorsed the Federal Government's policy of solving the Afghanistan crisis by means of a "calm policy based on coordination." Its chairman, Wolfgang Mischnick, stressed that only completely coordinated action by the West European partners and the United States has political purpose and promises success. At present, nothing would be more wrong than "hasty decisions and idle talk which is as loud as it is useless"--something that the CDU/CSU opposition is engaging in with noticeable enthusiasm.

GENSCHER ON TALKS WITH CARRINGTON, AFGHAN CRISIS

[Excerpts] Bonn--During the visit to Bonn by UK Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington, it has clearly not been possible to achieve (?agreement) on Britain's contribution to the EC budget which London still considers too high.

Carrington told journalists tonight after 4 hours of talks with Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher that it would be an exaggeration to say that there was agreement, but that they understand each other's position. Genscher said that Mrs Thatcher's television statement last night had, above all, been "overinterpreted." If one read the text, she sounded "extremely friendly toward the Community."

In connection with the Afghanistan crisis, Genscher hinted at the possibility that the EC should officially present its proposal to the Soviets for a neutralization of Afghanistan, which should occasion Moscow to withdraw its troops. According to Carrington, the Europeans should make it clear to the Soviet Union and to the rest of the world that they were serious about this neutralization proposal. Austria's neutrality could conceivably serve as a model, though there were no precise parallels with Afghanistan.

RUFFINI, GENSCHER DISCUSS SUPERPOWER CONFLICT, OLYMPICS

Solidarity With U.S. Urged

LD251846 Hamburg DPA in German 1618 GMT 26 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Bonn--The place of the Federal Republic and Italy is by Washington's side and not "half-way," for example, between the two superpowers, the United States and the Soviet Union. This was the concurring view stressed by Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and Italian Foreign Minister Attilio Ruffini after 3 hours of talks in Bonn today.

Genscher told journalists that efforts had to be made, together with the Americans, for a solution to the Afghanistan crisis. The proposal by the nine EEC foreign ministers to persuade the Soviets to withdraw their troops by neutralizing Afghanistan was a signal which awaited a constructive reply. If the recent speech by Soviet state and party leader Leonid Brezhnev is to be regarded as a reply, then what is now needed is for the Soviet ideas to be made specific. In any event, the main thing is that Soviet troops be withdrawn.

Genscher and Ruffini also expressed agreement on the question of the Olympics. In the Italian foreign minister's (?view), it is now up to the Soviet Union to reestablish conditions enabling all countries to take part in the games.

There is still time for final decisions to be thought out. The attitudes of the various European countries are not as different as often depicted. Genscher expressly agreed with his Italian guest, with whom he also discussed London's desire for a reduction in the British contribution to the EEC budget and aid for Turkey.

Ruffini Ends Visit

LD261846 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 0700 GMT 26 Feb 80 LD

[Text] The international situation, with the Afghan question in the forefront, and EEC problems were the main topics of the talks which Italian Foreign Minister Ruffini held in Bonn yesterday. In the evening he left for Copenhagen. His tour, being made within the framework of contacts between governments of the Community, will include Brussels, Dublin and The Hague. Italy holds the EEC presidency for 6 months.

DEFENSE MINISTER VIEWS NATO, ARMS COST PROBLEMS

DW251248 Hamburg DER SPIEGEL in German 25 Feb 80 p 107 DW

[Text] Bonn must spend more on arms purchases than expected. Hans Apel became angry. In a telephone conversation last week with his U.S. colleague Harold Brown, Bonn's defense minister said he frowns upon continuing mutual accusations. The United States should acknowledge at long last that the Federal Republic has lived up to its NATO commitments and intends to do so in the future, too.

Apel's anger over the incessant chiding from the United States had not yet abated a week ago Saturday. "I think this whole debate is rather dangerous," he warned over the Deutschlandfunk Network, "for if I, too, were to start lamenting in public over what other NATO countries have neglected to do in the past...." The rest remained unspoken.

It is doubtful, however, that the American nagging about the extent of the German defense budget will cease with these words. Brown and his Pentagon advisers have been pondering so intensely ways of enhancing Western armament following the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan that they are hardly openminded toward arguments of principle any longer. "At the moment the gentlemen over there are in a patriotic fever," a chancellor adviser discovered, "but who knows how long this will last?"

Therefore, encouraged by government chief Helmut Schmidt, the defense minister plans to suggest at the NATO spring meeting in Brussels a fundamental debate on future strategy and division of labor in the alliance. Apel: "At the moment everybody is saying something different; it is necessary to give structure to it."

Bonn's position in the alliance does not look bad, at least as far as funds for the army are concerned. Apel: "In 1980 we will spend nearly DM10 billion on arms and equipment, which amounts to 30 percent of our budget. I would like to see anybody do better."

In the Federal Security Council, too, the top coalition politicians, following a situation report delivered by the generals, arrived at the conclusion that there is no call for self-criticism.

Both the chancellor and the defense minister almost delightedly recalled that the United States has more worries with its force of volunteers than the Federal Republic with its army of conscripts. Thus, the West Germans can muster 2 million reservists within a few days, whereas the Americans cannot even come up with 1 million. Brown himself has conceded that the professional qualifications of his soldiers and the lack of reinforcement units cause him concern.

Schmidt sums up: There is no sense in allocating hundreds of millions now when no one knows how these funds can be spent reasonably.

Nevertheless, Schmidt and Apel know that Bonn will have to raise more money for the West German Armed Forces in the coming years than it has in the past.

Thus, it has long ceased to be a secret that the Bundeswehr lacks enough live ammunition. In the event of hostilities, the ground forces would be without cartridges and grenades in 10 to 15 days even though NATO demands a 1 month's stockpile reserve.

Apel wants to change this state of affairs with an immediate action program. Additional funds for ammunition will be earmarked in the complementary budget, and an additional DM300 million for fuels, apart from military aid to Turkey.

In the opinion of the defense minister, the difficult phase for the Bundeswehr will begin only after 1981. Without a considerable increase in the arms funds envisaged in the finance plan, the tanks, missiles, airplanes and ships already ordered cannot be paid for.

The 322 multipurpose Tornado planes, according to a list compiled by Hardthoehe [site of the Defense Ministry], will not cost DM15.5 billion as originally planned, but at least DM19.9 billion, and the 175 Alpha Jet ground support combat planes will cost DM3.4 instead of DM2.9 billion.

The 1,800 Leopard 2 tanks will also be more expensive than planned (DM7.2 instead of DM6.4 billion), as will the 212 antitank helicopters (DM922 instead of DM680 million), the various antiaircraft and antitank missiles and the 6 frigates (DM2.5 instead of DM1.8 billion).

Should the NATO partners force the Bundeswehr to buy additional arms, Defense Ministry planning would be totally upset. Apel: "On a medium-term basis we need much more money if and when we have to relieve the Americans in Europe."

While the Social Democrats are still silent about the demands of their defense minister, the Free Democrats have already raised doubts about Apel's program. At a secluded meeting in early March, they will discuss whether the high expenditures for the Bundeswehr are really necessary. The Liberals plan to examine, for example, whether the armed forces need 1,800 Leopard 2 tanks or whether less expensive antitank weapons for a defense army are not more sensible.

The FDP would like to discuss the results of the conference with the Social Democrats before the Bundestag elections and then set them down in writing in a coalition paper in the fall.

FDP defense expert Moellemann: "We must come up with something; otherwise, we will not simply have to pay in the next few years but pay through the nose."

WEHNER HITS USSR RESPONSE TO EC AFGHAN PROPOSAL, LAUDS GIEREK

LD261643 Hamburg DPA in German 1513 GMT 26 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Bonn--SPD group leader Herbert Wehner has expressed dissatisfaction with the Soviet leadership's attitude so far to the EEC foreign ministers' proposal on giving Afghanistan nonalined neutrality after a withdrawal of Soviet troops.

This proposal was rejected by an official Soviet publication before it could even be submitted to government authorities, Wehner wrote in an article for the SPD magazine NEUE GESELLSCHAFT published today. In Wehner's view, remarks by Soviet party leader Leonid Brezhnev in his speech last Friday should "not yet be interpreted as an intermediate move which could be effectively used to defuse the conflict in response to Western declarations."

Wehner took up the proposal by Polish party leader Edward Gierek for the convening of an all-European disarmament conference, a proposal which was not obscured by polemics and ambiguities from the Eastern side. He cited Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher's Bundestag address on 14 December in which he demanded that Europe, after 35 years without war, should do everything possible to further secure peace and thus contribute to world stability. Wehner wrote that if there is a point where Gierek's and Genscher's views coincide, then it is that there should be, in the interests of peace, no obstacle "which could block Gierek's positive initiative in the web of mutual speculations as to the motives of positively intended contributions to peace."

OLYMPIC CHAIRMAN HOPES FOR SOLUTION TO MOSCOW GAMES ISSUE

DW260937 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0550 GMT 25 Feb 80 DW

[Text] [Question] Have the political quarrels over Moscow seriously harmed the snow and ice games?

[Answer] Those of us here fail to understand why U.S. President Carter, if he feels he has to give an ultimatum, would set the deadline in the middle of these Olympic games. Nobody could comprehend that. Feelings have definitely suffered as a result of these events which took place just prior to the games. [sentence as heard] Perhaps it is not a coincidence that the two nations most affected, the United States and the FRG, had the least success in the first few days.

[Question] How would you assess the chances of the Olympic games in Moscow at this time, internationally and, of course, specifically with regard to the view of the FRG?

[Answer] This is a question that is very hard to answer. As far as I am concerned it has certainly been important and appropriate to gain time. The Federal Government is playing the same card as the Americans. All problems will be solved if it is possible to find a way for the American team to participate. This is what concerns us most. And this is the main direction of our endeavors. I do not yet consider it completely hopeless. In March the European national Olympic committees are scheduled to assemble again, and they will try to find some common course. But ultimately it all depends on the overall political climate. It is up to the Soviet Union to improve that climate and give the decisive impetus. It is called upon time and again to take a visible step, too. At the the moment we can only hope that the responsible statesmen will have enough commonsense to realize that it would not be a glorious feat to destroy the 1980 games. I have to be optimistic. We are an Olympic committee. We do not want to boycott the Olympic games but participate in them. We hope that we can make our arguments prevail among those who are more powerful. Unfortunately, sport does not wield any power. It must try to make its principles prevail by means of conviction.

GISCARD CONDEMNS AFGHAN INVASION, VIEWS INTERNATIONAL ISSUES

[Text] Paris, Feb 26, (AFP)--President Valery Giscard d'Estaing today called for the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Afghanistan, urged that the country be prevented from becoming a threat to its neighbours and at the same time pledged France's respect to its engagements in the North Atlantic alliance.

In a one-hour foreign policy interview on French television, President Giscard d'Estaing, who on Saturday leaves for a week-long visit to the Gulf and Jordan, stressed France's determination to maintain a stance independent from the two major power blocs while reaffirming the country's historic links with the North Atlantic alliance, even though France does not belong to the NATO integrated military command.

The interview with two TV journalists also covered, notably, the European Common Market, French policy in Africa and the non-aligned movement.

President Giscard d'Estaing made a three-pronged appeal for Afghanistan, at a time when his Deputy Foreign Minister Olivier Stirn is currently in Pakistan: that foreign military forces withdraw, that the Afghans have the right to decide their affairs themselves, and that the country does "not become a threat to its neighbours nor a stake in the rivalry between super-powers."

France's policy was to maintain communication links with Moscow, he said, in order to "measure the possibilities of finding the bases for a solution."

President Giscard d'Estaing repeated his firm condemnation of Soviet intervention in Afghanistan as "unacceptable" and insisted that France "did not accept the fait accompli (accomplished fact)."

He rejected internal and foreign criticism that France's foreign policy was "vague, uncertain or timid" stating that France does not practice "grandstand politics."

France, he said "avoided loud and meaningless declarations," and he insisted that there was no contradiction between maintaining an independent policy while still belonging to the NATO alliance. "France is a Western democracy which has an alliance," he said.

On relations with the United States, notably over the approach to the Afghan crisis, President Giscard d'Estaing said that "differences in the choice of means" to adopt could exist "even if there is no difference in the objective to be pursued."

At the same time he twice stressed his desire to see Europe recover its former influence in world affairs. "It is beginning to have more weight on the situation," he said, stressing in particular Franco-German relations.

President Giscard d'Estaing added that France's position on an eventual boycott of the summer Olympic games in Moscow was unchanged--that it was still the affair of sports organisations.

On the European Common Market, the French leader said he believed that current problems such as the fixing of agricultural prices, fisheries, mutton or Britain's demand for lower contributions to the Community budget should be settled globally "for it to be acceptable to France."

President Giscard d'Estaing said that any attempt to describe France's African policies as "imperialist" was "absurd." He said that France "reacts to attempts to destabilise Africa--always inspired from abroad--so that the continent remains stable and devotes itself in peace to the task of development."

He said that France had not "intervened" in the Qafsah incident in Tunisia but had provided means of transport to enable the "Tunisian Government to settle a problem on its own territory."

France's ambition was to make the Mediterranean into a "lake of peace and stability," he added.

He described the non-aligned movement as a "factor of equilibrium for the world and a guarantee of peace," at the same time stating that France considered the re-awakening of the Islamic world "as perfectly legitimate for those who practice this faith."

FRANCO-U.S. 'DIFFERENCES' EMERGE DURING VANCE VISIT

[Maurice Delarue report: "Paris and Washington Acknowledge 'Differences' of Opinion"]

[Text] It was in London that Mr Vance obtained the strongest support (Mrs Thatcher even stated in the Commons that it was "shameful" and "insulting to the housewife" that the Community should resume its butter deliveries to the USSR) and in Paris that the secretary of state met with the most reserved welcome. He was not received by the president of the republic, although he had talks with government heads in the other countries he visited. Nonetheless the West German and Italian leaders did not give public backing to U.S. policy either. However, it was only in Paris that the secretary of state mentioned "differences" between the French and American positions after his talks with Mr Francois-Poncet.

While admitting the "similarity" of the analysis of the situation and the objectives to be attained and stressing, as usual, the usefulness, frankness and solidarity of these exchanges of opinion, Mr Vance told journalists: "There are differences between us on the measures which should be taken, but we will pursue consultations between ourselves and with our partners."

The Quai d'Orsay spokesman for his part said:

"These talks have enabled us to note very largely identical views on the analysis, origins and nature of the crisis in its different local, regional and world aspects. We also noted a broad convergence of views on the objectives to be obtained, especially the return to a normal international situation characterized by detente. To this end the crucial point is the withdrawal of troops from Afghanistan." As regards the actions to be taken, "some differences have been noted, in that the French and American governments do not draw the same conclusions."

Franco-American consultations, he concluded, are "highly profitable and will continue."

What "Differences?"

What are the "differences?"

Neither side went into any detail. However, according to the policies hitherto followed by the two governments, it can be deduced that Paris, unlike Washington, does not think it enough to "punish" the Soviets, to condemn their intervention in Kabul, to reduce grain supplies, to boycott the Olympic games and to call for the mobilization of the Third World; at the same time the Soviets must be given a way out.

This is what the European Nine are trying to do by suggesting the possibility of neutralizing Afghanistan or by maintaining dialog with Moscow (it does not seem that the plans for Mr Gromyko's visit to Paris, envisaged before the Kabul affair, will be abandoned).

Moreover, in this respect the American position is complex. For instance, Washington backed the suggestion made by the Nine in Rome for a neutral Afghanistan and is apparently inclined to hope that the Madrid Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe (followup to the Helsinki conference) planned for the fall will take place, if only to use it to attack the Soviet Government, while the French Government apparently deems this risk of confrontation pointless and even harmful.

Moreover, the importance of the Olympic games is being played down in Paris while, judging from the press, it is regarded as crucial in Washington. The French deny that they had to veto a boycott at the Nine's meeting in Rome Tuesday. Aside from the British Government, the other Europeans have postponed an official decision until later, and it is still very probable that the French Government will also come out against taking part if the games cannot be held "normally," in other words with the Americans present. The difference is that Washington is pressing for a boycott, while Paris will resign itself to observing it.

Therefore the Franco-American differences of opinion cannot be reduced simply to the stances adopted; they result more from a state of mind.

LE MONDE VIEWS U.S. ENVOY HARTMAN'S POLICY CRITICISM

[Editorial: "Vive La Difference Between France and America!"]

[Text] Mr Hartman, U.S. ambassador to Paris and a hitherto discreet diplomat, probably did not choose the best time to "put his foot in it," as L'HUMANITE writes, and pour out all the American grievances against French policy. On the eve of the arrival in Paris of Secretary Vance this "discord," to quote the Quai d'Orsay, was not very likely to help bring about a rapprochement with Washington. Is that what the secretary of state was seeking? After several hours of talks with Mr Francois-Poncet he pointed to Franco-American "differences," which is a strong word in diplomacy. Washington has therefore decided to talk tough to Paris, as to Moscow, and this is profitable from the election viewpoint. Since Mr Giscard d'Estaing is himself on the threshold of an election campaign we can assume that, although it is not in his nature, he will be forced to adopt the same tone. Moreover, is frankness not preferable for making yourself understood in a difficult period?

The first criticism Mr Hartman makes of the French people, although he only levels it at some of them, is the systematic nature of this opposition to Washington: The French think that the Americans are always wrong, whether they fail to react or react strongly. This criticism is not unfounded and dates from long ago. Long before General de Gaulle came to power, "taking a separate stance" from Washington on all occasions was the thing to do in Paris. [paragraph continues]

Even Mr Jobert's concern for "European identity," although extremely praiseworthy in itself, cannot take the place of policy. Anti-Americanism, like anti-Sovietism and anti-Gaullism, is a reflex which does not always necessarily lead to the most appropriate value judgement.

On the other hand it is impossible to support Mr Hartman when he detects "a trace of neutralist absurdity" in the desire of "some" French "political leaders" to seek "a new path between the two superpowers." Abandoning the search for this path on principle, giving up assuming its responsibility and determining its own behavior would amount to recognizing that, by some sort of special grace, the United States is always right--Mr Kissinger, for instance, was fully convinced of this when he was in office, and, regrettably, many Europeans shared his conviction.

Should we, therefore, follow all the meanderings of American policy, which have been particularly tortuous since Mr Carter has been in power? Should we have given way to angelicism one day and then changed to activism overnight, not so much because the Soviets intervened openly in Kabul in 1979 (where they had already overthrown the regime in 1978) as because the Iranian students are holding 50 Americans hostage? Should we have ignored Africa, however, dubious some French initiatives have been, simply because Mr Carter was not interested in it, or cursed nuclear development because it troubled his conscience?

Like it or not, Europe and France are not America. Their interests are often the same but they are by no means always identical. Fundamentally, especially since 1974, the old world has been much more dependent than the new on Third World resources and markets. A common European-U.S. policy would presuppose that the United States ended energy wastage, considerably reduced its standard of living and stopped printing dollars to suit its needs. That is not very likely to happen. This does not prevent Europe and America from being in the same camp when Soviet tanks move into action.

D'ESTAING RECEIVES CONGOLESE PRESIDENTIAL AIDE

[Unattributed report: "French-Congolese Relations"]

[Text] Mr Emmanuel Yoka, principal private secretary to Congolese President Sassou-Nguesso, was received on 18 February by Mr Giscard d'Estaing, to whom he relayed a message from the Congolese head of state. At the end of the talks Mr Yoka emphasized that French-Congolese relations are free of all dispute.

L'UNITA: USSR WITHDRAWAL FROM AFGHANISTAN 'ONLY' SOLUTION

[Unattributed commentary: "Martial Law in Kabul"]

[Text] Grave and worrying news is reaching us from Kabul. Unfortunately, it was to be expected. It was unrealistic to believe that an armed expeditionary force could elimiate problems which had proved impossible to resolve by political means. It was no less unrealistic to believe that the outside intervention would not prompt a broader rebellion. In the same way, it is now pointless to blame what is happening on "foreign agents": The "agents" are indeed there, but their work can only be effective if it finds mass support among the people. At this point an escalation of repression would make the situation increasingly dangerous.

From the outset, our analyses expressed a fear of such developments, pointing out that they would be difficult to avoid. But this is certainly not enough to reassure us. The only solution which one can forsee remains that of making possible the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan--a withdrawal negotiated with adequate guarantees, as several European and Asian states have shown themselves inclined to propose. Some encouraging, though still weak signs seem to be confirming that this is a possible path.

PCI OFFICIALS REACT TO DC CONGRESS OUTCOME

["Pi.S." report on PCI Directorate members Gerardo Chiaromonte, Fernando Di Giulio 21 February press conference in Rome: "Christian Democratic Party (DC) Shoulders Grave Responsibility"]

[Text] Rome--The DC is practically split in two: A heterogeneous bloc of several currents has placed in a minority the wing which advocated a line of democratic solidarity, without excluding a priori the possibility of involving the PCI in government. What now? We await the meeting of the newly elected National Council and, in the meantime, we note the reactions of the other parties.

The PCI made a preliminary examination of the situation at yesterday morning's Directorate meeting. In the afternoon Gerardo Chiaromonte and Fernando Di Giulio reported on the proceedings to journalists.

[Question] What will become of the proposal to promote a collegial meeting among all the parties?

[Chiaromonte] The majority of the DC Congress' approval of the Donat-Cattin preamble clearly marks the end of any possibility of political and program negotiations with us. The DC Congress failed to take up Zaccagnini's proposal, backed and reintroduced even more explicitly by Andreotti, of opening negotiations with the PCI to verify the possibility of forming a national unity government capable of tackling the country's dramatic problems. By taking this option, which we regard as very grave, the majority of the DC Congress has shouldered a grave responsibility, effectively ruling out negotiations without, for that matter, indicating any way out of the crisis or any possible solution to the problem of governability.

[Question] Will the PCI therefore hide in the corner?

[Chiaromonte] Not at all. We are in opposition, and there we will remain and continue to fight our battle to contribute to resolving Italy's grave problems and to facilitate new unitary processes which will bring the possibility of an emergency government back onto the agenda.

[Question] The DC has chosen the path of entrenchment, but there is still the 42 percent....

[Di Guilio] Of course we consider it very important that a very considerable part of the DC has pronounced itself in favor of the possibility of providing the country with a national unity government. This shows that not everything is at a standstill within the party with the relative majority [in parliament]. This is partly a result of our action. We hope that the Zaccagnini and Andreotti groups will manage to reject--as they did during the congress--all maneuvers aimed at a "hodgepodge" solution, that is at forming at the National Council meeting a party unity characterized by confusion and the absence of a policy.

[Chiaromonte] No, we are calling for clarity, because the country has no need for muddled stances, indecision, confusion or delays.

[Question] So 42 percent of the DC will become a valid, though in the minority, interlocutor. If Zaccagnini had been victorious and the famous meeting had taken place, would negotiations really have been possible?

[Chiaromonte] Zaccagnini's report created a possibility of negotiation, even though it set rather rigid conditions which might have proved an obstacle to positive conclusion of the negotiations. But it is also a fact that during the congress debate some of the conditions were attenuated in several speeches by representatives of the Zaccagnini group, for instance in Deputy Andreotti's speech and in the closing speech from Zaccagnini himself.

[Question] The real stumbling block was foreign policy.

[Di Guilio] I am not convinced of this: For instance, I do not believe it would have been impossible to reach agreement on the basis of the speech delivered by Andreotti, in connection with foreign policy. If there had been a meeting, however, we would have concerned ourselves with seeking points of agreement, rather than disagreement.

[Question] What are the prospects now?

[Chiaromonte] The DC has not indicated any. Our aim is quite clear, however: the unity of the democratic forces, to deal with the emergency and to start resolving the major problems of the crisis. We will continue our constructive battle from opposition.

[Question] Will you bring the Cossiga government down?

[Chiaromonte] If it had been up to us, that government would never have been formed. So it is not up to us to take any other initiatives. But there is more to it than that: As long as the position of the majority of the DC Congress survives, we will have to remain in opposition, even with respect to other governments.

[Question] Are the prospects of early elections drawing nearer?

[Di Giulio] I do not know, but I hope not. What I do know for certain is that if the line of dialog had prevailed those prospects would have receded.

OLESEN, RUFFINI DISCUSS AFGHANISTAN, EEC

AU262037 Rome ANSA in English 1955 GMT 26 Feb 80 AU

[Text] Copenhagen, February 26 (ANSA)--Italian Foreign Minister Attilio Ruffini, the duty chairman of the European Economic Community, met today with the head of Danish diplomatic, Kjeld Olesen, for consultations on development surrounding the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan and current problems on the Community front.

The two foreign ministers disclosed that their countries were in "full agreement" on the need to seek a solution to the problem posed by the Soviet presence in Afghanistan by following up on the proposal advanced last week in Rome, during the EEC Council of Ministers meeting, for the neutralization of the Asian country.

Italy and Denmark, the diplomatic chiefs said are aiming at safeguarding the detente process and went on to point out that, however, "Europe's place is alongside the United States".

Referring to the proposal for boycotting the summer Olympic games in Moscow, [words indistinct] declared that with the invasion of Afghanistan, the Soviets fell short of fulfilling the condition for the participation of all the athletes and that it is, (?thus) up to the Soviet Union to now recreate those conditions required for participation in the games by all the nations involved.

The minister added that Italy as duty chairman of the Community will wish for a joint position [word indistinct] the EC member states with reference to the Moscow summer games [words indistinct] problems within the Community, Ruffini explained Italy's affirmative stance on the projected entry of Spain and Portugal into the Community and said that the Community must arrive at a joint position on the political, agricultural and industrial problems connected to the enlarged Community before June.

OLESEN'S HOSPITALIZATION DELAYS SECURITY DEBATE

ID261455 Copenhagen AKTUELT in Danish 20 Feb 80 p 4 ID

[RITZAUS bureau report: "Kjeld Olesen Entering Hospital, Debate Postponed"]

During Kjeld Olesen's hospitalization Finance Minister Svend Jakobsen will be acting minister.

The foreign minister announced his hospitalization Tuesday afternoon via his parliamentary secretary.

It was announced earlier in the day that Thursday's security policy debate was being postponed for 1 week. According to Folketing Chairman K.B. Andersen the postponement was because Kjeld Olesen had no time to participate in the debate, because he is acting prime minister and also, as estate executor for the late culture minister, Niels Matthiasen, he has to make funeral arrangements.

In the postponed debate of inquiry Kjeld Olesen was to have stated the government's security policy considerations in light of the exacerbated international relations following the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan. The inquiry was called by all the parties except the Socialist People's Party and the Left Radicals.

In the official statement on his hospitalization Kjeld Olesen gave no further details as to the cause.

RITZAUS bureau understands that it is a routine examination for a back ailment.

SWEDEN

RELATIONS WITH POLAND INCREASINGLY STRAINED

LD270951 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 23 Feb 80 p 4 LD

[Ingmar Lindmarker report: "Diplomat Expelled"]

[Text] On Friday the Swedish consul in Szczecin was declared "persona non grata" in Poland, and thus Swedish-Polish relations seemed to have reached another nadir.

The Swedish Foreign Ministry brusquely dismissed the expulsion as a reprisal. Last week Sweden expelled the Polish consul in Malmo.

On Friday Ambassador Knut Thyberg in Warsaw was summoned to the chief of protocol at the Polish Foreign Ministry. The latter stated that Consul Kjell Richardsson in Szczecin is no longer persona grata in Poland because he "has indulged in activity incompatible with his official status."

"Obviously the Polish accusations against Richardsson are totally baseless," Foreign Ministry press spokesman Erik Pierre said in reply to SVENSKA DAGBLADET's inquiry.

"We have to deplore the fact that once again Poland has expelled a Swedish official without cause as a reprisal measure," Pierre said.

In June 1979 the Polish Foreign Ministry expelled two Swedish diplomats from the country. At that time Sweden had immediately before that expelled two Polish diplomats for espionage in industry and against refugees, among other things.

Unofficially Swedish-Polish relations are described as very strained. The current expulsions are the sequel to a number of interventions by Swedish security police against Polish "picture dealers" in Sweden suspected of espionage.

There were frictions even earlier because the Polish authorities turned away Swedish citizens of Polish-Jewish origin when they reached Polish border posts. Poland is the only East European country with which Sweden has a no-visa agreement.

SVENSKA DAGBLADET understands that the Swedish security police have strong objections to the treaty which enables Poles to enter Sweden without prior control by Swedish authorities. The police have no opportunity to keep an effective watch on the great number of Poles entering the country.

The Foreign Ministry and the government, however, believe that the advantages of the no-visa agreement outweigh the disadvantages. It is part of the efforts to achieve a more open exchange of people in East Europe.

Despite all the irritants and tensions, both Swedes and Poles are striving to keep relations alive. The "retaliation" of expelling Richardsson and the brusque Swedish response seem, however, to be another strain on relations between Sweden and Poland.

TA NEA: TURKS ASK FOR FORMATION OF BIETHNIC GOVERNMENT

NC260650 Nicosia TA NEA in Greek 26 Feb 80 p 1 NC

[Text] The Cyprus Government has in its hands an official document with the Turkish side's conditions and positions. This document is a clear-cut reply to Waldheim's initiative and formula and clearly sets out the prerequisites and conditions of Ankara and Denktas for the resumption of the intercommunal dialog.

It is understood that this official document speaks about the existence of two nations, two separate states and two separate governments in Cyprus, and stresses that in order to make possible the resumption of the talks it must be made clear that they will aim at the establishment of a biethnic [dhiethniki] government. It is also said that if the talks are to be resumed, there should be recognition of the Denktas regime's sovereignty over all the occupied territories and of the autonomy of his "government" along with the public denunciation of the recent UN General Assembly resolutions on Cyprus.

Moreover, in addition to the well-known positions and conditions of the Turkish side, a new element is being introduced.

The doors for the solution of the Cyprus problem will remain closed so long as the Greek Cypriot side describes the Cyprus problem as a problem of invasion and expansionism.

According to well-informed Western diplomatic circles, the contents of the said document, along with the public statements by Turkish and Turkish Cypriot officials, leave no room for progress in the Cyprus problem and constitute very clear proof of Ankara's real intentions about the Cyprus problem.

At the same time these circles have pointed out the responsibility of the Western quarters for the dangerous situation that is being created in Cyprus as a result of their attitude of condoning the increasing Turkish intransigence.

The situation that has resulted following the fresh reports now in the possession of the Cyprus Government in connection with the future of the intercommunal talks and the Turkish side's attitude have been studied at repeated meetings of the "working team" set up by President Kiprianou. The "working team" has arrived at a number of conclusions, appraisals and decisions that will probably be announced today by President Kiprianou prior to his departure for abroad.

CONSULTATIONS FOR RESUMPTION OF TALKS SUSPENDED

NC250737 Nicosia TO THARROS in Greek 25 Feb 80 p 8 NC

[Text] The consultations for the resumption of the intercommunal talks will be suspended for a short time because of Turkey's refusal to receive Perez de Cuellar at this point and because of the visit to Western Europe by President Kiprianou and Foreign Minister Rolandhis.

This was announced yesterday by authoritative diplomatic circles in Nicosia in response to the latest developments, which have led the efforts by UN Secretary General Waldheim and his associates into deadlock.

In the meantime, according to authoritative information from political circles in Nicosia, the Cyprus Government has received all reports in connection with the question of the resumption of the talks. It is expected that the reports will be studied by the government working committee. It is understood that this will be followed by a briefing for all the party leaders prior to President Kiprianou's departure for West Europe.

KORHAN ON GREEK CYPRIOT 'MISREPRESENTATION' AT IPU MEETING

[Excerpts] The president of the Legislative Assembly, Mr Korhan, has sent letters to his counterparts in the Mediterranean countries drawing their attention to the fact that the Greek Cypriot administration could represent only the Greek Cypriot community and not the whole of Cyprus. Mr Korhan sent the letter to the presidents of the national assemblies of the Albania, Algiers, Egypt, France, Italy, Lebanon, Morocco, Monaco, Portugal, Spain, Syria, Tunisia and Yugoslavia in view of the forthcoming meeting of the subcommittee of the International Parliamentary Union to discuss antipollution measures for the Mediterranean in the last week of this month in southern Cyprus.

He pointed out that the Greek Cypriot parliamentary delegation, availing itself of the absence of a Turkish Cypriot parliamentary delegation at the first meeting of the subcommittee held in Athens in October 1978, presented itself as the national parliamentary group of the whole of Cyprus and persuaded the parliamentary delegations of the other countries to accept in principle the proposal that the second meeting should take place in south Cyprus.

Mr Korhan said that the Republic of Cyprus was a binational state based on the existence of two ethnic communities in the island and the 1960 Constitution envisaged the participation of both communities in the administration of the state and all its organs.

Mr Korhan concluded by saying that had there been a constitutionally established central authority in Cyprus representing both communities, the Turkish Cypriot community would have been only too glad to welcome the holding of such a meeting in Cyprus. But in view of the political situation prevailing in Cyprus, the Turkish Cypriot community felt the time was not opportune for holding such an international meeting in Cyprus because this would be taken by the Greek Cypriot side as a recognition of their self-styled illegal status and would encourage them to evade the negotiating table where a solution of the Cyprus problem lay.

Mikhailidhis Rebuttal

[Text] Acting President Mr Mikhailidhis refuted Turkish objections to Cyprus hosting the meeting of the Interparliamentary Union's subcommittee for the pollution control of the Mediterranean.

In a letter to the secretary of the Interparliamentary Union, the chairman of the Turkish interparliamentary group reiterated the Turkish objection and in particular complained that the president of the Cyprus House of Representatives, Mr Mikhailidhis, in his invitations to the Union's parliaments had included a paragraph which drew attention to the fact that the use of the ports of Famagusta, Kyrenia and Karavostasi as well as the Tymbou Airport was illegal.

In a document circulated at the subcommittee's session, Mr Mikhailidhis stressed that the conference is being held in Nicosia in accordance with the Interparliamentary Council and the Executive Committee's resolution.

Regarding the paragraph in the invitation, about which the Turkish representative complained, Mr Mikhailidhis explained the reasons for these ports having been proclaimed illegal, stressing that the Cyprus Government's measures--which are in accordance with the international law and the resolutions of international organizations--are neither an economic blockade nor a sign of ill will. He added: They are an effort to protect the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Cyprus; the rights of its citizens and the security of those using the ports of Cyprus.

KIPRIANOU ANSWERS NEWSMEN'S QUESTIONS PRIOR TO EUROPEAN TOUR

[Excerpts] President Kiprianou today began a West European tour during which he will discuss Cyprus development.

In his departure statement President Kiprianou said, among other things, that if there is to be progress in the Cyprus problem, there must radical change in the Turkish positions and goals. He also reiterated the willingness and readiness of the Greek Cypriot side for an honorable, substantive and unconditional dialog. The president also said that no progress has yet been made and criticized Turkey's intransigent attitude, the peak of which was the provocative statement by Turkish Senate President Caglayangil.

Answering questions by newsmen, the president stressed that all efforts to promote the Cyprus problem must be within the UN framework, including the activities by the countries that he will visit. Mr Kiprianou added: These countries, as well as the other West European countries, can play a role because they have ties with Turkey and they can influence it to abandon its intransigent policy. He also said that the meetings he will have will give him the opportunity to analyze our positions. He added that the view prevailing in West Europe that the Cyprus Government and the Greek Cypriot side do not favor the holding of a dialog is wrong. The president stressed: We favor holding a dialog but what we do not favor are unacceptable conditions and preconceived notions of partitionist solutions for the Cyprus problem.

President Kiprianou also said that the well-known Western framework for a Cyprus solution will not be discussed during his tour because the Cyprus Government does not believe it constitutes a basis for talks.

The president was seen off by the House president, members of the Council of Ministers, the diplomatic envoys of the countries to be visited by President Kiprianou and by other members of the diplomatic corps, House members, the National Guard and the police chiefs and by other officials. The British high commissioner to Cyprus also left for London aboard the same plane.

RESTRICTIONS ON NICOSIA FLIGHT REGION LIFTED

NC261830 Nicosia Domestic Television Service in English 1720 GMT 26 Feb 80 NC

[Text] The minister of communications has announced that following the cancellation by the Turkish civil aviation authorities of NOTAM No 714 of August 1974, by which Turkey had intervened in the northern part of the Nicosia flight information region, the Cyprus authorities have lifted all restrictions imposed at the time on certain airways in the region.

The authorities of the republic now provide again full traffic control service to international air navigation on all airways within the Nicosia flight information region.

PAPANDREOU ADDRESSES PASOK CENTRAL COMMITTEE CONGRESS

[Report on the 23 February address by PASOK Chairman Andreas Papandreou to the sixth congress of the movement's Central Committee]

[Text] In his address to the sixth congress of the movement's Central Committee, PASOK Chairman A. Papandreou referred to all domestic and foreign policy issues as well as to political issues expected to develop quickly in our country. The main points of A. Papandreou's address are:

The following developments were the result of the Carter doctrine and the return to the cold war:

A--The SALT II agreement was shelved as a result of the current cut in economic, cultural and technological exchanges with the USSR.

B--Armament escalation has started in order to create a balance between the two superpowers at increasingly higher levels.

C--The United States has classified the areas of the Middle East and particularly the Persian Gulf as danger zones, specifying them as areas vital to the United States.

The Carter Declaration

The declaration of U.S. President Carter, Papandreou stressed, proscribes defense of this vital area with the use of all available means, in other words, with the inclusion of military intervention. It therefore becomes obvious that achieving this goal is impossible with conventional weapons. It will only be possible with a threat of nuclear war. (The Dulles climate is returning to the United States. The dynamics of the cold war, however, incorporate the ever increasing danger of a nuclear clash with apocalyptic dimensions. It is for this very reason that it also incorporates the possibility of a respite and a return to militant coexistence.

Repercussions

According to the chairman of PASOK the repercussions from this policy are the following:

--Development of U.S.-Chinese relations.
--Return of the NATO members to a state of U.S. dominance.
--Acceptance by West European countries of the installation of Pershing and cruise missiles.
--U.S. enforcement of a cut in exchanges with Eastern countries.

NATO member states have already accepted on their territory and an increase in military expenditures. [sentence as published] They are now trying to moderate the instructions for a cut in exchanges with the Eastern countries. At the same time, they are trying to mediate between the two superpowers. There will be a similar climate in the political-military camp of the USSR.

The Return Is a Cumulative Result

The U.S. return to the cold war, Papandreou stressed, is a cumulative result of:

A--The great defeat of the United States in Indochina.

B--The prevalence of pro-Soviet regimes in Latin American countries with USSR encouragement.

C--The large-scale and unique peoples revolution in Iran, which resulted in an overthrow of the balance of power in the area.

Continuing his address, Chairman A. Papandreou referred to the USSR intervention in Afghanistan, to the Camp David agreement and to the repercussions of these two events upon Greece.

The Karamanlis Government Is a Satellite

A. Papandreou referred to the Karamanlis Government as a "satellite" government. He stressed that the multifaceted policy advocated by Prime Minister Karmanlis was a trick of the moment and recalled that the government of New Democracy completely concealed U.S. Ambassador McCloskey's speech, which essentially instructed the Greek Government "on how to behave."

He added that the common goals of the ruling class and its "allies" are use of Greek territory as a U.S. and NATO bridgehead in the critical Middle East area. He further stressed that the social and economic embodiment of Greece within the EEC is aimed at preventing and limiting domestic political, social and economic developments.

PASOK Marches Toward Authority

The rapid increase of PASOK's political strength, Papandreou stressed, resulted in an obvious overthrow of the relationship between political forces in our country. For the first time, after decades, the vision of a change becomes a tangible solution. This solution lies in a different course, it is not simple another way of handling the interests of the local and foreign establishment.

An impressive unification of the country's progressive and democratic forces has been in progress since 1977. A coalition aimed at authority within the framework of a national peoples unity is quickly developing. This is a coalition of the non-privileged Greeks (farmers, laborers, professionals, scientists, youth, lower middle classes) who, with PASOK as their political representative, wage the battle against:

A--Our country's dependence upon foreign decisionmaking bodies.

B--The domination of monopolies and the stark exploitation of workers.

C--The state of the right that supports this dependence and the interests of local and foreign oligarchy, which adulterates the country's democratic institutions.

The chairman then stressed that PASOK is the political representative of change which aims at authority and the following goals:

1--To achieve and strengthen national independence.
2--To defend the country's territorial integrity.
3--To democratize the state.
4--To lay firm foundations for a course which leads to the liberation of the workers and social reform.

A. Papandreou referred to political developments and stressed that the crisis in Greece has a domestic origin and is due to the inconsistent, contradictory and deep antipeople character of the government.

A clash with the government is inevitable. This clash will be between the government and a broad spectrum of social classes that will fight to perserve their true income levels.

Papandreou further underlined:

--New Democracy's popular foundation is shrinking very quickly.
--The mask of the right has fallen.
--The political change was planned and was an adulteration.
--The expansion [of the government] was a fiasco.
--The main goal of New Democracy is to merge with the extreme right.

[Related item on page one of EXORMISI on 24 February reports the following additional point in Papandreou's address: "PASOK states it will never agree to the legalization of the partition of Cyprus and to the ceding of national sovereign territory either to Turkey, the United States, NATO or anyone else. This is in the form of a warning to the Karamanlis government not only on the part of PASOK but also on the part of the overwhelming majority of the Greek people."]

For these reasons and within this framework, social and economic clashes dictate a dynamic policy taking the form of a confrontation between two poles, of a confrontation between PASOK and New Democracy. The choice which the electorate will be called upon to make will be the choice between two radically different courses. PASOK offers a different course, a course which is nationally proud and socially just.

Government Program

It is well known, the chairman of PASOK stated, that PASOK is speedily preparing a government program under the supervision of the committee on analysis and planning. Our goal is to define priorities and to classify programs in hand on the basis of timeliness and cost. This government program will become the framework within which the process for public participation will be set in motion, and which will in turn define the specific course to be forged by PASOK.

Our message to the leading personalities, deputies and members of PASOK is that we belong to one movement which has the socialist reformation of our country as its goal. To be a member of the Central Committee or a deputy is a position which provides no privileges. It is a position which demands obligations.

In conclusion, Papandreou said that PASOK, like every other political movement, is in no position to select, on its own, the time when it will be called upon by the people to implement its program. In the next election confrontation PASOK will be called upon by the people to take over and exercise authority.

PASOK Has No Right To Fail

PASOK is a movement which represents the broad alliance of social forces, which represent a Greece without guardians. Implementing PASOK's goals will require time and struggles. Every measure adopted will depend upon the broad concurrence of the people. PASOK has no right to fail because its failure would provide the right and its patrons with the opportunity to once again control the country. For 50 years, Papandreou stressed, the right has governed the country by fire and sword. The people already know, through their own experience, what the right has to offer to the nation and to the working people.

[Excerpt] Yesterday A. Papandreou called upon President of the Republic K. Tsatsos "to dissolve the Chamber of Deputies and to proclaim elections, because only the Chamber that would emerge from such elections can produce a president of the republic who will represent the electorate."

The chairman of PASOK stressed, "The present Chamber of Deputies represents a composition of political forces as it stood in 1977 (emerging under the reinforced proportional system of election). It is also certain, as it is recognized by everyone, that the present composition of the electorate is radically different.

"Within the framework of the 1975 Constitution--which PASOK voted against--the president of the republic exercises considerable authority. As a result, the election of a president of the republic takes on great political significance.

"How could it be possible for PASOK to cooperate in binding the country under a president from the rightwing for the next 5 years? "Today the rightwing is only a minority," the chairman of PASOK said in his address to the sixth congress of the party's movement's Central Committee.

[Excerpt] The forthcoming election of the president of the republic is developing into a critical political confrontation. As of yesterday a new important element was added to the consideration of factors on the basis of which K. Karamanlis will decide whether to claim the office of president of the republic or whether he will remain as the prime minister. PASOK Chairman A. Papandreou stated that the 93 deputies of his party will abstain from the election and called upon President of the Republic K. Tsatsos to immediately dissolve the Chamber of Deputies.

Government Response

[Text] A government spokesman made the following comment on A. Papandreou's address to his party's Central Committee.

"Even in his latest address to his party's Central Committee PASOK Chairman A. Papandreou repeats his stylized fireworks which only confirm absolute confusion in his domestic and foreign policies. The only new element in his latest declarations is his intensified attempt to create artificial political tension. Papandreou's declarations have absolutely nothing to do with either New Democracy or with Greece. They are aimed at preserving the cohesion of his party, which is torn by ideological contradictions and is in danger of breaking up in the face of problems on which he is obliged to take a position.

"PASOK's chairman demands an immediate dissolution of the Chamber of Deputies and proclamation of elections for the purpose of solving the president of the republic issue. Having learned nothing from extremist and antidemocratic expressions of the past, Papandreou demonstrates contempt of constitutional rules and questions the authority of the legally elected Chamber of Deputies. In his way he can only open the way for political confusion.

"Abandoning his promises of future utopias the chairman of PASOK warns his followers of a long period of difficulties and trials if he ever comes to authority. Papandreou, however, refuses to admit that others may have the same difficulties, which he admits for himself. It is characteristic that confusion and contradiction are traits not only of his foreign policy. When the latest economic measures were adopted to protect the balance of foreign payments, he launched a severe attack against the controls dictated to protect our economy. Now that these controls are being replaced by cooperation with the producing classes, he again protests because they are being eased.

"Once again he speaks of our country's dependence upon foreign decisionmaking bodies. He is well aware, however, that never before has Greece been as independent as it is today, and that never before has it enjoyed such a wide prestige and worldwide recognition. By contrast, it is PASOK's foreign policy that would lead Greece toward international isolation and a loss of its defensive supports at critical national moments.

"PASOK maintains that it will not be a simple alteration in government. It is a fact that should it ever come to authority it will be questionable--on the basis of to its own principles--whether the present parliamentary body would be able to function at all. This, most certainly, is one of the basic reasons why PASOK will never become an alternative to authority."

AKROPOLIS REPORTS DEMAND FOR CHANGE IN PASOK LEADERSHIP

[Excerpt] PASOK's internal crisis took on added tension: The leadership of Andreas Papandreou is now being openly questioned. A strong group is demanding convocation of a party congress "for the election of a new leadership." It is a fact that Sot. Kostopoulos, member of the Central Committee and responsible publisher of EXORMISIS, PASOK's press organ, proposed that "at long last" a congress should be convened "for the purpose of electing a new leadership because the present executive bureau is impotent."

This open attack caused confusion and disturbance among the leadership, which showed that it was taken by surprise. A reply was given to Kostopoulos by Tzoumakas (author of the notorious circular that PASOK is a Marxist party and that it is prohibited to have photographs of Eleftherios Venizelos exhibited in the party's offices) who made the following statements: "Conditions are not ripe for a PASOK congress because the presence of petty bourgeois within the various party organs is still strong."

Loses Composure

It must be mentioned at this point that, according to a statement by PASOK, Tzoumakas was due to be sent to the disciplinary council of the party to explain the circular issued by the "committee on enlightenment" which is under him. This did not take place. This is due to the fact that the revealing circular had been submitted to the executive bureau and specifically to Laliotis who approved it. Consequently, it was stressed, the allegation of the party's leadership that it was in ignorance of the circular's contents, is simply not true.

Political observers stressed last night that last Saturday's developments at the congress of PASOK's Central Committee fully explain why Andreas Papandreou was nervous and lost his composure, and why he attempted to gain control of the situation and to cover things up by attempting to create artificial tension in the political atmosphere. It is within the limits of this effort that he stated that PASOK will abstain from voting in the election for a president of the republic and why he launched his invective on dissolving the present Chamber of Deputies and declaring elections.

The same political observers stressed that in any case and regardless of his internal party problems, Papandreou becomes dangerous to political calm and to the country's democratic regime because of his tactics. They also stressed that we must not forget that one of the main arguments used by the coupists in 1967 had to do with his declarations at that time--similar to those of today--that he "will swear in a government at Sintagma Square."

IMF DELEGATION ARRIVES IN ANKARA FOR OFFICIAL TALKS

[Text] An IMF delegation has arrived in Ankara for official talks. The delegation is headed by Charles Woodward, the chief of the IMF Turkish desk. In a statement at Ankara Esenboga Airport, Woodward described the economic stability measures recently taken in Turkey as positive. He said that he had attended the meetings of the OECD second working group in Paris where the issue of economic aid to Turkey had been discussed. Replying to a question, Woodward said: Following the recent measures Turkey does not need a new devaluation.

AKAJANS [Mediterranean news agency] reports Woodward as saying that he believed that Turkey would receive the foreign financial support necessary for the implementation of these economic measures. He added that multilateral contacts were being held in connection with the aid issue and that the final results would be obtained at a meeting to be held in Paris on 26 March.

The IMF delegation will hold talks with Finance Ministry, Central Bank and State Planning Organization officials in Ankara.

OFFICIAL REPORTS ON OECD MEETING, AID TO TURKEY

[Excerpt] The second OECD working group is continuing its meetings in Paris. Economic aid to Turkey was discussed at a meeting held on the first day. Under secretary of the Prime Minister's Office and deputy under secretary of the State Planning Organization, Turgut Ozal, yesterday morning briefed the group meeting on the economic stability program being implemented in Turkey. The members later expressed their views on aid to Turkey. In a statement to the TRT after the meeting Ozal said the following:

[Begin Ozal recording] We held our first meeting within the framework of the OECD in Paris. OECD member countries met under the chairmanship of OECD Secretary General Van Lenner. I explained to them the economic program we are implementing. I also explained that the OECD member countries should extend the necessary aid to Turkey as soon as possible to fully achieve the goals of this program.

Following my explanation the representatives of various countries, including the FRG, the United States, Britain, Italy, Norway and Denmark, addressed the meeting. They said that they favored the program and that it should have the full backing of the OECD. Mr Woodward, from the IMF, said that the IMF strongly supports Turkey's economic program and that speedy aid should be extended for this program. The World Bank representative also expressed similar views and said that the bank will soon extend a program loan of $200 million. He said that, in addition, a project loan of some $350 million will be extended within this year. Thus the World Bank aid to Turkey will be increased by some 40 to 45 percent over last year. The World Bank expressed support for the program being implemented in Turkey.

At the meeting a decision was made for the member countries to hold a [word indistinct] meeting on 26 March. Meanwhile, the member countries, Turkey and the aid to Turkey consortium will work on postponing Turkey's debts. A meeting will also be held on the issue before 26 March. A [word indistinct] meeting will be held on 24 March followed by a meeting on loan postponement and the 26 March meeting. We believe that a decision will be reached on postponing loans. Thus, we are convinced that more speedy aid will be extended to Turkey than was the case last year. [end recording]

Various issues concerning OECD countries are being discussed at today's session of the working group. Ozal is holding bilateral contacts with the representatives of the countries and organizations attending the group's meetings.

ROGERS VISITS TO DISCUSS GREEK REENTRY INTO MILITARY WING

[Text] Gen Bernard Rogers, the supreme allied commander of NATO, will arrive in Ankara today. In a statement to TRT in London in connection with his visit to Turkey, General Rogers said his visit to Ankara is very important from the viewpoint of NATO. Noting that he was not hopeful about recent developments regarding Greece's return to NATO's military wing, General Rogers said this issue should definitely be solved within the framework of the alliance. Pointing out that Greece's wish to return to NATO's military wing as well as military and economic aid to Turkey would be discussed during his contacts in Ankara, General Rogers noted that the Turkish-Greek disputes and the Cyprus problems are not linked. He said: Greece left NATO's military wing in 1974. However, Greece expressed the wish to return to NATO's military 3 years ago, i.e., before the Cyprus problem was solved. Therefore, it is not right to cite the yet unsolved Cyprus problem among the Turkish-Greek disputes or to believe that the solution of the Cyprus problem is a precondition to Greece's return to NATO's military wing.

In a statement made at a meeting organized by the European Altantic group, General Rogers said the expansionist policy being pursued by the Soviet Union has reached dangerous dimensions. He added that NATO forces should be improved to counter Soviet military power.

FOREIGN MINISTER ON GREECE'S RETURN TO NATO MILITARY SECTOR

[Text] Foreign Minister Hayrettin Erkmen said that the decision to lift NOTAM 714 should not be interpreted as a concession. He was replying to an unscheduled speech made at the Senate today. He said that the decision was the manifestation of a will to negotiate and of a desire to reach a solution with good will. He added that the fact that Greece lifted its NOTAM following Turkey's action strengthened the hopes that an atmosphere of good will could be established between the two countries.

Erkmen stated that Turkey did not agree to a proposal for an agreement on the pre-1974 conditions in the Aegean. He added: We are trying to establish, through negotiations, an arrangement by which we will fully agree with Greece on the Aegean--underwater and in the airspace above it--in all aspects. We have the necessary patience to achieve this. If we manage to agree with our neighbor, and if our neighbor shows this understanding, if it makes such an agreement possible by realizing our very justified considerations, then there will be no obstacles to Greece's return to NATO's military wing. The foreign minister also said that Greece's return to NATO's military wing would be to the benefit of Turkey, of the region and of NATO.

VOTCP ATTACKS ROGERS PLAN FOR AEGEAN SETTLEMENT

[Unattributed commentary: "The Aegean Sea Should Be a Sea of Peace, Free Transportation and Cooperation"]

[Text] Dear listeners: The Aegean Continental Shelf problem is one of the issues which created the Turkish-Greek dispute and the tension between the two neighboring countries. This problem remains unsolved, or to be more exact, there are attempts to prevent the solution of this problem through peaceful means.

The policy of increasing tension and undermining peace pursued by U.S. imperialism, NATO and their collaborators in Turkey and Greece is the reason the problem remains unsolved. The United States and NATO are continuously sabotaging the peaceful solution of the conflicts between Turkey and Greece in a bid to realize their military strategic plans in the region and to reestablish their lost positions. They are instigating the militarist and chauvinistic circles in both countries to this end. They closely attach Turkey to NATO. They are imposing new slavery agreements in exchange for a few dollars. They are parceling Turkish territory for their aggressive goals.

In other words, dear listeners, the Aegean problem is being pushed into an impasse as a result of this antipeace policy pursued by the U.S.-NATO imperialists. They are posing as the mediators in the Turkish-Greek dispute in order to increase their strategic control over the region. As has been the case in the Cyprus problem, various formulas are being put forward regarding the Aegean issue with the aim of enabling imperialist monopolies to exploit the reserves in the Aegean and of realizing imperialist military, strategic and political plans of aggression.

A plan drawn up by the supreme allied commander of NATO has recently been put forward. This is called the Rogers Plan. This plan envisages the solution of the Aegean dispute in accordance with NATO's strategic plans, the full control of the Aegean by NATO and the return of Greece to the NATO military wing based on this solution. According to the Rogers Plan, the Aegean Sea will be divided into three regions, namely, the Turkish, Greek and NATO regions. Actually, this is the official aspect of the issue. Turkey is a member of NATO; therefore, if this plan is realized the Aegean region will be under the complete control of NATO. NATO heads consider the withdrawal of Greece from the NATO military wing to be an obstacle; therefore, NATO heads and their collaborators in our country have been exerting every effort to secure Greece's return to the NATO military wing.

It is clear that the major goal of the Rogers Plan is to place the Aegean region under the complete control of NATO and to transform the region into a strategic support area of NATO and U.S. imperialism. This plan is not a new one. The imperialists have submitted various formulas and have used different methods in order to realize such a plan. Years of experience show us that it is impossible to solve Turkish-Greek disputes through NATO plans.

It is possible to have goodneighborly relations between the two countries and to solve problems through peaceful means. The major conditions to achieve this end are not to become a tool of NATO's aggressive plans in our region, to put an end to provocations between the two neighboring countries, to categorically reject the Rogers Plan and to adopt a stand conducive to regional peace. Greece's decision not to return to the NATO military wing is a positive step in this direction. This decision promotes peace and security in our region. This attitude contributes to an atmosphere conducive to establishing good-neighborly relations between Turkey and Greece. The Turkish and Greek peoples support such a development. Our people wish the Aegean Sea to be a sea of peace, free transportation and cooperation.

DEFENSE MINISTER COMMENTS ON U.S. DEFENSE PACT

[Text] National Defense Minister Ahmet Ihsan Birincioglu said that mutual respect for equality and sovereignty is the basis of the defense cooperation agreement initialed with the United States. Speaking during the National Assembly debates on his ministry's budget, Birincioglu said that the work on the details of the defense cooperation agreement was continuing and that Turkey would gain a great deal from this agreement.

He said that he believed it would be useful for the agreement to be debated in parliament after it was completed. He added: Nothing is done without the knowledge of these noble assemblies. We are convinced that what we are doing is for the benefit of our country.

The national defense minister then said a defense capability could not continue for long unless it was supported economically. Pointing out that Turkey was currently faced with various economic problems, Birincioglu said that the government was trying to solve the problems without any political or party considerations. He added: In this situation we expect our allies to seriously begin and continue to make these problems easier for us to solve. We have observed that our allies took certain steps in that direction recently. However, we expect these efforts to yield concrete results as soon as possible.

The national defense minister then noted that efforts were being made to increase the military industry potential of the machine and chemical industry establishment. He added that (Aselsan) would begin to manufacture radios in the first half of this year.

ASSEMBLY DEPUTIES COMMENT ON FOREIGN POLICY; ERKMEN REPLIES

[Text] Ankara, 23 Feb (AA)--Spokesmen for various political parties called for closer relations with neighboring and Islamic countries during the National Assembly debate on the budget of the Foreign Ministry Friday.

RPP Deputy Hikmet Cetin charged the government with neglecting relations with countries of the region. Nationalist Action Party [NAP] Deputy Sadi Somuncuoglu said that he favored cooperation with Muslim, particularly Arab countries, but regretted some of their behavior toward Turkey. National Salvation Party [NSP] Deputy Temel Karamollaoglu called for a foreign policy that sided with Muslim countries commenting it would be a "bitter decision in history" if this parliament decided to join EEC.

Foreign Minister Harettin Erkmen, answering criticism, stated Turkey had "no disputes with Iran" and had been one of the first governments to criticize the "military intervention" in Afghanistan. Turkey had clearly expressed its stand in view of the developments in Afghanistan at the Islamic countries foreign ministers conference in Islamabad, Pakistan, he noted, and her opposition to joining any economic sanctions against Iran.

He acknowledged a claim by the NSP deputy that an official of the Israeli Foreign Ministry had come to Ankara was true, insofar as the head of the eastern Mediterranean section had apparently come to Ankara, but denied that his ministry had either invited or conferred with him.

The 19 Turkish citizens under custody in Iraq had been released and allowed to cross into Turkey, he announced.

With regard to Greece's return to NATO's military wing, the foreign minister said, that would be to Turkey's benefit as well "so long as our strategic, political and economic interests are not hurt."

ECEVIT COMMENTS ON TERRORISM, EARLY ELECTIONS

[Text] RPP leader Bulent Ecevit, who is in Copenhagen, has said that Turkey has great economic resources and that it can emerge from the present crisis if these resources are used well.

Ecevit, who held a news conference in parliament in Denmark, said that the Turkish people were sincerely attached to democracy and that they were very carefully trying to avoid becoming tools in the hands of terrorism. Ecevit said: Everyone is doing what he can in Turkey to insure that democracy is not damaged.

Replying to a question, Ecevit said that early elections would not make any significant changes in the arithmetical party representation at the assembly. After the news conference, the RPP leader addressed the workers training congress organized by the Danish Social Democratic Party.

GUNAYDIN REPORTS ON ARMED FORCES VIEW OF DOMESTIC CRISES

NC251015 Istanbul GUNAYDIN in Turkish 21 Feb 80 p 5 NC

[Article by Can Pulak: "How Does the Soldier View the Situation?"]

[Excerpts] The politicians must realize that they are using their last chance and their last opportunity. They have not yet missed the bus but the time by the clock at the platform of democracy is not a quarter to twelve but only five to twelve. The only topic our politicians can discuss now is how to extricate ourselves from the predicament we are in. They need not dwell on how we reached this situation, but on how we can get out of it through full cooperation. This is what the soldiers are waiting to see. This was the most striking observation advanced by members of our armed forces during my recent visit to Erzurum.

Our commanders and officers of varying ranks do not cherish the desire to come to power. They wish to see that parliament finds the necessary remedy, that our country achieves peace and tranquillity within the framework of a democratic regime and that the politicians refrain from negative behaviour that may compel the armed forces to intervene. This is the general tendency in the army.

A commander said to me: "We are soldiers. We have a specific duty. We should not be prevented from performing our national defense duties. It is not up to us to think how the country should be administered. It is not the armed forces that have brought about this situation. Those responsible for the present situation should take rapid measures to rectify it. If they delay matters any further, we may be compelled to put a stop to it, but this is now what we wish to see."

The soldiers bitterly complain, not only about the irresponsibility of the politicians but also about the slow progress of work in parliament. Referring to incidents in Izmir, the commanders say: "These people openly declare that they are fighting for the purpose of setting up a Kurdish state. You cannot fight these people with mere pistols and rifles and only with the help of the police. The state should attack with all the means at its disposal and resolve matters in as short a time as possible. If those who rebel against the state are not crushed swiftly, the restoration of peace and tranquillity may become difficult."

Hoisting of the red flag, expressing allegiance to foreign leaders and not to Ataturk, chanting the Internationale and not our national anthem, and the efforts of a handful of militants to cause confusion in Turkey--all this simply enrages the armed forces.

The soldiers say: "If parliament continues to show indifference toward these negative developments, something will have to be done." They also stress the fact that their patience is running out.

'LIKE-MINDED COUNTRIES' TO MEET ON NORTH-SOUTH DIALOG

AU260852 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 23-24 Feb 80 p 2 AU

[Special DIE PRESSE report: "Moderate Industrialized Countries To Hold Meeting in Vienna on 3 March"]

[Summary] In an attempt to save the North-South dialog after the failure of the Delhi UNIDO conference, the "like-minded countries" [English term used]--Canada, Sweden, Norway, Finland, Denmark, Belgium, Netherlands, Ireland and Austria--will hold a meeting in Vienna on 3 and 4 March." They want to work out a moderate position of the developed countries vis-a-vis the Third World, being of the opinion that in addition to the maximum demands of the 'Group of 77' development countries at the Delhi conference also the unyielding attitude of the 'hawks' among the Western states--that is to say, the FRG and the United States--contributed to the failure of the conference. The mediating position of the 'like-minded countries' is to make itself felt at the UN General Assembly special session on development next August in New York." The Vienna meeting will be held at state secretaries' level. Austria will be represented by State Secretary Adolf Nussbaumer.

CARRINGTON CONFIRMS EC TALKS ON AFGHAN 'NEUTRALIZATION'

[Text] Hamburg--Lord Carrington confirmed during an interview tonight with German television that the European Community is considering proposing Afghanistan's neutralization to Moscow. "We have not yet reached a final decision. We are engaged in talks within the circle of the Nine," said Carrington. Afghanistan's neutrality is to be guaranteed by the great powers and the countries of the region. Everybody has good reason for wanting this. It would please everyone if the Soviet Union were to withdraw. One would have to talk with the Soviets in order to make a start. Carrington mentioned the president of the European Council, the Italian prime minister, as one of the possible discussion partners.

SUAREZ REVIEWS TALKS WITH SCHMIDT ON AFGHANISTAN, EAST-WEST RELATIONS

LD252316 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2100 GMT 25 Feb 80 LD

[Asuncion Valdes dispatch from Bonn]

[Text] Before catching the plane for Madrid, Prime Minister Suarez made a brief statement to the press about the results of the lightning visit he paid this evening to West Germany. The topics discussed in his talks with Federal German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt were the crisis in Afghanistan and its consequences for East-West relations, the conflict in the Middle East, the Conference on Cooperation and Security in Europe this autumn in Madrid, and the Euro-Arab dialog. On this last point it is worth recalling that Prime Minister Suarez recently visited Iraq and Jordan and that the Federal Republic thinks our country's position on the Islamic world is very interesting. However, Adolfo Suarez, speaking at Cologne Airport, denied that he is going to play a mediating role between Europe and the Arab countries.

The Spanish prime minister once again emphasized Spain's solidarity with the Western world, with which it is involved. These are his own words: On certain questions, such as the Arab world, Spain maintains positions somewhat different from those of other Western countries.

Suarez expressed the great interest of the Spanish Government in the Conference on Cooperation and Security in Europe to be held in Madrid this autumn, an interest which is also shared by the FRG. Both governments also welcome the fact that both the United States and the USSR have expressed their readiness to attend this conference.

This visit, which barely lasted 6 hours, and which came about at the initiative of Prime Minister Suarez, has to be seen as part of the regular consultations which the Spanish prime minister and Chancellor Helmut Schmidt started in Madrid during the West German leader's January visit to Madrid.

DAILY TELEGRAPH: NEED FOR PATIENCE ON HOSTAGES CONTINUES

[Editorial: "Setback for Hostages"]

[Text] Ayatollah Khomeyni's broadcast yesterday seems to dash hopes for early release of the 49 Americans held hostage since Nov. 4. In a message at the start of Iran's "National Mobilisation Week" he called on "our dear youth" (his term for the militant Moslem terrorists holding the hostages) to demand "forcefully" the return of the shah and his wealth, "and do not stop until you achieve victory." A broadcast by the terrorist "students" themselves said that in the event of delay "any expectation of clemency for the hostages would be foolish." In the meantime, the United Nations commission, charged in dubious terms with conducting some kind of inquiry into Iranian charges against the shah and the United States, is sitting in Geneva and the co-chairman has flown back to New York.

Perhaps it is just as well if the commission has been held up. It represents a transparent expedient, cooked up by Dr Waldheim in the hope that it could provide "cover" for the release of the hostages. That is a worthy object in itself--almost any sleight-of-hand to prize the Americans out of the grip of the embassy terrorists would be justified, provided it did not involve a grovelling and obviously insincere "apology" by President Carter. But the West should not resort to the United Nations for such purposes, however much the communist bloc might try to misuse that body.

Hopes that President Bani-Sadr, to whom Khomeyni has just passed on his role as commander-in-chief, wants to get rid of the hostages issue, and would find ways of doing so, have had a setback but need not yet be abandoned. President Carter has no choice but to continue with his policy of patience, restraint and refusal to dishonour America's earlir commitments to the shah. In the meantime, the continued humiliation of the hostages' imprisonment will be etched deeper. Americans must learn the lesson that it is the price for letting down their defences so far.

KREISKY REJECTS AUSTRIAN NEUTRALITY EXAMPLE FOR AFGHANISTAN

AU271310 Vienna VOLKSSTIMME in German 27 Feb 80 p 2 AU

[Text] Vienna--After the Cabinet meeting on Tuesday [26 February], Chancellor Kreisky did not seem very happy with the proposals calling for Afghanistan's "neutralization following Austria's example." "They cannot be compared at all.... People who say such things do not think out their ideas to the end...." For example, there were four occupation powers in Austria and "the Russians got something in return for their withdrawal: namely, the withdrawal of the Western powers from Austria." Moreover, he said, it is nonsense to speak of a guaranteed neutrality for Afghanistan following Austria's example. "Our neutrality is certainly not guaranteed, nor has it been forced upon us. It was voluntarily proclaimed by all parties represented in parliament. There is absolutely no reference to neutrality contained in the State Treaty...." With idle talk about the need to solve the Afghanistan question following Austria's example, Kreisky said, "our country is not rendered a good service...."

BULGARIA'S LUKANOV, ANDROSCH DISCUSS JOINT PROJECTS

[Unattributed report: "Bulgaria Wants To Develop Its Coal, Manganese Ore Deposits"]

[Summary] "The possibility of a 'trilateral' cooperation is being considered by Bulgaria for developing its large coal and manganese ore deposits, with Austria and the FRG as its partners. This was revealed yesterday [22 February] at a Vienna press conference held by Vice Chancellor Androsch and Bulgarian Council of Ministers Deputy Chairman Andrey Lukanov. During their economic talks, Androsch and Lukanov also discussed a number of other major projects involving, among others, the Voest-Alpine Steel Corporation. "Pending projects include among others a pump storage power plant to be built in Chaira, with an envisaged Austrian share in deliveries worth 1.5 billion schillings, cooperation in the production of air-conditioning equipment to be sold in third markets, as well as cooperation regarding the construction of ski lifts, also to be sold in third markets--according to Kukanov, especially in the USSR.

"Lukanov declared that Bulgaria is 'not very keen' on barter transactions. Rather, it takes special interest in concluding long-term cooperation agreements including production and marketing. Wherever this seems expedient, such cooperation could also be 'trilateral' or multilateral, he said. On the other hand, Lukanov sees hardly any chances for implementing a suggestion by Androsch to use Austrian surpluses, for example, in trade with Bulgaria for partly covering Austria's deficit in trade with Bulgaria. In that case, he said, the difference between the foreign currency systems would turn out to be an obstacle."

GENERAL CLOSE COMMENTS ON OUSTER FROM DEFENSE COMMITTEE

LD271625 Brussels LE SOIR in French 24-25 Feb 80 pp 1, 2 LD

[J. Ly. report: "After Being Fired General Close Tells LE SOIR: 'I Am Very Aware of the Country's Lack of Security'"]

[Text] On Friday the Cabinet decided to fire Gen Robert Close from his job as chairman of the Committee for National Defense Questions "in the interests of the service." Mr Martens said that this decision has been taken because the government disapproves of the content of some articles written by the general and published recently which, according to the prime minister, criticized the government and some of the country's leaders.

The articles to which Mr Martens was referring were about Belgian defense policy and, more particularly, about the appropriateness of deploying medium-range missiles on our territory. The general had been particularly critical of the Belgian Socialist Party [BSP] chairman, Mr Van Miert, and all those who, by rejecting the missiles, were "the tools of Soviet propaganda, whether consciously or unconsciously."

The first of these articles was published in LE SOIR of 12 December 1979; a second article was published by a specialized English-language journal called "NATO's 15 NATIONS." As everybody remembers, the government finally agreed to the deployment of the missiles on Belgian territory provided there was no improvement in East-West relations in 6 months which made this deployment unnecessary in the government's eyes.

During an interview granted to LE SOIR on Friday evening, General Close maintained his former stances on defense problems and regretted the fact that the government, under pressure from some of its members, has exploited politically what was merely a personal view.

The Cabinet decision was supported by all the ministers present. The subject was not on the agenda but when it was raised by a Cabinet member, all his colleagues agreed with the step taken against General Close.

Indeed, it is a radical step since the chairman of the Committee for National Defense Questions is directly responsible to the prime minister; firing the person holding this post means sending him back into the framework of the army where he is answerable to the General Staff and National Defense Ministry.

On Friday government circles mentioned the possibility of the Ground Forces General Staff--from which Major-General Close originally came--taking "appropriate measures": However, no mention was made of what these "measures" might be.

Following the publication of his article in LE SOIR, National Defense Minister Desmarets asked General Close not to engage in a polemical debate with the president of a political party. The former chairman of the Committee for National Defense Questions agreed. However, according to General Close, the article which appeared in the January issue of NATO's 15 NATIONS had been written and sent to the journal in question before the publication of the article in our newspaper.

Strained Relations

The publication of the second article sparked a storm of protest--Mr Tobback, BSP deputy for Louvain, threatened not to vote for the defense budget unless steps were taken against General Close. It was probably that threat and possibly others which led to the government decision to penalize the general. In any case, the decision has come at a time when relations between some members of Mr Martens' team and some military authorities are strained to say the least. In our Thursday edition we mentioned Budget Minister Spitaels' refusal to give the armed forces additonal money to buy fuel. The step to bring Major-General Close into line is probably to be seen as an example aimed at other "rebel" general officers.

According to the former chairman of the Committee for National Defense Questions, the incident which led to his firing is merely a pretext. Indeed, in face of the reactions sparked by the article published in NATO's 15 NATIONS, General Close was once more asked to give the defense minister an explanation: In this letter, published by Mr Desmarets' office, the general explains that he never "intended to attack Mr Van Miert's honor or cast suspicion on his good faith."

"I used my personal right to freedom of speech," General Close said. "There is no special immunity which protects party chairmen and prevents a citizen from reacting to their statements. My reaction should not be interpreted as that of the committee chairman but as that of General Close who has the right to voice his opinions like any other citizen."

According to General Close the effect is totally out of proportion to the cause: "I wrote what I wrote and nobody will persuade me to take back anything I said because I am much too aware of the weak points in our security. The threats now facing us make it vital for the population to become aware of the danger. Contrary to everything which Mr Spitaels might think, the generals who have complained are right: It is their duty to point out the danger and warn the government of the gravity of the situation."

General Close thinks that the problem regarding the possibility of the armed forces running short of fuel is a coincidence: Without this problem the incident between the general and the government would have been passed over. However, General Close continued: "It is a shameful waste to ask the nation to make sacrifices which hit the taxpayer--military purchases cost billions of francs--and yet deny it the means to use its equipment."

With regard to the steps taken against him, General Close is quite calm: "I am amused by what is happening," he said. "The 'disciplinary measure' taken agairst me has probably been engineered. I do not know who has engineered it or against whom. As you know, a great deal has been said about Mr Spitaels: For me his is the government's Saint-Just [Reference to leading figure in French Revolution]. He is talking of sweeping savings in the budgets while his colleague Desmarets has recognized the armed forces' fuel problems."

When the possibility of further disciplinary measures being taken against him was mentioned, this time by the Army General Staff, General Close smiled: "Where do you expect them to send me? As military attache to Djakarta? I would like nothing better, I love traveling."

BUNDESTAG TO HEAR GOVERNMENT STATEMENT ON SOLIDARITY WITH U.S.

[Text] Bonn--The Bundestag foreign policy debate, to be held at the request of the CDU/CSU opposition, will open on Thursday with a government statement by Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt. The government decided this at short notice during the Cabinet meeting today. It was officially announced yesterday that opposition leader Helmut Kohl will be the first speaker in the parliamentary debate, which is scheduled to last 4 hours.

According to Government Spokesman Klaus Boelling, the chancellor will reaffirm in his government statement, just 1 week before his talks with U.S. President Jimmy Carter in Washington, Bonn's solidarity with the United States and its reliability as an alliance partner. The chancellor will also emphasize the government's efforts to help solve the crisis in closest consultation with the United States and other Western allies.

On the question of Bonn joining in the U.S. boycott of the Olympic games in Moscow, according to Boelling the Federal Government will probably reaffirm its view that there is still time to make a decision and Moscow should be given the opportunity to establish conditions which will enable all states to attend. The subject of the Olympics was touched upon only briefly in the Cabinet meeting, according to the government spokesman.

DEFENSE SPENDING TO INCREASE; DESTROYERS BOUND FOR INDIAN OCEAN

[Text] Bonn--The Federal Government proposes to increase its defense spending in the 1980 fiscal year by 3 percent in real terms. DPA learned from a reliable source that this was decided by the Federal Security Council at a meeting in Bonn today.

According to this source, Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt will officially announce this new increase in tomorrow's foreign affairs debate in the Bundestag. It was said that he would make that promise to President Jimmy Carter when he visits Washington next week.

The U.S. Government has repeatedly urged the Federal Republic to further increase its defense spending. So far Bonn has provided for an increase of some 1.5 percent in real terms. The further increase is to be made in a supplementary budget.

It was pointed out that the Federal Government would be fully meeting its NATO commitments in 1980. The Atlantic alliance decided 2 years ago that member countries should increase their defense budgets by 3 percent in real terms. It was emphasized in Bonn that the government had met its commitments throughout the last decade. There was reason to doubt whether other NATO partners would now follow the Federal Republic's example.

According to information available to DPA, the Federal Security Council, a Cabinet committee that meets in secret, has finally decided that the two missile destroyers Luetjens and Bayern will leave at the end of April, as planned, on a 4-week training voyage to the Indian Ocean. After the events in Afghanistan it was thought that the visit of federal naval ships to ports in Pakistan, Sri Lanka, Kenya and India might possibly tend to aggravate the situation in the crisis zones.

SPD ASKS STRAUSS TO EXPLAIN CONTACTS WITH SPANISH, PORTUGUESE RIGHTWING

[Text] Bonn--The SPD has called the CSU Chairman Franz-Josef Strauss to publicly explain the alleged contacts and money transfers to rightwing groups in Spain, Portugal and other countries. Referring to a DER SPIEGEL report to this effect, SPD Executive Spokesman Lothar Schwartz stated in Bonn today: "The citizens of our democratic state, which is based on the rule of the law, have a right to know whether politician Strauss, who is a candidate for one of the highest offices of the Federal Republic, has in fact become involved with antidemocratic reactionaries and even provided financial assistance for the achievement of their political goals."

Schwartz said that, contrary to its usual practice in responding to accusations and revelations, the CSU and its chairman has in this case remained silent and so far have refused to answer journalists' questions.

PRESS SCORES THATCHER REMARKS ON EC BUDGET CONTRIBUTION

[Press review on British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's comment on the EC budget]

[Text] NEUERUHR-ZEITUNG of Essen writes: You can only call it blackmail when Mrs Thatcher lets her partners know through a television interview that she will discontinue British payments to the European Community till if the British contribution is not curtailed in line with her ideas. The European till is not a collection bag where everybody contributes as much as he wants to, and contracts exist with regard to the contributions that are binding on all. This action by the resolute government chief makes it difficult for even benevolent Europeans to side with the British. They need it (the EC). The country isin a catastrophic situation. The economy is on the decline, while unemployment and inflation are shaking the island. In order to get out of that situation the British need the European Community. Will Margaret Thatcher really throw a sinking ship's lifeboats overboard?

The daily DIE WELT comments on the same issue: It could be the beginning of the end for the European Community, said Margaret Thatcher, if her government were to refuse to pay its contribution to the European Community. But the threat was not meant that seriously because the lady, whose shell is probably the most iron thing about her, admitted that in doing this London would be violating a valid right, which she did not want to do. She did not admit, however, that some people on the continent would rather like it if she were to follow up on her strong words--uttered for the sake of domestic British consumption--with action. The suggestion has been heard from Brussels that association ought to be offered to London. Mrs Thatcher will not risk that detachment from Europe despite her irritation over the annual DM4 billion she must pay to the European Community till.

KOELNER STADTANZEIGER notes: The threat of the British prime minister to withhold some of the British contributions to the budget of the European Community hardly seems fit to make Carrington's talks with Schmidt and Genscher more fruitful with regard to alleviation for London. Mrs Thatcher's bold attack can also not be considered a contribution to solidarity in the Western camp in view of the Afghanistan crisis. Mrs Thatcher's action, however, must not be criticized primarily as being an affront against the allies. The prime minister may be concerned most of all about showing a firm stance prior to a no-confidence vote in the House of Commons.

COMMENTATOR LAUDS FRG APPROACH TO AFGHANISTAN CRISIS

DW260957 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 26 Feb 80 p 3 DW

[Dirk Cornelsen editorial]

[Text] One can discard Brezhnev's speech on Afghanistan as clumsy propaganda and one will find arguments for doing so. But one can also see a signal in it with which the Kremlin wanted to announce its preparedness for talks. The Federal Government was right in deciding for the second, the more likely interpretation of Brezhnev's words.

One can almost hear the sigh of relief in the initial statements of the federal chancellor and the foreign minister. Helmut Schmidt considers his careful course as confirmed, a course he just described for the first time in public with the words that in critical situations one must give time to the other side--meaning Moscow. In other words, the West ought to give the Soviets time to analyze their own error and to look for a way out of the bind they have created for themselves. Schmidt's coalition partner, Genscher--despite all justified skepticism--sees a glimmer of hope.

Bonn is urging that the two quarreling giants eventually talk to each other again. The disruption in communications between Washington and Moscow has been rightly considered by the federal chancellor and his men as the greatest danger to world peace. Schmidt has purposefully said that a thinking process has now obviously been set forth "also" in Moscow. He seems to be optimistic that this process has been underway for a long time in Washington.

Schmidt is not the only one who sees the absence of cool analysis and rational action in the overly hasty reactions of the U.S. President following the invasion of Afghanistan. But--in addition, the hawks in Moscow have not merely violated international law--dictator Amin whom they overthrew can hardly have asked for their fraternal help--but they miscalculated. The Russians did not expect such a great rejection front in the United Nations, nor did they reckon with such brave, dogged resistance by the Islamic rebels.

To avoid misunderstandings: By their brutal assault the Soviets have played with the fire that might set the world ablaze, intentionally or unintentionally. Yet Washington's power play has not contributed toward reducing the danger of a world conflagration either. In a remarkable analysis the former U.S. ambassador to Moscow, George Kennan, certifies to his government "an alarming lack of equiponderation in the analysis of the problem as well as in the choice of countermeasures."

The Federal Government, in contrast, has behaved in a level-headed way in this precarious situation. It would be unpleasant and irresponsible to fan tension even more. Neither is blind solidarity with Washington necessary in all decisions. Displeasure in Bonn and Paris, but also "imbalanced reactions would not have occurred had Carter consulted with the allies and the governments affected in the Gulf region prior to his Olympic threat and the promulgation of his "doctrine".

It goes without saying that Brezhnev's words must now be followed by deeds. The most important step would be the resumption of dialog between Washington and Moscow. The main task of the West Europeans, and thus also of Bonn, in this conflict of the world powers can probably be solely to [help] repair the communications line between Moscow and Washington and to fathom how seriously Brezhnev means his words.

In its careful course the Federal Government should not let itself be irritated by pin-pricks from the conservative side.

CDU CHAIRMAN KOHL SCORES SCHMIDT, CALLS FOR SOLIDARITY

DW251425 Baden Baden Suedwestfunk Network in German 1145 GMT 24 Feb 80 DW

[Text] [Question] What opportunities do you have as the leader of the opposition in the Bundestag to make the chancellor tell parliament what consequences the Russian assault on Afghanistan will have for German politics and how one ought to handle them?

[Answer] I am in favor of all politically responsible persons, whether in the government or the opposition, reacting in such a situation in a calm, wise, considered manner but also with determination. I regret that since the decisive statements, announcements and actions of the American President many European politicians are dodging the issue. European solidarity with the United States--in order to stress a common voice of freedom--has not been demonstrated in these weeks. That pertains particularly to Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt. In short, what European policy has offered in these first weeks of the new year has been shameful.

In some sessions during the coming weeks, we will press to have the government eventually say a word about the situation to the German body politic. Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt keeps quiet because he cannot muster the inner determination to say the right thing at the right time. In the present situation he does not dare do the right thing for us. The right thing to do for us would be--together with our Western friends, especially the Americans--to tell the Soviets clearly, in line with our decision: You must withdraw from Afghanistan as quickly as possible.

[Question] In his speech yesterday Brezhnev did not indicate anything that would make one believe that the Russians will withdraw very soon. How do you assess Brezhnev's recent statement?

[Answer] This statement indicates a considerable amount of cynicism. It was the Soviet Union that attacked helpless Afghanistan with combat divisions. So it is not a matter of others giving guarantees. But I am in favor of viewing these suggestions within the framework of considerations of the European Community.

[Question] But that certainly was not the signal which Helmut Schmidt was awaiting so eagerly from Moscow.

[Answer] I cannot see any signal.

[Question] The outlines of government policy with regard to the Olympic matters are particularly unclear. What is the opposition's stance toward boycotting the Olympics once President Carter's ultimatum has expired?

[Answer] Our position has not changed on any point. I see no reason to change it, unfortunately. When the Soviet Union attacks a neighboring country, we cannot pretend that it will be possible to open the Olympics of peace during the summer in Moscow in honor of sports. If the free world and particularly the Germans remain quiet here--especially the Germans with the special historical experience gained in this century--as quiet as Chancellor Helmut Schmidt remains, we will fail with regard to history.

[Question] On Ash Wednesday Franz Josef Strauss again repeated the CDU/CSU offer to cooperate with the government in mastering the world political crisis. Is that actually a realistic perspective in an election year?

[Answer] I believe that the question of whether we have an election year now or not should not keep us from viewing the world soberly and from making the right decisions. If we must take over more burdens due to some sensible division of labor between the United States and the European states--including the FRG--with regard to humanitarian tasks, infrastructure for Pakistan, help for Turkey and Egypt, strengthening the Bundeswehr--tasks that are urgently necessary--all this will cost money and sacrifices. As a politician one must also have the courage to say in an election year: Look, fellows, we must give some thought to it together in order to see what we can afford. Naturally, together means for me that all factions, the government and the opposition must be prepared to make these sacrifices.

[Question] Do you think that the people will understand that? Is it not true that the people are already almost ignoring the dual Afghan-Iranian crisis?

[Answer] I find that a great number of our fellow citizens are very much concerned about the future. They correctly point out that all improvements of the Federal Republic domestic political structure will be an objective without lasting value if one does not succeed in guaranteeing peace, with freedom and security.

[Question] Behind the nagging of the chancellor with regard to the U.S. administration, there might be the intention of recommending mediation between Washington and Moscow. Could we be aiming for something like that?

[Answer] A glance at German history shows us that twice in this century we have found ourselves in bad situations. The CDU/CSU will not take part in a policy that would bring our people again into such an unprotected political situation in the world and into such danger. We, the Federal Republic of Germany, are a part of the free world. We are a part of the European Community, a part of the NATO alliance. In view of political developments in the world, only the Americans can guarantee that the peace we want for the Federal Republic will be preserved. For me it means clearly that we need close political ties with the United States. We also want to have traditionally close and friendly ties with France. But the sequence in the significance of this partnership is obvious. It begins with the United States.

[Question] Next to foreign politics, what will be the central domestic political issue in the forthcoming election campaign?

[Answer] There will be three significant issues: Clear recognition of the strength of social market economy. We want to make a new and important beginning in matters of family policy. A third and very important sphere is safeguarding the energy basis of the FRG which means clearly saying "yes" to the necessity of nuclear energy.

GISCARD D'ESTAING INTERVIEWED ON INTERNATIONAL SITUATION

[Interview granted by French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing in the Paris radio program "1 Hour With the President"--and simultaneously on French television--to Paris radio reporter Christine Ockrent and French television reporter Patrice Duhamel at the Elysee Palace--live]

[Text] [Duhamel] Good evening, Mr President. Mr President, the replies you are going to give tonight and also the explanations on international problems are, I believe, much awaited. First, because since your last television appearance on 31 December many things have happened in the world--in Afghanistan, of course, as everybody knows. But then following on from Afghanistan there has been, in particular, the tension between Washington and Moscow, a tension which is a threat to world peace.

Your replies are much awaited, too, because, in the middle of this storm, this turbulence, France is striving to follow its own original line which, it appears, has not always been well understood in France and abroad. It is for these reasons that we shall question you on international policy.

[Giscard] I want to say to whom I am going to aim the following explanations. I do not intend them for the experts in diplomatic affairs who are following events daily, but to the French men and women who have been working all day, who returned home tonight and who have the wish to understand better the international situation and France's international actions. It is to them that my explanations will be aimed.

[Ockrent] Quite so, Mr President. The French are worried, and for once it is the international situation which worries them. However, France is not directly involved in any of the conflicts which are troubling the world. Is this anxiety of the French people due to dramatization--to which your new year wishes somehow contributed--or is it legitimate?

[Answer] In order to answer your question I shall explain what France's international action consists of. The answer to the question itself, I would say, will be heard throughout this particular program by the television listeners.

When one speaks about France's international action one cannot imagine its objective as being to react to events or to situate ourselves in relation to other powers. France's international action is aimed at achieving objectives which are our own objectives, the objectives of France, and taking into consideration the concept we have regarding our country, of what it is and what it could become. I believe this point to be important so I repeat it: One must not judge France's international action as a mere reaction to events. Therefore, we must remember that it pursues certain objectives. In that respect, the position of the public man, of the government man, is different from that of the commentator.

You have to react to events every day. I, myself, must lead a political action. At the beginning of this present program I want to recall the objectives of France's international action:

First, of course, it is to defend the interests of France and in particular its security. This is obvious, but one must always be aware of it.

Then, it is to try to maintain peace, first of all because France is a peace-loving country which has no territorial claims toward any of its neighbors and which has no imperialistic desires anywhere in the world. It is a country which suffered in its land the ravages of the last world conflicts and which witnessed the birth of these world conflicts and knows before the confrontation proper that there is a certain resignation to the inevitable confrontation. That is why the maintenance of peace always implies action.

The third objective of our policy is to give Europe, that is to the group of European countries, our partners, an influence in world affairs, an influence which Europe had till the last war, and which it lost and which it must find again.

Finally, our fourth objective is to contribute to the organization of the world taking into account the latest realities and repairing injustice. The new realities are the emergence of new powers in the world, the importance of nonalined countries in world politics, the remedying of injustice and the attempt to put right the excessive inequality in the distribution of riches and levels of living standards.

These are the four objectives of French policy which we shall discuss in analyzing the international situation.

[Duhamel] Mr President, in connection with Afghanistan, as well as with Iran incidentally, the question of relations with the United States--the problem of France's place in the Atlantic alliance--is again posed. In the final analysis, isn't it difficult in a time of tension, such as the one we are now living in, to reconcile the fact of belonging to NATO and a will to be independent, and hasn't criticism of the vagueness of the French position stressed these difficulties?

[Answer] No, I do not think so. But here, too, I think there is something that should be clarified, something very clear to me and which I hope will be very clear to the French citizens who are listening to us: France belongs to an alliance. This is not new. It has been a part of this alliance since 1948--that is, successively under the Fourth Republic and under the Fifth Republic. The alliance results from the North Atlantic Treaty and no one has ever called into question participation in this treaty.

Conversely, I think that people seem to have forgotten the subject of this treaty, and for this reason I brought its text here, and I am going to read out its central article--article 5 of the North Atlantic Treaty. The article says that the parties, that is the states which are signatories, agree that an armed attack against one or several of them occurring in Europe or in North America will be considered as an attack directed at all the parties and, consequently, they agree that should such an attack happen, each of them will support the one that is attacked by quickly taking all the actions deemed necessary, including the use of armed forces. This is what France committed itself to in 1948: an alliance, that is, a treaty which defines what France's behavior will be in the event of an armed attack against one or other of the countries of Europe or North America.

Well, today, France will observe this commitment. So, on the one hand, there is an alliance which is put into practice in the case I have mentioned. On the other hand, there is France's independent policy which corresponds to our country's nature and to the will of our people, and it is linked with all the traditions of our history.

You seem to think that there is a contradiction between the fact of belonging to an alliance and following an independent policy, but I shall tell you that this is the whole of France's history. France has belonged to innumerable alliances: to the Italian alliance of old times, the Spanish alliance, the Austrian alliance, the Russian alliance, the Polish alliance and the cordial alliance, that is the Entente cordiale with Great Britain. During this long period of our history, France has always followed an independent policy. Thus the fact of having an independent policy while having subscribed to the provisions of an alliance is France's normal situation. This is not a new situation or an original one. This is our normal situation.

I would add that we have an alliance and that we are following an independent policy, but we also have feelings of solidarity because France is not an anonymous country; it is not a country that has no policy or which is not situated just anywhere. France is, first of all, a Western democracy and France therefore has feelings of solidarity with democratic regimes, the regimes of freedom in the world and in particular, of course, the Western democracies in America and Europe and also the democracies of freedom wherever they exist in Latin America, in Africa or Asia.

We have a second solidarity: a geographical solidarity with the countries of Europe, so we have a geographical solidarity with our partners. And we have a third solidarity, which is historical and cultural. France has ties with a certain number of countries in the world, either countries that speak its language or countries that belong as it does to the Latin tradition, or countries with which we had links in the past. We intend to feel and demonstrate this solidarity, in particular toward the countries of Africa to which we intend to lend our contribution for their development and for their stability.

So you see, the situation of France's international action is that of a country which has an alliance, which conducts an independent policy, and which has feelings of solidarity. But then some people will say: All this is too much; all this is hazy. Well, these people do not understand what the requirements of an independent policy are because, in fact, the simplest thing is alinement. If France alined itself with the policy of this or that country, our policy would be simple. It would be simple, but France would cease to exist because it would become from the external point of view the province of a superpower. However, this is not what our history teaches us; this is not what our people want. They want us at one and the same time to be faithful to our alliance--and we are--and to conduct an independent French policy while respecting our solidarities.

[Ockrent] But are not Afghanistan and Iran two cases, even if they are outside the geographical context which you just mentioned, where solidarity within the Atlantic alliance could have been more immediate on the part of France? After all, when General de Gaulle declared himself on the side of the United States during the Cuban missile crisis, Cuba was no longer in the territory described by the North Atlantic Treaty.

[Answer] I do not want to make a comparison between situations which are separated by time and are very different. You will remember that in Cuba it was a matter of installing bases, of missiles directed against U.S. territory and in direct proximity to the United States. So that is a completely different situation from the situation you have noted in Iran and Afghanistan.

But since you have asked me about Afghanistan, I should like to explain to you what France's action has been--action which has been constant throughout and which has not varied.

It consisted firstly in saying what we thought of what had happened in Afghanistan: that is, the intervention of Soviet Armed Forces. And we said that we deemed that intervention to be unacceptable. The word unacceptable has a very precise meaning, that is to say, it is a situation which cannot be accepted, which means that we do not accept the fait accompli in Afghanistan. So our aim from the outset has been to seek the withdrawal of Soviet forces from Afghanistan.

Now have we acted to achieve this? First, by participating in the formulation of the very broad stand of the international community on this matter. We voted in the United Nations with a majority which, as you know, was bigger than foreseen in favor of the resolution calling for the forces to be withdrawn.

I was able to establish with the prime minister of the most important nonalined country, India, a joint declaration saying the same thing. We were also able to establish a joint declaration with our prime partner, that is to say with the FRG, which we signed in this room. So we defined our aim very clearly. It was to obtain the withdrawal of Soviet forces from Afghanistan.

[Duhamel] You have been reproached by some people for not doing it with the necessary force and for having done it somewhat late.

[Answer] Listen, we'll come back to that. France does not practice a stage-show policy, which means that I do not think that diplomatic action consists in multiplying (?passionate) and startling announcements.

You will recall that there are in the world today many public figures who are indeed making startling announcements and to which we--and you--do not attribute much importance. That is not what action should be judged by. That is not the image that should be given of the French head of state.

So I return to the (?first question), which is: Is the withdrawal of Soviet forces from Afghanistan a realistic solution which can be envisaged? Well, I will tell you that this is not a matter of finding a new solution to the problem. It is a matter of bringing back a situation which existed before, because Afghanistan is a country which was able to live for a long time, in particular during the whole of the last war and during the entire period of the cold war, without experiencing external intervention and without constituting a threat to neighboring states. Nobody said that Afghanistan from 1945 to the 1970's--throughout the times of international tension--was a threat to neighboring states. Its situation was considered in the region to be satisfactory by all its partners. So it is a matter of reestablishing a situation which existed before. And since it existed before, it should not be unattainable. This situation should, in my view, have three aspects. The first aspect is the withdrawal of foreign military forces from Afghanistan.

The second aspect is the right of the Afghans to decide their affairs for themselves. This is a universal right, which is particularly justified for a people which has an ancient and courageous tradition of independence, for a people which is a Muslim people and which therefore shares the wakening sensitivity in motion in the Muslim world.

The third aspect of this situati n is the fact that Afghanistan should not constitute a threat to its neighbors, and guaranteeing in particular that it cannot be the stake or the instrument of rivalry between the superpowers.

These are the three aspects which we should seek in order to reestablish the situation in Afghanistan. Well, it is obvious that it is by leaving open the means of communication with the main parties concerned, particularly with the Soviet Union, that one can measure the possibility of finding the bases for such a solution.

[Ockrent] France seems to remain the only country observing the cult of detente. Regarding Afghanistan, would it not be the moment to define that for Moscow, detente is a screen to hide Soviet expansionism?

[Answer] First, I believe that the word is causing surprise because detente describes situations where international situations are improving. But currently the international situation has become more tense, and for this reason I would talk rather about cooperation for peace, or a coordinated effort toward peace.

[Ockrent] There is no longer talk of detente?

[Answer] At present the word does not describe the situation exactly but on the other hand, must one judge detente negatively? First of all we (?must not see) detente as some represent it, namely that we should offer the opportunity for unilateral gains or unilateral advantages for the partners of detente. This is not our way of seeing it, and we have always considered, I consider, that the advantages of detente must of course be reciprocal. If we observe the results of this policy of detente, in whose origin France played an important part, we see first of all that it has been contributing for 15 years now to the maintenance of peace. As I think of the 15 years that preceded the war of 1914, the 15 years that preceded the war of 1939, I think that a policy that has been able to preserve a peaceful situation in an excessively armed world and among strong ideological confrontations is a policy that has made a positive contribution. This policy of detente has allowed a modification of relations between the European countries.

Thus, relations between France and certain European countries--I am thinking of Poland, of Romania, of Hungary, and recently, I think also of East Germany--have become transformed, have been accentuated. They have certainly modified the situation in Europe. I tell you, for the benefit of those who talk so willingly about giving up detente, that this would plunge some European countries' peoples into despair, those who are our partners in the quest for detente.

Finally, I observe that during this period, bilateral relations between the Soviet Union and France have conserved a positive character. So, here is the judgement I make of this policy of detente. What is true is that detente, and I said this you will remember in Moscow, requires confidence, or a climate of confidence. As soon as tension mounts, the nature of the policy of detente becomes more demanding, particularly in the field of security. For this reason, at present, security requirements must be measured with much more attention and vigilance than they were during the previous phase of detente.

[Duhamel] A few days ago, Mr Brezhnev spoke about the possibility of withdrawing Soviet forces if the integrity of Afghanistan is guaranteed. Do you see here a sign of an evolution, of an overture by Moscow, or do you think, on the contrary, do you fear that the Soviets may yet go further, toward Pakistan for example?

[Answer] It would be levity on my part to make such a judgement during a mere conversation. I told you that the action of France consists in exploring this avenue, that is to see whether there is indeed a Soviet desire to seek a formula leading to the withdrawal of its forces from Afghanistan. Just now I was recalling the three terms of this solution, that is, on the one hand the withdrawal of the forces, then the right of the Afghans to choose what they want to do and then the problem of the security of the neighboring countries and the manner of guaranteeing that Afghanistan should not be at stake in the rivalry between superpowers.

[Ockrent] President Tito will possibly not survive tonight. Do you think that Yugoslavia and the Balkans as a whole could again become an area of destabilization, this time of destabilization in Europe?

[Answer] No.

[Duhamel] Afghanistan: This has been discussed for 2 months now. The present program is taking place 2 months to the day after the Soviet intervention in Kabul. There were a series of ripostes and answers, the one most talked about which public opinion [words indistinct] is interested in is undoubtedly the problem of the boycott of the Olympic games. What is France's position today?

[Answer] France has not changed its position. France, from the very beginning has considered that participation in the Olympic games was to be decided by the Olympic organizations themselves. It is the Olympic organizations which will decide.

[Text] [Ockrent] Were there any divergencies with Washington regarding reaction on Afghanistan? Are there any today?

[Answer] I answer gladly. This is one of the subjects on which a lot was written and said. I was saying just now that France was leading an independent policy. If a policy is independent it is clear that it is not identical with that of its various partners. Regarding reaction to the events in Afghanistan, I will say there are no divergencies in the analysis of events. Our analysis of the conditions in which these events occurred is quite close. There are no differences as to the objective--to obtain the withdrawal of the intervention forces in Afghanistan. But there are differences about the choice of means to achieve this objective.

[Answer] Regarding the boycott of the Olympic games, I say this: France has not criticized the decisions taken by the United States to reestablish their power because I consider that world peace is all the better guaranteed if there is no weakness on the part of a superpower, especially if this particular superpower is our ally. Therefore there has been no criticism of actions to reestablish the power of the United States. The difference lies in the fact that one must seek conditions in which the Soviet Union could be led to decide to withdraw its forces. On the manner in which such conditions could be created there have indeed been different viewpoints.

[Ockrent] In case of direct confrontation between Moscow and Washington, as is the case now, and this suggests a third way which seems to be the French calling, is this a neutralistic absurdity of which the American ambassador to France spoke recently?

[Answer] The heads of state do not entertain polemics with ambassadors. However, the existence of not a third way, but of other ways, means simply that there are countries in the world which carry out an independent policy. There is not only the way of France but that of India, that of Federal Germany--which on certain issues has taken an attitude close to ours--and then there is the way of other countries whom one can hear expressing themselves in different manners. The neutralizing you are hinting at is the fact of France renouncing its alliance or denouncing its alliance. This has never been under question. On the contrary, having only one alliance France will continue to carry out an independent policy. I say to you that it is neither pressure nor intimidation which will make us change direction.

[Duhamel] Regarding Europe, 2 months ago [as heard] the French-German declaration was made here with Helmut Schmidt. There was a meeting of foreign ministers in Rome. The Nine have expressed themselves. In your view, what does Europe lack now in order to have weight in the international balance?

[Answer] I think it has started to weigh more in the international balance. I think that our objective is to wipe out the ruins which the war left in Europe. I do not speak of the actual ruins which, luckily, are almost completely cleared. But I am speaking of the political ruins which the war inflicted on Europe by wiping away in one blow a large part of its influence or of its means of activation. One must rebuild this European influence in the world. We shall reconstitute it not through machinery but through active political cooperation.

It is important to note that on important points, and in particular in the search for a solution to the Afghan crisis, we managed to reach joint arrangements. I attach great importance to the joint French-German declaration which, in my view, is a landmark in the reemergence of Europe as a new center of influence and decisions in the world. I note that despite the pessimistic prognosis put forward by some, the leaders of Federal Germany have in essence kept to the terms of the declaration.

[Ockrent] Europe is not just Paris and Bonn. So can one make a Europe without the other members of the Community and in particular without Great Britain, which more than ever seems to impede pan-European action?

[Answer] I told you earlier that the fact of rendering to Europe its influence on world problems naturally interested all our partners. And in the forefront of our partners there is our first partner: the FRG.

You hint at the present difficulties at the European level--which will be brought up during the forthcoming European Council, since a number of problems will be introduced there. The only thing I would like to tell you this evening is that it is inconceivable that a solution should be found for these problems that does not cover all these problems simultaneously. There is, as you know, the problem of fixing agricultural prices for the forthcoming period, there are some important problems involving sectors of economic life, namely the lamb problem, the fishing problem, and the demand by Britain for a modification of the agreement which it signed concerning its contribution to the EEC budget.

Well, I say that it is not possible to seek a solution to just one of these issues, but that all of them must be solved if France is to accept such a solution.

[Ockrent] Crises are multiplying in the world: They are upsetting the rules of the game which, since the Yalta meeting, have not changed much. Is this the moment for inventing new concepts, new mechanisms? Can France really make a contribution?

[Answer] Yes. France is making an active contribution. I would say that everything I have told you since the start of this program shows that France has its own voice, a national voice on the subject of its international action. This means first that it believes that it is very important to have regional organizations in this new world which is in the process of being organized--regional organizations of which Europe is a good example.

On the other hand, I think it is essential to tackle the problems at the base of the real tensions in the world. The tensions in the world are not disputes between heads of state. It is a fact that there are opposing forces. There is the fact that people do not acknowledge the right which certain new powers have to manifest themselves, or to act.

There is also the fact that there are great injustices in the current world as far as the division of wealth is concerned. That is why, in my opinion, the most important diplomatic initiative which has been taken in recent years was taken by France, and that is the North-South dialog. If you leave our country and if you meet the leaders of the Third World, there is not one of them who will not speak to you about the prospects or possibilities which were opened up by the North-South dialog.

[Duhamel] Earlier on you spoke of your trip to India and the very important problem of the nonalined movement. Does France intend, as certain people have stated, to lean toward the nonalined movement within the framework of these new rules of the international game?

[Answer] No. I think that would be quite a mistake. France belongs to an alliance--as I have reminded you--but although it belongs to an alliance, it is not alined--it cannot belong to the nonalined movement. On the other hand, it can consider the importance of this nonalined movement. I can tell you that when I had the talks with Indian Prime Minister Mrs Indira Gandhi--to which you referred--I did not in any way push her or seek to convince her to aline herself. On the contrary, I told her of the importance for the world in there being big nonalined countries, since in my opinion this is a factor of equilibrium for the world and it is a guarantee for peace.

The idea (?toward which we are pushed) and at the beginning of our conversation you asked questions which showed that certain people finally (?support) the idea of alinement in the world in two blocs according to the affinities which each side feels. [sentence as heard] It is an idea which would be very dangerous for equilibrium and peace in the world. I am convinced that a world in which there is a certain diversity of attitudes and situations is a world in which crises have a better chance of being solved. If there are only two blocs, they are led by the logic of their forces toward a confrontation, which is much more difficult to dominate.

I did not tell you earlier on--on the subject of peace--that the risks of confrontation would weigh on the whole of humanity and would bear no comparison with the previous frightening world conflicts. Thus one of the essential roles of heads of state at the present time is to know how to get over crises, that is to say to know how to find peaceful outcomes to crises. Naturally..... [Ockrent interrupts]

[Ockrent] The sangfroid of some.... [Giscard interrupts]

[Giscard] Yes. (?With) sangfroid but without renouncing--and this is the difficulty --the fundamental principles. And that is why when I spoke to you about Afghanistan I reminded you of the first two basic principles: the withdrawal of forces and the right of the Afghans to decide what they want to do.

[Ockrent] Among other things that agitate the world there are forces which are emerging, like religion and in particular Islam. Is Islam a tidal wave which has already swept away, which is going to sweep away on its course all the rules known so far in international relations?

[Answer] No, I do not think so. Islam is a religion practiced by a great number of people in vast regions of the world, and there is indeed a revival of the Islamic faith. This is an important event in our world which France sees and observes, and France considers that it is perfectly legitimate on the part of those who practice this faith.

[Duhamel] Mr President, you have just mentioned destabilization in Central Asia regarding of course Afghanistan, but there are other seats of tensions, particularly in Africa. About 1 month ago France had to intervene in Tunisia, it had to extend aid to Tunisia. During the last few months or years there have been, with different contexts and conditions, interventions in Zaire, in Central Africa, in Mauritania and in Chad. First, isn't there a danger of escalation in this intervention process, and what are the true criteria for intervention? From what moment does France decide to aid an African country?

[Answer] First, I want to rectify a point right away. France has not at all intervened in Tunisia. France has simply lent means of transport to the Tunisian Government, which had to settle a problem on its own territory, and which has needed such facilities. But there has been no military action by France in Tunisia. And my objective, which I expressed repeatedly when I went to this country, is to see the Mediterranean become a lake of peace and stability. France wishes that the ensemble of the Mediterranean countries share this objective of peace and stability in the Mediterranean.

You speak about other actions in Africa, the most striking of which was in Shaba. Well, I remind you what happened in Shaba: Elements came from outside the country and the Zairian Government appealed for international solidarity, and France in fact sent in a unit, a known unit of 800 men. It left on 19 May 1978 and returned home 16 days later. If you compare these dates to those of Afghanistan, for example, it would mean that the Soviet forces should have withdrawn from Afghanistan on 12 January. During this intervention the French forces never met with any hostility or even reserve on the part of the population or any local authorities.

In fact, France's intention regarding Africa was not at all of an imperialist character. It is absurd to make such a suggestion. If France had wished to be imperialist, it would have conserved its positions. Through the wisdom of my precedessors, France, on the contrary, led these states to independence. France's aim is to insure that the neighboring continent, which is a friendly continent, is stable and devoted to the development task in peace. For this reason, France reacts to the attempts to destabilize Africa. As you have seen, these attempts have always been inspired from outside the country.

Naturally, some of our actions have been criticized in general. You have seen this, haven't you? But I think about what the state of mind, the anxiety of the French people would be one day--you spoke about anxiety earlier on--if we had in front of us a destabilized neighboring continent, as seen in this or that region in Asia. What then would be the daily attitude of the French? They would regret the passing of the period when France was capable of contributing to the maintenance of the stability of Africa.

[Ockrent] But in this case is France playing the role of the Cubans in the West, or is it just defending specific interests which may involve oil transport routes, that is to the Persian Gulf where it might become a sort of gendarme?

[Answer] No, if France has intervened, it has not intervened on somebody else's behalf as you suggested. France intervened in order to help friendly countries fight destabilization attempts. France on its part acts in such a way as to enable these countries to recover and secure their stability themselves as soon as possible. I stress that with regard to Tunisia, for instance, there are no longer any transport means there, and there are no naval units off this country.

[Ockrent] Does France possess the means for its policies? You have often said that the defense portion of the national budget should be increased, but do we really have the means to develop at the same time nuclear forces, forces for intervention abroad and the regular army?

[Answer] You ask a question about our defense means. First observation: Of all the Western countries--United States, FRG, Great Britain--France is the only one that has for 5 years been regularly increasing part of its military expenditure in both its budget and in its gross domestic product, in its national resources. Between 1974, that is the budget worked out before my election, and 1980, the portion of military expenditures for the defense of France in the gross domestic product rose from 3.37 percent to 3.80 percent this year. All the military know this well. Therefore, of all the Western countries, France is the one that has imposed upon itself the most regular, the most consistent defense effort.

This is shown by the volume of our defense means. In 1974 the French deterrent force was capable of using a nuclear power of 20 megatons. I apologise for these technical figures. Twenty megatons represents about 1,000 times the Hiroshima bomb. This is not pleasant either for the mind or the heart but it gives one an idea about the importance of our means. In 1974 it was 20 megatons and in 1980 it is 80. It is at the level of 75 megatons, and in 1985 we will reach 90 megatons. In other words, presently we are the third nuclear power in the world, and it is recognized as such.

Now, what are the problems of the future of our defence? First, to insure that our deterrent force remains deterrent, and one should at every moment, both in connection with the technical aspect and volume, insure that our deterrent force remains deterrent because it is the ultimate security of France. At the same time, we shall have to make decisions. Decisions concerning our defense have been made until 1990. I will not go into details, but we shall then have to prepare the security of France beyond 1990. This is a job to be done by technicians, by the General Staff, but the government and I will have to examine the situation next summer. Naturally I and the government will report to you.

Finally, the third aspect. Alongside these nuclear forces France needs diversified forces so as to be able to face various world situations. You have just mentioned Afghanistan and Africa. You could have mentioned the Horn of Africa and the fighting between Ethiopia and Somalia. Nowhere (?in these places) has there been the use or threat of using nuclear weapons. And in Asia, despite the fact that the USSR is a great nuclear power, no one mentioned the use of nuclear weapons. There are varying situations in the world, and if France wants to guarantee the various aspects of its security, the approaches to its territory, the protection of its overseas departments and territories, or the approaches to its essential supplies, then it should have diversified forces.

[Duhamel] If I have understood well there is no question, for example, of getting closer to an all-nuclear policy at the military level? Is this an idea currently being discussed?

[Answer] That is what it is called but one does not know if it is really being proposed. But an all-nuclear policy would mean that France would prohibit itself from handling certain security problems if these security problems could not be covered by the nuclear arrangements. (?I would point out to you) that firstly, this is the case, for example, for all the problems of our supplies and for conflicts in which nuclear armaments are not usable.

[Duhamel] Mr President, this international situation about which we have been speaking for roughly 40 minutes occupies the main part of the political debate today. As everyone has noted, I think that everyone also notes that, with the exception of the Communist Party of course, there is what is a bit barbarically called a consensus in the political world. I would like to know if, in your opinion, this consensus, this agreement, is focussed simply on the analysis, that is, on the criticism of the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan, or also on the solutions and on France's external and worldwide action.

[Answer] I think that a consensus does in fact exist, and you said with the exception of the Communist Party. I will be more precise than you and say with the exception perhaps of the Communist leaders, since doubtless among those who vote for the Communist Party a certain number share what we have just described. The consensus is basically a consensus on France's independent policy and action, action for peace, action in solidarity with our partners, but with proper objectives. And I am glad that this consensus exists.

I am not glad for my own sake, I do not intend to take any personal advantage from it, but it strengthens France's possibility of action and her authority. But naturally there are critics of certain details, that goes without saying. But as for the analysis and the essential direction, I consider that at the present time a very large proportion of French public opinion and its leaders approve the action which is being taken.

[Duhamel] You talked just now of the attitude of the Communist leaders. Has their attitude surprised or shocked you over the last few months?

[Answer] I do not want to comment on the attitude of the leaders of any political party.

[Ockrent] But the isolation of the Communist Party, this electoral tactic of isolation, could you not turn out to be the main beneficiary of it?

[Answer] I do not concern myself with this question. I conduct France's international affairs. Leaders of political parties conduct their parties' affairs.

[Ockrent] Added to international tensions are of course the French people's preoccupations with economic and social problems. How far can one say, from the point of view of purchasing power or unemployment, to name just two problems, that international factors really play a decisive role?

[Answer] At present in French people's preoccupations, economic and social preoccupations link up with international preoccupations, and today it was intended only to deal with aspects of the international situation and actions, and that is why we shall only deal with these problems. I intend to deal with the others during my next talk. There is another circumstance which makes it impossible for me to deal with them today, and that is that there is a debate on a motion of censure in parliament which covers precisely these matters, and so it is not suitable for the president of the republic to debate these problems at a time when the parliament itself is in the process of discussing them.

But I will say that indeed these events have very serious consequences on the economic and social level, consequences for two reasons. The first reason is obviously the increase in the price of oil, with all that entails, since you know that now our oil bill this year will represent almost as much, not entirely but almost as much, as the total income tax paid by the French people. That is as if they were paying two taxes on their income, one budget which we use for our expenditure, and then another, the same, since it is used externally, abroad. So this increase obviously has considerable consequences.

The second consequence is that international concern is always a factor of additional difficulty, since concern slows down investment, makes economic decisions more uncertain, and thus affects the level of investment and the level of unemployment. That is why these consequences are serious, and why they must be taken seriously. The latest developments are quite recent. These are the latest rise in oil prices, international tension since the end of December, and naturally the government will have to act to insure that economic policy takes into account these new developments. That is why economic and social policy in 1980 should be particularly active.

[Duhamel] Mr President, I think that today in every country and in the foreign policy of every power there is a moral dimension, and the Sakharov case in particular has recently brought up in a fairly sad and also spectacular way the problem of human rights. There are also the words and actions of France on human rights. How is it acting?

[Answer] I think.... I do not want to seem to give a eulogy on what we are doing, I prefer to tell you what we are doing, and you can judge. France, of all the countries in the world, is probably the one which has done the most for human rights. Some examples: We have at present in France 150,000 political refugees who are the daily witnesses of our action in favor of human rights. As far as Latin American countries are concerned, France has taken 6,400 political refugees from Latin America. That is, we are the leading country in Europe for taking in political refugees from Latin America. If you take Southeast Asia, we have taken 75,400 refugees from Indochina, 75,400 at present--that is to say three times as many as all the European countries together.

If you now take individual cases, we have not stopped trying to insure that people who are in prison or being mistreated can leave their country and be received in ours. These are some examples: When I was elected president of the republic, there were numerous Frenchmen who were imprisoned in Guinea. Thanks to the reestablishment of our relations with President Sekou Toure, there are no more French political prisoners in Guinea. I was able to be present a few days ago at the dissolution of the association of relatives of those interned in the country. Another example: In a few days, thanks also to persistent action, the last Frenchmen detained in Uruguay will be returning to our country. I received an assurance about this a few days ago. As far as other countries are concerned we have intervened on every occasion, and on every occasion we have obtained a certain number of results.

[Ockrent] In Argentina as well?

[Answer] In Argentina also. But if one day the list is drawn up of humans right cases which have been negotiated and solved by leaders of countries, I think I can say without fear of contradiction that it will turn out that it was action by France which will have achieved the biggest number of results concerning action for human rights.

[Ockrent] You have explained to us in broad terms France's foreign policy, and of course there are many many more things to say. But after 6 years of personal conduct of French foreign affairs do you think that French foreign policy is affecting the course of things? What are its defects and its trumps?

[Answer] When you said personal action, you meant personal experience, because France's international action is a collective work. The president of the republic has, of course, his responsibility, and the government has its own, and then all those who live abroad or who have connections abroad also have their own contribution.

I think it should be known, French people should know that France has trumps, because in their difficulties in sometimes understanding France's international action. There are two fundamental difficulties. The first which we talked about at the beginning is that of not perceiving the fact that France is conducting an independent foreign policy, and that it is, of course, less easy to conduct an independent foreign policy, it is less simple. It is less black and white than if one conducts a policy of alinement. And they should be reminded that what they want is precisely for France to conduct an independent policy.

The second difficulty is that they will ask whether France basically has the means in today's world. That's what you just said, isn't it, to influence events? Well, I think France has the means. I tell you that after several years of observation and direct experience France has the means, for a number of reasons which I will list. Firstly, because France has a tradition of influence in the world. This is due to the heads of state who have followed one another. It is due to the attitude of the French people who have launched very strong ideas into the world, whose echo still reverberates, and to the fact that we still have historical attributes of influence.

For example, we are a permanent member of the Security Council. We were presiding, you know, during the last debates. We are among the four powers which are watching over the fate of Berlin, where I went, incidentally, in October. We are a nuclear power, in civil and military terms the third in the world it can be said.

We are an economic power, not at a level which I deem desirable--we still have, to be sure, to make progress in this area--but we are the third exporter in the world, and therefore an economic power capable of making a contribution to the solution of economic and social problems. Last, we have a major influence in Europe. So all this gives much means of influence. And that is why, I think, that France has the capacity to affect events.

To return to my remark at the beginning, it has the ability to act, it must have the will to act, and it must act itself. Because there is no point in having the means but not the will to act, or if one does act simply to rally to or to support the action of others. That is why there is a cohesion in all this. That is why France is able to conduct international action; it must have the will to do it, and it must conduct it itself, that is pursuing its concepts and pursuing its interests, in order to make its own contribution to peace and security in the world.

[Duhamel] Thank you for answering our questions.

MITTERRAND ON FOREIGN POLICY, PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION ISSUES

LD270851 Paris FRANCE-SOIR in French 22 Feb 80 pp 2-4 LD

[Claude Vincent interview with Socialist Party First Secretary Francois Mitterrand: "The PCF Cannot Take the Risk of Allowing the Socialist Candidate To Be Defeated in 1981"--date, place not specified]

[Excerpt] Claude Vincent: First Secretary, many French people feel that the threat of war has grown more serious recently. I would like to ask you whether you feel the same way and what you think of France's attitude in this crisis.

Francois Mitterrand: I do not believe that there will be a war between the superpowers, which are capable of destroying each other. At least not yet. However, if it lasts, the present tension could take the form of localized wars which, of course, will not be localized for those affected by them. This is possible at any time. However, a generalized nuclear war in which France would be involved does not strike me as probable at the moment. I think that the margin which exists between war and the present crisis is still big enough to leave room for a number of intermediate states which are neither peace nor war. These states are dangerous because, unless care is taken, they could get out of control and spark off a catastrophe. Remember Sarajevo. That is why our role is to seek ways to peace wherever we can, without however accepting shameful compromises which merely bring about war more quickly with loss of dignity. It is not easy!

No Pershing or SS-20 Missiles

What do I think of the French Government's position? Our policy is implemented within narrow limits. France must not act as or give the appearance of being the world's gendarme. No country is capable of being the world's gendarme aside from the USSR and the United States, and they can only assume this role if they reach agreement and reconcile their interests. We have still not yet reached that point. However, I must stress that neither side is prepared to fight. They advance and then withdraw. There is no decisive battle. [paragraph continues]

Neither side is capable of checkmating the other in this game of chess. They merely take the castle or bishop. Each side meanwhile takes what advantages it can. It is reasonable that France should be able to keep its distance from this game, in which it is not involved. However, we must not forget that we have the advantage of law and a particular concept of civilization. Upholding the law counts when you appeal to the universal conscience--the consciences of billions of human beings who would be victims of a confrontation between the powers. From this viewpoint the president of the republic can be criticized for being slow in reacting to the Kabul coup, caught as he was in the many conflicting areas of prudence in his foreign and domestic policies.

France has unfortunately been absent from the right camp for 2 weeks making do simply with being a country skilled in maneuvering through the difficult terrain. Nothing more than that.

Claude Vincent: Would you have liked a quicker reaction?

Francois Mitterrand: As I said at the time, I found the president's first excessively alarmist speech and the foreign minister's excessively opportunist speech both quite inappropriate. What a lot of statements all rolled into one! A sigh for Carter, another for Brezhnev and a third for Schmidt. What are we to think of the Schmidt-Giscard communique? I said that French policy is "cautious."

Claude Vincent: First Secretary, you referred to the invasion of Afghanistan and also to the deployment of Pershing missiles which, as I understand it, you support to some extent.

Francois Mitterrand: The deployment of the Pershing missiles is the result of a situation which has been accentuated by the buildup of Soviet so-called conventional forces in Europe and the recent deployment of the SS-20 missiles. Our country is not a NATO member. We were not consulted. There was no reason for consulting us. However, if we had been a NATO member, what would we have done?

My viewpoint is as follows: By some convention of terminology the SS-20's are called tactical missiles and the Pershings are called strategic. This is experts' terminology irresponsibly adopted by a large number of French politicians. In simple terms a strategic missile is one which covers 5,000-6,000 km and can cross the Atlantic, while a tactical missile is one which only covers 1,500-2,000 km. That is an approximate definition. We French are within the radius of action of all these missiles, whether they are tactical or strategic. We are told that the American Pershing strategic missiles can hit Moscow in 6 minutes now that they are stationed in Germany, while the Russian strategic missiles will still take 30 minutes to blow up New York. That may be: In this respect I understand the Soviet anxiety, but first I urge the French people to be worried, since Paris is within range of both missiles. What I want is neither Pershings nor SS-20's.

Neutralism for Domestic Consumption

That is why I, together with my friends, decided that we should not involve the Socialist Party [PS] in the protest organized by the PCF against the Pershing missiles alone. It is quite a different matter to say that I approve of these missiles. I deplore the fact that I cannot protest. We must revive the campaigns for the dissolution of the two blocs, for disarmament, for nuclear nonproliferation, for collective security in Europe, in short, we must place the problem in the correct context.

Claude Vincent: Some people, especially the Communists, accuse the government of alining with U.S. positions, and on other occasions France is criticized for having a lukewarm attitude to its allies. Does your own criticism--that the government reacted rather slowly--not include this reproach that we are rather reticent allies?

Francois Mitterrand: Some people might tell me that this "cautious" policy is wise. It is a way of avoiding problems. However, the way in which this policy is now being implemented will eventually have the result of inspiring confidence in no one. The president of the republic is psychologically exploiting events over which he has no control. He is tackling peace and war in the same way as he is tackling unemployment and inflation in France. He is not really influencing them, but he is nonetheless carried along by them. He is like a dancer on an elephant's back.

Claude Vincent: Do you think that the positions adopted by France in the international sphere reflect domestic policy concerns?

Francois Mitterrand: Yes, I think so.

Claude Vincent: Can you explain that?

Francois Mitterrand: It is simple. The president of the republic thinks that he can neutralize a section of the left by adopting positions which reassure the Soviet Union and consequently the PCF leaders. He does not need to try too hard, since that happened automatically in 1974 and 1978. You might wonder why he bothers since this does not worry the Americans, who are well aware that fundamentally Valery Giscard d'Estaing's capers keep within the circle agreed by the Atlantic allies. I said on television that if you needed a certificate of approval from Washington or Moscow to be president I would certainly not be president. If it meant anything, you could define Giscard d'Estaing's foreign policy as a neutralist policy combined with the nuclear bomb, but it means nothing. Giscard's real foreign policy is Atlanticist. Neutralism is for domestic consumption.

Claude Vincent: Is the PS leader not tempted by a little nonalinement?

Francois Mitterrand: Nonalinement is something different. A real North-South policy, a real policy for combatting hunger, a real international monetary policy depend on a certain view of nonalinement. Ability is not enough.

France's Independence

Claude Vincent: It might be regarded as a quality in diplomacy?

Francois Mitterrand: The head of state is an able man and has other qualities: Why should I deny it?

Claude Vincent: First Secretary, many statements have been made on the subject of defense, including Mr Chirac's proposal that we should increase our nuclear deterrent force by considerably increasing the number of submarines. What do you think of that?

Francois Mitterrand: France's independence does not simply depend on the number of nuclear submarines it has but also on logistics, telecommunications, supplies and possession of raw materials. We are far from being adequate in these spheres. However, French independence also depends on autonomous industry, leading research and advanced technology. It is pointless to talk of national independence while agreeing to the kind of international division of labor and production imposed on France by big capital, but unfortunately that is what the president of the republic is doing.

Claude Vincent: Our deterrent can work.

Francois Mitterrand: Yes, provided that it follows the scientific and industrial progress made by the main countries possessing nuclear weapons. If we allow ourselves to fall behind we will no longer have any deterrent power! Once you are part of this type of balance of forces, it is impossible to stop halfway. The problem is therefore not just a military one.

Claude Vincent: Do you think that the European political reality could become so strong as to have a common defense system?

Francois Mitterrand: With Europe as it is, devoid of any political reality, there is no point in talking about a joint army. Indeed, it is dangerous to do so. It is dangerous, above all, for our security. An army which has nuclear weapons cannot be a coalition army. Who would it obey? The real political power, which is not in Europe.

No Compromise

Claude Vincent: First Secretary, let us turn to domestic policy. There has recently been a fundamental modification, in that major alliances have been broken and there are now though to be four dominant political groups. It is clear that none of them can hope to govern alone. You are no longer a partner in a union comprising two major parties but the leader of a party which is going it alone.

Francois Mitterrand: We were on our own in 1971. We were alone, facing everybody, in fighting to revive the socialism in which we believe. That is natural. The PS has always taken its own decisions, within the framework of agreements we have signed, of course. It is our determination, our decisions and the strategy they form which have made us what we now are: the party with the biggest following and the most public support.

Claude Vincent: Nonetheless, you once had a strong alliance and could count almost automatically on PCF support. This is no longer the case.

Francois Mitterrand: Let us look at the past. Your statement gives the impression that the four families to which you refer have just been discovered. We have been saying this for more than 20 years. I refer you to articles and books which I have written and which will show you that I have long been arguing on the basis of the existence of four strong tendencies: a hard-line, really reactionary, conservative group; a more liberal conservative group; the Socialist group; and the Communist group. In addition to all that there is the existence of the class struggle. The two conservative groups are on one side, the Communists and we on the other. In addition, constitutional and electoral procedures have helped to lock the four groups in two camps--first, through the election of the president by universal suffrage, then through the majority vote. Added to social antagonism, these two combined causes have led the political groups to be rigidly organized. Furthermore, on essential issues there can be no compromise between right and left.

Now, with 15 months to go before the presidential election, we are in a transitional phase. Each of these political groups is asserting its rights to existence and victory. Each will have its candidate. However, like it or not there will be a regrouping in the second ballot.

Claude Vincent: This brings us to a constant situation in French politics.

Francois Mitterrand: But the institutions remain the same. There is a contradiction between the need felt by political groups to develop alone and the constraints they must accept if they are to win. The majority system requires coalitions; the presidential election requires that candidates stand down. What will happen? This is the dominant problem for the coming months. In any case, the PS will remain faithful to its vocation, which is first to win over as many French people as possible, starting by rallying the popular forces, and second not to compromise on the changes it proposes.

Constitutional Reforms

Claude Vincent: Do you find the institutions unsuitable to French political reality?

Francois Mitterrand: I believe that proportional representation would correspond to the current needs more closely, and that the Constitution should be revised.

Claude Vincent: Would you vote for proportional representation if it was proposed?

Francois Mitterrand: We proposed it, so we would vote for it. Consider the Fourth Republic, it had both the proportional representation and a weak executive. In other words, it increased the tendency toward fragmentation or splitting up. The Fifth Republic is founded on a strong executive and the majority vote, which increases this strength. In other words, it tends increasingly toward authoritarianism, centralization and personalization. The president's excess of power must now be tempered. Proportional representation could do this, as could the reduction of the presidential term of office to 5 years--an old demand which I defended then and which has fortunately been put forward again recently. I fought a whole campaign on it a short while ago. It was part of the joint program and is in the new Socialist plan. Since the head of state has concentrated the whole execut e and more in his hands, he cannot be a judge. The people must judge in his place, and once in 7 years is not enough. The long-foreseen deviation in the present system makes it necessary to plan other constitutional reforms. A republic without a parliament is no longer a republic.

Claude Vincent: Had you been elected president of the republic, do you believe that you would have had too many powers to do what you wanted to do?

Francois Mitterrand: This problem must not be seen in terms of individuals. Yes, I repeat that the president of the republic has too much power--those given him by the law and those he has taken in addition. Parliamentary assemblies have done much in modern history. The principle reforms and great turning points in French public life have most often stemmed from their debates.

A Socialist President...

Claude Vincent: Does that still seem a topical question to you?

Francois Mitterrand: I could be; why not? I would certainly be opposed to the return of an assembly like that which governed from 1947-1958. I simply seek a better balance between the executive and the legislature and, within the executive, between the president and the government (not forgetting the judiciary, which is under the head of state's thumb, or his secular arm, the radio and television service). Parliament, for its part, is quite adequate. If it is in disarray, everything is being done to increase this. Let me give you an illustration. In the Nievre they want to shut down the Clamecy-Corbigny railroad. [paragraph continues]

Although we are organizing the struggle, the decision is as good as taken by the French National Railroad Company [SNCF], which says that only a dozen people a day go as far as the end of this line, which therefore has no further reason for existing. But we answer that trains arrive in Corbigny at impossible times, that they are antique, that they are heated badly or not at all. Traveling like that is really unpleasant. With well-heated cars, fast trains, comfortable conditions and practical times it would be quite different. The line would be profitable, the public service assured, the users treated properly and the region's economy served. This is the story of parliament's working conditions. Its morale is low, it seems to be serving no purpose, no one wants to go there, it is badly organized, its sittings are at impossible times, the government ridicules it. Are you surprised that, after this, the institution is breaking up? It is high time to act.

Claude Vincent: Mr First Secretary, I am not going to ask if you are going to be the Socialist Party candidate, but at any event there will surely be a PS candidate. Many people, in the PS and even outside, want it to be you so that the debate on this occassion will be at an appropriate level. But I would simply like to ask you a question which the Socialist candidate will have to answer: "If elected, with whom will he govern, and how?"

Francois Mitterrand: This Socialist president will not be able to govern with the present majority. He will dissolve the National Assembly elected in 1978. He will then have to await the voter's decision and submit to it, faithfully obeying the injunctions of universal suffrage. Will a rightwing majority emerge from these new elections? This would be the reverse of what the government feared in 1978. A leftwing majority? The problem would be solved. In fact, that majority will only be possible if the left coalition holds up and asserts itself. But let us not go reading tealeaves. To keep to your hypothesis, the certain thing is that this Socialist president will have been elected on Socialist policies. He will personify a great popular movement. Everything will be organized around this new reality.

To Each His Responsibilities

Claude Vincent: Let us suppose a left majority composed of two-thirds Socialists, one-third Communists. Are you not afraid that this might pose problems?

Francois Mitterrand: Each must take his own responsibilities. A Socialist president and a relative but strong Socialist parliamentary majority would create a situation that everyone would have to take into consideration. For France it would be a chance for genuine change, real progress for freedom. I am waiting to see who will turn it down.

Claude Vincent: Over many years you concluded an alliance with the PCF, supported it, made it viable and even made it prosper. Then there was that split, whose causes were much talked about....

Francois Mitterrand: Nobody thinks any longer that it was a question of nationalizing subsidiaries: This expression surprises you, does it not? Had you forgotten it? The word "subsidiary" no longer appears in Communist speech. It was a term of convenience, like the others.

Claude Vincent: The 22 September 1977 split occurred on this point.

Francois Mitterrand: Now it seems to have been national independence, and I do not know what else. The PCF leaders' alternating explanations show clearly that they caused the split.

The Union

Claude Vincent: Leaving aside the PCF retraction, what are the underlying bases of your alliance with the PCF and for the split in that alliance?

Francois Mitterrand: I have said and explained this a hundred times: The underlying basis of this alliance stems from social considerations. The PS does not accept that the majority of French citizens--be it more than two-thirds of the wage earners, workers, employees and cadres, who themselves represent 80 percent of the active population, those who work and produce, along with people on family-run farms and independent workers--the PS does not accept that those excluded from production, the young women, the unemployed of all ages, that the pensioners on small or average incomes should, because of their trade union and political divisions, be handed over to their class enemy to impose his economic system of alienation and oppression on them.

Communist Volte-face

It would be nonsensical for these dominated socioprofessional strata to surrender their interests into the hands of those who oppose and exploit them merely because their organizations are unable to reach agreement. There is only one solution to all this and it is political--a union. I did not invent the Communist Party. I am not responsible for the fact that until recently it was the main left force and that we in France were on the brink of a situation similar to that prevailing in Italy, with a big communist party and a small socialist party, with a communist party standing alone against conservative forces and with any political alternative ruled out, not to mention any other consequences.

My comrades and I inherited this situation. I told Helmut Schmidt: "Taking into account the German as compared with the French population, if you had 8 million Communist voters, well, you would have either agreed on a joint program or no Social Democrat would have ever become chancellor, and the Social Democratic Party would have never been able to implement its program." The problem we are facing is this: Should we try or not--this is a problem of belief--to transform the economic structures and social conditions now prevailing in France? We believe that we should. Now this is possible only through political action. Therefore, we entered into political negotiations with those who represented, like us, the social strata I am talking about. First of all there was the Communist Party, and we entered into discussions with it. We did this on the basis of a sensible government program which took into account the realities of French society and its capacity for transformation.

Claude Vincent: Nonetheless, there are many other considerations which militate against any cooperation between you and the PCF in the sphere of government.

Francois Mitterrand: You are aware just as I am of the reasons for the Communist volte-face in 1977. I believe that I have explained them clearly.

Claude Vincent: Very clearly.

Francois Mitterrand: Similarly, at the time of the two big contests in 1974 and 1978, when the left and the right achieved some 50 percent of the vote each, I neither concealed nor disguised my views. I said: "If the left wins, left parties will participate in the country's government." In 1974 I asked the French people for a lot of things at one and the same time: a leftwing president, a dissolution of the National Assembly elected only 1 year previously, a new majority, a radically different policy and a government in which Communists would participate--something that had not occurred since 1947. And yet all this would have been achieved if there had been a little less talk about the Comoro Islands and Djibouti and a little less interference.

Claude Vincent: How did you yourself assess the risk of having Communist ministers?

Francois Mitterrand: I was mainly concerned about the risk of the right remaining in power!

Claude Vincent: Is that all?

Francois Mitterrand: In 1947, at the beginning of my political life, I was member of a government which contained some Communists. They had been members of the government since 1944, when General de Gaulle invited them to join it.

Claude Vincent: At that time you bore a less direct responsibility for the situation.

Francois Mitterrand: True, but the situation was much more difficult then. The PCF represented 27 percent of the French people and France was still very profoundly traumatized by the events which followed the country's liberation. The PCF controlled several regions of France. At that time it would have been able to cause terrible conflicts within the state if it had wanted to. Furthermore, Stalin was in the background. And yet De Gaulle did just that, did he not?

Claude Vincent: It is difficult to compare the two situations.

Francois Mitterrand: France was weaker, more confused and more divided than it is now. Furthermore, it had just emerged from a world war.

A Government Agreement

Claude Vincent: Do you believe that similar circumstances could arise and that you could achieve power and cooperate with Communists within the government?

Francois Mitterrand: This depends on the prospects for achieving a government agreement. The Socialist Party is willing to discuss such an agreement. However, the Communist leadership's present orientations are inconsistent with such prospects. This is why the Socialists should organize and speak up for the popular movement, engage in combat and mobilize the left around themselves.

The fact that I have fought in support of a union unceasingly and unflinchingly entitles me to say that the Socialist Party will not allow its action to be paralyzed, just because the PCF leadership continues to deny to the masses a union which they desire. We will be more active than ever, wherever the struggle is waged. We will represent the left, fight and be the people's hope. Supporters of the left will abandon those who in fact work for Giscard and will join us. Our Socialist program, which is consistent with the policy determined in 1971, corresponds to their desires.

Claude Vincent: Has it never occurred to you that you could be strong enough to be able to govern the country without the Communists? Just a little further progress would be sufficient to insure that an alliance with the Communists became of secondary importance. You need 35 percent of votes to achieve a parliamentary majority.

Francois Mitterrand: The Socialist Party's position is good in the eyes of public opinion, but we have a long way to go yet. Our supporters represent 23 percent of the population, which makes us the biggest party, and our potential can probably be estimated at some 30 percent. Since we have been denied a union, we will not rule out the possibility of governing the country on our own. [paragraph continues]

However, in a democracy, in order to rule the country on your own--like Kreisky in Austria--you must have either an absolute majority or a strong relative majority. Any minority government can only be a very provisional one. Ask my friend Soares what he thinks on the subject. The broader the union, the more certain will be the success of the undertaking.

Claude Vincent: What many French people cannot understand is that despite this capacity for rallying many people, you have taken the major risk of bringing the Communists to power.

Francois Mitterrand: There you go again: You say "major risk." Those are your words.

Claude Vincent: This is what many people think and many people believe.

Francois Mitterrand: I repeat that what constitutes a major risk is a continuation of the Giscard-Barre policy. But be that as it may, a strong Socialist Party is a precondition of any political hypothesis. Perhaps the Communists signed the joint program in 1972 because they believed that they would dominate us. They shared the right's view with respect to this, but we proved wrong both the right and, probably, the Communist Party analysis by showing that a Socialist Party, reestablished among social strata which it has too often shunned in the past 25 years, represented for the French left an important factor for revival. The Socialist Party needed to gain the left's confidence. In order to achieve this it had to recover its authenticity. This has been done.

I am the leader of a party which has become the first party in France. It has stood the test of the past 2 years without suffering any great damage. Do not forget that even in the 1978 parliamentary election we achieved the best percentage of votes in this kind of election in Socialist Party history. One year later, local elections took place. In the trough of depression and having to contend with internal and external polemics, in short under difficult conditions, we gained a further 160 seats, a considerable number. In the European elections, which were said to be a semi-failure, the left nonetheless secured the majority of seats: 41 seats out of 81--22 seats for the Socialist Party and 19 seats for the PCF.

Like in a Ring

But any young Socialist with idealist and rather euphoric views who has joined a unionist party is bound to sustain a considerable shock when subjected to insults by the leaders of the allied party day after day. Any sincere Socialist is bound to feel confused. He does feel confused and must be understood. And this applies to even a greater degree to voters sympathetic to us. This means that you find yourself in a boxing ring even though what you wanted was to join a good football team. I do not feel "punch-drunk" because I am used to it all and because I never had any illusions, but it must be admitted that something can be said to excuse those who are "punch-drunk." Therefore, the Socialist Party must assert itself quite simply as a realistic party aiming at unity. Yes, first of all it must assert its individuality, as I have been asking it to do for years.

Claude Vincent: Do you believe that the Socialist candidate will be able to persuade the Communist candidate to step down in his favor in 1981?

Francois Mitterrand: I do not believe that the Communist Party leaders can ask the Communist electorate to go back on a historical undertaking which corresponds to its interests and hopes. They could not do this without running the risk of an internal crisis, which would be so grave that they will think twice before taking such a step.

PSI'S CRAXI LISTS FOREIGN POLICY PROPOSALS TO DIRECTORATE

[Excerpt] The Socialist Party [PSI] Directorate held a meeting at the Chamber of Deputies today. Giovan Battista Fenu reports:

The PSI Directorate met here at the Chamber of Deputies in the office of the Socialist parliamentarians about 90 minutes ago. So far only foreign policy has been discussed. We have learned an introductory talk by Craxi on international problems was followed by speeches by Riccardo Lombardi, chairman of the Central Committee and by Francesco De Martino.

Craxi listed the names of the PSI delegates to the European socialist parties congress to be held in Luxembourg on 3-4 March and then proposed some points for European socialist parties to follow in the field of peace. These can be summed up as follows:

1. Indignation and condemnation of the bloody repression by the USSR in Afghanistan and further pressure on the Moscow government to declare its readiness to withdraw its troops.
2. Maintain European action toward the United States preventing the policy of retaliations from escalating and thus hindering new possibilities for dialog and negotiations.
3. Maintain economic relations with East Europe with a selective policy which takes into account the economic difficulties of countries like Poland and with a trend toward developing cooperation with other East European countries.
4. Support a possible initiative by the president of the Socialist International with the aim of reopening the dialog.
5. An active policy in the Mediterranean.
6. European policy toward the Third World.
7. The development of relations with China with the expression of a multipolar concept which would guarantee a peaceful balance between the two superpowers.
8. Maintain the awareness of European public opinion to questions concerning the violation of human rights and the rights of peoples.
9. Insist on the resumption of negotiations on nuclear arms in Europe, conventional arms and coordination of the control over nuclear power for civilian use, and on regulating the arms markets.
10. Concerning the Olympic games question, no interruption of sporting activities on the inter-European plane, taking into consideration the universal character of the games, but to insist that the Soviet authorities take meaningful measures to create a suitable atmosphere.

Regarding the question of domestic policy, the evaluation of the Christian Democrat [DC] Congress was proposed by Longo to the lay and Socialist parties. This confirms the assessment of the Central Committee on the function of a government of truce. [passage indistinct] It is understood that the meeting of the PSI Directorate, which is still in progress, could give a definitive evaluation after the session of the DC National Council meeting on 5 March which is to elect a new president and a new secretary.

Secretary Craxi, shortly before the end of the Directorate session, made it clearly understood that the PSI expected the election of a new DC secretary to produce a suitable negotiating partner.

OREJA SPEAKS ON RELATIONS WITH EQUATORIAL GUINEA

LD271641 Madrid ABC in Spanish 22 Feb 80 p 11 LD

[Unattributed report: "Spain Not Seeking Exclusive Cooperation With Equatorial Guinea"]

[Text] Foreign Minister Marcelino Oreja addressed the Senate Foreign Affairs Committee yesterday on the subject of our country's cooperation with Equatorial Guinea, stating that it does not want to exclude other countries from this field. The minister was welcomed on the committee's behalf by Senate Speaker Cecilio Valverde and by the chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee, Luis Miquel Enciso Recio.

The minister began his remarks with an exposition in two basic parts, concerning the history and the political situation since the 3 August 1979 military coup which deposed dictator Francisco Masie in Equatorial Guinea and the cooperation begun by Spain with the new Equatorial Guinean regime following that date.

Oreja pointed out the complete and utter devastation which Equatorial Guinea suffered under Masie's policy of terror, which went hand in hand with a deterioration in relations with Spain, which Spain's top diplomat attributed to the deposed dictator's difficult character and the Spanish administration's failure to carry out the commitments agreed upon following the 1968 independence.

"The suspension of relations prompted in 1976 by Spain's lifting of restrictions on news from Guinea," Oreja pointed out, "did not prevent an attempt to maintain a minimal Spanish representation in that country."

He described the military coup led by the present head of state Col Obiang Nguema as "the logical outcome of a chaotic situation" and pointed out that the new regime's aims were clear from the outset, these being to begin a new historical phase, to eliminate the Masie regime, to begin national reconstruction in all fields and to base foreign policy on the principles of peaceful coexistence and the defense of human rights, the UN Charter and signed undertakings.

According to the foreign minister, these objectives are linked with those of Spanish foreign policy, especially the objective of working for a new international economic order by encouraging cooperation.

Challenge to Coordination

With regard to cooperation, Minister Oreja spoke about the Spanish Government's immediate response to the pleas for aid issued by the new Equatorial Guinea regime at its inception.

He said that at first the aid was purely of an emergency nature to help the Guinean population with absolute essentials, and that later cooperation programs were drawn up and are now being actualized.

In this connection he mentioned the various Spanish missions sent to assess the situation in the former colony and the plan to send 250 advisers in various fields at the request of the Equatorial Guinean Government itself, in addition to the 200 already there.

Oreja also discussed the aid in connection with housing, transport, the construction of cooperative stores, and the granting of various aid loans for development, and gave details of aid in various fields.

"This cooperation," he said, "has required a great effort and has presented a challenge to coordination among the Spanish ministries." He stressed the Spanish volunteer workers' great spirit of service in the face of difficulties and dangers.

He denied several times that Spain wants to corner the market in cooperation with Equatorial Guinea.

He also said that Spain's cooperation cannot be based on isolated events, but that it must be continuous and must unite all groups and the entire Spanish people.

Interest of Andean Pact [as published; no subsequent mention of Andean Group]

Once the debate with the members of the Senate committee had begun, Oreja explained that it is not Spain's intention to interfere with or to issue judgments on President Obiang's regime and that therefore he invoked the Equatorial Guinean leader's own remarks to indicate the new regime's democratizing plans. In any case, he said that President Obiang has expressed his desire to lead his country along the path of the observance of freedoms.

He also denied that he had any information enabling him to infer that China's diplomatic representation in Equatorial Guinea indicated any ties with the overthrown Masie regime and pointed out that in any case China is one of the countries which has cooperated most effectively with Equatorial Guinea.

With regard to the exiles, Oreja said that the Equatorial Guinean Government has announced its desire to repatriate them and that many of them who have settled in Spain do not seem to want to return.

Spain's top diplomat denied that Spain wants to pursue a neocolonialist policy. "Spain's policy," he said, "does not pursue a recolonization, but quite the opposite."

These remarks came in response to Socialist Senator Fernando Moran, who said that Spain is aiming to recolonize Guinea and that the massive and indiscriminate return of Spaniards to Guinea will create privileged influential economic groups and bureaucratic classes.

Situation of "Big Landowners"

The Socialist senator said that the exiles' return will help to prevent this effect and claimed that a free market system would be senseless in Equatorial Guinea because it would be the basis for some form of state capitalism.

Minister Oreja stated that Spain will defend its interests in Guinea and that a policy of good intentions does not imply naivete. He also said that the fishing agreement signed with that country is not designed to secure exclusive fishing rights in Equatorial Guinean waters.

As for President Obiang's pleas to the king during his visit last December and in answer to a question from Senator Armas, Oreja said that these pleas were not the result of pondered requests but the spontaneous expression of a call for urgent help "and therefore," he added, "it would not make sense for Spain to take charge of Equatorial Guinea's budget, as President Obiang requested."

With regard to the Spanish settlers expelled following the independence, the minister said that he knew that the owners of major agricultural estates either had returned or could return and that the only problems concerned small commercial properties, the case of which was being taken up by our embassy in that country.

"I have no information," he said, "concerning the existence of any long list of complaints."

The committee chairman Senator Enciso closed the meeting a few minutes before 1430 after over 2.5 hours in session and, together with the Senate speaker, thanked the foreign minister for his attendance.

GOVERNMENT STUDYING ALLEGED SOVIET MESSAGE ON AFGHANISTAN

LD271816 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1758 GMT 27 Feb 80 LD

[By Tom McMullan, PA diplomatic correspondent]

[Text] The Foreign Office was today trying to establish if Moscow has given the first signs of an early thaw in Britain's relations with the Soviet Union.

This followed a report thought to have its source in Moscow that a new Soviet approach is now being considered.

The Soviets, according to the report, see some merits in Lord Carrington's proposals for a neutral Afghanistan, which could offer the Soviet some security in return for the withdrawal of their troops.

The report quoted sources "close to Mr Brezhnev".

But what puzzled diplomats was the claim that informal messages have been sent to London, which said that the Soviets would not even object if UN troops were stationed in Afghanistan. The Soviet objective was to ensure that Afghanistan was not ruled by an anti-Soviet regime.

The Foreign Office formally denied tonight that any such messages, formal or informal, had been received.

Diplomats were trying to establish if the report misunderstood Soviet intentions, or if it had been floated as a "trial balloon", to see how Western powers would respond.

It was confirmed today that Lord Carrington hopes formally to hand over to the Soviet Union shortly some ideas on how to implement his proposal for a neutral Afghanistan. Consultations are taking place with allies.

But diplomats said it was too early to speculate on whether any of the present moves might save the Olympic games in Moscow.

[David Adamson report: "Kremlin 'Floats' Plan for UN Force in Kabul"]

[Excerpts] A report that Mr Brezhnev has sent an informal message indicating he is interested in Lord Carrington's idea for a neutral Afghanistan was being regarded cautiously in London last night as a "floater" by the Kremlin.

The report, which appeared in the London EVENING NEWS, is understood to have originated from Victor Louis, the newspaper's Moscow correspondent and a Soviet citizen who has close connections with the Soviet Foreign Ministry. He has a variable track record on diplomatic stories involving interpretation, but is regarded as fairly sound when it comes to hard fact.

The suggestion that there might be UN troops stationed there was not being taken too seriously in London. It is considered unlikely that the UN would be willing to intervene in such a situation, even if member states were willing to contribute forces.

The Foreign Office has not received any messages, formal or informal, from the Kremlin, although it has seen a copy of the original story from Mr Louis.

LORD CARRINGTON INTERVIEWED ON AFGHAN NEUTRALITY ISSUE

DW271230 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 2000 GMT 26 Feb 80 DW

[Text] [Question] What does nonalinement mean for Afghanistan?

[Answer] We have not yet definitely decided. In the circle of the Nine we are in the middle of talks. The precondition is that Afghanistan will receive neutrality, and that is what it wants, too. This neutrality must be guaranteed for the sake of the security of the Soviet Union, and it must allow the Soviet Union to withdraw.

[Question] But who will guarantee Afghanistan's neutrality?

[Answer] The great powers must do it and the countries from the region. After all, they all have cause to want this; because if the Soviet Union withdraws, everybody will benefit, everybody will be satisfied, the Soviet Union and the neighbors.

[Question] But is getting together with the Soviet Union not the main problem?

[Answer] I think so. We must advance our proposals as soon as possible, and we are working hard on them. But as far as the Brezhnev speech last week is concerned, it is not [as heard] encouraging. It is obvious that he would like negotiations.

[Question] Can you state your assessment of the speech specifically once more?

[Answer] I believe that Brezhnev deems it possible to negotiate on the withdrawal of the troops. I hope we will come up with a proposal which will be acceptable to him and to everybody else.

[Question] But to get the whole problem going, it is necessary to talk with the Soviets.

[Answer] I think this is not the most difficult part of it. We must begin, for instance, sending the Italian president of the European Community into the talks. But we can also talk via our ambassadors in our capitals.

[Question] Is your announcement still topical that the Olympic games will be boycotted?

[Answer] We will still advise our athletes not to go, as long as the circumstances have not changed. And the way I understood the attitude of your government it is not much different from ours. We are only starting out at the other end.

I MAKHI SAYS CARTER CAN EASILY REMOVE TURKS FROM ISLAND

NC280740 Nicosia I MAKHI in Greek 28 Feb 80 p 1 NC

[Editorial: "Carter's Big Words"]

[Excerpts] Following charges by Senator Kennedy that President Carter has not kept his promises about Cyprus, that he pressured Congress to lift the embargo against Turkey although there was no progress in the Cyprus problem, President Carter--obviously in order to pacify the powerful Greek-American lobby and in view of the presidential election--has again remembered that there are people in Cyprus who are deprived of basic human rights. He claimed that the United States favors a fair and lasting Cyprus solution and he went as far as saying that even he, just like all civilized people, is a Greek!

When one hears President Carter's words for the first time, one definitely feels pleased and happy because at last the leader of a superpower cares for Cyprus and its oppressed people, and this leader thinks in a fair and civilized way, like a Greek. But one will break down and will not believe what he hears when he is informed by those who know that President Carter is merely voicing big words, and that there is great distance between his big words and his deeds. In the past the American President has repeatedly given assurances and his word of honor that he was opposed to the presence of Turkish troops [in Cyprus], that he would work for the restoration of Cyprus, territorial integrity and that he would support a solution based on the principle of "majority rule and protecting the minority." However, President Carter has not kept any promise.

In a few words, President Carter has proved inconsistent and has been caught lying in his effort to secure the support of Greek-Americans in view of the forthcoming presidential election.

If the American President really felt as Greek as he claims and if he cared for Cyprus and its people who are deprived of their basic human rights, he would make decisions and implement measures that would put an end to the injustice against the Cypriot people, because the Turks, who are committing crimes in Cyprus, are puppets in his hands and he can remove them from Cyprus by merely moving his fingers. But he must have the desire to do this.

TERCUMAN REPORTS INTERCOMMUNAL TALKS TO BEGIN IN APRIL

NC280850 Istanbul TERCUMAN in Turkish 26 Feb 80 p 4 NC

[Report by Abdullah Azizoglu]

[Text] Nicosia--It has been learned that the intercommunal negotiations for finding a peaceful settlement to the Cyprus dispute will be held in April. Well-informed sources say that the Greek Cypriots have assured UN Secretary General Kurt Waldheim that they will make certain concessions on matters concerning freedom of settlement and ownership, while the Turkish Cypriots have informed the secretary general that they will make some concessions regarding Varosha and the frontiers.

Political observers in Nicosia, however, believe that no matter when the intercommunal negotiations begin, they will yield no positive result unless both sides make tangible concessions. On the other hand, terrorism is mounting on the Greek Cypriot side. Recently a teacher, his daughter and an elderly lady teacher were killed. On the Turkish Cypriot side the casino of a hotel was broken into and 6 million liras stolen.

EDEK'S LISSARIDHIS ON REFUGEE PROBLEM, OUTCOME OF TALKS

[Text] Speaking yesterday at Linou-Flasou, EDEK leader Vasos Lissaridhis declared that an effort is being made to divide the refugees and at the same time deceive them. He also disclosed that a rightwing political leader has told a delegation of refugees that if we want a Cyprus solution we must tell Turkey that we do not insist on the return of the inhabitants of Kyrenia District and other areas to their homes.

This, the socialist leader added, constitutes another clear effort to divide the refugees. On the other hand, it is tantamount to deceiving all the refugees because, if it were accepted, Turkey would again cause a deadlock, and if we appealed, again complaining about violation of human rights and UN resolutions, we would be regarded not as victims but as accomplices, because we ourselves would have agreed to the cancellation of such rights. In this way we would be endorsing the blocking of the refugees' return to their homes.

Referring to the intercommunal talks, the chairman of the socialist party, EDEK, stressed that "today the prospects for the success of the talks are even more gloomy because of the negative attitude of Turkey and its henchman, Denktas." Dr Lissaridhis added: "It is obvious that what Turkey has been seeking is legalizing separation and establishing a protectorate in the north. Those who, instead of unmasking Turkish intransigence, shift the responsibility for the deadlock to our side, are doing a disservice to our national struggle."

Dr Lissaridhis stressed that this is the case when the view is promoted that we must submit fresh proposals to the various aspects of the Cyprus problem, although it is well known that the deadlock has not resulted from our very conciliatory proposals but from the Turkish proposals, which even Turkey's friends have described as unacceptable.

Finally, the chairman of the socialist party, EDEK, stressed that the socialist party does not approve of the government's socio-economic policy.

DENKTAS SAYS EMBARGO WILL NOT CONTRIBUTE TO SOLUTION

TA270935 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 0900 GMT 27 Feb 80 TA

[Text] President Rauf Denktas has said the statement made by President of the Greek Cypriot House of Representatives Mikhailidhis to the effect that the embargo and attacks [against the Turkish Cypriots] on an international level were aimed at safeguarding the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Cyprus, securing citizens' rights and insuring security of those using Cypriot port facilities, was a denial of the existence, rights and status of the Turkish Cypriot community.

Noting that it is evident that the Greek Cypriot leadership intends to maintain its attitude toward the Turkish Cypriot community, which constitutes 25 percent of the island's population, Denktas added: This is where the trouble lies. Waldheim should diagnose this trouble and should call on the Greek Cypriot leadership to pursue the right path. He should stress that as long as the Greek Cypriots do not change their attitude, the doors toward conciliation cannot be opened and that the Greek Cypriot leadership will be held responsible.

Replying to a question on rumors to the effect that Kiprianou will seek the help of the pope regarding the missing persons, Denktas said the Turkish Cypriot leadership has for years been exerting efforts to secure the implementation of the UN third committee decision regarding the missing persons issue. Denktas recalled that the Greek Cypriot leadership has been avoiding the implementation of this decision. Pointing out that the Turkish Cypriot side believed in the effectiveness of the pope, Denktas expressed the hope that the pope will convince Kiprianou to abandon the crusader mentality and to keep the Greek Orthodox Church out of politics.

TFSC MINISTER SCORES UK REFUSAL FOR AIRLINK

[Text] The minister of public works and transportation, Erdinch Gurcag, has said that Lord (Troppingham's) refusal to accept an airlink between Ercan Airport and the United Kingdom is proof of the British Government's pro-Greek Cypriot attitude. Gurcag was commenting on the reply given by British Government spokesman Lord (Troppingham) to a question on air communication between Ercan and the United Kingdom by Lord (Stance) in the British House of Lords. Gurcag noted that the reply was completely pro-Greek Cypriot and showed that the British Government acted with full bias. Strongly protesting this attitude, Gurcag said: The fact that the British Government is making decisions based on the deceitful statements of the Greek Cypriot administration--which usurped the Turkish Cypriots' freedom of communications, of travel and all their basic rights and freedoms, by means of armed attacks from December 1963 until the peace operation in 1974--will not change the realities that have been lived through nor the present reality.

Gurcag noted that (?the British Government's decision) was encouraged by Greek Cypriot leader Kiprianou who was waging a struggle to usurp the most humanistic rights of the Turkish Cypriots. Gurcag stressed that such views and statements would not intimidate the Turkish Cypriots who will continue to wage their just struggle with their utmost force.

The public works and transportation minister stated that the Ercan Airport was of international standards. He added that Ercan was like a window that insured the Turkish Cypriot community's freedom of travel and that the community would protect it forever.

TURKISH CYPRIOT PRIME MINISTER CRITICIZES EEC ATTITUDE

[Text] Prime Minister Mustafa Cagatay has said a turning point has been reached in the relations between the EEC and the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus. The prime minister was speaking after a briefing by Rustem Tatar, who is holding talks with Community officials in Brussels.

Cagatay said the Greek Cypriot administration wanted to develop quickly its relations with the EEC as of 1 January 1981 and to become after Greece, the 11th full member of the EEC. Noting that the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus had achieved no economic results from its contacts with the EEC during the past 3 years, Cagatay said: The reason is that the EEC considers the Greek Cypriot administration the government of the entire island and considers the approval of the Greek Cypriot administration necessary for any aid to be extended to Cyprus.

GUNAYDIN SCORES GENERAL STAFF RESPONSIBILITY IN NOTAM DECISION

["The Situation in Ankara" column by Teoman Erel: "Courage"]

[Excerpts] Professor Fahir Armaoglu, though sympathetic with the Justice Party, had the courage to expose the facts. This is what he had to say about the cancellation of NOTAM 714 concerning the Aegean, without distorting the facts: "The question of FIR has entered a new development following the cancellation of NOTAM 714 the other day by the Office of the Chief of General Staff, for the Greek Government too has announced the cancellation of its own NOTAM 1157. This means that the question of the FIR line between Turkey and Greece has been eliminated. To put it more correctly, air traffic control authority over the Aeagean reverts to Greece--as between 1952 and 1974. As things stand now, Turkey appears to have given up all claims in this matter." This is the truth, dear readers. Turkey is leaving the control over the Aegean to Athens, surrendering all its claims.

Deputy leader of the Justice Party Yigit Toker made a statement recently, in which he turned over to the chief of General Staff all responsibility for this decision, implying that Turkey has given up its flight control rights and all other claims over the Aegean. Nice, isn't it? This means that the Justice Party minority government has nothing to do with this decision which is of profound importance to our security and future!

Chief of General Staff Gen Evren disclosed last week that the cancellation of NOTAM 714 was disussed and approved at the National Security Council. As far as we know, the National Security Council meeting, which was chaired by President Koruturk, was also attended by the prime minister of the minority government and the ministers concerned. So much so that the civilians at these meetings formed the majority. Suleyman Bey [Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel] has a reputation for dexterous handling of such matters at each session.

This means that both government and the president of the republic are involved in this decision. If they did not approve of the transfer to Athens of air control over the Aegean, they could have opposed it. As a matter of fact the National Security Council is a consultative organ. The decisions of the National Security Council are not final. They are only of a consultative nature. If the decision concerning the cancellation of NOTAM 714 was taken by the chief of General Staff, it is impossible to consider the prime minister exempted from responsibility. For the chief of General Staff is a state official responsible to the prime minister.

The government may have been subjected to a memorandum. It may have found it expedient to send to certain internal and external pressures. But what it should not have done was transfer political responsibility to state officials, who are answerable to the government.

If the Justice Party members insist on holding the Office of the Chief of General Staff responsible for the new situation in the Aegean, they may have to answer this question: "Do you mean to say that the Office of the Chief of the General Staff would not listen to you? If that is the case, what business have you being in power?"

In fact many names--including General Rogers, the American NATO commander and German Finance Minister Matthoefer--who discussed aid with the Justice Party minority government, are involved in this bargaining over the Aegean issue.

It is Suleyman Demirel and Turgut Ozal and not Chief of General Staff Gen Evren who are doing the multilateral bargaining in matters such as Cyprus, U.S. bases, the Aegean and economic aid.

ECEVIT OPPOSES LIFTING OF NOTAM, FAVORS COMMUNIST PARTY

[Excerpts] RPP leader Bulent Ecevit has said that Turkish workers employed abroad were concerned over the fact that the two large Turkish parties did not cooperate to save Turkey from its present crisis. Ecevit returned home today at 1625 by plane, after visiting Denmark and the FRG.

Replying to a question by a reporter at Ankara's Esenboga Airport on whether the lifting of the NOTAM on the Aegean airspace could be considered a concession in order to secure economic interests, Ecevit said: No matter who lifted the NOTAM, the government is responsible for the lifting. Describing the lifting of the NOTAM as a big mistake no matter whether it was made as a concession or not, Ecevit continued: The government has to account for its decision. The interlocutor of the government [for such an accounting] is not NATO, it is not our allies, it is first and foremost and, especially in such subjects, the Turkish nation. Before such an important resolution was taken, the necessary explanations and reasons that led to such a resolution should have been made in a manner that would satisfy our nation. As far as I can see such a move has not been by the government. We shall deal with this issue to the end.

Recalling his press statements that, if his party came to power he would allow the establishment of a communist party in Turkey, a journalist asked Ecevit to comment on these reports. Ecevit said that his opinion on this matter was not new and that he had made such an announcement earlier. Ecevit added: There are not several kinds of democracies in accordance to their degree of development. If a country has adopted liberal democracy, then it must abide by all its rules.

NATO'S ROGERS MEETS WITH CHIEF OF STAFF, LEAVES FOR BRUSSELS

OZAL RETURNS FROM PARIS OECD MEETING, MAKES STATEMENT

[Text] Turgut Ozal, under secretary of the Prime Minister's Office and deputy under secretary of the State Planning Organization, has said that Turkey's imports in 1980 would exceed $7 billion. Ozal, who participated in the OECD meeting in Paris, returned home today. In a statement at Istanbul's Yesilkoy Airport, Ozal said that economic measures adopted by Turkey were discussed in the meeting. He added that Turkey's economic program was greatly approved by the OECD members. Pointing out that aid to be extended to Turkey would be disclosed at the OECD meeting to be held on 26 March, Ozal said that most of the aid to be extended this year would not be linked such as those of last year and that efforts were being made for those which are linked to be used easily.

Ozal said that the amount of aid to be extended to Turkey this year would be greater than that of last year. He added that the World Bank's program loan of $200 million would soon be available. He said that the IMF loan had been obtained following the devaluation of the Turkish lira.

Ozal said that as a result of loans to be received, Turkey would be able to bridge its deficit and that the amount of imports, which totalled $4.8 billion last year, would reach more than $7 billion in 1980.

NATIONAL ASSEMBLY PASSES DEFENSE MINISTRY BUDGET

[Text] Ankara, Feb 27 (AA)--The National Assembly debated and passed the defense budget for 1980 last night, with spokesmen for various parties voicing their views. Justice Party Deputy Ali Elverdi (Bursa) said Turkey should be strong enough to protect Middle Eastern and Iranian oil. He claimed Turkey was the victim of an attempt by communist organizations to lead the country into civil war. A struggle was going on, he claimed, with the uniforms "unidentified."

RPP Deputy and former Commander of the Navy Kemal Kayacan said the armed forces should be allowed to return to their original function of defense as soon as possible. National Salvation Party spokesman Fehmi Cumalioglu deplored the delays in setting up a national defense industry. Nationalist Action Party Deputy Necati Gultekin said Turkey had to be strong to survive in her strategic location, with a defense force equal to the total force of their neighbors except the Soviet Union. Defense Minister Ahmet Ihsan Birincioglu said parliament had a major responsibility for insuring the armed forces' return to its proper function.

DEMIREL PROMISES 'FAIRNESS' IN NEW TAX BILL

[Text] Ankara, Feb 27 (AA)--Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel accused the opposition with fanning the fire while his government tried to stop the "dragon" of inflation. Speaking about the new tax bills submitted by his government at the Justice Party joint parliamentary group, Demirel said the bills included not only taxation, but also an increased minimum levying allowance and a mobile scale. It was a "tax reform" bill, he commented.

It was not pleasant to tax people, Demirel acknowledged, but you cannot have a state without taxation. "It has been left to us to think of the state," he commented, "and we shall not compete in a race for irresponsibility with those who neglect the (?state). They say, let us give away funds. We have to take away from someone in order to give away. We first have to have something before we can give away."

The prime minister claimed the state can be broken apart, "not only with bullets, but by opening (?holes) in the treasury." He promised to return to the citizenry what the government took in taxes. "Fairness" would be achieved in taxation, he said.

Demirel said Turkey had paid a petroleum bill of a billion dollars for the first two months of 1980. He hoped several problems could be solved with the importing of adequate supplies of oil.

RELIGIOUS OFFICIALS BANNED FROM COMMENTING ON PARTIES

[Text] Religious officials who praise or berate political parties, either within or outside the framework of their duties, will be removed from office. A directive issued in the official gazette today cites the disciplinary punishments for the officials employed by the Religious Affairs Directorate Center, and branches inside and outside Turkey.

Under the directive, officials who, while carrying out their duties, discriminate against language, race, gender, political beliefs, philosophical beliefs, religion or sect, will be suspended from office for long periods of time. The same punishment is also envisaged for religious officials who speak or act in ways damaging to national or religious unity.

Under the directive, religious officials who use harsh, rude or offensive language, or who distort religious truths in delivering sermons or who fail to show up at their officer or places of religious service will be punished. The directive also says that religious officials who indulge in magic or witchcraft will be removed from office.

RPP DENIES COOPERATING WITH NSP TO TOPPLE GOVERNMENT

[Text] Ankara, 24 Feb (AA)--RPP Secretary General Mustafa Ustundag denied rumors of a RPP-NSP [National Salvation Party] decision to cooperate in toppling the government. At a press conference Sunday, Ustundag said no decision had been taken by RPP's competent organs concerning any attempt to bring down the government.

SMUGGLING AGREEMENT WITH BULGARIA--A Turkish-Bulgarian agreement was signed Tuesday in Ankara for cooperation against smuggling. Signing the document at the Foreign Ministry were the director general for foreign agreements from the Turkish Ministry of Customs and Monopolies and Bulgaria's director general of customs. Turkey was particularly concerned with stopping arms smuggling, Foreign Ministry sources said, while Bulgaria was more interested in stopping the traffic in narcotics. Under the agreement, customs check points at Edirne and Svilengrad will be equipped to deal with smuggling. The two countries will exchange information and documents in general and will consult more closely for specific cases of smuggling. The details of cooperation against smuggling will be worked out later. [Text] [Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1450 GMT 26 Feb 80 TA]

BORDER TRADE WITH IRAN--It has been announced that 3,000 tons of diesel oil and fuel oil were imported from Iran during the first 2 months of this year within the framework of a border trade agreement signed between the office of the governor of Agri and of the general governor of West Azerbayjan. According to information from Agri Governor Tuncel Perciner, food was exported to Iran in exchange for oil. Perciner added that such transactions are expected to continue. Perciner said that 40 tons of diesel oil and 120 tons of fuel oil imported from Iran 5 days a week were then distributed to meet the needs of the Agri, Kars, Erzurum and Van provinces. DANISH EMBASSY TO HANDLE CANADIAN PROBLEMS IN IRAN

[Unattributed report: "Iran Satisfied With Danish Diplomacy"]

[Text] The Iranian Government regards Denmark as one of the relatively few countries to be on very friendly terms with Iran. The news on Thursday that the Danish Embassy in Tehran is taking over the Canadian Consulate and looking after the problems of Canadian citizens in Iran has been welcomed by the Iranian Government, according to Ambassador Troels Munk in Tehran.

The Canadian Embassy was closed when it became known that Canadian diplomats smuggled six U.S. diplomats out of Iran with false papers.

PREPARATORY GROUP FOR DISARMAMENT FORUM MEETS IN VIENNA

AU260913 Vienna VOLKSSTIMME in German 23 Feb 80 p 4 AU

[Text] Vienna--In the period 19-21 February, a preparatory meeting was held in Vienna for the international forum "Dialog for Disarmament and Detente." The meeting was convened by the International Liaison Forum of the Peace Forces and by the Austrian Coordination Committee for Peace Work. The participants represented political parties and non-state organizations from 23 countries. The meeting was also attended by an observer from the UN Disarmament Commission.

It was decided to hold the international forum 3-5 June 1980 in Vienna. This conference is to serve an extensive exchange of opinions about international problems, especially about the possibilities of intensifying endeavors for detente and disarmament.

Within the framework of the preparatory committee, the general problems of safeguarding peace and the most recent international developments were discussed. The participants expressed their grave concern over the increasing rearmament and called for the continuation and expansion of all forms of cooperation and exchanges between the nations, such as in the fields of culture, sports, economy and science, and primarily for conferences and negotiations on detente, disarmament and development.

PCP-R SCORES SOVIET ACTION IN AFGHANISTAN

LD271018 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 0400 GMT 27 Feb 80 LD

[Text] In Lisbon yesterday, the Portuguese Communist Party-Reformed [PCP-R] criticized the Soviet Union's conduct in Afghanistan. The PCP-R said in a statement that what has been taking place in Kabul recently was a wave of barbarous repression unleashed against the people of Afghanistan by the Soviet occupation troops, but that the Afghan people were fiercely resisting the Soviet troops.

REPORTAGE ON 28 FEB BUNDESTAG FOREIGN POLICY DEBATE

Schmidt Delivers Statement

DW280845 Cologne Westdeutscher Rundfunk Network in German 0802 GMT 28 Feb 80 DW

[Government statement delivered to the Bundestag by Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt--live]

[Text] Ladies and gentlemen, the day before yesterday in the afternoon the president of the Bundestag informed the Federal Government that the Bundestag desired today's discussion on the international situation. No grand interpellation has been introduced in this respect, nor any motion. Therefore, I would like to state that this is an unusual procedure. [commotion] But the gentlemen of the opposition, who cannot suppress their interjections even after just two sentences, are wrong in having indicated in the past few days that the Federal Government is shying away from a debate. This is an error. We are always prepared to advocate our policy. During the past few weeks we only heard that you did not want a debate because your own views had become somewhat confused--as could be read and heard in public. [applause] Yet we are indeed prepared to fill the gaps which you have left open or which you are tearing open, and we are happy to introduce this debate with a presentation, a renewed representation of the attitude of the Federal Government which is known to you as well.

The stance of the Federal Government, of which you are aware, was explained here before parliament on 17 January by the chancellor and by the federal foreign minister, and it is important to me to note that these explanations made for your benefit 5 or just about 6 weeks ago continue to be valid. It is true, however, that in the meantime some important elements or component parts for a common Western stance have been added. I, for example, have intensively and repeatedly consulted with the French president and the British prime minister; I will be meeting with the president of the leading Western power, with whom I have been in close exchange of ideas since the beginning of the crisis, for a meeting next week which has been planned for quite some time.

Surely, ladies and gentlemen, as any internationally experienced politician clearly knows, I cannot deal here with all details of this intensive consultation and counseling with friends and allies, especially in view of the consultations and negotiations that will take place in Washington next week. Yet through this statement this morning I would like to continue the clear political line as I have done in the past several weeks in many public utterances, which determines the attitude of the Federal Government in the present international crisis situation.

The two statements delivered by myself and Federal Minister Genscher to the Bundestag on 17 January have fully proved their worth as the presentation of the guidelines of our policy. In addition, there is the German-French statement of 5 February. The French president, like myself, regards this statement as a significant document for German and French foreign policies; at the same time, this statement is an important joint contribution toward a convincing political answer by the West as a whole to the Soviet challenge in Afghanistan.

From these three documents I recall for you a few significant elements--from these three documents where our policy has been laid down. First, together with the great majority of the people of the world we condemn the breach of international law in Afghanistan and demand an immediate end of the Soviet military intervention. Second, for detente and peace a balance of military forces is a decisive and unalterable prerequisite. We must make all efforts to reestablish the balance and protect it against new shocks, safeguard it against new shocks. I correct myself.

The policy of cooperation with the East has suffered a setback. Together with our allies we are trying to maintain what has been achieved and continue it particularly with regard to the control policy field.

The independence of the Third World and the independent role of the nonalined countries are significance factors for peace, significant factors for stability in the world. We will respect them and support them as much as we can.

In difficult times one must speak to one another. The dangers of the present situation can be limited only through careful considerations with regard to mastering the conflict. Efforts to overcome the crisis, however, make sense only if the Soviet Union also has the will to cooperate and if it will say so. And then we can say the following with regard to the three elements mentioned: No nation has a greater national interest in a policy of balance and detente than the German nation which is forced to live in two different states. [applause] In saying this I have recalled a few points of the three aforementioned documents [Schmidt, Genscher statements; French-German statement] which I can say continue to be fully valid.

The Federal Government has always advocated the idea that we will only succeed in finding proper answers to the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan within the framework of an overall Western concept. The withdrawal of the Soviet armed intervention forces in that country is involved. It is a matter of reestablishing the balance in that region which has been upset. We must avoid upsetting it at another place with serious or even more serious consequences. It is a matter of no further escalation of the crisis, a matter of finding an acceptable way out of the crisis. In order to find convincing answers to that problem, the West must indeed agree on its aims and interests.

In connection with all this one cannot foster the illusion that the present crisis is just a matter of today or tomorrow. The intervention in Afghanistan is an event that will have grave consequences for the world.

It was the aim of the German-French statement to work out elements for common action by the West and it contains, as you remember, a clear common advocation of the Atlantic alliance. Also in this crisis the foreign political cooperation of the nine states of the European Community, which in the papers is being abbreviated as EPC, meaning European political cooperation, has contributed to giving weight and a hearing to the voice of the West Europeans in the circle of the Western allies. With the suggestion of having a nonalined or neutral Afghanistan that will determine its fate itself, the nine foreign ministers of the European Community have developed a constructive idea to handle the core problem of the crisis, namely, the continuing Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan.

In all of our consultations and work, so far we have had and we will also have in the future continuous close contacts with the United States. The important and pleasant visit of the U.S. secretary of state last week here in our country and in other European capitals has shown us the progress we have made in past weeks in working out a common Western stance.

We agree that not all members of the alliance, not all members of the European Community will have to face the Soviet challenge in an identical way. Division of labor is the way in which we want to act. In other words, every one of us, against the background of common aims and agreement of interests, will concentrate on those contributions for which he is especially fit or able.

President Carter, with whom I have had a close exchange of views since the outbreak of this double crisis by phone and in writing, in his last letter explicitly stressed the importance of a division of labor, of a complementary action by the Western allies. I am certain that in our talks in the middle of next week in Washington we will take further steps on the way toward a credible common Western policy.

The Washington visits will also offer an opportunity for me to tell the President personally that which I have said many times in public, namely, how much we are impressed by the courage, patience and the admirable discipline demonstrated by the American nation, led by its President, in the crisis connected with the taking of hostages in Tehran. [applause]

May I remind you that in all steps which the United States took or contemplated against Tehran we brought our influence to bear several times, that we were always prepared to take identical steps. This similarly applies on principle regarding the Soviet Union in the Afghanistan crisis.

I want to mention here that the Federal Republic of Germany is not promoting its trade with the Soviet Union through state credits nor through interest-rate subsidies such as is done by the vast majority of Western states. There is no subsidizing on our part, nor are there any state credits. In our country the market interest rates of the private banking world must be paid; neither are the guarantees for export credits which we grant free of charge. Rather, they have helped the finance minister over the years to collect state revenues, which we might also say have been considerable during these years.

What applies to our attitude in the present crisis is that we are not stepping into transactions which the United States has given up, that at this time we, like our other EC partners, will not fill the gaps created by the United States, for example, in the fields of agriculture or computer technology. We are prepared to participate in a tightening of the COCOM [NATO Coordinating Committee] regulations on the exports of strategically important commodities. This is true for us, but it also applies to this field just as it does to all other fields, under the principle--and this again is valid not only vis-a-vis the East--that we will abide by existing agreements. This, by the way, is not only in keeping with a moral commandment, a legal commandment, but also with a political commandment since we desire that the contracts concluded with us be observed to our advantage. [applause]

This attitude is shared by the United States. Reverting to the somewhat more narrow field of exports: In this respect the Federal Government stays within the framework of the so-called OECD consensus. These are the conformities worked out within the framework of the organization of the world's industrial states. We are prepared to join a list of measures such as the U.S. Government has proposed or may yet propose if our allies, our other partners, also act accordingly, meaning if such measures are not torpedoed.

It goes without saying that in a decision on our future trade policy including our (?raw materials) policy vis-a-vis the Soviet Union we will have to remember that our economic relations with the Soviet Union have also been built in cooperation over many years, and primarily for political reasons. We mainly deliver products of our excellent machine-building sector. We mainly deliver capital equipment. Severance of such delivery relations--and our American partners also do not wish such severance, so some German journalists must have heard this incorrectly--could be corrected only after several years. And I may point out that this economic cooperation, at first built for political reasons, also makes a considerable contribution at least to our employment in industry, a considerable contribution toward our national economy--much more significant than are perhaps comparable economic exchange processes for other countries which ponder or discuss the same problem.

As to the question of participation in the summer Olympic games in Moscow in 1980, to this day the Federal Government has advocated the view that it is up to the Soviet Union to create the preconditions for allowing teams from all countries to participate in these games. These preconditions currently do not exist. Perhaps one should put it this way: They do not yet exist.

Under the rules of the International Olympic Committee, the national Olympic committees have until late May to register for the games. I proceed from the assumption that the European attitude and the American stance will have been merged into one position no later than the time I mentioned. In this connection I may add that I do not want to abet any wishful thinking because of the 1980 summer games. [commotion]

On a long-term basis it must be an objective of Western policy to establish and preserve a stable balance of forces. I repeat the crucial principle which has been mentioned before.

Within the North Atlantic alliance we have made a contribution, including a military one, toward the maintenance of the balance, a contribution which has remained unchanged over the years and which has been commensurate with our potential. The strength, the training, the equipment, the motivation of our armed forces measure up to any international comparison, and this shall remain so, too. [applause]

In this connection, our defense expenditures under the joint NATO criteria over the past decade have increased by nearly exactly a real 3 percent each year on the average, meaning long before such a clause calling for this effort was adopted by the NATO Council in the spring of 1978. And the share of military procurements, meaning the investment share, was always even greater.

Regardless of this high level of our defense contribution and the increase in it, I told U.S. Secretary of State Cyrus Vance during his recent visit that we intend to increase our defense budget by a real 3 percent in 1980 also. Naturally, the additional military efforts for Turkey as well as for Greece, which we have in mind and which are inevitable in view of the present world political situation, will have their share in it.

We have, which I want to mention here, noted with satisfaction that the two neighbors of the European Community have now found a satisfactory solution with regard to air access routes, after more than 6 years of conflict in this matter.

I would like to add another word about Turkey, and in conclusion I would like to add a word about the defense budget. Defense preparedness is first of all a matter of men and only second a matter of money. [applause] We know that it would not work without money. Otherwise, we would not have been acting throughout the whole decade as I have suggested to you. But first of all, it is a matter of men, of soldiers, of their military leaders and the political leadership that will give orders for action. [shouts]

Not in your case, Mr Hase. [laughter, shouts] Let me return to Turkey. We in the Federal Republic decided on our own, without waiting for international coordination or consultation, to take the initiative with regard to a coordinated and far-reaching assistance action for Turkey. We will urgently ask our friends and allies to participate properly in that urgently necessary action of assistance for Turkey that we have initiated in view of the international situation--I am speaking not only of military assistance but also of economic assistance.

Also in past years, in every year, we have assisted Turkey with economic and defense aid. We have never disrupted it. In addition, we made extraordinary additional efforts last year in the economic field, namely as the initiator of a coordinated OECD action of assistance, it was an assistance action coordinated by the world organizations industrial states. We made our German contributions very quickly, as the first. Some committed themselves to make contributions in 1979 which still have not yet been rendered, when 2 months of 1980 have already passed.

So we consider as necessary such an extraordinary assistance program for Turkey in the fields of economy and defense. In anticipation of what has been started now and upon request of the Turkish Government, with the support of the parliament by the way, we have made available temporarily and in a very short time DM100 million. Federal Minister Matthoefer yesterday in the Cabinet, in the Federal Security Council, reported on his recent talks in Athens and Ankara. Together with Federal Ministers Genscher and Apel, Mr Matthoefer will continue the intense efforts of the Federal Government to win other donor countries for this assistance action; first in Washington and Tokyo, but also within the frameworks of OECD and NATO. Our firm idea about this assistance is that it should not be limited to 1980.

In connection with help for others, a word about the independence of the countries of the Third World, which is a significant element of the balance of forces, a significant element of world peace. The independence of the countries of the Third World has been violated by the occupation of the Third World. The states of the Third World with their own votes in the United Nations on 14 January clearly indicated that they most of all feel shocked by the Soviet action in Afghanistan. Later on more than 40 Islamic states in Islamabad expressed it even more clearly.

Maybe one ought to visualize on this occasion--when speaking of the Islamabad conference --that there are more than 40 Islamic states in the world. More than one-fourth of all states of the world assembled there to make a common decision. More than one-fourth of all states of the world.

For the common policy of the West the conclusion must be drawn that we must not merely recognize the independence and sovereignty of the states of the Third World, but that we must help economically and politically as partners with equal rights to stabilize them. On the basis of our own good experience gained in regional cooperation, we are encouraging regional mergers in the Third World. Particularly for smaller countries which are not protected by a military alliance, they could be an excellent means for strengthening their independence. We would like to cooperate with regional mergers on the basis of the aforementioned principles. As an example, I would like to name here the European community's cooperation with the Southeast Asian group of states called ASEAN, a cooperation which has existed for a long time and which has also been strengthened politically in the meantime.

These are not new realizations for the Federal Republic; it has been aware of this for several years. There has been some quarrel in this house with regard to the southern part of Africa. We have been aware for many years that only he who supports and respects the independence of the states of the Third World, that only he who rejects every idea of predominance, zones of influence or neocolonialism, can expect to win the confidence and respect of these countries. [applause]

In this connection a word about Pakistan. We are prepared to cooperate in additional efforts with regard to economic assistance for Pakistan. I remember having pointed out here on 17 January how much Pakistan and India stand out as recipients of our economic assistance and have for years. In the past we have given considerable aid to Pakistan and we will continue to make a considerable contribution to the economic strengthening of the country. This economic aid for Pakistan must also be viewed with regard to the effect it will have on its neighboring country, India. [applause]

India is authorized to play a significant role in the movement of nonalined countries. The Federal Government is aware of this fact and it will bear it in mind.

At this point it seems appropriate to me to recall that, in light of developments around the Persian Gulf, the Middle East problem requires a solution more urgently than ever before, I would like to remind all those failing to realize this that the Islamic foreign ministers in Islamabad in late January adopted two resolutions and not just one, initiated jointly by Saudi Arabia and Iraq, and only the first of these two resolutions applied to Afghanistan and the Soviet Union. The second resolution, and the one which would have been politically impossible without the other, centers on the expressly phrased demand for a solution of the Middle East problem. And this includes the implementation of the right to self-determination of the Palestinian people just as it includes the recognition and safeguarding of Israel's right to exist by all Arabs. [applause]

I cannot but add that the preservation of stability and peace in the Middle East--and the effects are felt in the Near East and the whole world, including us--also corresponds to an important German interest. Therefore, we ourselves must be interested in a settlement of the Middle East problem because we are directly affected. [applause]

We have submitted proposals on the enhancement of relations between the European Community and the Gulf states. They have led to the point where inquiries have been initiated now which run parallel to our unceasing interest in the continuation of the European-Arab dialog. What matters to us is to make it clear to the Arab states that Europe is for them an interested partner in cooperation.

In our policy of peace, which is aimed at balance and stabilization, relations with Yugoslavia also hold a high rank, of course. Yugoslavia likewise plays a leading role in the movement of the nonalined states. We are very satisfied that the negotiations on a Community cooperation agreement with Yugoslavia, negotiations which we especially expressly promoted, were concluded successfully 2 or 3 days ago with the initialling of the agreement.

At this point I would like to express our feelings of sympathy and respect for the seriously ailing President Tito whom we recognize as one of the great statesmen of our era. [applause] I may add that we are looking forward with optimism to the future of his country. I also consider the external security of his country unimpaired.

Ladies and gentlemen, crisis management also includes not carelessly allowing contacts with the states of Eastern Europe to be severed. [applause] In difficult times, too, we must talk with our neighbors in Eastern Europe. This naturally applies to a special degree to the two German states. We keep working for a better relationship with the German Democratic Republic and, despite the continuing partition, we seek to achieve further human contacts for people on all sides. As you know, negotiations are being conducted on this. What is at stake is fulfilling the declaration of intent of 1978. And I may state with satisfaction that these talks are well, very well on their way. [unintelligible question from the floor] It does involve amounts in the millions; perhaps you mistook them for billions when you wanted to raise your question.

As for arms limitation, we agree with our alliance partners that what has been achieved must be preserved. This applies particularly to the agreements on strategic arms limitation, meaning the limitation of strategic destruction weapons--SALT I and SALT II. It also applies to the MBFR negotiations in Vienna; it likewise applies to efforts toward arms limitation within the framework of the United Nations. Let me underscore here once again what President Carter said concerning SALT, namely, that the observation of the limitations under SALT I and SALT II is in the true interests of the United States, in the true interests of the Soviet Union, and that it contributes toward preserving peace in the world.

Now there are indications that the Soviet Union judges this in a similar way. I would welcome it very much if the leadership of the Soviet Union, too, were to express, in a similarly clear manner as the U.S. President, its adherence to SALT II even if it has not yet been ratified. [applause]

The task of arms limitation, after all, is only part of the effort in accomplishing the objective of maintaining peace. As for accomplishing the objective of maintaining peace, I have stressed time and again in the past several weeks one element of crisis or conflict management, namely, that the conflict parties must stay in contact with each other. They must be prepared to talk with each other lest the situation be aggravated as a result of lack of understanding, a misunderstanding or a misinterpretation of a course of action or of the neglect of action by the other side. [applause]

It was in this spirit that the Federal Republic of Germany on several occasions, in fact on many occasions, has made corresponding efforts. My letter to Soviet General Secretary Brezhnev should be seen in this light. Last but not least their own interest in the preservation of peace has led the two world powers to a resumption of the dialog between Washington and Moscow on very many levels. Time and again there has been speculation during the past 10 or 12 weeks on whether we feel strong enough to play a special role in this context. Let me, in this connection, quote from a DER SPIEGEL interview which is one of the many sources of my public remarks over the past weeks and months and during which I said that both world powers do not require the good offices of the Federal Republic of Germany to talk with each other. Messrs Brezhnev and Carter do not need the good offices of the German chancellor if they want to talk with each other.

Ladies and gentlemen, I am accustomed for a government statement to be accompanied by polemics. Mr Kohl will immediately answer with a great deal of polemics. In an emergency I can also be polemical in a government statement, polemical at your address, but I do not believe that the style of the house will gain anything in that way. [prolonged applause, shouts] Not even 5 minutes elapsed since the beginning of my speech when Mr Kohl and his neighbors began to exchange jokes among themselves. [shouts] That should not be your style. [shouts]

I will return to the quotation. [shouts] Mr Brezhnev and Mr Carter do not need the sevices of the German federal chancellor to talk to each other. The Federal Republic of Germany is not the pointer on the scales. The Federal Republic is a part, an important part, and one which cannot be done without, of the Western alliance. As I said in another place, we are not a mediator, we are a party, we are part of a party.

Mastering conflict also includes seeing to it that one observes and listens to what the other side is saying. What the other side has said must be examined carefully and without preoccupation. I supported, therefore, the study and examination of what the Polish first secretary, Mr Gierek, said at the party congress about disarmament in Europe and what he meant by this, as well as the study of the recent speech by Soviet General Secretary Brezhnev on Soviet intentions in Afghanistan--what he said and what he meant or could have meant.

With regard to crisis management it is equally important that, as a party involved in a conflict, one must remain predictable and reliable with regard to one's own actions. That does not call for sharp language; it calls for clear language. It also calls for keeping to one's own agreements and realities. I have said this before. Therefore, we stand by all our treaties and agreements with the countries of Eastern Europe, hold to the Quadripartite Agreement on Berlin and so forth. We welcome that fact that the two world powers have continued their cooperation, not only in the arms control field but also with regard to recently declaring their interest in a continuation of the 1975 Helsinki CSCE process in Madrid in 1980 and; I assume, also beyond that. We welcome that.

We would have to consider it a grave further aggravation of world tensions if all these kinds of conferences or processes were disrupted or discontinued. We are very content that we are presently the host country, in my home town of Hamburg, of one of the many preparatory meetings within the CSCE process.

Ladies and gentlemen, I will summarize: First, it is the task of politics in the present international crisis to preserve peace. It is our task to preserve the cohesion of the German nation. It is our task to preserve the cooperation of the peoples and states in Europe and to develop it.

Second: In order to preserve peace and protect our interests, we need partners. The Federal Republic of Germany, therefore, is a reliable partner and an ally itself in the European Community and in the North Atlantic alliance. Our close ties with the United States is the core of our security and of Berlin's viability. But we are tied to our friends in the United States not merely because of common security interests, but because we also have similar approaches to values and share an important part of history. Similarly, the close cooperation with France due to geographic, historical and moral reasons is a determining factor of our foreign policy.

Third: Balance is the basis of a peaceful world order. Balance must not be endangered by unilateral actions, neither regionally nor on a worldwide level. The Federal Republic of Germany makes indispensable contributions to this balance through its defense contributions; through its contributions to arms limitation with the aim of achieving the necessary military balance on as low a level as possible through its conceptional and diplomatic contributions to peaceful equalization; through its extensive contributions to economic assistance. No country can be more interested in balance and in detente policy than the divided German nation. [prolonged applause]

We Germans are in an especially exposed situation geographically, politically and militarily. Therefore, we have a special interest in the solution of international crises with peaceful means. [applause]

Fourth: We condemn the Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan which seriously endangers stability in that region and peace in general--thus, it also involves us. It must be ended. [applause]

Fifth: We are responding to this challenge together with our alliance partners and our partners in the European Community with a policy that is oriented toward common aims.

Sixth: Concrete elements of this policy are--first, to maintain the ability of the alliance so that the vital interests of the alliance can be jointly safeguarded and defended. We rely on that and we are making a significant contribution in this respect with the Bundeswehr, a contribution without which the alliance would be unable to fulfill its tasks; second, the defense ability of the Western alliance must be strengthened at present through increased defense expenditures by a real 3 percent, and also in 1980 through the further implementation of the long-term defense program of all alliance partners, through the implementation of both elements of NATO's dual decision of last December--the decision to close the arms gap and the decision to negotiate on a bilateral limitation of the medium-range potential, and through the strengthening of NATO's southern flank; third elements of this policy are our contributions toward political stabilization, economic stabilization and insurance of the independence of the states of the Third World; and, finally, concrete contributions within the framework of this policy are our efforts toward the continued development of arms limitation in the strategic field, in the area of the Vienna MBFR negotiations on conventional disarmament in Europe, and continuation of our efforts toward security and cooperation in Europe--as I have already said, from Helsinki to Madrid.

And we are making an effort in a difficult crisis to organize cooperation between East and West in such a way that there still is a chance for a new, positive start which can be utilized later on. [applause]

Seventh: A coordinated action by the West is facilitated and the possibilities of exerting influence on the behavior of the Soviet Union are enhanced the further the accords of the Western countries on a division of roles and labor extend.

Eighth: The predictability of our policy includes that we abide by treaties and agreements concluded and that we are also a reliable, predictable treaty partner in difficult situations.

Ninth: It is also true to say that, in this crisis, fear is a poor adviser. He who is afraid runs the risk of losing his perspective. He who is afraid might let commonsense go to hell; he might either stick his head into the sand and seek appeasement--whereupon he is threatened by a slow, gradual overpowering--or, conversely, he will be victimized by the danger of overreaction and the risk of hot conflict. Whoever fans fear acts against the interests of the German nation. [strong applause]

Tenth: What we must achieve is a policy which will leave the chance open for further improving and enhancing, upon the conclusion of the crisis, what had been accomplished previously. After the crisis, the cooperation of the peoples and states on the basis of balance, on the basis of their security, must be perfected for the benefit of the people.

For all this policy we need imagination. What we need is determination and readiness to sacrifice. We need spiritual and political discipline. What we need above all is thoughtful, calm commonsense and not emotion. [applause]

The longstanding fact that strong armed forces have been stationed for decades along our eastern border, armed forces of an Eastern state, of a superpower, has taught us Germans to pursue a foreign policy which does not swing back and forth between arrogance and muscle, on the one hand, and submission or mere turning away, on the other. Many politicians, many states of the world have learned long ago and included in their reckoning the fact that in this respect the Federal Republic of Germany is reliable, that one may rely on this state which steers a solid, steady course, a course which alleviates East-West relations between the peoples and between the states without thereby allowing the balance to be changed to the advantage of the Soviet Union. [applause]

It is a course which is based on the maintenance of balance. I am aware that a great majority of the German people, including the people in the GDR and, by the way, also a large segment of the male and female voters of the CDU and CSU, approve of this course of the Federal Government which is calm, thoughtful, free from emotion and based on commonsense. I know that a large majority [applause], I know that a large majority of Germans want this thoughtful course of commonsense to be retained. [applause] You, ladies and gentlemen of the opposition, also have public opinion polls. You also know that I am right in this respect. Thank you very much. [prolonged, strong applause]

Opposition Leader Kohl Replies

DW281846 Cologne Westdeutscher Rundfunk Network in German 0900 GMT 28 Feb 80 DW

[Speech by CDU/CSU floorleader Helmut Kohl in the Bundestag, replying to Federal Chancellor Schmidt's government statement--live]

[Text] Mr President, esteemed ladies and gentlemen: As was to be expected, Mr Chancellor, you are indignant and indignant is the proper term, because you have to account to the Bundestag.

You say it is an unusual procedure that you are called upon to speak here in the Bundestag. The undertone of offense is obvious. [commotion, slight applause]

It is indeed unusual, to stick to your way of rendering it, Mr Chancellor, that this Bundestag expects you to give an account in these dramatic times. [applause] Well, ladies and gentlemen, Mr Boelling yesterday welcomed this debate and Messrs Wehner and Bahr have most profoundly regretted the [word indistinct] debate. The two gentlemen probably believe that the Bundestag ought to adjourn until fall of this year anyway.

Ladies and gentlemen, we, the CDU/CSU, have demanded this debate because we advocate the view that 2 1/2 months after the Soviet aggression against Afghanistan and 6 weeks after the first Bundestag debate on the subject this year it is high time, it is in fact overdue, Mr Chancellor, for the Germans, our compatriots in the Federal Republic of Germany and our neighbors in all parts of the world, to finally gain clarity about the position of the Federal Government, about the position of the chancellor. [applause] Even your verbose summary at the end of your speech cannot gloss over the fact that again today you failed to provide the clarity of position, the clarity of the course. [applause].

This is your way--and I am picking up your word from the January debate concerning crisis management: a lot of reverberating words. There was a multivocal chorus of opinion from the government, from the SPD and the FDP, in these weeks which was contradictory--opinions which subsequently were qualified as personal views. Your opinion, Mr Chancellor, could actually only be learned about indirectly. In the press reports the amazed reader was told that Schmidt said "in the seclusion of private circles", or "visitors to the chancellor report." And today, in the grace accorded us, you pointed out that we should just look for the proper sources.

Dear Mr Chancellor, we are not in the seminar of a philosphical faculty or history department; we are in the Bundestag. You have been elected as chancellor and must account to the German people for your actions [applause], because it is not known exactly what you said in these confidential circles, what you are really thinking, what visitors report and write.

In your government statement on 17 January you declared with regard to the Soviet Union: "Especially in difficult times our policy must be clear." This is exactly what it has not been in these 6 weeks, Mr Chancellor. [applause] It is at this very point that everywhere in the world the doubts concerning the position of the Germans, of the Federal Republic of Germany, have arisen. And as you have just correctly said, the fact that these speculations were allowed to prevail has inflicted harm on us, on the country. At a time of a serious crisis the citizens of the Federal Republic of Germany expect the freely elected chancellor to determine the course.

Mr Chancellor, circumspectedness and prudence also means constant courage. Both are indispensable if prudence is to prevail. [applause]

We deem this debate important also on the eve of your trip to the United States. In your January government statement you justly pointed out that the situation that emerged as a result of the occupation of Afghanistan and its potential consequences--and I quote--inevitably affect us in Europe and us in Germany as well. I only wonder, Mr Chancellor, how did the Federal Government, how did some of our European friends, and how did the Americans react to this crisis in these weeks?

I need not discuss here in detail the U.S. measures which are known. What matters to me is not at all to investigate whether all these measures have their weak and strong points; if we regard the U.S. reaction, the reaction of U.S. President Jimmy Carter, in the overall interconnection, one thing is definite: The decisions of the U.S. President are clear and unmistakable in their objective and manifestation of will. But, Mr Chancellor, is it possible to say the same of your policy, namely, that it is clear and unmistakable?

The U.S. Government has called on its friends, and that means us, to act accordingly. You, Mr Chancellor, 6 weeks ago declared from this rostrum that we would do that. Now I ask you what is it really that you have done anyway? What have you done if we jointly strike a balance today, nearly 3 months after the Soviet aggression in Afghanistan? Even your very first reaction, I cannot but recall, testified to lack of answers and insecurity. Just think of your New Year's statement which still sounds in our ears. At the time you told our people about the alarm over the actions of the Soviet Union and its allies in Asia and Africa which you did not want to neglect to mention. You did not even muster the courage in those days to condemn clearly what all the world clearly condemned. [applause]

When the United States announced its countermeasures in the political, economic, and military sectors you and the foreign minister declared what all the Federal Government could not do because different preconditions existed. But to this day you have failed to say what we Germans could do on our own to support the Americans accordingly. Nor did you do that today. Again you verbosely dodged the issue. [applause]

After all, Mr Chancellor, it is not enough to announce that the Federal Republic of Germany will not sabotage the American boycott measures in the field of economic and technical-scientific relations without measures of our own having yet been discussed. You delivered your government statement on 17 January. At the time you announced, and I should at least be allowed to remind you, Mr Chancellor, of your own words after a 2-month period has elapsed, a carefully considered crisis management, a corresponding behavior like the United States, in particular within the framework of COCOM [Coordinating Committee]. Well, we have just experienced an example of your crisis management within the framework of the European Community.

The German-French statement of 5 February contains hard words directed toward the Soviet Union. It stresses loyalty toward the Atlantic alliance but, ladies and gentlemen, it does not contain a word about measures to be taken jointly or individually. They are announced for a later date, for the later date when a new strike of the same kind will take place.

Mr Federal Chancellor, crisis management in this case consisted of postponing action until a crisis of tomorrow, without having managed the crisis of today. [applause] As regards solidarity with the United States, it is striking--and you have noticed it also--that the German-French text does not contain the term "solidarity with the United States."

We have been told, Mr Federal Chancellor, through the respective authorities, that you telephoned President Carter after the German-French summit. President Carter said that he gained the impression from this talk that France had agreed to the place, date and content of the foreign ministers' meeting to take place in Bonn on 20 February. A few days later France dropped the planned meeting. It was a demonstration. Actually, it is hard to understand that you did not learn on Saturday, Sunday and Monday in Paris what was decided in Paris on Wednesday or Thursday. What is the sense of such a discussion in such a case? [applause] If I am supposed to term this as crisis management, I must actually turn your expression around and say crisis mismanagement, Mr Federal Chancellor. [applause]

What were the assessments of your policy at that time? First, it became obvious that consultation and concert between the Europeans was absolutely insufficient. Second, the suspicion of a German-French directorate was repeated. Third, leaving out Great Britain created the impression of intentional political isolation and it again fanned the discussion about a special relationship between London and Washington. Fourth, the mistrust and irritation of the smaller European partners about the German-French axis was clearly expressed.

Mr. Federal Chancellor, naturally you will deny all that. And when the child had fallen halfway into the well, you started feverish travel activities. You went to London, you went to Brussels. But, ladies and gentlemen, the voices remained. Your host in Brussels, Prime Minister Martens, criticized that the voice of Europe remained silent in a dangerous way. His predecessor, Leo Tindemans, stated that the attempt by France and the Federal Republic of Germany to develop a joint stance cannot replace a common European stance. The Luxembourg Prime Minister Pierre Werner and the Belgian foreign minister, your party affiliate Simonet, made extremely critical statements. The British foreign minister joined that statement.

Mr Federal Chancellor, is it crisis management when you have managed in a few weeks to confuse the consensus of the European countries in this way? That is what has happened. [applause]

Mr Federal Chancellor, the worst is--and it will become the central point of our dispute--that you have approved, supported or tolerated a policy--we cannot assess it today from our standpoint--that has aroused the suspicion of maneuvering us, the Federal Republic of Germany, into an alternative position between the United States and France. A policy of either or, instead of a policy of as well as.

Mr Federal Chancellor, you like to quote Konrad Adenauer. Read what he said about that fatal problem of German politics. I do not have the impression that in this most important piece of future German policy you have lived up to your task. Mr Federal Chancellor, such a policy will lead us into the danger of ending up in a position where we have been twice already in this century, namely, out in the cold. That must be said to you clearly! [applause]

Unfortunately, I must continue with this example. We welcome that in their joint statement France and the Federal Republic of Germany said that the European powers must assume special responsibility in order to maintain a basic balance together with their alliance partners. But, Mr Federal Chancellor, where are the measures? For weeks the defense minister of the Federal Republic of Germany has stated that he sees no necessity of increasing the German defense budget, although that had been agreed upon. Other members of the Federal Government have made positive statements. Today we received a satisfactory explanation of that point, and I want to stress that clearly. But, Mr Federal Chancellor, I ask myself: Why does this explanation come only today. Why did not you state it 4 or 6 weeks ago? Why did you need the pressure of the opposition to make the right decision? [shouts, applause]

Mr Federal Chancellor, where is your word, your advice, your advice to the German sportsmen with regard to a boycott of the Olympic games in Moscow? You have just chosen to criticize the fact that we were talking during your speech. I can enlighten you: We were studying your Olympic text and we failed to understand it. If you term this a joke, it is your business, Mr Federal Chancellor. [laughter, applause] It may be due to the fact that I have only enjoyed an old school education, but I fail to understand it. I quote verbatim: We begin from the assumption that the European and the American approaches will have merged into one by then. [laughter] What is meant is the deadline date for reporting in late May. I add in this connection: I do not want to promote any wishful thinking in connection with the 1980 summer games.

Ladies and gentlemen, the German athletes will now know exactly what the chancellor wants. [shouts, laughter, applause]

Many ideas pass through one's brain, Mr Federal Chancellor, but the meaning of your word is dark. You have introduced a new dimension into your policy by quoting Heraclitus who said that everything flows. [laughter, applause] However, Mr Federal Chancellor, is that a clear and unambiguous policy, as you said in your final summary, a policy that is supported by the majority of Germans? Apropos the majority of Germans, Mr Federal Chancellor, you have also chosen--I an coming closer and closer to your language [laughter]--you have chosen to point also to popula on research. Esteemed Mr Federal Chancellor, do you actually know what demoscopic research says in matters of the Olympic boycott? Since you quickly say what population research produced, I was amazed that you did not loudly demand an Olympic boycott, because two thirds of the populace urgently support an Olympic boycott. [applause] But this is not our topic. What matters here, Mr Chancellor, is not the question of public opinion polls when the Olympic boycott is involved. What matters are two important, fundamental positions.

First, the position: Is it conceivable that we want to steal away here into a niche in view of the utterances and the clear position of our most important, indispensable partner, the United States, until things come together? But even regardless of the position of the United States, I say: Can the Germans with their own historical experience relly keep quiet about it in view of 1936? And in connection with the chapter on development aid policy, where you said many good things, you also referred to the Islamabad conference, Mr Chancellor. Why was it that you referred to the Islamabad conference only there? If you want to make a good sailing for us in the Islamic world now, then you must join the boycott, just like the countries in Islamabad who numbered more than 30. This then is a clear policy. But I will tell you quite frankly why you are dodging the issue here. This does not involve any foreign policy reasons. It involves domestic policy reasons just a few months prior to the elections. I say this quite frankly. [applause] [answering an interjection] No, you cannot blame it on the jusos [young socialists], begging your pardon, as they [word indistinct] only in private. [applause] After all, nobody understands their jargon and their thinking. Let them go on that way; I have no objection.

No, ladies and gentlemen, naturally there is vehement debate among young people and, of course, there is a bitter discussion among young athletes who spent many years preparing for this important event and who have made great personal sacrifices. I have full sympathy for these fellow citizens when they say they want to participate in the Olympic games. This is very understandable. Only, ladies and gentlemen, it must be possible to make a quality judgement here. Particularly if we tell our athletes and justify the reasons why we are not going, we will meet with understanding; but not with your formula that things will converge after a certain period of time, with you being happy then that others have relieved you of the decision. [applause]

The picture which you and your government offer on this question, Mr Chancellor, is simply miserable. [applause] The foreign minister who obviously has more sense of and understanding for public opinion polling than you have, Mr Chancellor, was on the ball immediately . The economics minister, the defense minister and even the government spokesman--I do not know whether he will issue a denial in this case or not--came out for it. In contrast, colleague Karl Liebke came out on behalf of the SPD Bundestag group and declare the U.S. boycott simply great foolishness.

Ladies and gentlemen, naturally it is advertisement for the solidarity with the United States when the deputy floorleader of the strongest coalition group talks that way. If you, Mr Chancellor, wish to keep silent, then you should do so also in other fields of politics. The German and international press until most recently has been full of examples of how you criticize U.S. policies and the U.S. President. For this reason I am glad that you have found such good words for President Carter.today. I hope very much that the results of the New Hampshire primaries have contributed toward your realizing that this might be our most important partner in the next few years. [applause]

What matters to us is not to reject criticism per se. I merely reject criticism which is nothing but knowing all without the one leveling that criticism making it clear that he intends to support the American objectives with German measures in German politics. [applause] Ladies and gentlemen, anyone in Europe complaining about a lack of consultation by the Americans--and there are reasons for this complaint indeed--should think, especially in a phase of international tension, about who in the Western alliance is bearing the major burden for our security. Who knows better than we, the citizens of the Federal Republic of Germany, to what degree the Europeans, even among themselves and vis-a-vis the United States, are capable of early and adequate information and consultation. Mr Chancellor, 2 months passed until the European foreign ministers in Rome, upon the suggestion of the British Government, worked out an initial common answer to the Soviet aggression in Afghanistan. Is this really crisis management?

Earlier, in these critical weeks, the Europeans talked about each other more than they talked with each other. In no case do we demand a uniformity of the Western alliance in action, as this would be at odds with the European idea. Yet the measures of the individual alliance partners must not be mutually sabotaged or depreciated by obvious criticism. It is necessary to prevent individual member states from being plunged into political isolation and new distrust from emerging. This is why we demand equal cooperation and division of labor in partnership between the European alliance partners and within the North Atlantic community. But his requires, ladies and gentlemen, that all alliance partners act on the basis of common considerations and common objectives, that they coordinate their measures. The German-American relations, somebody much more close to you than to us, your colleague Conny Ahlers, wrote the other day, are off balance; they are suffering. Mr Chancellor, this is the result of your crisis management: off balance, suffering. [applause]

I realize that you will now do everything, if alone for reasons of 5 October, to demonstrate in Washington the picture of full conformity and solidarity. I hope this will not only be a picture but that it will be the reality, the substance of German policy. In the past several weeks most of us had an opportunity talk with important visitors from the United States. All of them, be it Kissinger, Schlesinger, Sonnenfeldt or whatever their names, lamented the fact that in the United States the opinion is gaining ground that the solidarity of the Europeans is slipping. I believe, Mr Chancellor, and I am afraid this is true for many in Europe. Well, just let him go on reading; everybody presents himself the way he deems necessary. [applause] But about your self-representation, Mr Wehner, we need not waste any words in this house. [applause]

I believe that there are many here in Germany and in Europe who have not yet comprehended the profound change in the people of the United States which has taken place over the past several months, who still do not take seriously enough that profound, determined change in the American foreign and defense policy. Thank God, we Germans should say; the United States in February 1980 crossed the wide valley of Vietnam and Watergate. Thank God this great nation is recalling again its great economic, military and, which is most important, its great moral strength.

This, ladies and gentlemen [applause, shouts] I knew you would shout here. I pondered whether to touch on this issue. But, ladies and gentlemen, you and broad sectors of the SPD have contributed decisively to the stupid anti-Americanism in Germany. [shouts, prolonged applause] Your mind tells you that without the protection and the shield of the United States there would not have been any freedom for the Federal Republic in these 30 years, but your political ideology and your emotion tell you to be anti-American due to an image of the world that can be understood only due to your ideological narrow-mindedness. [shouts, applause]

I say again, we, the CDU and the CSU, are happy--and with us, Mr Federal Chancellor, an enormous majority of the people of the Federal Republic of Germany who are also your voters--that the Americans again are in a position due to their moral strength to take over more and more the role history has given them. We are not cynical if one thing or another does not develop the way we would like it to develop. We want to do everything as good friends so that the Americans will be successful. If they are successful, we will also be successful in the Federal Republic of Germany. [applause]

If the impression gains ground in the American public that Europe even in this crisis will try to maintain a distance, that division of labor, this dubious word, will be understood in such a way that the United States will have to bear the burdens of security and defense policy while we Europeans will claim a monopoly on understanding and detente, then an isolationist reaction could not be stopped. Everybody who knows American history knows that also. Nobody knows better than we Germans how much we depend on American help.

Colleague Brandt, I have asked myself over and over again recently how you can talk like that, even though you experienced for decades in Berlin what American help means for us. [applause]

In saying this I have cast a light at one side of the balance of government policy--the balance of the government policy vis-a-vis the United States and the European Community. Ladies and gentlemen, in the direction of the East, in the direction of the Soviet Union, a balance of silence can be observed. A number of signals have been given to the Soviet Government with just one aim: Despite the Soviet aggression in Afghanistan, despite the repeated "no" of the Soviet Union with regard to NATO's suggestion to negotiate on the medium-range field, despite the deportation of Sakharov, despite the cancellation of talks with Mr Honecker and the Hungarian and CSSR foreign ministers, despite the fact that the Soviet Union has put the detente politicians on ice, some parts of the Federal Government--you, Mr Federal Chancellor--headed by the SPD indicate constantly that one ought to cling to the present policy as if nothing had happened.

I want to prove that. We can hear the formulations daily: It is a matter of preserving and developing what has been achieved. That was said in your January statement. Who causes doubt about this, or who announces it except the Soviet Union? It is being said that the Soviet Union must not lose face. I ask: What kind of face can the Soviet Union lose now? If it withdraws from Afghanistan, it will lose the face of an aggressor, and that would be desirable for world peace. [applause]

It is being said that the Soviet Union has underrated the effects of the intervention and judged them erroneously. I ask in return: Did not the Soviet leadership simply view the pros and cons and concluded that the advantages would prevail and that the disadvantages could be endured?

You, Mr. Federal Chancellor, said that the "no" of the Soviet Union to the offer of NATO to negotiate in the medium-range field was not meant so seriously and that it was not the last word in this matter. I would like to know on what judgement that opinion is based. You said today that the Polish communists have suggested a European disarmament conference in Warsaw. The federal foreign minister and his party have shouted an initial "hooray" in this connection. Was there not a French proposal made months ago to which the Warsaw Pact states could have agreed long ago? Was this reaction coordinated with the Western allies, Mr Federal Foreign Minister?

General Secretary Brezhnev has repeated in a stereotyped way the statement that the Soviet Union will withdraw its troops from Afghanistan when foreign interference against the government and the people of Afghanistan is ended. You, Mr Federal Chancellor, consider this Soviet imputation, which fully turns the cause and the effect upside down as a sign of the beginning of thought in Moscow. [shouts] Mr Federal Chancellor, do you seriously think that they are only beginning to think about this in Moscow just now?

The federal foreign minister sees some light at the end of the tunnel, which does not fit into his usual statements at all.

Ladies and gentlemen, all this is being done in view of a suggestion that has been sharply criticized all over the world and which is just an old Leninist principle, namely, that the murderer is not guilty, but the victim must prove his innocence.

Ladies and gentlemen, you, Mr Federal Chancellor, have again demonstrated your restraint with regard to participation in the Olympic games. You said that it is a matter of giving the Russians an opportunity to create conditions permitting everybody to take part. One must not keep them from doing this by making hasty Western reactions. What are you doing here, Mr Federal Chancellor, is the old method of decorating oneself quickly with somebody else's feathers in order to cover up one's own nakedness.

I do not want to assess individual parts of Brezhnev's speech. I assume that for the sake of peace the Western alliance will exploit every opportunity to examine any serious intentions of Moscow. But does anybody here in our country seriously believe that Brezhnev's speech has been prompted by the obvious silence of the German federal chancellor or the silence of the Europeans? No, Brezhnev saw himself forced to make this speech because the American President has shown a firm attitude. [applause] We must all indeed thank President Jimmy Carter for that.

I think the federal chancellor would render an important service to the Atlantic alliance if he would express our common gratitude in Washington. I very much agree, and you noted our applause, Mr Federal Chancellor, that you should stress in Washington the statesmanlike achievement of President Carter in connection with the challenge in Iran. We fully agree to that. But I would have liked to extend that list a bit, including the gratitude for Carter's clear and determined stance following the Soviet aggression in Afghanistan. [applause]

On 31 January, Mr Chancellor, you wrote a letter to General Secretary Brezhnev which, to go by all that we were able to derive from it, has one key passage saying that, especially in difficult times, one must talk; that we will continue our policy; that it is necessary to preserve what has been achieved; and that the Soviet Union must not close its mind to the anxieties of the West. What will Mr Brezhnev presumably reply? Not more than that is solely up to the West for detente policy to be continued. To the extent that your attitude and that of the Federal Government must be appreciated, I have tried to do that; but the actual picture of the Federal Republic and of its policy becomes plain only when the policy of the SPD party leadership is added. And that is not just anybody; this is the predecessor in your office, retired Chancellor Willy Brandt. It is Herbert Wehner; it is all those who really saw to it that you are there as chancellor.

You see, Mr Chancellor, Mr Brandt publicly declared that solidarity with the United States is one thing, that representation of German interests is another. [commotion] The way he understands it, this can only mean that detente is in German interests which would only be burdened by solidarity with the United States. This, he says, is not the time for nice-sounding protestations of loyalty, because the Americans do not have any codetermination with us. Naturally they do not. But if the Americans had not had a partial say over us, in an essential way, then I cannot but wonder, Mr Mayor of Berlin from important times, what would have become of us anyway? [applause]

These are strong words of Chairman Brandt. And, ladies and gentlemen, and colleague Brandt, you really cannot deny this because it is quite concrete. What distance from our American friends is expressed by this choice of words, in these formulations! [applause] How do you propose to make it clear to a man in U.S. politics, be it in the Senate or in the administration, who has a command of our mother tongue that this is the language of friends? After all, the distance, perhaps the disappointed distance, is obvious. This is the language of a man who in his time, as governing mayor of Berlin, constantly went to the Western capitals when it was necessary to mobilize support for Berlin against the pressure of the Soviet Union.

To make it clear here--you, Mr Chancellor, have kept silent about this case in a truly dextrous slalom. We definitely reject a mediation role of SPD party chairman Willy Brandt, whatever its nature or designation. [applause] This is not in keeping with either our state-political understanding or our alliance policy interpretation. And, ladies and gentlemen, it is necessary to recall time and again that it is part of the declared instruments of communist governments to pursue foreign policy on two levels--the state level and the party level. Such a double-track policy is inconceivable to us as Christian Democrats. We have a clear order: an elected chancellor who has been vested with the duty of defining the guidelines of policy by the Constitution; we have a foreign minister who is responsible for foreign policy. If the chancellor has failed to muster the courage to call Mr Brandt by name, we might perhaps harbor the great expectation today that the federal foreign minister will find the necessary words out of his special situation. [applause]

You, Mr Chancellor, and the foreign minister declare to the point of nausea your readiness for talks with the Soviet Union. I remind you of your intention to go to Moscow. You are waiting for a time schedule proposal from the Soviets. What will happen then, anyway? Will it not be a slap in the face in the event Mr. Brandt gets an invitation to Moscow? What kind of foreign policy concepts are these? This is crisis management a la Helmut Schmidt. [applause]

The Federal Republic of Germany is a close alliance partner of the United States. It is a solid component of the Western alliance which you, Mr Chancellor, declared with the approval of all of us here in the Bundestag 6 weeks ago. We are affected by the Soviet aggression in Afghanistan just as the United States is affected and just as the European partners are affected. How should we as the Federal Republic be able to mediate between two superpowers in such a starting position as an affected, dependent medium power? It would really be enticing to watch the drama which the Federal Government and you, ladies and gentlemen, staged on this issue in the past few days. Let me say only this much: I expect a clear word from the man involved, colleague Brandt. I would have expected by now that the Federal Government would have freed the Americans from embarrassment and from the outset would have deprived Moscow of any chance of promoting discord and trouble in our country. [applause] Naturally I would have expected it of you, Mr Chancellor. The cryptic character of what is contained in your government statement includes a reference to a DER SPIEGEL interview which, if at all, at the time could be understood only as an answer to Willy Brandt. But I am afraid that even now you lack the strength to prevail in your own party and Bundestag group which in turn makes a clear, proper word impossible here. This is the experience we have gained with you. [applause]

Against the background of the balance sheet of German and European foreign policy after Afghanistan, we are confronted with the essential question of what the effect of our policy, the policy I just described, on the Soviet Union must be like. I shall try to elucidate this by the example of the Bonn visit by the U.S. secretary of state.

From Moscow's viewpoint, the main antagonist is visiting his most important ally in Europe, the Federal Republic of Germany, underscoring it, as we know, by stopping over in Bonn first before proceeding to Rome, Paris and London. Ladies and gentlemen, the talks are being held on the day on which the American ultimatum to the Soviet Union concerning the Olympic boycott expires.

What then, is the result of these German-American talks in Bonn in view of such a simple reiteration of facts, a result which is also visible to the Soviet Union? The chancellor continues to keep himself covered on the Olympic issue, and not even the foreign minister is prepared to repeat his earlier statements that he could not imagine German sportsmen appearing in Moscow when Americans were absent. Both sides speak of the necessity of a long-term concept as a reply to the Soviet aggression without such a concept being clearly outlined and without our side, the German side, indicating what contribution we propose to make to this end.

The commentary follows posthaste. A few days later, on 24 February, we could read in PRAVDA: On his gallop through Europe Vance has not accomplished much. The original plan of the United States to demonstrate the so-called Atlantic strength in Bonn was a flop. Bonn declares itself in solidarity with the United States with words but yielded on only one point.

From the Soviet Union's point of view the West, 2 1/2 months later, sees the aggression against Afghanistan as follows: First, the Soviet Union sees a Federal Republic that promotes the impression that, because of its approach to detente, it is curtailing solidarity with the United States and slackening ties with the leading power with the intention of at least aiming for a special political role. Second, it has a European Community and a Western alliance which, carefully said, seems to be unable to react quickly and cohesively.

Ladies and gentlemen, I fear that the Soviet leadership even today could have arrived at a conclusion that is very dangerous for us, namely, that the actual gain of its aggression in Afghanistan could be found less in the achieved option in the direction of the Gulf region and more in the experience that the Atlantic alliance, and most of all the Europeans, are in disagreement. [applause] This assessment is really not fantasy. The Soviet propaganda offensive of the last week has aimed exactly for that gap in the Western alliance.

I quote just a few voices: Federal Chancellor Schmidt, it says verbatim, has condemned the inconsiderate and adventurous course of the current American administration and declared the preservation of the achievements of detente to be important. This is an official Soviet voice. And then, colleague Brandt, the following: SPD Chairman Willy Brandt stressed the necessity of an independent representation of the interests of most European states; Carter cannot speak for the West Germans, stated Willy Brandt. And then, this must not be missing, TASS praises the sensible assessment of Egon Bahr. [shouts]

Ladies and gentlemen, a particularly notorious voice from the GDR, Karl-Eduard Schnitzer, wants to see the words of Herbert Wehner, and I quote him verbatim: Enter the hearing of certain politicians in Western Europe and Washington. [shouts]

Ladies and gentlemen, [shouts] I do not hold it against you that these voices speak about you like this. I hold it against you, however, that your policy touched off these commentaries. That is what I am complaining about here. [lengthy applause]

I ask you, Mr Federal Chancellor, to take half an hour to render an account for yourself; would you not have to admit to yourself that the policy you have supported in these weeks has naturally encouraged the Soviet Union? Was the Soviet Union not forced to gain the impression that many Europeans are prepared to forget Afghanistan if some sort of detente gesture is offered? Every one of us here in the hall--I find that we need not repeat it over and over again; we discussed it long enough in January--is naturally in favor of detente. Or, as the federal foreign minister likes to formulate it now--for realistic detente. For us it was always realistic detente. But we cannot pretend that the world in February 1980 is the same as it was in February 1979 although we pointed this development out to you at that time, also with a view to Soviet arms policy.

I will go a bit further. Doesn't the Soviet Union, because of its experience and its way of thinking, just have to let sufficient time elapse in order to be able to expect new Western advance concessions for which it need make only one concession in return, namely, show its preparedness for new talks?

Mr Federal Chancellor, did you ask yourself the question under these points of view what a high price we will have to pay some time for the further delay of decisions and countermeasures? I say this very quietly and seriously: Did you ask yourself what a German Olympic boycott will be worth in May, compared with the loss of confidence, with the irritation and disappointment in broad parts of the American populace? You know as well as I do, and I say it again, what an enormous psychological change has taken place fortunately in the United States in a few months. Our policy is a miserable answer to this new fact in the United States. [prolonged applause] We, the CDU/CSU, believe that such a policy is detrimental to German interests, that it endangers our security, that it encourages the Soviet Union and thus jeopardizes peace.

Your talks in Washington, Mr Federal Chancellor, offer a chance, the chance of enlivening German-American friendship and of strengthening the Western alliance through measures and not words. I find that the beginning must be made here in the Bundestag. You ought to be grateful, therefore, for this debate. You ought to be grateful that the strongest political grouping in the Federal Republic of Germany offers support to you here on this central issue. We expect from you a convincing statement about the general concept of your policy, the clarity [klarheit] and the aims you want to pursue together with the Western alliance partners and particularly with the United States. We expect an unmistakable statement on the contribution you are prepared to make within the framework of division of labor in the Western alliance.

I mentioned the discussion about the Olympic boycott and I state regretfully that after today's debate the discussion about the German approach will be more confused than prior to today's debate.

Second, we demand a statement on the German contribution to the defense ability of the Western alliance and the Bundeswehr in particular, and on the German share in the increasing burdens the United States will have to carry worldwide, also on behalf of our security. I would have welcomed it, Mr Federal Chancellor, if you had told us frankly what kind of developments we would expect in a few weeks with regard to the supplementary budget. What the federal finance minister has said in this respect certainly cannot be the last word of the Federal Government.

Third, we expect and demand from you, Mr Federal Chancellor, that in your talks with the American President binding commitments will be made with regard to the Federal Republic's preparedness to examine our foreign trade policy with a view to the aims you have pointed out so often in order to demonstrate solidarity with the United States in limiting [trade in] strategically important high technology goods and merchandise. We expect a clear word. A part of what we expect has been at least hinted at here, but it was not sufficient. We expect a clear word about the German contribution with regard to the political and economic stabilization in the Near and Middle East and other regions of the Third World.

Mr Federal Chancellor, everybody knows that Washington has clear expectations with regard to the Federal Republic of Germany. Everybody knows that we must carry greater burdens for our security and thus for peace in the world and that we must make greater sacrifices. All of us have been talking for weeks about the necessary sacrifices which we and our fellow citizens will be facing. In a dialog and publicly Franz Josef Strauss and myself have repeatedly declared our readiness as the CDU/CSU to assume a share in the responsibility for this. Yet, Mr Chancellor, a common platform between the government and the opposition cannot be limited to our talking about sacrifices and being ready to make sacrifices while you and the SPD and the FDP distribute election presents. [applause]

Under our Constitution it is the task of the chancellor of the Federal Republic of Germany to determine the policy guidelines. This also means telling us, the citizens of the country, what matters and what we have to expect. Mr Chancellor, my question is: When will you finally do that?

It is in our common interest, it is in the interest of all citizens of the Federal Republic of Germany, that your talks with the U.S. President take a successful course. Act in this spirit. We wish you, and thus us, success. [prolonged applause]

COMMENTATOR VIEWS CARTER'S NEW HAMPSHIRE SUCCESS

DW281708 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 28 Feb 80 p 1 DW

[Article signed Ein.: "The Nose in Front"]

[Text] Jimmy Carter has opened a door. It can lead to the street of victory. The key word is New Hampshire. Every American knows what it means that the President has won the first real primary here. For the Europeans the statement suffices that Carter now has the best chances of holding the highest office for a second time. That will make some politicians of the old continent ponder

Carter's success ought to make them maintain more restraint in future when they deal critically with the policy of America. Because he who will possibly be at the levers of the world power until 1984 is politically a giant.

Carter turned out to be a great election fighter. He did not even descend to the arena to elicit the votes of the electorate. Spiritually he was unpretentious in this primary campaign. He acted according to the wise insight of Disraeli that, in politics, the word is victorious and not the idea. He said he could not leave the White House because the crisis demands his presence in the political headquarters. He was riding on the waves of the crisis--and he will continue to do so. When it is either do or die, the Americans follow the chief they have elected. They are transposing their hopes into confidence in the man in the White House. Even the Kennedy name was bound to lose its attractive force in view of this attitude. And Since Senator Ted Kennedy set the wrong accent to boot, he was defeated.

An important decision has also been made in the Republican camp. Reagan outdistanced Bush, and that even though the former governor of California and attractive screen hero was so far not had much luck with his election campaign managers. He has charisma, this old Ronald Reagan. Besides, like Carter, he acted in keeping with the Disraeli maxim. He, too, put his stakes on the word. For the election campaign this means crisis again. How else could it be? Is the bad situation into which the Soviets have plunged us by their assault responsible for releasing the hawk skyward? Well, American election campaign tactics are not that simple. Yet the so-called liberals with their secret longing for the left in times of crisis stand little chance of being heeded by the sober American voter. The Soviet reality contradicts them every day. And as long as this is so, Carter and Reagan will be ahead.

MINISTRY DECLINES COMMENT ON NUCLEAR TEST REPORT

[Summary] France is reported to have carried out a powerful underground nuclear test on the Mururoa Atoll 6 days ago. At least this is what a dispatch from Papeete, Tahiti says. The Defense Ministry in Paris has declined to confirm or deny the report. However, last year French authorities pointed out that nuclear tests would continue to be carried out at regular intervals. France began these underground tests 5 years ago.

VISITING CYPRIOT MINISTER HOLDS TALKS WITH OFFICIALS

NC272116 Paris AFP in English 2047 GMT 27 Feb 80 NC

[Text] Paris, Feb. 27, (AFP)--Plans for massive economic aid to Turkey have given the West leverage to influence Turkish leaders to renew talks on the still-unresolved Cyprus situation, Cypriot Foreign Minister Nikos Rolandhis said here today. Mr. Rolandhis, who is accompanying Cypriot President Spiros Kiprianou during official visits to Paris, London and Rome, said that the southern flank of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) and Greek-Turkish relations could not be strengthened without resolving the Cyprus situation. He referred to the large Turkish military presence in Cyprus.

President Kiprianou is to meet with French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing and French Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet tomorrow. He will then travel to London and Rome.

Cypriot officials said that Britain has "particular obligations" regarding Cyprus because the British Government is one of three powers guaranteeing the island's independence.

Mr. Rolandhis said the United States and Britain have reacted positively during contacts on the question of Cyprus.

Mr. Francois-Poncet said in a separate statement that France will, within the context of international cooperation, do its share to help the Turkish Government overcome its present difficulties.

In a document on Franco-Turkish relations to the French Cabinet, Mr Francois-Poncet also said that France places heavy emphasis on its relations with Turkey and stresses that peace in the country is essential to the region's stability.

KIPRIANOU TERMS TALKS WITH GISCARD 'CONSTRUCTIVE'

[Excerpts] The president of the republic, Mr Kiprianou, has ended his visit to Paris, where he met with the French president, Mr Giscard d'Estaing, and has left for London. President Kiprianou, who will remain in the British capital until Tuesday, will meet the British prime minister, Mrs Thatcher, tomorrow.

After his meeting with President Giscard d'Estaing, President Kiprianou, in a statement in Paris, said that the meeting had been very useful and constructive. He added: We had a long exchange of views on subjects of common interest as well as on bilateral relations, which are exceptional. We also had, the president added, a long discussion on the Cyprus problem and I briefed French President Giscard on the latest developments regarding the problem.

Asked whether France can help in lifting the deadlock, Mr Kiprianou replied that all can help within the UN framework.

The Nicosia radio correspondent in Paris reports that diplomatic circles have stated that President Giscard d'Estaing has assured President Kiprianou that France will help to promote a just Cyprus solution. The correspondent adds that the same circles have said that the talks were substantive and covered all aspects of the Cyprus problems with particular emphasis on the prospects for the resumption of the intercommunal dialog and the role that the French Government could play in this direction. According to the same diplomatic circles, the outcome of the talks fully met President Kiprianou's expectations.

The republic's foreign minister, Mr Rolandhis, who is accompanying President Kiprianou, has met in Paris the French foreign minister, Mr Francois-Poncet. The substantive talks were held in a cordial atmosphere. They were a continuation of President Kiprianou's talks with the President Giscard d'Estaing. During the talks economic issues were discussed, particularly the renewal of the economic protocol between Cyprus and France.

In the meantime, a reliable source in Paris has stated that Mr Francois-Poncet has assured Mr Rolandhis that the economic aid which--as was announced yesterday--France will grant to Turkey is routine aid and that identical aid was given last year.

The French minister reiterated to Mr Rolandhis that France will try to help in every way both in the resumption of the intercommunal talks as well as in achieving progress.

LE MONDE VIEWS EEC PROPOSAL FOR 'NEUTRAL' AFGHANISTAN

[Editorial: "The Nine, the USSR and Afghanistan"]

[Text] Mr Carter's "ultimatum" trying to persuade the Soviets to evacuate Afghanistan expired on 20 February. As could easily have been predicted, Moscow totally ignored the U.S. threats: Far from reducing its manpower stationed in Afghanistan, the Kremlin has apparently strengthened it to subdue a widening revolt. The Olympic games weapon, brandished immediately after the food weapon, was not enough to make the USSR withdraw. This, too, could have been foreseen, since the Soviet leaders--wrongly presented as being divided into "hawks" and "doves"--believe that their Afghanistan intervention was to protect their interests.

Under these conditions, the initiative of the Nine's foreign ministers in Rome on Tuesday in favor of a "neutral" Afghanistan, "removed from the rivalry between the powers," could offer Moscow an honorable way out. The ministers seemed singularly lacking in conviction, however. Their approach, which they did not even dare term a proposal or recommendation, thus risks being seen by the Kremlin as a purely symbolic gesture.

It is certain that the Soviet Army will not leave Afghanistan simply because the West or the Islamic world repeated to it that its entry there is inadmissible--indeed unacceptable. Pious words cannot be any more effective than the threat to boycott the Moscow Olympics or the limitation of grain supplies. Clumsy actions may even provoke a Soviet reaction opposite to that sought: for example, a nationalist, patriotic revival which one would be wrong to underestimate and which could tend toward xenophobia.

If, on the other hand, the Soviets do not stamp out Afghan resistance--and this, it seems, will be the deciding factor in any development of this affair--the Nine's initiative would merit being taken up more forcefully, and could then be conducive to a peaceful solution to the crisis.

Who, in fact, cannot want a neutral Afghanistan? Such was the case before the April 1978 Kabul "revolution." Can it be claimed that Soviet national interests suffered thereby until then? That is indeed where Moscow's great responsibility for the crisis and the origin of the West's legitimate anxieties lay: Will it always be said that Moscow only considers relations of goodneighborliness and cooperation with a bordering country as a step on the road to domination or, indeed, annexation?

Two recent signs allow a very slight optimism: The Kremlin seems to fear a spread of tension as though it had wrongly assessed the reactions to the Afghan invasion; there also seems to be anxiety over the military difficulties in the field. At the beginning of the week, the Italian undersecretary of state at the Foreign Ministry, Mr Zamberletti, went to Bucharest at the request of Mr Ceausescu. The Romanian number one, who recently had talks with Mr Gromyko, is reported to have asked his Italian visitor what guarantees of noninterference could be given if the Soviets evacuated Afghanistan.

The Nine's statement is the outline of an answer. It remains to be seen whether Moscow is starting to show awareness or whether this is just a trial balloon from Mr Ceausescu on his own.

L'HUMANITE: BREZHNEV OFFERING WEST 'A WAY OUT'

LD281153 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 25 Feb 80 p 1 LD

[Yves Moreau editorial: "Afghanistan: A Way Out"]

[Text] The not unexpected recent events in Afghanistan show that a troubled situation persists in that country. The causes are varied.

Some stem clearly from within. A feudal country could not make the transition to the modern age without encountering immense difficulties. The blunders and even the crimes committed by the new government in 1978 and 1979 have, moreover, created a breeding ground for a counterrevolution which calls itself religious and, through the Kabul rioters, raises Islam's flag and banners bearing the words of the Koran.

How could the Afghans avoid being deceived when in certain Muslim countries, even the antiimperialist elements confuse the Kabul demonstrations with shows of faith?

But most serious element is unquestionably the fact that the United States, Britain and their allies are striving to make the most of the Afghan troubles in order to interfere in the country's internal affairs, to infiltrate armed groups and to use the Soviet assistance requested by the Afghan Government as a pretext to try to extract some sort of revenge in Kabul after the defeat in Tehran, while strengthening an already threatening military presence in the Indian Ocean and, more generally, to endanger detente and restart the arms race.

From Pakistan truckloads of rebels trained and armed in Pakistani camps cross the Afghan frontier. There is no shortage of Western journalists' reports on this: Elsewhere we publish the central part of one such report.

These are the interventions which brought the Soviet contingents to Afghanistan. Brezhnev recently brought to mind that the Soviet troops would be withdrawn as soon as foreign interference ceased. And he added: "Let the United States and Afghanistan's neighbors insure an end to this interference, and the Soviet military assistance will cease to have any point."

The Soviet head of state's speech confirmed that the USSR's action is in keeping with international law (article 51 of the UN Charter) and is devoid of the expansionist aims that Western propaganda has attributed to it. But above all, by suggesting the giving of guarantees, Brezhnev is offering Washington and its allies a way out.

They could not ignore this. Hence Bonn's recognition that this is an "important" speech and that it would be a "mistake to see it solely as propaganda." Hence the promises from the State Department, the Foreign Office and the Quai d'Orsay to "study" Brezhnev's proposal "carefully."

Nevertheless, when Helmut Schmidt claimed to see a sign that "Moscow was starting to think," he was clearly trying to make people believe that, until now, the Soviets have acted hastily and in an unacceptable way.

And when he treats Brezhnev's initiative as "an interesting" reaction to last Tuesday's Rome statement by the Nine's foreign ministers, he is forgetting that in recommending a neutralization of Afghanistan, this statement was an interference incompatible with that country's sovereignty.

Does Giscard's diplomacy interpret the Nine's statement differently? Did Mr Francois-Poncet not say that it was a question of seeking ways and means which could bring about the Soviet forces' withdrawal from Afghanistan? Let Mr Francois-Poncet not look too long: The means have been found. Why, after an "attentive study" of Brezhnev's speech, has the French Government not associated itself with the Soviet proposals for guarantees against foreign interference in Afghanistan?

If it does not do so, what should one make of its sincerity?

The latter is even more subject to caution since the scandalous absence of a denial during the last 2 days of revelations made on board Mr Vance's plane concerning the results of the secretary's Paris visit. These revelations, published by AFP and REUTER, state that Mr Vance achieved the definition of several common goals including "the strengthening of the West's defensive deployment, the adoption of precise sanctions such as the boycott of the Moscow Olympics and the cutting back of East-West exchanges, and the strengthening of the West's position in Southeast Asia and the Gulf."

What is the Giscard government really seeking with regard to Afghanistan? A way out? Breznhev has just provided one.

The Atlantic bloc's "common goals?" Mr Vance is stating them. They signal cold war and the most dire adventurism.

LE FIGARO SUPPORTS U.S. OLYMPIC BOYCOTT CALL

LD251547 Paris LE FIGARO in French 21 Feb 80 pp 1, 5 LD

[Max Clos article: "The Next Shock"]

[Text] President Carter has decided that American athletes will not go to the Olympic games in Moscow. He could hardly have done anything else. Soviet intervention forces are still in Afghanistan, fighting is going on and nothing indicates that Brezhnev has any intention of withdrawing his troops in the foreseeable future.

The boycott is--apparently--a "derisory" measure in view of the gravity of the world situation. Our answer to this is that if this measure is as "derisory" as it has been asserted, it is hard to explain the scale of the campaign in support of participation organized by the Communist Party. Furthermore, things being what they are, a "derisory" measure is better than no measure at all.

Mr Cyrus Vance is arriving in Paris today. The purpose of his visits to European capitals is obviously to ask for support for Washington's policy. The U.S. secretary of state is faced with the problem of ascertaining whether the United States can rely in practice on a concrete demonstration of that "Atlantic solidarity" which France wholeheartedly supports as long as one carefully remains in the realm of principle. In the absence of any more substantial support, Mr Vance would probably make do with assurances with respect to the problem of the boycott however "derisory" it may be. In this newspaper, we have adopted a clear stand on this point, and we believe that France should eventually, if necessary, support the Americans.

There exists in France a strong current of opinion which actively opposes any "alinement with Washington." The supporters of this view are not short of argument. They have put forward two major ones.

First of all, they emphasize, important matters are not dealt with in public, and it is therefore pointless to throw your weight about and make resounding statements, in short, brandish a wooden sword.

Problems are resolved through diplomatic measures, and the club of statesmen, including Brezhnev, is perfectly capable of mastering the situation.

Furthermore, the moderates say, you can neither support nor, a fortiori, aline yourself on a nonexistent policy. And it is quite true that since he assumed power Mr Carter has given the impression of being wretchedly "irresolute." In the face of Soviet pressure, the United States has seemed to lack either the determination or the means or both for taking counteraction.

This has led to a general retreat by the West from its positions--in Africa, for instance, which has been abandoned to the Cubans and East Germans except a few centers of resistance organized by the French: Kolwezi and Chad. Hence the following conclusion reached by the advocates of detente at any cost: If the greatest economic and military world power is abandoning the fight, why should we throw our weight about in the limelight? "Atlantic solidarity" has been mentioned but you cannot be in solidarity with something that does not exist.

All this is perfectly consistent. However, the main problem remains: European nations have agreed to condemn Soviet aggression against Afghanistan. At the Paris summit last week, the FRG and France expressed the view that detente "would not withstand another shock of this kind."

Question: What practical measures are Western nations prepared to adopt to either prevent any "new shock of this kind" or organize a counteraction if it were to take place?

COLUMNIST SEES ROOM FOR FRENCH DETENTE INITIATIVE

[Max Leon article: "France's Privileged Position"]

[Text] From ultimatum to threats, the White House has created in recent months--and especially since the beginning of January--an international atmosphere favorable to an arms race and to suspension of current negotiations. The more Mr Carter distorted the truth about Soviet intentions--in order to make people accept an increase in military expenditure, a strengthening of NATO and a reduction in working people's living standards--the harder he banged on the table. To revive, consolidate and even extend political detente to the military sphere, it is now indispensable to prevent any fait accompli. The Pentagon and its close allies in London and Bonn are above all afraid of the people's intervention and public opposition to their plans. [paragraph continues]

After extracting from NATO the decision to produce 572 new nuclear missiles in the United States (a deal worth some $20 billion) in mid-December 1979, they are now trying to implement this program by first choosing in Great Britain and the FRG sites most suited for the deployment of launch pads.

Obstructing the NATO Program

However, there still is time to act. The USSR and the other Warsaw Pact members have left the door open for negotiations. Unlike Washington, Leonid Brezhnev stated in PRAVDA on 13 January: "We want to pursue talks initiated in many spheres with a view to halting the arms race. Obviously, this also applies to a decrease in military confrontation in Europe. Let me repeat this: We advocate talks, but honest talks pursued on an equal footing and showing respect for the principle of equal security. It is this kind of talks which we have recently proposed with respect to medium-range nuclear missiles. No one can expect that the Soviet Union will accept the conditions put forward by NATO, which aims at starting negotiations from a position of strength."

A few days earlier this Soviet initative was clearly defined during talks between the PCF and the CPSU chaired by Georges Marchais and Leonid Brezhnev. The joint communique adopted on 10 January pointed the way to this by stating: "A recision of the NATO decision with respect to the production and deployment of new American missiles in Europe, or an effective suspension of its implementation, would make it possible to engage in effective negotiations with respect to the question of medium-range missiles." This means that it is possible to evade the Pentagon trap, the vicious circles of the arms race.

Should France remain on the sideline on the pretext that it is no longer a member of the NATO integrated organization and, consequently, does not participate in decisionmaking in Brussels?

A lame excuse!

The Giscard government accepts and proclaims that the French forces would be an integral part of "Western defense" in the event of a conflict, and in December, at the time when NATO decisions were adopted, it expressed its "satisfaction" with the agreement on a program involving 572 missiles.

In Support of French Initiatives

Is it possible that there is a "silent" majority in France in favor of stockpiling along our borders new nuclear arms even more dangerous than their predecessors?

Opinion polls have shown that the contrary is true. The French people are profoundly committed to detente and East-West cooperation and want to see the mess resulting from the arms race ended. A really independent government would rely on our country's privileged position and our recent achievements to play a major role in any efforts to reduce the present tensions and revive negotiations on disarmament.

Why does Mr Giscard d'Estaing persist, for instance, in limiting to conventional arms a proposal for a European conference which, under the aegis of the Madrid conference to take place next fall, could well achieve unanimous support by the 35 countries which participated in the Helsinki conference, a European conference which would first take measures to restore confidence and could later take concrete steps to reduce forces and arms of all kinds?

Why should the Elysee not take any initiative with a view to consultations on the question of medium-range arms in Europe, since it is also in France's interest to limit competition in this sphere, if for no other reason, in order to maintain the credibility of our defense forces without being drawn into an exhausting and dangerous race?

Why does the French Government not take its inspiration from De Gaulle's exemplary 1966 initiative and ignore the PCF suggestion that it negotiate a mutual security treaty with the USSR? Such an agreement could serve as a model to many other countries for restoring confidence between the continent's Eastern and Western regions.

Is it such a prisoner of the Atlantic alliance, of its disguised integration with NATO, of its secret agreements with Bonn and f the noecolonialist imperatives of arms monopolies?

Be that as it may, it should act promptly if it wants to show that it is not.

PCF CC SECRETARY DENIES LEADERSHIP SPLIT

LD281001 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 23 Feb 80 p 3 LD

[Unattributed report: "A Curious Way of Looking at the PCF"]

[Text] Jean Colpin, PCF Central Committee secretary, was interviewed yesterday evening on Radio-Television Luxembourg. When asked if the Politburo members' "silence" meant that Georges Marchais was isolated, Jean Colpin stated in particular:

"That does not hold water. If it were simply up to us, we would be prepared at any time to give our views on radio and television on the few times we are invited. The listeners would then hear that there are no problems within our party leadership. I must say that it is a curious way of looking at our party if the assumption is that Georges Marchais' opinions and initiatives are expressed in isolation. These opinions and initiatives are debated and decided collectively, and I must say that the Politburo is united, now as ever, like the fingers of a hand."

Questioned next on the fact that several cells have asked Jean Elleinstein to leave the PCF because of his increasing attacks on the party, Jean Colpin explained: "Certain cells and members have a perfect right to take such a step. If Jean Elleinstein is authorized to use the means offered to him to express his disagreement with our party's policy, I do not see why the members who disagree with his attitude, and they are in the majority in the PCF, should not also have the right to express their opinion and to be roused to indignation."

The journalist pointed out that Georges Marchais has stated that the PCF no longer expells people: Jean Colpin agreed, calling to mind that the procedure has not been "dismissed once and for all" but is provided for in the new statutes formulated at the 23d congress in cases where a communist "attacks the policy and interests of our party."

PSI TO END GOVERNMENT SUPPORT BY ABSTENTION FROM VOTING

[Text] The Italian Socialist Party [PSI] has informed the prime minister of its decision to cease abstaining from voting as a means of supporting the government. The decision was adopted by its Directorate yesterday evening. Innocenzo Cruciani reports from the seat of government:

The socialists will no longer guarantee to the government that they will abstain from voting against it as they have been doing since last August. The decision taken yesterday by the party Directorate was communicated to Cossiga a short while ago here at the seat of government by the PSI parliamentary floorleaders, Vincenzo Balzamo and Senator Alberto Cipellini. But this communication to the prime minister does not actually mean a government crisis, something which would have to be initiated formally in parliament with a vote of no confidence. It marks the start, however, of a gradual withdrawal of support by the Socialists, who reserve the right to judge the government case by case, that is to say on each individual measure.

Before taking the road which, they hope would lead to political clarification and a solution insuring the normal working of the legislature, the political forces are awaiting the decision of the Christian Democratic Party [DC] National Council, which is scheduled to meet 5 March. It is in anticipation of the National Council meeting that contacts are being intensified within the DC in an attempt to clear up the situation and also to complete the political and statutory measures set in train by the congress.

This morning there was another meeting of [DC Secretary General] Zaccagnini's supporters. If no agreement can be reached with the other sections of the party, Zaccagnini's friends say, we will propose our own candidate for the secretaryship and our political document.

When a secretary of the DC has been elected and the DC has indicated the lines along which it intends to move, the most delicate phase in the confrontation between the parties will come.

Speaking at the Republican Party [PRI] Directorate which met today to consider the political situation, Spadolini said that the PRI's proposal for a wide ranging and searching exchange of views on policy has confirmed itself as being the sole alternative to the temptation to allow a frontal clash which has emerged in some political sectors but which should be firmly rejected. The Republicans, Spadolini added, are against murky crises; they remember the gravity of the economic problems afflicting the country, problems which demand courageous responses founded on the maximum social consensus compatible with the fact that we belong with the West and our binding links with the Atlantic alliance and the European Economic Community.

PARTY PAPERS COMMENT ON DC CONGRESS OUTCOME

AVANTI: Socialists Dissatisfied

LD281141 Rome AVANTI in Italian 22 Feb 80 pp 1, 3 LD

[Editorial: "Christian Democratic Party (DC) Congress Conclusions"]

[Text] The Socialists have many reasons for dissatisfaction with the 14th DC Congress; with the report, belatedly sweetened by the secretary's reply, which confined them to a peripheral, though formally "essential," role; and with a large proportion of the DC debate, split between those who wanted us to submit to a process of political regression and those who wanted to see us act as subordinate appendages to the major dialog with the Communists. [paragraph continues]

In neither case was the Italian Socialist Party considered the principal interlocutor, either by those pursuing a plan for consociational democracy or by those pursuing a plan for conflict and the reestablishment of the center; or indeed by those who have theorized that our presence in Italian society is an accident of history destined to become absorbed by the Communists' evolution or by those who might think of manipulating us along a preferential political and program line in a moderate and conservative direction. There were a few exceptions--but only a few. Our great concern at the way the DC Congress opened has not only been diminished by the manner in which it closed.

The proposal of negotiations without preconceptions, which had merit as a method, has been defeated, at least as a method. The situation seems more rigid and the prospects seem more uncertain than before, now that they all depend on the outcome of the National Council meeting, with regard to both political proposals and the solution of the leadership problem. One contributory factor to this uncertainty was a structural ambiguity which should discourage oversimplified interpretations of the DC debate and conclusions, which are interconnected with conflicts among the various groups and lines.

Among the various DC "areas" there is no homogeneity or coherence between social representation and political stance. Nevertheless, on the one hand, the center and right do invoke traditional social support and cultural matrices once described as hegemonic and leftwing. And on the other hand, a political, but not social, left, unburdened by the cumbersome link with the "power that does not erode," with Andreotti's moderate reformism [gattopardismo, as displayed by protagonist of Lampedusa's "Il Gattopardo"], which has neither a leftwing political tradition nor leftwing popular support.

Baget-Bozzo was right in his interpretation and in his warning to the left not to form a lazy "unrealistic and abstract" picture of the DC. This misconception of the DC as a party separate and autonomous from its large moderate body of voters is one of the underlying causes of the political failure of Zaccagnini and his group of close aides after 4 years of political leadership and organizational control.

The former have a duty to reflect and to carry out a self-criticism, while the latter have a duty to provide detailed political justification for the result. It is up to everybody, Christian Democrats or not, to restore flexibility and fluency to relations among the democratic forces by finding a point of balance which can helt the process of stiffening and paralysis in the political situation. The political truce ended with the end of the DC Congress, though the latter granted itself a few weeks' grace by callinga a National Council meeting. Nenni used to say that the "DC has a habit of and a talent for putting things off."

Mindful of their own experience, the Socialists do not intend to fall into line with this and to become entangled in a situation laden with ambiguity from which they will immediately begin their parliamentary disengagement. The governing parties must not forget that they were brought to power for a temporary assignment. Prime Minister Cossiga is aware of this. Those parties should also be aware of it, though they have not helped to outline new political prospects, having preferred to deal with the status quo and reap partisan advantages and returns. This conflicts with the spirit of a truce which has accelerated the end of the truce itself.

In the weeks ahead the entire situation must be reassessed and we will be the first to do this, taking the necessary initiatives.

We must reach the indispensable political clarification without further delay or misunderstandings.

It is not enough to say what one does not want. One must also say what one does want. This requirement naturally also applies to us. Without clarifications and without positive proposals, the situation would inevitably move toward the traditional "states of emergency." But between one state of emergency and another the deterioration of democratic life and the erosion of the institutions takes place, more or less intentionally. The frail thread which is keeping the legislature alive is already stretched to the limit and yet less than a year has gone by since the last election battle. There must be a show of responsibility from everyone.

Nobody must abandon the search for a political framework which will impart stability to the legislature and authoritiativeness and efficiency to the government's political leadership, thus meeting the demands of a country which is experiencing every day the emergency situation of political disassociation, the crisis of society and the erosion of the democratic institutions.

L'UNITA: DC Divided

[Candiano Falaschi commentary: "How and With Whom Are They Governing?"]

[Text] The 14th Christian Democratic Party [DC] Congress has ended, providing the country with a picture of a DC, split in two on fundamental political options. Amid the confusion and turmoil of the closing states there are many intersecting trends, but one point does seem clear: This hard-won conclusion to the meeting at the Rome Exhibition Center Sports Stadium, this quite obvious inability to bring about the change of direction needed to set course for a real way out of the crisis, will have grave repercussions in all fields, starting with the country's governability, which is obviously impossible without a quest for the consensus needed for a task of real political leadership.

Yes, this picture of a divided party had already dimly emerged from the debate and demonstrations of opposition of the past few days. It seemed clear that the DC, on the whole, was taking refuge in a series of predetermined "noes" when faced with Zaccagnini's proposal of a dialog without preconceptions among all the democratic forces. Now, in the light of the latest developments, this fact has emerged much more clearly. We will have to await the voting on the last political documents. But everything that happened yesterday points to the formation of two alinements centered on two conflicting political documents. One is composed of the Zaccagnini-Andreotti axis, which confirmed its unity while refusing to dilute the stances which it maintained during the congress or to contradict the political line contained in the outgoing secretary's opening report. The other alinement desperately groups together the Dorotei, the Fanfani faction and the Donat-Cattin group (plus, at the last moment, Segni and Marotta's rightwing) on the basis of a joint "preamble" which will preface each of the DC moderate current's motions. This preamble has all the characteristics of a proper political document, though the promoters of the initiative deny that this last-minute move implies any desire on their part to end the match in a hurry or to build an internal political majority capable of governing the party, throwing Andreotti and the Zaccagnini group into opposition.

Fanfani, Donat-Cattin and the Doroteo group, with their "preamble," are decreeing from the outset that the divergences with the Communists "do not permit the DC to share leadership responsibility with the PCI." Though later they are brave enough to add that, nevertheless, they accept "a dialog and an understanding on those issues on which this proves possible" (further modifications to the text were introduced later on.) [paragraph continues]

This move threatens to obstruct any serious possibility of dialog, though it is hypocritically disguised: No dialog is practicable when one side decides in advance that it will be a failure.

The DC's more moderate and conservative groups are well aware of this. So why, as they underwrote the "preamble," did they not indicate what alternative they are working for? Is it a five-party government? A series of tortuous intermediary moves with a view to early elections, to be blamed on someone else?

At the coming DC National Council meeting the three-way group centered on the "preamble" will undoubtedly want to manipulate this document to influence negotiations on the appointment of the secretary and on the new party leadership structure. But it remains to be seen what replies it will receive.

We remain convinced that a rightwing majority within the DC cannot now have any solid-based prospects. With a solution of this kind, the only possible path is that of political ventures which could have serious repercussions on the country's entire political and social situation.

BALZAMO: SOCIALISTS MUST 'PREVENT' DISSOLUTION OF PARLIAMENT

LD281149 Rome AVANTI in Italian 23 Feb 80 pp 1, 2 LD

[Giulio Scarrone report: "Piccoli Phones Zaccagnini: National Council Session Set for 5 March"]

[Excerpt] Socialist lower house whip Vincenzo Balzamo has said in a statement that there cannot be so many interpretations of the Socialists' reflection on the results of the Christian Democratic Party [DC] Congress.

"We are witnessing," Balzamo said, "a new political and parliamentary factor, which lies in the DC's rejection of an emergency government, which is what the Socialist Party Central Committee proposed.

"We shall see whether any new factors emerge from the 5 March National Council meeting: If so, the Socialists will assess them according to their worth. Of course, in view of the DC's confirmed hardening, the entire political situation must be reassessed and the Socialists will take opportune initiatives to insure the indispensable clarification and thus prevent another dissolution of parliament.

"This clarification," Balzamo concluded, "will in any case help the public to understand each political force's responsibilities in a situation which can no longer brook any delays."

In another statement, Socialist Directorate member Michele Achilli said, among other things, that "one of the results of the DC Congress was Moro's political elimination: The DC Congress has sacrificed its father on the altar of the moderate resurgence, not only as a result of the refusal to cooperate with the PCI but also because of the total absence of any political line."

FARM WORKERS, NATIONAL GUARD CLASH IN ALENTEJO

LD282030 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 1900 GMT 28 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Incidents took place today in the agrarian reform area. Farm workers clashed with National Republican Guards when a tract of land incorporated in a collective production unit in Viana do Alentejo. Alentejo Province was being handed back to the former owner under the right-of-retention clause of the basic provisions of the agrarian reform law. Three farm workers were treated in Evora Hospital for injuries sustained during the clashes and where subsequently released and allowed to go home.

The Evora Secretariat of the collective production units and cooperatives and the farm workers' union have issued a communique protesting the action taken by the National Republican Guard and describing the return of the said tract of land to the former owner as illegal as the latter will not hold an area of land in excess of 1,150 hectares.

PCP CC SENDS GREETINGS TO POLISH COMMUNISTS

LD281651 Lisbon AVANTE! in Portuguese 21 Feb 80 p 10 LD

[Unattributed report: "PCP Central Committee Greetings Message"]

[Text] The Portuguese Communist Party [PCP] Central Committee has sent the Polish United Workers Party [PZPR] Central Committee a greetings message on the occasion of its congress, which begins by stating:

"The PCP Central Committee fraternally and warmly greets the Eighth PZPR Congress and, through its delegation, the communists, the working class and the entire Polish people, and expresses to you the Portuguese Communists' sincere wishes for full success in its proceedings and in the subsequent implementation of its resolutions.

"Under the difficult and complex objective conditions inherited from the past and especially after the calamity which the barbarous Nazi-fascist aggression constituted for Poland and for your people, the working class and the Polish people, under the PZPR's leadership, have been able to surmount and overcome the obstacles confronting them during the last 35 years of people's power.

"With the elimination of man's exploitation by man and the consequent progressive creative participation by the working class and broad sectors of the working people in building socialist Poland, the conditions were created in your country for developing the production forces and resolving the grave economic and social difficulties existing at the outset, thus enabling the Polish people to achieve considerable political, economic, social and cultural gains within such a brief period. Under the banner of socialism, Poland has eliminated hunger and unemployment, built a modern industry, ended illiteracy and developed science and culture in all fields and consolidated and strengthened its position in the international community and has become an important factor of peace in Europe.

"As in the past, the PZPR will be able to rely on the Portuguese Communists' active solidarity in the tasks resulting from your eighth congress and in continuing to build the developed socialist society in the People's Republic of Poland.

"Dear comrades.

"The Portuguese Communists view with apprehension the development of the internationnal situation. In fact the maneuvers and actions by the most aggressive circles of reaction and imperialism--specifically, the decision recently made to deploy new nuclear missiles aimed at the USSR and other socialist countries in some European countries, the setting up of the U.S. military intervention force, ready to act anywhere in the world to defend interests which are allegedly vital for survival of the big multinationals and imperialism, and the strengthening of the U.S. Armed Forces in the Caribbean, the Persian Gulf area and the Indian Ocean, as well as the intensification of the anticommunist and anti-Soviet campaign unleashed by imperialism on the pretext of the events in Afghanistan--all these facts demonstrate that imperialism, despite being weakened and in a state of crisis, is not abandoning its worldwide hegemonic and aggressive plans.

"Although stressing their enormous gravity, the Portuguese Communists deem it possible to thwart these warmongering plans and activities on the part of reaction and imperialism. The forces of social progress and peace are capable of defending the historic gains which have been achieved and of insuring the maintenance of peace.

"The socialist camp, of which Poland is an integral part, is growing, becoming stronger and asserting itself as the invincible bulwark of the workers' cause. At the same time, the general crisis in which capitalism is struggling is developing and continuing to deteriorate. The working class and the national liberation movement are achieving considerable successes on all continents. The victories of the peoples of Vietnam, Mozambique, Angola, Afghanistan, Kampuchea and Nicaragua and the Iranian people's struggle are merely some of the most recent instances of the progress of the antiimperialist struggle for the progress of the peoples of the world. In order to contain the current danger stemming from the imperialist circles' warmongering activities, defend and enhance the atmosphere of detente and cooperation and finally guarantee progress and peace in the interest of the whole of mankind, the PCP deems it of the utmost importance to defend and strengthen the unity of the international communist and workers movement as an essential precondition for more generally strengthening and extending the worldwide front of democratic and antiimperialist forces."

After referring to the Portuguese situation and the PCP's policy, the greetings message concludes:

"Dear comrades.

"Over the years, ties of friendship and solidarity, based on the imperishable principles of Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism, have been created between the PCP and the PZPR.

"You can be certain, dear comrades, that for our part we will do our utmost to strengthen these fraternal ties existing between our two parties, and that in so doing we are also contributing to the development of relations of friendship and cooperation between the Portuguese people and the Polish people and working for the cause of security, cooperation and peace in Europe and in the world."

Of the total electorate in Andalusia, 55.5 percent voted yes. Although the majority of the Andalusian people voted yes, the Constitution says that the result must be determined by individual province and when one province votes against, the whole region cannot adopt autonomy through article 151.

EL PAIS REPORTS SUAREZ-SCHMIDT 25 FEB TALKS

[Excerpts] Bonn--Prime Minister Adolfo Suarez yesterday made an unexpected lightning visit to Bonn, where he met for 3 hours with FRG Chancellor Schmidt. The meeting between the two heads of government forms part of the intense diplomatic activity in Europe over the last few days as is clearly indicated by the meeting in London between Chancellor Schmidt and Margaret Thatcher and the Italian foreign minister's visit to the FRG yesterday. The adoption of a unanimous European stance on the events in Afghanistan and on the U.S. proposal of an Olympic boycott are the principal topics of these discussions.

Spanish Prime Minister Adolfo Suarez made a brief 5-hour visit to the FRG on his own initiative and held a lengthy conversation with Chancellor Helmut Schmidt. According to the Spanish prime minister, the two politicians, accompanied by FRG and Spanish Foreign Ministers Hans-Dietrich Genscher and Marcelino Oreja, reviewed the international political situation resulting from the entry of Soviet troops into Afghanistan during the 3-hour conversation, which was longer than expected.

Adolfo Suarez explained to journalists before returning to Madrid that this visit "falls within the framework of the agreements which we reached in January on the occasion of the federal chancellor's visit to Spain." At that time the two politicians decided to hold frequent informal contacts. In addition to the general topics discussed yesterday, such as the above-mentioned topic of the Afghanistan crisis, East-West relations and tensions in the Arab world, Suarez expressed the desire that intensive preparations be made for the coming CSCE conference, which will be held in Madrid in mid-November.

Prime Minister Suarez said that he discussed at length the topic of the European-Arab dialog, in which the FRG acknowledges a preponderant role on the part of Spain, especially since Chancellor Schmidt commented very favorably on the degree of knowledge of the subject which he noted among Spanish politicians on his return from Madrid last month.

Suarez informed the federal chancellor yesterday about his recent visit to the Middle East--a task which will be repeated by Spain whenever necessary. The Spanish prime minister described these contacts as "extremely positive and advantageous."

Regarding the possibility of Spain undertaking a mediating role between the Arab world and Europe, Suarez totally discounted this possibility, "which does not mean that we do not maintain special relations with the Arab world and that these relations entail more real knowledge of the situation in the Middle East than other countries may have. This means that we have a position which could be very advantageous for the Western world. Spain has maintained a clear stand with respect to this area of the world--a stand which we will continue to uphold: for instance, with respect to the Palestinian people's rights--a topic which we emphasize in all our bilateral contacts with the Western world."

CSCE Conference

Enlarging on the topic of the coming CSCE conference, Suarez stated that both the FRG and Spain are pleased that the United States and the Soviet Union support holding it. "In this sense," Suarez said, "Spain is promoting international solidarity, but it is a country which is immersed in the Western world, with all that this involves, although Spain has some specific traditional areas in its foreign policy, such as, for instance, the Arab world."

Regarding Spanish support for the initiative in favor of an Olympic boycott, Suarez said that "our stand is very clear: We want the necessary circumstances to exist which will make possible worldwide participation in the Olympic games," and that "in our case the final decision will rest with the Spanish Olympic Committee." As far as a final decision by the government on the political level is concerned, Suarez said that "perhaps this will be made later."

International Changes

According to Spanish diplomatic sources, the two heads of government wished yesterday to study the changes which have occurred on the international scene since their last meeting, especially since U.S. Secretary of State Cyrus Vance's visit to Europe, during which he did not secure unanimous European support for the measures announced by the Carter administration following the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan; Marshal Tito's grave illness, the future of the CSCE conference and Suarez' recent visits to Washington and subsequently to Iraq and Jordan took up a considerable part of the impromptu agenda.

Prime Minister Suarez, who stated that he was very satisfied with the outcome of his talks with Chancellor Schmidt, left for Madrid at 2030 yesterday evening and said that he had agreed to meet again with Schmidt as frequently as circumstances may warrant.

OIL AGREEMENT WITH USSR--The state oil company, Neste, and the Soviet foreign trade organization Soyuznefteeksport have reached an agreement concerning the price of the crude oil imported by Finland from the Soviet Union. The price negotiations were concluded in Moscow today. Neste commercial director Kai Hietarinta said at Helsinki-Vantea Airport a moment ago that Neste will not, in the next few months, propose new rises in consumer prices. According to Hietarinta, the price for crude oil which was agreed on is more or less in accordance with Middle East prices, excluding Saudi Arabia. This year Finland will import from the Soviet Union a total of 7 million tons of crude oil. [Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1700 GMT 22 Feb 80 ID]

OSLO, MOSCOW TO RESUME TALKS ON BARENT SEA BORDER

ID281918 Stockholm Domestic Service in Swedish 1700 GMT 28 Feb 80 ID

NORDLI DEFENDS SECURITY POLICY AGAINST PRAVDA ATTACK

ID271433 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 20 Feb 80 p 4 ID

[Lennart Hovland report: "Our Security Policy Unchanged"]

[Text] Tonsberg, 19 February--Allegations that Norwegian security policy has a ruinous effect on efforts for detente are unfounded, Prime Minister Odvar Nordli said at a press conference after the Labor Party's National Executive meeting had ended. He was asked to comment on recent PRAVDA attacks. On the other hand, the prime minister stated that Norway will take the measures necessary to safeguard our security.

Everyone knows, the prime minister said, that we Norwegians have made no changes in any part of the defense and security policy in the present situation. We have neither escalated nor reduced activity, but we are pursuing our defense and security policy line just as we planned in the longer term.

Neither our own defenses nor the allied support which we would receive are in the nature of an offensive directed against the Soviet Union, he stated. Norwegian defense and security policy and Norwegian weapons are directed only against those who might threaten our security and our sovereignty. [paragraph continues]

There is no basis for claims that the Norwegian security policy is ruinous to the policy of detente. Anyone who makes the effort to look at the strategic situation in northern areas will see that there is little sense in such allegations.

The prime minister stressed that Norway is pursuing its security policy on the basis of our own assessment of the situation and that it is our desire and aim to maintain a low level of tension and stability in our part of the world. At the same time we will also take the measures necessary to safeguard our security. He would not indulge in speculation on what might lie behind PRAVDA's recently published allegations on Norwegian intentions.

In his speech on the international situation to the National Executive meeting the prime minister stressed that the government will do its utmost for the work on confidence-building measures in the East-West context to be continued, and he mentioned our own security policy situation:

"Our NATO membership strengthens our security, but the prerequisite is that we always maintain defenses which are credible both regarding our own contribution and regarding preparing conditions for allied help in a crisis situation. Within the framework of our nuclear and base policies--which are fundamental elements of our security policy--we must thus undertake the adjustments which are necessary at any time to maintain the credibility of our policy."

No Unusual Military Activity

ID271435 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 20 Feb 80 p 8 ID

[Olav Trygge Storvik report: "Following PRAVDA's Attack: All Normal in North"]

[Excerpt] The Soviet Union has not followed up the recent press attacks on Norwegian security policy with demonstrative military "exercises" in the north, intensified patrol activity or other striking military measures.

Maj Gen Fredrik Bull-Hansen, commander for northern Norway, said: "Overall there has been no intensification of military activity in the north. Tha applies to both sides. The situation is completely normal."

It can thus be asserted that the Soviet Union has for the time being not followed up the recent verbal attacks on Norwegian security policy with active demonstrations once it became known that the Norwegian and U.S. authorities have had close cooperation for several years on the earmarking of a U.S. amphibious brigade and advance storage of the unit's equipment for its effort in Norway during a crisis situation.

The Soviet attacks against Norway reached a peak on Tuesday when the party newspaper PRAVDA published an article couched in unusually crass terms. The PRAVDA article stated that Norway has violated its base and nuclear policies and broken all rules of good neighborliness with the Soviet Union. In its article PRAVDA threatened that "the Norwegian policy could have consequences."

For the time being consequences have not been noted, and Defense Minister Stoltenberg rejects the Soviet criticism as baseless.

KIPRIANOU INTERVIEWED ON SETTLEMENT PROSPECTS, ECONOMY

LD281019 Paris LE MONDE in French 27 Feb 80 p 6 LD

[Report on Dmitrty Andreou interview with Cypriot President Kiprianou in Nicosia: "Paris Can Play an Important Role in the Resumption of Intercommunal Talks"--date not given]

[Text] Nicosia--"The three countries which I will visit can help find a solution to the Cyprus problem; because of the relations which these countries have with Turkey they can exert pressure on Ankara to persuade it to abandon its intransigent policy, which has partitioned Cyprus, and to show reason and moderation."

Mr Kiprianou said that his talks with President Giscard d'Estaing will relate to the "way in which France could play a more important and active role in the Cyprus problem and in promoting a just and lasting settlement. I have a special respect for President Giscard d'Estaing and during our meeting in May 1978 I noted his great interest in the Cyprus problem," he said. "We appreciate France's attitude in the Cyprus problem," President Kiprianou added. "All our efforts are aimed at urging Turkey to abandon its inflexible position and its policy of partitioning Cyprus. France could play a very important role in this context. As a Common Market and NATO member Italy could also play a role and exert pressure on Ankara."

As regards Britain, Mr Kiprianou stressed that this country "has a special duty to help find a just solution to the problem; Britain is one of the powers guaranteeing Cyprus' independence. It is a Security Council and Commonwealth member and is also the former colonial power."

Asked whether these three countries should tie their economic aid to Turkey to a settlement of the Cyprus problem, President Kiprianou answered in the affirmative: "It would be a positive development," he added. "Moreover this also applies to countries like the United States and the FRG. This aid could be granted on condition that progress is made on the Cyprus problem. The country which invaded Cyprus should not be given money indefinitely. That would amount to rewarding the crime."

[Answer] The UN secretary general is pursuing his consultations, which have not yet produced any concrete results. He seems to be encountering problems in finding an area of agreement for the resumption of negotiations. The Cypriot Government's position on this subject is very clear. The 19 May 1979 agreement reached between myself and Turkish Cypriot leader Rauf Denktas should form the basis and framework for preliminary negotiations. [answer ends]

Preliminary community talks were resumed last June on the basis of this agreement but were immediately broken off due to differences of interpretation especially on the priority to be given to the return of the Greek Cypriot refugees to the city of Famagusta. The Turkish Cypriot side refused to give priority to this question as the agreement laid down. At present the Turkish Cypriot leaders are imposing a new precondition for the resumption of preliminary negotiations. They are demanding that the last UN resolutuion be disregarded. This resolution calls in particular for the withdrawal of foreign troops from Cyprus, the return of refugees to their homes and Turkish recognition--for the first time--of the sovereignty of Mr Kiprianou's government over the whole territory of the Cyprus Republic.

"The Cypriot Government," President Kiprianou pointed out, "will never abandon this resolution. The motions adopted by the international organization are still valid," he added.

The Cypriot head of state is nonetheless convinced that Mr Waldheim will be able to announce a date for the resumption of negotiations between the two communities in 1 or 2 weeks. "However, the result of these negotiations will depend entirely on the Turkish side," he stressed. "Ankara must be persuaded to abandon its policy of expansion and partitioning the island. Only the reunification of the state and the people will bring about a vilable solution safeguarding the rights and interests of the entire people, of Greek and Turkish Cypriots in a really free and independent state."

Mr Kiprianou is also convinced that a just settlement of the problem will work in Turkey's favor and help it tackle its many political and economic problems. "It does not much matter what type of government is in power in Ankara," President Kiprianou said, "especially when you consider that it is the army chiefs who have first say in Turkey."

During his tour of the three European capitals President Kiprianou will also discuss relations between his country and the Common Market. "I will ask the three countries for support in establishing the most favorable conditions for Cyprus and in rapidly concluding negotiations on the second phase of the association agreement between Cyprus and the EEC," he said.

[Question] What is the economic situation like? Have events in Lebanon not resulted in helping Nicosia rapidly regain its role as a financial marketplace?

[Answer] In general, after the Turkish invasion in the summer of 1974 and the economic problems it created, the situation was stabilized and, in the free areas, the economy is sound. We are facing problems and dangers, as is the case throughout the world. For a very short time events in Lebanon indirectly made a small contribution to the revival of the Cypriot economy. The strength of our economy is due to the government's sound policy and planning, to the work of Cypriots, the private sector's initiative and, to some extent, to foreign aid. [answer ends] With regard to the Cypriot domestic scene and to a possible danger of destabilization by the extreme left or extreme right, President Kiprianou stated: "The domestic situation does not worry me. There is no danger of destabilization and no problem with illegal activities. As regards security and democracy, the situation is very good. There are differences of opinion and opposition, as in all democratic regimes."

Finally, Mr Kiprianou said he is convinced that the "total demilitarization of Cyprus is the ideal solution for reconciling the island's two communities and restoring mutual confidence and for reaching a permanent settlement of the problem insuring progress and prosperity for all Greek and Turkish Cypriots."

DEMOCRATIC PARTY DEPUTY CRITICIZES KIPRIANOU POLICY

NC290904 Nicosia I SIMERINI in Greek 29 Feb 80 pp 1, 8 NC

[Excerpt] Speaking in the House of Representatives yesterday during the opening of the debate on the ordinary and development budgets, Democratic Party [DIKO] Deputy Alexis Galanos maintained: "The time has come for President Kiprianou to undertake serious initiatives, after he has weighed all the facts, in widening the front of the struggle and in bringing closer all the parties and elements of the country."

Mr Galanos has even advocated that Mr Kiprianou "has to proceed without hesitation not only with reshuffling the Council of Ministers but also with more general reforms and cleansing of both the state machinery and political and public life." The DI. KO. deputy also asserted that "the people have fallen into melancholy and pessimism because of developments, or rather lack of developments; the lack of decisiveness and a firm line is evident in all walks of public life." Mr Galanos added: It must be understood that a high and vigorous spirit rests upon a strong administration, decisive handling of affairs and, above all, upon correct planning and programming for the future.

Referring to the Western framework [for a Cyprus solution], Mr Galanos leveled indirect criticism at the government for its rejection by saying that "we should have handled the American framework differently." Mr Galanos also rejected the "wornout terminology about treason and yielding" as well as the "practice of mudslinging which is used by certain quarters against all those who share different views." Concerning the measures for rapprochement with the Turkish Cypriots, Mr Galanos described them as "a very correct decision." However, he added: "Unfortunately, the implementation of the announced measures is greatly delayed and the impression is given that we have adopted them halfheartedly."

TFSC MINISTER OPPOSES AIRSPACE REGULATION CHANGES

TA281313 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1030 GMT 28 Feb 80 TA

[Text] Public Works, Reconstruction and Communications Minister Erdinc Gercek Gurcag has said the aim of the Greek Cypriots in declaring that they have opened the air corridors of Ercan airspace to traffic was to exercise control over the airspace of the Federated State. Criticizing the Greek Cypriot announcement to the effect that the A-28 and R-19 air corridors were opened to traffic, Gurcag said that the authorities of the Federated State had been directing the traffic in these corridors for some years without any hitch and had been providing the aircraft using these corridors with an efficient service. A statement by Gurcag issued by the prime minister's press office says that the Greek Cypriot administration had no authority to speak about the airspace of the Federated State, and that accidents could happen at any moment in these corridors as a result of the present attitude of the Greek Cypriot administration. This stand, he added, was contrary to civil aviation regulations and it was out of the question for the Federated State to accept it. Protesting this stand he said that such irresponsible actions of the Greek Cypriot administration did not serve peace.

DENKTAS SCORES OPPOSITION FOR 'COLLABORATING' WITH GREEKS

[By Resat Akar]

[Text] Nicosia--TFSC President Rauf Denktas has stated that certain elements in the Turkish Cypriot community are collaborating with the Greek Cypriots and the communists to destroy our young state. Criticizing the actions of Republican Turkish Party leader Ozker Ozgur, Denktas said: "It is deplorable that these factions, which are openly collaborating with the Greek Cyprits, should also use our Ataturkist youth as a means to their ends. These intrigues are also apparent in the reports of the competent authorities."

Stating that Turkish Cypriot youth must be protected and that collaboration with the Greek Cupriots and the communists must be obstructed, Denktas added that Republican Turkish Party leader Ozker Ozgur should thank the Turkish Republic at least once for securing the independence of the Turkish Cypriot community. Political circles in the TFSC point out that this is the first time Denktas has used such strong language on internal developments.

REACTION CONTINUES TO TURKISH NOTAM RESCISSION, ERKMEN

Spokesman on Erkmen Statement

[Text] Turkish Foreign Minister Erkmen stated yesterday in the Senate that conditions have become ripe for negotiations to begin between Turkey and Greece for the solution of bilateral problems. In the wake of the lifting of the NOTAM on the Aegean, Erkmen said, negotiations could begin. The Turkish foreign minister also said that Greece's return to the NATO military wing will be beneficial to the interests of the two countries.

Asked about the above statement, by Erkmen, a government spokesman in Athens said: We truly wish to solve our differences with Turkey and we have proved this in practice. The difficulty is due to the fact that we have different assessments of each other's rights in this area. As regards NATO, to which the Turkish foreign minister also referred, this is not a Greek-Turkish difference.

Retired Generals' Statement

[Text] Turkey no longer needs NOTAM 714 and for this reason has made the allegedly pacific gesture of lifting it, because the things it has won at the expense of Greece's sovereign rights and at the expense of Greece's defense system are not obviated by the rescission of NOTAM 714. The foregoing is stressed, among other things, in a joint statement that was issued yesterday by senior officers Andreas Siapkaras and Ioannis Anagnostopoulos, who have long dealt with the Aegean issue and the problems which have been created in this area, and who enumerate in the statement the points of the Turkish expansionist designs. The content of the statement by the two senior officers, which we publish, is of specific significance because: A) It is the first detailed and--from a military perspective--scientific analysis of the consequences which will follow the lifting of NOTAM 714 by the Turkish Government; B) it appears only after Ankara's action; and C) it is only 1 day after the new Turkish provocation, which demands "a new order" in the Aegean Sea.

The following is the text of the joint statement by retired Lt Gen Andreas Siapkaras and retired air force Maj Gen Ioannis Anagnostopoulos:

"The lifting of the Turkish NOTAM 714, which was announced by the Turkish General Staff on 22 February 1980 not only does not constitute an act of good will, as Turkish policy wants to present it, but on the contrary, makes permanent all the things Turkey succeeded in acquiring through the extortionist threat of NOTAM 714, which was in force for 5 and 1/2 years, in conjunction with the Turkish military air and sea forces operations inside the Greek area under Turkish threat and the movement of Turkish ground forces deployed for attack against the same area from battle positions on the west coast of Asia Minor, and in conjunction with Greek-Turkish 'negotiations.' Turkey's activities constitute an act which according to the laws of war are described as 'open offensive action,' and aim at guaranteeing Turkish goals of conquest through the application of force and the threat of force.

"Now Turkey no longer needs NOTAM 714 and for this reason it has made its allegedly pacific gesture of rescinding it, because the things it has won at the expense of Greece's sovereign rights and at the expense of Greece's defense system are not obviated by the rescission of NOTAM 714. [paragraph continues]

"Turkey wants to utilize these things politically and militarily, no longer through an open threatening extortion, but through coercion within the pro-Turkish environment of the NATO alliance where very shortly Greece will find itself confined. Meanwhile, Turkey, by imposing and lifting at will restrictions on Greek airspace--over which in fact it has no legal right--has given the widest international publicity to its alleged rights over the Aegean. Furthermore, Turkey has not concealed its intentions since, together with the lifting of NOTAM 714, it has announced that this decision should not be construed as a change in Turkey's determined stance for the protection of its rights and interests in the Aegean, and has added that the issue does not arise from any change in the principle concerning the free use of the Aegean international waters and airspace.

"What more do we Greeks need to understand that even after the lifting of NOTAM 714 nothing will change for the better because:

1. Turkish military planes either alone or in droves will enter, as they have since 6 August 1974, the Greek airspace (FIR) [flight information region] without submitting a request for permission or a flight plan and without adhering to the procedures and restrictions imposed by ICAO rules and regulations.

2. Control over Turkish military planes flying inside Greek airspace (FIR) will continue to be carried out not by the competent Greek authorities, but by the Turkish authorities, which since 6 August 1974 abolished the Greek authorities, which are nevertheless the only legal and competent authorities for the control of all flights within the Greek flight information region. With its fully loaded military planes Turkey has become a mortal danger for the security not only of the Aegean, but of all Greece.

3. The Turkish Air Force and the Turkish Navy will continue to use the firing ranges which Turkey has maintained since 1975 inside the Greek airspace (FIR) and inside the Greek sea space and, among many other instances, inside the air corridor between Limnos and Lesvos, the air corridor between Athens and Khios, and inside the national airspace 10 nautical miles from the coast.

4. The airport of Limnos Island will continue not to be used by the military since Turkey has demanded and has imposed a limit on its terminal area and provocatively has established a firing range inside this very same terminal area.

5. The air corridor for domestic air flights between Kavalla-Limnos-Lesvos-Khios-Samos-Kos-Rhodes will continue to be subject to the restrictions which Turkey has imposed on Greece so that its military planes can have complete freedom of entry and movement inside the Greek FIR and because restrictions of such a nature and extent constitute problematical and dangerous use of the air corridor.

6. The nonrecognition by Turkey of our national airspace area of 10 nautical miles from the coast will supply Turkey with a pretext for it to continue violating Greek sovereign rights as it has done systematically since 6 August 1974.

"We know from responsible sources and on the basis of official evidence that Turkey has already achieved the above strategic advantages at the expense of Greece's security and integrity. For the time being, it does not need NOTAM 714 for the next stage, as it does not need the Zurich-London agreements in the wake of 20 July 1974. Turkey knows how much it will need in every situation it has created through its own initiative, and already through our tolerance and naive cooperation it is preparing for the next leap.

"Only the complete restoration of the legal status which existed prior to 6 August 1974 and the complete exercise of our sovereign rights in the Aegean will avert Greece's enslavement by Turkey.

"Let the military leadership, the Supreme Council for National Defense, the government and the Chamber of Deputies undertake their responsibilities. Finally, we appeal to the president of the republic not to permit the country to slide toward disaster."

PROINI Commentary

AT281634 Athens PROININ in Greek 28 Feb 80 p 4 AT

[From the "Nonalined" column: "A Dangerous Game"]

[Text] Only a few days after Turkey's "good will" gesture Ankara laid down its cards to prove wrong all those people who had hastened to express their satisfaction at the lifting of NOTAM 714.

Reporting to the Senate, Turkish-Foreign Minister Erkmen categorically stated: "It does not constitute the first of a number of concessions to Greece. It merely concerns the lifting of a measure that had become useless. However, it will be again imposed should the need arise."

Erkmen did not limit himself to this statement: He laid down even more cards by revealing his country's intentions. He stressed that Turkey seeks "a new order" for the definition of Greek and Turkish rights on and under the Aegean Sea.

It is not irrelevant that these statements were made at the time when NATO's supreme military commander General Rogers was expected in Ankara to discuss alliance issues--and especially the problem of Greece's return to NATO--and the Greek-Turkish differences.

Consequently, all of Ankara's moves are planned ahead and well studied to the last detail on an inflexible course, as has been repeatedly proven.

The Turkish foreign minister's statement the day before yesterday also showed that Ankara has not given up any of the demands it made in the past. It continues to demand the partition of the Aegean and a right to operational control of this sea. In other words, it demands that Greece make concessions on its national area and it blackmails through NATO.

Thus it is strange how in the wake of these developments the Greek Government continues a dialog with the alliance--even though backstage--that is especially dangerous for our national interests. It is high time the truth was told in all directions and all negotiations stopped. It is especially high time the Greek people were told everything with an open and detailed discussion in the Chamber of Deputies. It should also be declared that Greece does not intend to make concessions to anyone, either to Turkey or to NATO, and that it will not succumb to extortion. Why does the government wait and not clarify the issue?

GOVERNMENT ATTACKS PASOK, KKE AT PARTY CONGRESS

[Excerpts] An ideological attack as well as an attack against the negative positions adopted by PASOK, the dogmatic KKE and the "pro-dictatorial nationalists" on the country's critical problems, climaxed on the second day of the government party's regional congress in Crete. [paragraph continues]

The political negation with which the majority opposition party deals with serious problems--despite today's difficult conditions--by resorting to sloganeering for the purpose of attracting party followers, instead of using constructive dialog for the counterpresentation of solutions, was particularly criticized.

At the same time [Foreign Minister] Rallis and K. Stefanopoulos [minister to the Prime Minister's Office] gave answers to--which, perhaps were clearer and more severe than any others given at party congress--the criticism and positions of New Democracy's political opponents. They also answered possible questions arising among a portion of the electorate as a result of the opposition's criticism. As stressed by observers attending the congress these answers attempted to disprove the opposition's myths by proving either the opposition's negative position on national developments or its backwardness or dependence upon foreign decision-making bodies.

The entire opposition policy of PASOK, Rallis stressed, is based upon negation. While the government fought for accession to the EEC, PASOK proposed that we stay out of the EEC. While the government sought an alliance with the West, PASOK proposed that Greece attach itself to the "nonalined" of the Third World. These are the "nonalined" who, faced with the modern crisis, are forced to join one or the other superpower. While the government strove for a peaceful handling of Turkish aggressiveness, PASOK screamed: "Sink the Hora." [seismographic Turkish boat]. While the government asked for economy and austerity in order to deal with inflation, PASOK distributed promises in all directions. While the government sought to reach agreements to guarantee oil, PASOK described them as selling out to international monopolies. At the same time, Rallis accused those persons who support the dictatorship of underestimating the mentality of the Greek people because they don the cloak of a nationalist and wave the banner of anticommunism and identify nationalism with the junta, in an effort to influence the more conservative Greeks.

Rallis, in conclusion, stated that those who either by mistake or by obstinacy--because they fail to understand that it is necessary to have political courage and daring to adopt unpopular measures when this is dictated by the country's interests--bring PASOK or the KKE to authority will have to bear the responsibility. He then called upon the greatest majority of the people to react and not be influenced by the opposition's propaganda.

"I was impressed," Rallis stated to I KATHIMERINI, "by the friendly atmosphere prevailing in the congress as well as by the militant spirit and willingness to work demonstrated by those attending. A mild and democratic tone also characterized the meetings as well as an ease, which is obvious in contacts between ministers, deputies, those responsible for organization and the delegates attending the congress. The purpose of these congresses is primarily to achieve a better party organization and to inform our followers. The results will soon become obvious, and my forecast is that thanks to these congresses, New Democracy will have a significant increase of followers."

Stefanopoulos, who summed up the conclusions of the congress, pointed to the ideological imperfections of the opposition parties which, in political action, are interpreted either as a privation of freedom, economic adversity or refusing parliamentary democracy. Stefanopoulos characteristically said: "Neither the extreme right nor the Communist Party--despite whatever they support--favor a multiparty system or parliamentary democracy. The extreme right is attracted to pro-dictatorial trends, while the Communist Party, had it been sincere, would have repeated Boukharin's aphorism that only one party can be in authority and, naturally this must be the Communist Party, while the others must be in prison. With the same lack of sincerity it places itself in support of personal rights which have never been defended in spheres in which the KKE is immovably entrenched."

FOREIGN MINISTER REACTS TO PRAVDA ARTICLE ON INSTALLATIONS

[Text] Foreign Minister Hayrettin Erkmen has said that the defense installations in Turkey were a necessity of the country's needs. Erkmen added: Turkey is not the outpost of any other country. Erkmen was replying to questions by an ANATOLIA agency correspondent on an article which appeared in PRAVDA, the organ of the Soviet Communist Party, yesterday. Erkmen added that maintaining goodneighborly relations with all its neighbors was Turkey's fundamental principle.

The PRAVDA article claimed that Turkey was pursuing a risky path between coexistence and a crisis strategy that could lead to nuclear war. Erkmen said that such comments were the results of an erroneous understanding or reaction. Erkmen said that Turkey was a member of a collective defense system and added that the installations which were functioning as a result of defense needs were under the command of Turkish commanders.

Will Seek Explanations

TA281644 Ankara ANATOLIA in French 1639 GMT 28 Feb 80 TA

[Text] Ankara, 28 Feb (AA)--Sources close to the Foreign Ministry have announced that Foreign Minister Hayrettin Erkmen has invited the Soviet ambassador to Ankara, Aleksey Rodinov, to his office tomorrow to ask for explanations of an article which appeared in yesterday's Soviet daily PRAVDA in which Turkey is accused of becoming a nuclear cemetery.

In a statement to the ANATOLIA agency on this subject, Erkmen said that he would hold a meeting with the Eastern Affairs Department of his ministry before receiving Ambassador Rodinov tomorrow for explanations of the article.

FOREIGN MINISTER INTERVIEWED ON RELATIONS WITH GREECE

TA281636 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 28 Feb 80 TA

[Text] Foreign Minister Hayrettin Erkmen has said that solving the problems existing between Turkey and Greece and establishing good relations between the two countries was not only to the benefit of both countries but was also necessary for the smooth functioning of NATO. Erkmen made this statement in reply to questions by TV reporters at a TRT program called "News Conference." Pointing out that he is ready to meet with the Greek foreign minister for talks, Erkmen said: We should only know what we are going to discuss. We should only nurture the hope that tangible results will be reached at the talks, if not, to meet and then part would only cause new disappointments.

AUTHORITIES STOP YUGOSLAV WARSHIP IN DARDANELLES

[Text] A Yugoslav warship, which passed from the Black Sea to the Marmara Sea without notifying the Turkish authorities in violation of the Montreux Straits agreement, was stopped by the gendarme shore patrol boats at the Dardanelles. The TRT Canakkale correspondent reported that the Yugoslav ship, which was stopped off Kilitbahir last night, is now at the Canakkale Port.

REACTIONS TO NOTAM 714 CANCELLATION CONTINUE

NC290740 Istanbul CUMHURIYET in Turkish 27 Feb 80 p 5 NC

[Excerpts] Ankara--Gen Kenan Evren, chief of the General Staff, has stated that Gen Gundersen, chairman of the military committee of NATO, visited Turkey to bid farewell to the Turkish Armed Forces and that during his visit Greece's return to the military wing of NATO was not discussed at all. General Evren said the following to journalists at Esenboga Airport, where he saw General Gundersen off, in connection with this visit: "Nor is General Gundersen's visit linked in any way with the cancellation of NOTAM 714, which has been occupying our press for several days now. I wish to state categorically that this is a decision taken by us alone. Pressure is out of the question. As chief of the General Staff, I can assure you of this."

On the other hand, Republican People's Party Secretary General Mustafa Ustundag stated that his party has been watching the latest developments in the Aegean with anxiety, and added: "Efforts are being made to squeeze Turkey's rights on the Aegean into its territorial waters. If the ground is being prepared for such plans, the RPP will call to account those responsible." In his statement to CUMHURIYET, Ustundag stressed that it is impossible to accept the cancellation of NOTAM 714 as "an act of good will, since this de facto situation has been created by Greece. The action taken by the government is contrary to our national interests since it is Greece that has created an internationally illegal situation over the Aegean airspace and has militarized the Dodecanese, reinforcing them with mines."

In the meantime, the cancellation of NOTAM 714 was debated in yesterday's session of the Republican Senate. Presidentially appointed Senator Metin Toker described the National Salvation Party's allegations that "the Aegean has been sold out to the Americans" as a vulgar and unfounded accusation. Following Senator Metin Toker's speech, Foreign Minister Erkmen took the floor and said that the cancellation of NOTAM 714 was not the first link in a chain of concessions, and that this cancellation was only a "good will gesture." Foreign Minister Erkmen stated that there is no such a thing as a Rogers Plan, and that he is not aware of the existence of such a plan. He further stated that even if there were such a plan, the government would not approve it. Nor would it accept a conciliation which would take the Aegean question back to the condition that prevailed before 1974. Erkmen stressed that the cancellation of NOTAM 714 was not a serious problem, that it could be reintroduced if it was thought necessary for defense reasons.

TOURISM MINISTER ON OUTCOME OF NOTAM CANCELLATION

[Text] Tourism and Information Minister Barlas Kuntay said that the lifting of NOTAMs by Turkey and Greece has removed an important obstacle confronting Turkish tourism. The minister added:

[Begin Kuntay recording] With the lifting of the NOTAMs by Turkey and Greece, the Aegean airspace has been opened to civil aviation. Various foreign airlines, which did not include Turkey in their flights because of this restriction, have now resumed their flights from Europe to Turkey. The flight time has been reduced as a result of this decision and airfares from Europe to Turkey have been reduced. With the resumption of flights from Europe to Turkey by these airlines over the Aegean airspace, the number of incoming tourists to Turkey will increase substantially. This decision has been very beneficial for Turkish tourism. It is hard to guess what the aim is of those criticizing this resolution--which also has a political significance. [end recording]

DEMIREL COMMENTS ON BUDGET, ECEVIT CRITICISM OF NOTAM

[Text] Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel said that Turkey's foreign exchange needs have been completely met and that the shortage of oil will soon end. Demirel added that Turkey had lost nothing with the lifting of the NOTAM. On the contrary, it had gained a lot. Prime Minister Demirel made these statements as he was leaving the Cankaya Mansion after his weekly meeting with President Fahri Koruturk. The meeting which started at 1800 lasted more than 1 hour.

Recalling that the new budget will be in effect beginning 1 March, Demirel said that the budget will have to be implemented with a policy of stability, paying great attention to where every cent went. Demirel said that he would hold three consecutive news conferences on 8, 9 and 10 March in an attempt to explain what had been achieved during the first 100 days of the government, and which problems were still to be confronted. Let no one think that I will declare that everything is fine and wonderful. However, we have dealt forcefully with the problems of the country and we shall continue to do so. Noting that the problems facing the country had led the citizens to worry, Demirel said that if the citizens continued to be steadfast, the problems could be solved.

In reply to a question by a reporter on the lifting of the NOTAM on the Aegean airspace and Ecevit's request for substantive explanations on this matter for which the government would have to account, Demirel said: We are ready no matter what the conditions. There must be a place and a way. With the lifting of the NOTAM Turkey has not lost anything. On the contrary, it has gained a lot.

Pointing out that it was impossible to reach a goal by going around the issue, Demirel said that his government would safeguard Turkey's rights in the country and abroad in the best possible way.

Answering the question of a journalist on Ecevit's statements for the establishment of a communist party in Turkey, Demirel said that there was a constitutional court decision to the effect that our Constitution did not permit the establishment of such a party. Demirel added: Have all the problems of the country been solved that we must now deal with this problem? What good will come to Turkey's problems from that? If he knows of a better way let him come forward.

Another journalist reminded Demirel of the request from Turkish workers employed abroad who desired cooperation between the two main parties. Demirel said that the main opposition party was not willing to cooperate in order to solve the country's problems and that it did not help the government in passing the anarchy laws, state of emergency laws and the state security court laws. Demirel added: These are the problems of the country. If they refuse to help us on these matters, how can we cooperate?

RUFFINI BRIEFS EUROPEAN PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

[Text] The international crisis was at the center of the talks between Italian Foreign Minister Ruffini and the Political Committee of the European Parliament in Brussels today. Ruffini is on a tour for consultations in five European capitals. Tomorrow he will visit Dublin and The Hague. A dispatch by our correspondent Maurizio Mengoni:

The Afghan crisis and the EEC's internal problems were today discussed in the European Parliament at the closed-door talks which Minister Ruffini is having with the Political Committee of the Strasbourg assembly. The 41 members of the committee, chaired by Emilio Colombo, received with full support the initiative of the foreign ministers of the Nine for solving the international crisis by guaranteeing the neutrality of Afghanistan. They also asked Ruffini, the current president of European diplomacy, what action the chanceries of the EEC intend to take following this proposal; how Brezhenv's recent speech is assessed; and how far the resolutions approved by the European Parliament are being taken into consideration.

Ruffini replied by giving a comprehensive picture of the situation in the light of the meeting he had in Bonn on Monday with his German counterpart, Genscher, and in Copenhagen yesterday with Danish Foreign Minister Olesen. From Ruffini's explanations, the picture of a Europe emerges which, having made the first proposal, is now awaiting a sign from Moscow in order to enlarge on that proposal. Meanwhile, the threat to boycott the Olympics is being maintained but without urging quick decisions.

Among the first reactions was a statement by Sergio Segre [member of the Italian Communist Party], who considered Ruffini's talk to be substantially positive and who described the idea launched by the Nine in Rome as a productive idea. He also called for action to create better conditions so that the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan can be attained.

Remarks on Afghan Issue

LD282046 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 2000 GMT 28 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Europe insists on its proposal of neutrality for Afghanistan in order to solve the crisis in East-West relations, Italian Foreign Minister Attilio Ruffini said in The Hague at the conclusion of a tour of several European capitals: Bonn, Copenhagen, Brussels and Dublin. Ruffini's soundings were aimed at ascertaining and confirming the degree of unity among the Nine over the proposal tabled in Rome on the 19 February.

The EEC proposal enjoys the approval of the Islamic conference, its secretary, Habib Shatti, said today.

WIENER ZEITUNG SEES WESTERN 'CONCESSIONS' AT MBFR SESSION

AU291255 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 29 Feb 80 p 3 AU

[Unattributed report: "Forces Reduction Talks Continue To Be Without Concrete Contacts"]

[Text] With its latest proposals the Western side has made substantial concessions to the East, especially regarding the simplification of a forces reduction carried out in two phases. This was stated on Thursday [28 February] at the 229th plenary session of the Vienna negotiations on a reduction of forces in Central Europe by British chief delegate Edward Jackson. He also pointed out that the Eastern proposal submitted last week, which calls for the declaration of the numerical strength of both sides as of 1 January 1980, would not bring any essential chance for the negotiations of the existing discrepancies about the figures tabled by the East should continue. (The NATO states maintain the position that the Warsaw Pact forces have a numerical superiority of about 150,000 men).

An Eastern press spokesman rejected Western charges that the East was to blame for the delay regarding the negotiations about the troop strengths. However, the NATO states' press spokesman declared that Jackson pointed out that it was not possible to negotiate on figures if the East refused to present the necessary materials. Statements of intent are not enough to achieve progress in the talks about this important element of the negotiations, he said.

The next plenary session will be held next week on Thursday.

HUMAN RIGHTS ISSUE DELAYS CSCE FORUM COMMUNIQUE

LD292018 Hamburg DPA in German 1605 GMT 29 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Hamburg--A final joint document of the scientific forum of the CSCE, which about 400 scientists from the 35 CSCE states have been attending in Hamburg for the past 2 weeks, appears to be causing difficulties. The plenum of the forum, which met today following discussions by the four working groups on the subjects of energy, nutrition, medicine and social sciences, had not been able to agree on a final communique by this evening. Such a communique would have to be unanimously adopted by all the delegates.

The head of the German delegation, Prof Eugen Seibold, would not give any further details during a break in the closed plenary session of the contentious points of a final draft document which had already been submitted. He also left it open whether there would be a joint document at all.

The points at issue are believed to be about commitments to human rights, which are the subject of controversy between East and West. A spokesman of the executive committee of the forum thinks it possible that the plenum could meet for a further session tonight after the Foreign Ministry reception planned for all the participants this evening. Other reports say that there might even be further sessions tomorrow and on Sunday. The end of the forum was originally planned for tomorrow, with a public ceremony.

KREISKY REJECTS PROPOSAL TO BOYCOTT MOSCOW OLYMPICS

[Text] Vienna (AZ)--Austria will not follow the boycott of the Moscow Olympic games--this should now be certain after a statement made by Chancellor Kreisky on Wednesday [27 February] before the delegates of the Austrian Pensioners Association congress. "If the government listens to my advice and follows my recommendation," the chancellor said, "then it will not adopt any boycott decision. It would not produce any results, anyhow--except the need to go to Canossa in a certain direction in the coming years...."

Nevertheless, Kreisky declared, the cause of such boycott threats--namely, the Afghanistan crisis--also concerns us Austrians, because, if something happens in the Persian Gulf, which is situated only a few hundred kilometers from Afghanistan, and this oil transport route is cut off, European industrialized society might as well close up shop. Austria, too, has to import as much as 12 million tons of oil annually--only 2 million tons are produced in the country. Kreisky regretted that the occupation of nonalined Afghanistan has not mobilized the group of the nonalined countries and Islamic peoples, but that the intervention--which must not be accepted--has been turned into a conflict between the USSR and the United States. The chancellor called for a return to that policy of detente which began with the Austrian State Treaty, and with the aid of which it was possible to solve even serious crises similar to the current one in Afghanistan.

SPECIAL ENVOY SENT TO BOGOTA; COORDINATION GROUP PLANNED

[Text] Vienna (AZ)--Austria has reached agreement with the other states affected by the Bogota hostages affair to set up a coordination group as quickly as possible in the Colombian capital to assist the Bogota government in the difficult decisions it is facing. This was announced by Foreign Minister Pahr at a press conference at the Vienna Foreign Ministry on Thursday [28 February]. Ambassador Dr Nikolaus Horn, until a few months ago the Austrian envoy in Bogota, was dispatched to Bogota on Thursday.

Foreign Minister Pahr stressed that Vienna became active on Wednesday night, immediately after reports on the hostage affair were received. The Colombian Government, he said, agreed to his proposition and promised under no circumstances to order the storming of the embassy but to seek a solution through negotiations. It is the foremost aim of the Austrian endeavors to safeguard the lives and security of the hostages. Pahr, who Thursday night also briefed the spokesmen of the three political parties represented in parliament, underscored that there is "optimal cooperation" with the Colombian ambassador in Vienna and with Foreign Minister Uribe Vargas.

FOREIGN MINISTER PAHR TO VISIT HOLLAND, BRAZIL

AU281129 Vienna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German 28 Feb 80 p 5 AU

[Text] Vienna, (APA)--Next week (4-5 March) Foreign Minister Pahr will pay an official visit to the Netherlands. As the minister told journalists, the visit serves primarily for a discussion of Austria's wishes regarding the Common Market. A visit to Austria by Tanzanian President Julius Nyerere is scheduled for 10-13 March--he will be accompanied by his foreign minister. The foreign minister of Niger is to visit Austria 12-25 April. The Tunisian foreign minister will come to Austria 28-30 April, and the Saudi Arabian foreign minister probably at the end of May. Moreover, Pahr will continue his series of trips to Latin American countries with a visit to Brazil 25-29 May.

GENSCHER ASKS SOVIETS TO CLARIFY WITHDRAWAL OFFER

LD021214 Hamburg DPA in German 1131 GMT 2 Mar 80 KD

[Text] Bonn--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher has asked the Soviet Union to define precisely the preconditions for a withdrawal of its troops from Afghanistan. In an interview on Svewestfunk radio Genscher said on Sunday that the international situation is very critical. Hence, it is necessary to find out not just through public signals but through direct contacts between the states involved how Moscow could be induced to withdraw its troops from Afghanistan within the framework of a political solution. In order to clarify this question, contacts between Washington and Moscow are as important as those between the European states and the Soviet Union.

Genscher admitted that the proposal by the EC foreign ministers to give neutral status to Afghanistan have remained hitherto without sufficient reaction by the Soviet side. He also said that the latest speech by the Soviet head of state and party Leonid Brezhnev had added nothing new on this point.

Once again Genscher advocated a close partnership with the United States. In his view, it is dangerous for the Europeans now to philosophize on European special interests or a special European position. Genscher said: "We are now at a crossroads of Western politics, and I shall be using all the influence I have to insure that the Europeans are aware of the significance of this hour and of the decision to be made, that is: to make their contributions, together with the United States, towards a long-term worldwide peace policy, in order to safeguard not only their own security but also that of the Third World states."

The foreign minister warned not to regard the U.S. rediscovery of their responsibility as a kind of election campaign issue. "In fact, a fundamental change is taking place in the United States, and the Europeans have the opportunity to see this fundamental change or awakening of the Americans as an awakening of the Western world, and to act accordingly."

The Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan is a challenge which concerns Europe as much as the United States. The West can meet this challenge if it is prepared to come together in a long-term strategy of peace, the safeguardings of the stability in the world, and the safeguarding of the balance of power.

SCHMIDT DOES NOT RULE OUT ECONOMIC SANCTIONS AGAINST USSR

LD011342 Hamburg DPA in German 1143 GMT 1 Mar 80 LD

[Text] Bochum--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt does not rule out economic sanctions against the Soviet Union in order to stop Soviet expansion. Speaking at an SPD workers' conference in Bochum today, Schmidt also said however that there should be no agitation or "wild gesticulation" with this threat.

The chancellor, who is flying to Washington next week for talks with U.S. President Jimmy Carter, said that the aim of these discussions is "to contribute to a long-term overall plan for the West, which will strengthen the international equilibrium not only in Europe." This is intended to prevent a repetition of military interventions like that in Afghanistan, and to bring about "a Soviet withdrawal from there." It is also necessary to take into account that the Soviet Union wants to maintain its prestige as a world power. It should thus be helped to withdraw its troops without loss of face.

In Schmidt's opinion the situation in Afghanistan is more dangerous than the taking of hostages in Tehran. "Our first task as Germans is to see to it that peace is preserved." This is only possible together with its allies on the basis of a military balance. "We do not want to pursue a policy of sticking our heads in the sand, but neither do we want to conduct a policy of big words and agitation. We want to follow a middle path of commonsense."

On the question of a possible boycott of the Moscow Olympic games, Schmidt said that if the Soviet Union "does not withdraw from Afghanistan by the end of May the Federal Government will adopt the same attitude as our big Western friends."

APEL EMPHASIZES NEED FOR NATO MEMBERS' COOPERATION

[Text] Bonn--The close alliance of all allied troops on German territory must be fully maintained, Federal Defense Minister Hans Apel believes. (?This would have to include) a certain amount of deterrent against any temptations to attack by Eastern Europe, he said in a RIAS [Radio in the American Sector] Berlin interview on Sunday. It was the task of NATO to debate a division of labor within the Atlantic alliance in view of the international crisis caused by the Soviet Union. Apel pointed out that one or two alliance partners might now claim that since they had to engage themselves militarily outside the NATO area, the Federal Republic would have to help in Europe. "This can and must be debated."

Apel said that it was necessary to arrive at a joint decision in a joint debate. Perhaps this would have to be developed further in the future. However, this involved not only military cooperation. [sentence indistinct] Beyond that it was important to realize that the topics of energy supply, raw material supply and relations with the Third World were central concerns in the West's division of labor. Apel emphasized his (?good) relations with U.S. Defense Minister Harold Brown. [sentence indistinct]

In Apel's opinion, it will be in Moscow's own interest to look for ways and means to extricate itself from its terrible involvement in Afghanistan. The West ought to help the Soviet Union, if possible. "Except, the initiative must be taken by those who created the problem, not by those who were taken unawares by the attack, and who now had to experience the political as well as military consequences." Once again Apel pointed out that the Soviet Union installed one new SS-20 missile per week. If Moscow was not prepared to discuss arms limitation in the medium-range missile sector then the Americans would have to deploy the new medium-range missiles in Europe in 1983.

Regarding the impending supplementary budget, Apel emphasized that it would not be a bad idea if the stockpiling of ammunition could be taken into account as well. However, other NATO partners would have to participate. After all, they should not rely on German stockpiles, believing it was unnecessary to make their own financial sacrifices. A supplement of DM300 million or so would be necessary to cover increased fuel costs. Aid for Turkey would have to be added to this.

FINANCE MINISTER LEAVES FOR VISIT TO WASHINGTON

[Text] In his capacity as coordinator of international aid for Turkey, Federal Finance Minister Matthoefer, SPD, today left by air for Washington.

Matthoefer is to meet Secretary of State Vance, Defense Secretary Brown and his counterpart, Miller, as well as leading members of Congress. Talks are also scheduled with the presidents of the Monetary Fund, the World Bank and the U.S. Federal Reserve.

GENSCHER OUTLINES FOREIGN POLICY IN BUNDESTAG DEBATE

DW282120 Cologne Westdeutscher Rundfunk Network in German 0957 GMT 28 Feb 80 DW

[Speech by Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher in the Bundestag--live]

[Text] Ladies and gentlemen, I will resist the temptation to open another box with notes on differing statements from your ranks. Some of you managed to make conflicting statements on a number of positions within your political spectrum. Let me point to a complex of your speeches, namely, your comment on the German-French meeting in Paris and the joint statement adopted there.

Ladies and gentlemen, the opposition has the legitimate right to criticize real or alleged mistakes by the government. But when such criticism includes a sensitive and precious matter such as German-French friendship, it is harmful to our country's foreign policy interests. [applause]

If you read this declaration very thoroughly once again, you will see that basically it means a joint declaration by the two governments for the Atlantic alliance, for the loyalty to this alliance, to its partners, and it took a long time until I found a similar statement. Ladies and gentlemen, in the present situation it was a special contribution to Atlantic solidarity and not a matter to be criticized. [applause]

It is not correct either that this meeting in Paris was considered with suspicion by our partners in the European Community. Immediately following our meeting the French foreign minister and I briefed the Council of Ministers in Brussels on the meeting and explained the joint declaration.

Ladies and gentlemen, all foreign ministers of the Community welcomed this declaration. You have to be familiar with the language used in the Community; no lip service is paid there, no diplomatic courtesies are exchanged there. The language used there is frank, and the first one to address the point was the British foreign secretary, whom you referred to as a critic, who said: On behalf of my country I wish to welcome this declaration. We will not change that, it is a fact. [applause]

Ladies and gentlemen, this declaration really is of importance for cooperation. Let us therefore not prolong this matter, which is important for German-French understanding, friendship and cooperation, into quarrels resulting from the domestic situation in our country.

Let me say something about the Olympic games. Ladies and gentlemen, I am not among those using the term boycott in this context, because the question of whether or not the West will boycott these games is a perversion of the cause. He who refuses to take part because Olympic games are not games of peace is not the one who boycotts these games, but the one who boycotts these games is he who, owing to his behaviour, has withdrawn the basis from the moral demand of the Olympic games. [applause] Therefore, the language we choose should not give rise to errors.

Ladies and gentlemen, nothing does more to hush up the real necessities in the present crisis than a self-tormenting discussion in the West, which diverts attention from the fact that the cause jeoparizing the games--I repeat--is not the United States or some other Western country, but solely the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan. Because this is so, the federal chancellor asked the Soviet Union, I ask the Soviet Union to create the conditions enabling the teams from all states of the world to take part in the Olympic games, because such conditions in our view do not exist now. The federal chancellor said that, too. We have no illusions about the possibilities of bringing them about by that date. Let me add one more thing. Since we are as concerned by the intervention in Afghanistan as the United States, it is wrong to see it as a gesture of solidarity with the United States. If we make the decision, we make it in our own conviction, in our own interest, which is identical with that of the United States. [applause]

Ladies and gentlemen, unlike other national Olympic committees, the FRG National Olympic Committee in my view issued a very wise and responsible statement. On the one hand, it stated that it was the only one competent to make a decision on participation, but it also said that in making this decision it would consider political aspects. That is what we understand by civic responsibility on an independent sports organization in a free society. When and if the NOC [National Olympic Committee] makes its decision it is entitled to request a binding statement by the Federal Government, which will make its statement by observing its responsibility for this country's foreign policy. The government will not let anyone relieve it of this responsibility, which will also not be assigned to or imposed upon anyone else, ladies and gentlemen.

Up to that date we will do everything in our power to bring about an identical attitude on the part of the European partners. What the federal chancellor said here about European positions meeting U.S. positions is an expression of the attempts and efforts undertaken by us for making the Western positions meet. That is the object of our present efforts, ladies and gentlemen, at this point I would support the government, I would not criticize it.

[Genscher] Readily.

[Unidentified deputy] Mr Federal Minister, in view of what you just said, do you stand by the stance you expressed publicly that the Federal Government cannot imagine German athletes taking part in the Moscow Olympics if the Americans stay away?

[Genscher] Mr colleague, though I did not say that, I consider this stance correct.

Ladies and gentlemen, in the Bundestag session on 17 January 1980 the Federal Government expounded its assessment and goals following the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan, as well as the possibilities and limits of the German contributions to weathering the crisis. What was stated at the time continues to hold true unchanged. We would have liked to discuss in the debate today suggestions by the opposition on a common Western concept: Maybe they will still come. I do not deny that in the talk the government had with representatives of the opposition proposals were submitted, which are identical with the ideas of the Federal Government, as you know.

German proposals have been supported by the allies and partners. They have become part of the overall Western concept, which appears more clearly today than it did in January. I repeat, the German-French declaration of 5 February 1980 has been an important contribution to this effect. Our idea of the division of labor for achieving our common goal has prevailed in the West. Colleague Kohl, you could have seen from the federal chancellor's government statement that we are making important contributions to it. From the first day of the crisis our country has left no doubt about its wish to see peace--which since the end of World War II rendered possible the reconstruction of Europe--preserved by all means. Our country is aware of the fact that peace is not a gift; it must be preserved by a policy of safeguarding peace, and this also includes our contribution to the common defense of the West.

Ladies and gentlemen, rarely have Germans of the East and West been so much in agreement as in these weeks of concern about peace and about what has been achieved in recent years for the ties [zusammenhalt] of the nation. The awareness of these common interests, which also means responsibility for the fate of the whole of the nation, will also in the future determine the actions of the Federal Government. In this time of concern our people want to have a prudent policy, they do not want panic or agitation or illusions. This remains the goal of our policy.

The 14 January 1980 UN resolution must be implemented through the withdrawal of the Soviet troops from Afghanistan. The functioning of the Western defense alliance must be secured and expanded. In the interest of global peace and in the light of worldwide dependencies, a further escaltation must be prevented by a political solution for the withdrawal of the Soviet troops from Afghanistan. The strengthening of the independence and autonomy of the Third World states, also by way of furthering their economic and political stability, is a contribution to safeguarding peace and preventing new interventions in other parts of the Third World.

We want to continue consistently the West's common arms control policy together with our partners. I repeat, although some people may be annoyed, it is necessary to preserve what has been achieved through the policy of detente and at the same time preserve the basis for further progress. We act conscious that a relapse into cold war would affect no other people more than the Germans.

Ladies and gentlemen, we are aware of the fact that these goals can be reached only if Europe and America act together. It is at this point that European and American interests meet. These common interests are based on the necessity of balance. Such a balance can be created only by the Europeans and Americans together. A balance is the prerequisite for every security policy and thus also every realistic detente policy.

But the Western defense alliance is more than an expression of common interests. It is based on common values and it is an alliance of Western democracies, in fact, a common destiny regarding freedom. We will do full justice to the significance of this alliance only if we not consider it just as a power-policy calculus for our benefit, but realize what was jointly achieved and withstood in past decades. I stress above all with regard to Berlin that this alliance has long become, for the people in our country, a matter of our hearts in Western Europe and in the United States. That also must be said here. [applause]

Ladies and gentlemen, the alliance thus has left the quality and dimension of former military alliances far behind. The fact that a balance is the prerequisite for every realistic policy of detente disproves the thesis of the incompatibility of detente policy with European-U.S. solidarity.

Part of the indispensable predictability of German foreign policy is the fact that we do not let ourselves be driven into the pseudoalternative of detente or alliance, detente or transatlantic cooperation. The sooner the Soviet Union realizes that it hopes in vain for such a mistake by the Europeans, the sooner the Soviet Union will be able to realistically adapt itself to the possibilities of detente and cooperation in Europe on the basis of equality, which also are in its own interest. At any rate, it is in our very own interest for us to do everything in word and deed to avoid any wrong assessment on the part of the Soviet Union. In the present situation it is inadmissible to be vague. Therefore, an unequivocal and unquestionable declaration for the Western alliance is one of the indispensable prerequisites for the continuation of a realistic detente policy.

Both the history of the Western alliance and the history of the European Community show that despite the problems resulting from the partnership cooperation of equal and independent democratic states, the alliance and the Community always were determined in times of challenge to jointly stand such a challenge. The West can come out of such challenges strengthened only if this determination exists and if the West succeeds, and this not only economically or militarily but also politically, morally and psychologically. That must also be so now.

Ladies and gentlemen, although there is no immediate connection with Afghanistan I want to point to a problem the significance of which has grown against the background of the events in Afghanistan. It is the problem resulting from the British net contribution to the European Community budget. Prior to and during the Dublin meeting of the European Council, the Federal Government undertook considerable efforts for bringing about a settlement of the issue. It will also do so in the future. It is necessary for all partners of the European Community to prove by their conduct the functioning of Europe. What is necessary now is a European answer, not an answer of conflicting national interests.

Ladies and gentlemen, we all have sister parties in the other European states, bearing government responsibility or being in the opposition like we here. I think we should try and make them realize that the next European Council has to be aware of its historic importance and bring about a settlement of this serious issue so important for the functioning of the European Community. [applause]

Ladies and gentlemen, the realization that the demand for the implementation of the UN resolution alone does not bring about the withdrawal of the Soviet troops from Afghanistan and the attempt to avoid a further escalation were the focus of discussions of the European Community foreign ministers in Rome on 19 February 1980. The demand for a politically independent, nonalined Afghanistan shows how Afghanistan can exercise its right of self-determination and how the country can be prevented from being turned into an object of power interests. It gives the Soviet Union the assurance that the West has no intention to gain from the Soviet troop pullout an advantage for the West at the expense of Soviet security interests. The support given the European proposal by the President of the United States and by the U.S. Government constitutes the conceptual agreement of Europeans and Americans in this issue as well. I fail to understand how anybody can say here that the West still has not come up with an overall concept.

Ladies and gentlemen, suppose it was the only motive, and which is more probable one of several motives, of the Soviet intervention to prevent a change in the balance in the region at the expense of the Soviet Union. Then this can be accomplished through the status for Afghanistan which we have demanded, under the declared will of states of the European Community and their American partners.

The states of the region and the participants in the Islamic conference of Islamabad do not have any intentions different from ours. The West does not want to subject Afghanistan to its influence. We do not want any bases in this country, nor do we wish to turn Afghanistan into a platform against the Soviet Union. What we want is nothing more than that a small people can exercise its right to self-determination free from outside intrusion.

We know that in this respect we are in harmony with the states of the region and with the predominant majority of the states of the community of nations. The readiness to respect and, if desired, to guarantee the territorial integrity, sovereignty, political independence, and nonalinment of Afghanistan serves all states of the region, including the Soviet Union. This proposal by the European Community, ladies and gentlemen, beyond the demand for pullout, introduces a dynamic political element into the internacional discussion. The considerations of Soviet interests as well underscores our will for a balance of interests and for the avoidance, and ultimate complete mitigation, of escalation. This will can prevail only, however, if it meets with a constructive response from Moscow. For this reason, ladies and gentlemen, the Soviet Union should take this proposal seriously. Its support by states of the Third World, by states of the nonalined movement, is sure to enhance its weight.

In his speech on 22 February 1980 General Secretary Brezhnev made some statements concerning preconditions for the withdrawal of the Soviet troops from Afghanistan. In the event that this speech was intended to provide a reaction to the Rome statement, in the event this speech is to indicate credibly that the Soviet Union wants to withdraw its troops from Afghanistan, then what is needed now is an explanation of the modalities for the withdrawal as the Soviet Union sees them. Only this will give us, the West, only this will give the Third World, the chance to judge the objectives and the material significance of the Brezhnev speech. In other words, the words must now be followed by deeds. This was the very part of my speech which Colleague Kohl neglected to include when he quoted me.

Ladies and gentlemen, the words must now be followed by deeds. Our readiness to examine the speech seriously and our demand for an elucidation of the concepts of the Soviet Union express our conviction that nothing, absolutely nothing, and no chance must be blocked for the preservation of peace. [applause]

And I find, therefore, that the one who discards this speech as cynical as soon as he has heard it must permit himself to be asked what he wants to do in the matter in addition to the verbal demand in order to bring about the withdrawal. [applause]

Ladies and gentlemen, it is not a matter of exploting the existing contacts of the two big powers and also of the states of the European Community. In the 17 January 1980 debate the Federal Government has stressed the significance of the Afghanistan intervention with regard to relations between the states of the Third World and the Soviet Union. In doing this we have pointed to an important aspect which has just been touched on in today's speech by Colleague Kohl, an aspect of the present world political crisis situation. On the background of the Soviet intervention, the movement of the nonalined is gaining additional weight. We consider this movement an element of stabilization and equalization in the world. Our policy aimed at strengthening the independence of these states is also a policy of safeguarding peace.

The activities of the Soviet Union and its allies including the use of military means to establish predominance in Africa and other parts of the Third World have increased the awareness among the states of the Third World and the nonalined for the necessity of being really nonalined and independent. Particularly since the Havana summit conference and even more so since the events in Afghanistan, more and more states of the Third World reject the thesis that the Soviet Union is the natural ally of the nonalined.

In these days when Yugoslavia can be certain that many people of this world feel concerned by President Tito's state of health, one hopes that many people will realize what a significant role was played by this European statesman at the Havana conference in the fight for maintaining the independence of the nonalined movement.

Ladies and gentlemen, as the surviving father and founder of this movement, he wanted to avoid the breaking down of this part of his life's work. At that time I wished that the proceedings in Havana ought to have been viewed in a more differentiated way in several camps.

As Europeans, we owe it to Yugoslavia and to its president that the nonalined movements and their significance for the world have increased more and more, and that it cannot be misunderstood as being a non-European or even an anti-European idea because a European country is one of the founders and active members of this movement. [applause]

Ladies and gentlemen, also in this phase of the clarification process among the nonalined it would be a historical mistake one could never undo if the West wanted to recommend itself as a natural partner or claim that some nonalined countries are pro-Western.

Only with the votes of many nonalined countries--including countries that have been considered Soviet satellites by our country--could the vote in the United Nations have achieved the resultant number 104, only because the nonalined movement in a most engaged way backed the demand for independence of Afghanistan. But his vote was not a vote for the West. It was a vote for self-determination, for nonalinement, for the independence of Afghanistan in proxy by all states of the Third World which feel threatened by predominance. [applause]

Only with such an approach to nonalinement will it be possible for the West, wherever common aims are involved, also to achieve in the future a degree of agreement such as has been demonstrated in the significant UN vote on 14 January 1980.

Ladies and gentlemen, we need this agreement if a political solution of the Afghanistan crisis is supposed to be achieved through the withdrawal of the Soviet troops from this country. We leave no doubts that for such a development India's stance is of decisive significance. The mutual relations of states of that great subcontinent call for the greatest care regarding the kind of financial and economic aid that will be given to the development of Pakistan.

Demands to export arms to Pakistan have been voiced in our country. Ladies and gentlemen, we reject these demands not only because of our restrictive arms export policy, but because we do not want to bring about additional complications in this difficult political area. But we will make our contribution in order to contribute through economic support of Pakistan to the stability of this region, thus increasing the leeway for India as a leading country of the nonalined movement; a leeway that is indispensable if India wants to use its political and moral weight for the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan.

Ladies and gentlemen, the Western alliance's ability to act is expressed not merely in the common initiative of Europeans and Americans, which I just have outlined, with regard to a political solution of the Afghanistan problem. But I believe that this initiative is important enough to be more thoroughly treated in this discussion here than it has been the case in the first contribution of the opposition. One must be certain how wide the support is for this seriously meant attempt by the Western states to achieve the aim politically and not merely in statements, namely, that the Soviet Union should withdraw its troops.

Our ability to act must also be demonstrated with regard to strengthening the alliance so that it can fulfill its defensive tasks. We stick to what we have said in the debate on 17 January 1980, namely, that the mission of the Bundeswehr lies here in central Europe. We have no reason to play down the significance of the Bundeswehr for the common security of the partners or make it appear as less than it is. Incorporating the Bundeswehr in the state and social systems of the Federal Republic of Germany and our compulsory military service system are the indispensable prerequisites for the weight of the German defense contribution.

Fulfilling the real 3-percent aim for 1980 stresses the determination of the Federal Government also in the current difficult financial, political situation to fulfill accepted commitments. These commitments are in line with common interests and thus also with our own interests. The Federal Republic of Germany's preoccupation with its own defense contribution to central Europe is being complemented by our effort aimed at Turkey's financial and economic improvement and by our efforts toward strengthening the defense potential of Turkey and Greece.

Ladies and gentlemen, if the question were raised here as to what the Federal Government is doing, then I cannot but ask in return: Is it nothing if we enable this important partner on the NATO's southern flank to overcome its economic difficulties so that it may become an even more reliable partner in the alliance through political stability?

Ladies and gentlemen, the Turkish Government's serious efforts toward overcoming its difficult economic and financial situation justify our tangible efforts. We also expect such efforts on the part of other partners. And the reason for our efforts is to be found not only in Turkey's strategic location; it also finds justification in the solidarity of all alliance partners with any individual member. Only if we regard Turkey's worries and problems in proper context of our own interests, also as anxieties and problems of our own, will we be able to extend the necessary and effective assistance to this important country. This also applies to defense assistance. In assessing Turkey we should also be aware of the fact that this allied country as a participant in the Islamabad conference is visible proof that the pursuit of the Islamic interests and goals and the objectives of the Western defense alliance are not at odds; they are compatible.

The Federal Government's initiative toward an aid action for Turkey has been prompted by the objective and idea that for the sake of being effective it must be more comprehensive, more favorable qualitatively and, unlike preceding support, must be devised on a medium-term basis. We have completed the commitments undertaken during the last action on schedule. In the immediate aid for 1980, too, we are also in the process of overcoming acute problems.

Ladies and gentlemen, while the financial assistance is serving economic and thus political stability, the defense aid is aimed at directly strengthening the Turkish Army and, as far as it applies to Greece, the Greek Army, against the threat from outside. The Federal Republic of Germany thereby undersoores its determination to make an additional contribution toward common security via the concentration of its military efforts on central Europe through the strengthening of the southern flank of the alliance.

The concept of the division of labor in the alliance is thus better outlined, namely, as a result of the visible efforts undertaken by the Federal Republic of Germany. This, too, should not be doubted in this house. This division of labor is interpreted on our part as the assumption of coordinated efforts by all alliance partners aimed at the common goal. And thus it is the opposite of a division of labor which would be misunderstood as the differentiation between burdens and advantages.

Ladies and gentlemen, the desire for contributing toward the accomplishment of the common goal within the framework of an overall concept constitutes a strengthening of the internal cohesion and is the convincing force of the alliance as well. We will also do this in our common efforts toward strengthening the independence of nonalined states. On 17 January 1980 we reported that we expressly endeavored to achieve the conclusion of the cooperation agreement with Yugoslavia. Today we may state that this agreement was initialed on the 25th day of this month. This is an important political decision by the European Community and Yugoslavia, which is in a difficult situation. [applause]

The efforts toward increased economic and political cooperation with the Gulf states for the purpose of strengthening the independence of these countries are underway. The chancellor has drawn attention to the significance of the cooperation agreement between the European Community and the ASEAN states. It will be signed on 7 March. This can be attributed to an initiative by the Federal Republic of Germany, and it is proof of the fact that regional mergers, regardless of the structure of the countries, can effectively cooperate on the basis of equal rights. We thereby provide a model of cooperation without hegemony and without influencing states of the Third World.

Ladies and gentlemen, the goal of preventing the repetition of interventions such as that in Afghanistan in other parts of the world must be pursued by eliminating hotbeds of conflict. Viewed against this background the course of Rhodesia into independence requires the support of all constructive forces in the world. Notwithstanding all the difficulties which have been accompanying this process to this day, it is necessary to recognize the signal effects which might emerge from a positive process in Rhodesia for the solution of the Namibia issue and also for the internal development in the Republic of South Africa.

It is for this reason that the Federal Republic appeals to all concerned to abide by the agreements concluded consistently and to desist from making the efforts that the British government has undertaken with our support fail at the last minute. [applause]

Ladies and gentlemen, the chancellor has already pointed out that apart from the demand for the withdrawal of the Soviet troops from Afghanistan, the Islamabad conference has also drawn attention to the significance of a comprehensive and just and lasting solution to the Middle East issue--which is readily overlooked. We hope and expect that all the parties involved in the Israeli-Arab conflict will recognize that the solution of the Middle East issue is an important precondition for the independence and the right to self-determination of all peoples in that region. Notwithstanding all antagonism still existing, Arabs and Israelis are sitting in the same boat here.

A solution will be possible only if the Palestinian people, too, can exercise their rights of self-determination. In the past the European-Arab dialog has had a stabilizing effect on the region. The Federal Government feels that particularly in the present situation this dialog is of great significance.

Ladies and gentlemen, the chancellor has discussed here the necessity of continuing the policy of detente. And I tell you that even canceled visits do not deprive us of the inner sovereignty of continuing to work toward achieving a closer bond between Germans in Germany. [applause] We also are in full harmony with our partners in the Western alliance, and a very important result of the visit by the U.S. secretary of state was the harmony achieved in all the efforts made in the field of arms control so as to score headway in this respect. The Western alliance's proposals concerning negotiations, dating back to December 1979, are on the table. We do want to negotiate on medium-range weapons.

We also want, ladies and gentlemen, the followup conference in Madrid to take place, so that we will be able to discuss confidence-building measures there. When should it be more urgent to talk about confidence-building measures for the sake of preventing surprise actions than after the events we have experienced in Afghanistan? For this reason it is very important to recognize the significance of the French proposal concerning a European disarmament conference, which proposes to extend the area of the confidence-building measures to the entire Western part of the Soviet Union up to the Ural Mountains. To this end it is necessary to make preparations. If you present here an abbreviated version of my comment on Mr Gierek's speech, Colleague Kohl, then the honest way of dealing with each other requires that you add what now matters--and that is what I said in the referent statement--namely, to examine now to what extent this proposal is directly compatible with the elements of the proposal we have been pursuing jointly with our European partners and with the United States. This was the statement which I made, because we know what it means if at the followup conference in Madrid a European disarmament conference is decided upon. What it means is that the United States of America will participate in this disarmament process just as it does in the CSCE process, so that no European dissociation from the United States can occur in the arms control policy fields.

It is necessary, ladies and gentlemen, to take all these elements into consideration in pondering such proposals, notwithstanding all skepticism indicated toward any proposal.

Esteemed ladies and gentlemen, it is not enough in view of the effects caused by the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan to reduce the behavior of the Federal Republic of Germany to its statements concerning the participation in the Olympic games or the timing of the statement as to when the 3-percent goal can be fulfilled or not. This is a question of world political significance, and the profound effects on the whole world are incontestable.

For this reason a solution of the issue is conceivable only including developments throughout the world. For this reason we are not doing ourselves a favor, and we do not contribute toward the solution of the crisis, if we fail to keep in mind the implications on the Third World, if we fail to recognize the common interests between the Third World states and us and to utilize these common interests.

The setback to detente policy that emanated from the intervention is serious and will last for quite a while. This does not and must not change anything in our goal of continuing to work for arms control and for mitigating tensions.

Ladies and gentlemen, military balance is inalienable. If it were up to us, we would have this balance on as low a level of armaments as possible. But we will not neglect anything necessary to guarantee that balance in any event.

The most important results of the developments not only of the past few months but of the past several years include the shaping of a new awareness in the United States. The American nation, after the serious burdens imposed on it by the war in Vietnam and the Watergate crisis, so far has borne with admirable discipline the nervous strain of the hostage drama in Tehran--this applying to citizens and leadership alike. But this nation also has become aware of its great responsibility for peace, security, and independence in the world. No doubt it will act accordingly, and not just over the next few months. It would be a gross misjudgment should we regard what currently is happening in the United States as an election campaign interlude by those running for election.

The Europeans surely would miss a chance if they failed to realize that this revival in the United States of world political awareness and the will to bear world political responsibility is also, and perhaps particularly, in the interest of the Europeans. [applause] Jointly with our partners and allies, ladies and gentlemen, we will continue the policy of safeguarding peace.

The Soviet Union does not make this task any easier by the volume of its threatening potential and by an expansive political objective. The Soviet Union, on the other hand, has also made some contributions, even remarkable contributions, toward a policy which has mitigated tensions in Europe. The SALT negotiations of the two great powers show that the Soviet Union, too, is seeing its interests and also its responsibility in view of the atomic destruction potential. If peace is to be preserved worldwide, then the East-West conflict must not be transposed to the Third World. There is not a difference of views on this here. [applause]

But the West cannot accomplish that alone. As incontestably as the Soviet Union and we profit from the cooperation between East and West, is this cooperation incontestably being impeded time and again whenever the Soviet Union utilizes any chance of gaining unilateral advantages in the Third World. The indivisibility of detente policy is inalienable lest it be called in question.

A policy which abides by the rules of peaceful life together and respect for the sovereignty of others where the risks for an expansion are too great, such a policy destroys existing confidence and prevents future building of confidence. [sentence as heard] We are not insinuating that the Soviet Union wants war with the West. Yet safeguarding peace requires constructive rather than expansive policies everywhere in the world. The sooner the Soviet Union realizes that an independent, really nonalined Third World is in the interest not only of these countries, the countries of the Third World, but also is in the interest of the Soviet Union and of the Western states, the sooner can the Soviet Union clear the road toward a common, and so urgently necessary, assistance by the North to the world's needy South.

Ladies and gentlemen, instead of the obsolete policy of predominance, which the West rejects also because it is aware of its own historical mistakes, there must be the desire of all industrial states to maintain cooperation with the Third World--peaceful cooperation.

It would be a grave erroneous decision and a grave misjudgment if the Soviet Union assumed that the wish of the West to overcome the Afghanistan crisis politically through a withdrawal of Soviet troops, and our continuous desire for cooperation, are signs of weakness.

No, it is an expression of our desire to safeguard peace. Our determination to do what is necessary for defense and not to abandon others in preserving their independence stresses that our peace policy is free of illusions. And nothing will disconcert us in pursuing this policy.

But, ladies and gentlemen, we know that the entire German nation expects us to pursue a policy of safeguarding peace without illusions here and there. I have tried for the Federal Government to make a contribution here with regard to the limits and opportunities of a German contribution. We expect the suggestions, the criticism and I hope also in part the agreement of the opposition. [applause]

DOHNANYI ADDRESSES MEETING ON RELATIONS WITH POLAND

[Text] Bielefeld--Klaus von Dohnanyi, minister of state for foreign affairs, today warned against detaching European detente from the development of East-West relations. Speaking at today's annual German-Polish talks in Bielefeld, he said: "East-West relations cannot be resolved by having totally independent relations. Even so, we must isolate sources of tension as far as possible. Regional tensions must be rendered divisible."

If Poles and Germans supported and fostered such a process, the prospects for the decade ahead might still outweigh the undeniable risks. Both countries would be the first to suffer the consequences of another conflict. German-Polish understanding had made a considerable contribution to peace in Europe and throughout the world.

Reviewing German-Polish relations since the formation of the Warsaw Treaty, Dohnanyi stressed that both sides had declared that the Oder-Neisse border is Poland's western frontier. "There will be no change in this respect," Dohnanyi said. He described the political exchange of views between the two countries as "tight, frank and trustful."

OECD-FRG LOAN TO TURKEY CONCLUDED

TA281723 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 28 Feb 80 TA

[Text] An agreement for a FRG loan to Turkey within the framework of the OECD was signed in Bonn today. The agreement envisages the extension of a loan of 100 million marks. According to TRT correspondent Can Akver, the agreement was signed by the state secretary for the Foreign Affairs Ministry, Hans (Lattenschlager) and by the Turkish ambassador to Bonn,Vahit Halefoglu. It has been announced that this loan was extened as an advance on Turkey's demand for aid from the FRG in 1980. Meanwhile, it is reported that FRG Finance Minister Hans Matthoefer, designated to coordinate aid to Turkey within the OECD framework, will leave for the United States and Japan next week to have talks on the subject of aid to Turkey.

CYPRIOT FOREIGN MINISTER ON AIM OF PARIS TALKS

ID030853 Paris LE FIGARO in French 28 Feb 80 p 4 ID

[Charles Aste report: "Kiprianou Seeks Help To Sway Ankara"]

[Text] Cypriot President Spiros Kiprianou, who is on a working visit to Paris, is due to meet with Mr Giscard d'Estaing today while Cypriot Foreign Minister Nikolaos Rolandhis will have talks with his French counterpart, Jean Francois-Poncet. This visit is part of the diplomatic campaign launched by the Nicosia leaders to bring pressure to bear on the Turkish authorities to bring about a resumption of negotiations on the Cyprus problem. The Cypriot leaders think the key to the problem lies in Ankara, and the Western countries alone, they feel, are able to influence the Turkish leaders.

That is what Mr Rolandhis told us.

"We recognize," he said, "the interest which the West has in handling Turkey carefully. However, it also has to be admitted that, following the weakening of CENTO, the West desperately needs to maintain stability in the region. For this reason relations between Turkey and Greece should be normalized, thereby strengthening NATO's eastern flank. However, it would be wrong to think that this normalization could take place without a settlement of the Cyprus problem. Furthermore, it is vital to remember that that Eastern bloc countries fear that a continuation of the present status quo might eventually make the partition of the island official, turning it into a NATO bastion."

Mr Rolandhis then recalled how grateful the Cypriot Government and people are to France for the constant support it gives them and he added: "Of all the Western countries France is the one to which we feel closest. We are sure that Mr Kiprianou's visit will strengthen our relations, and there is no doubt that we will obtain President Giscard d'Estaing's support in the campaign we are now waging."

Mr Rolandhis emphasized the intercommunal dialog several times. However, it has produced no results in the 5 years it has lasted. The Cypriot chief of diplomacy recognized this but stressed with disillusion:

"Unfortunately, we have no alternative. The experiment has indeed been disappointing. The Turks realize that we do not have the material and military means to regain our land and property. Therefore they are taking advantage of that to continue their occupation, and nobody will be able to oust them as long as they stick to their positions. That is why we have no alternative but to appeal to friendly governments and international bodies to prevent our cause being forgotten. By these contacts we are strengthening the legal recognition of our state at the world level--a recognition refused only by Turkey. We are also strengthening our economic position, on which the survival of an independent united Cyprus largely depends. We will pursue our efforts on the economic plane which, since 1974, have enabled us to achieve impressive results and, above all, to keep full confidence in our people and our country."

Despite a degree of optimism shown by Mr Rolandhis, he clearly has few illusions about the future--at least the near future. Moreover, this is inevitable in view of Ankara's attitude. As Mr Caglayangil, former Turkish foreign minister and now president of the Senate, has just stated: "What Turkey conquered at gunpoint could not be restored by documents. Turkey's objective is to make the present de facto situation official. Our mission is to turn Cyprus into a homeland for all Turks."

LE MONDE VIEWS SIGNIFICANCE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE PRIMARY

[Editorial: "Mr Carter's Election Hopes"]

[Text] The New Hampshire primaries, won last Tuesday by Mr Carter for the Democrats and Mr Reagan for the Republicans, were the real start of the American presidential campaign. They confirmed Mr Carter's lead over his closest rival, Senator Kennedy, and showed the fragility of the success won by Mr George Bush in the caucuses which preceded the 26 February vote. In the Republican stronghold of New Hampshire Ronald Reagan, idol of the confirmed conservatives, won without difficulty.

One year ago the U.S. President seemed more than just vulnerable: He was positively out of the running. Today it is difficult to see who could deny him the second term he is seeking without yet having entered the race in person. The present situation seems to favor him almost as much as it did 4 years ago when Mr Carter, an outsider at the beginning, overtook all the Democrat pretenders to the White House one by one--they were all quickly in difficulties and doomed to be outrun.

California Governor Jerry Brown's "challenge" is purely symbolic. Only the candidacy of Senator Kennedy, favorite in all the opinion polls until he officially announced his candidacy on 7 November last year, could worry him. However, Kennedy's candidacy has not gained any substance at any time since then.

There is no point in invoking outside circumstances to explain the poor performance by the last Kennedy brother, although those circumstances may have played a part in this failure. It was probably risky to challenge Mr Carter 3 days after the hostages had been seized in Tehran. That event monopolized the news for weeks and necessarily placed the administration chief closer than ever to the front of the political stage.

It would have taken a fine performance to compensate for this drawback. Senator Kennedy's performance was terrible right from the start. He was incapable of putting forward any clearly-defined "alternative solution" to Mr Carter's policy, and furthermore seemed more indecisive and confused than the man he is trying to replace. His interviews and speeches merely increased the discomfort felt by Americans at the sight of a man so obviously unable to live up to his famous name and to the extremely creditable reputation he had gained in the Senate. In these circumstances it is miraculous that he still has supporters.... How long will he continue to have support? The Massachusetts senator must feel sorely tempted to "throw in the sponge" after 4 months of a campaign which has been as much of a burden as it has been a disappointment.

Although Mr Kennedy's defeat was predictable, the extremely mediocre score gained by Mr George Bush in the Republican camp is a surprise. Mr Ronald Reagan's almost two-to-one victory proves that, at nearly 70 years of age, the champion of the antiliberal right has lost none of his charm. Can the same be said of his credibility? It is difficult to imagine the Republican Party entrusting its electoral fate to the former governor of California, especially if it is President Carter he has to face in November. The fight would be much too unfair. However, we must not forget that this kind of reasoning is not valid, since it is the primaries and not the big shots who decide on the "investiture" of each party's candidate for the highest office.

COSSIGA PREPARED TO MEDIATE OVER AFGHANISTAN

Last night Cossiga stated in a note from Palazzo Chigi that he is personally available for any mediation initiative. The urgent need to keep prospects open for overcoming the international crisis, indicated by the nine EEC countries, was underlined as the central element of the commitment which Cossiga intends to assume in the negotiations with Moscow. The problems linked with the Afghan question were discussed by Foreign Affairs Minister Ruffini, who last night ended at The Hague a tour of several European countries.

RUFFINI ASSESSES SOVIET VIEW OF AFGHAN NEUTRALIZATION

[Excerpt] [Ruffini] I would not say that at the present time one could assert that on the Soviet side there has been some positive reaction on the question of Afghanistan. A glimmer of light seems to be emerging perhaps, a very tiny one, but we shall also clutch at these tiny glimmers. We want to check them; we want to investigate them thoroughly, as we wish to reach the objectives which we have set for ourselves, that is to say,the withdrawal of Soviet troops and the restoration of a situation of autonomy, independence and neutrality in Afghanistan. We shall spare no effort in this context.

FURTHER RESHUFFLE IN SECURITY SERVICES EXPECTED

[Gianluigi Melega report: "Counterespionage: Services Are Changing. How? That's a Secret"]

[Text] Rome--If the Cossiga government falls, one of its dying acts could be yet another major reshuffle in the secret services. For the past few weeks the potential protagonists have been acting covertly to avoid being taken by surprise by their rivals, and their bustling activity has made it possible to discover some hitherto unknown details of events in the news which have shaken the country.

Taking things in order, Cossiga is not particularly satisfied with the functioning of Italy's two main security bodies, the Military Intelligence and Security Service [SISMI] and the Intelligence and Democratic Security Service [SISDE], commanded respectively by Gen Guiseppe Santovito and Gen Giulio Grassini. Nor does he feel that the Executive Committee of the Intelligence and Security Services [CESIS], headed by Prefect Walter Pelosi, which should coordinate the two services, has done a very good job of stimulus and coordination.

The prime minister experienced a major disappointment in connection with the affair of the three autonomous terrorists arrested in Ortona with two missile launches in their truck (incidentially, three empty launcher crates were found in the truck, which suggests that at least three other launchers are still at large in Italy). Cossiga instructed the two services to prepare reports in this context: SISDE delivered to him what was essentially a hodgepodge of press cuttings; SISMI presented a report which did seem interesting, until proved unfounded: In fact, it maintained that the terrorists were being transferred from Genova to Ortona--a theory which investigations later entirely disproved.

The situation worsened when Habash's Palestinians wrote that the Italian Government should be informed of the background to the missiles affair by the incumbent SISMI agent at the Italian Embassy in Beirut, the same Col Stefano Giovannoni who was involved in various ways, through his connections with the Arab world, in both the Moro case and the National Hydrocarbons Agency kickbacks affair.

Giovannoni learned from Habash's men of their version of events (which largely exonerated the Italian terrorists, who, according to Habash, were guilty merely of having tried to help the Palestinians with transport, which had suddenly become difficult). Cossiga, extremely annoyed at having been left in the dark, summoned Santovito to demand an explanation. The general replied that the report had been delivered to then Defense Minister Attilio Ruffini. And since, on being questioned by Cossiga, Ruffini seemed completely astonished, Santovito produced a copy of the report with the following remark handwritten by one of Ruffini's direct aides, Admiral Mainini: "Seen by the minister."

The entire affair left Cossiga with a bitter taste in his mouth, convincing him that something must be done at once. A high-ranking Defense Ministry official, General Mei, was instructed to examine a solution for a general reorganization of the services. Since article 2 of the law governing the services states that the prime minister should supervise their "organization," Cossiga's only condition was that the new earthquake must be able to pass formally as a simply organizational measure, rather than as a real substantial alteration.

Mei's plan, which was drafted promptly, envisages the establishment of a "logistical center" which would merge the two services' administration and financing (and Mei regards himself as a good candidate for its directorship). The transformation would obviously deprive the two present services of all powers apart from simply carrying out operations decided by the "logistical center."

There would also be a change of personnel. Santovito has been suggested as a successor to Pelosi at the head of CESIS, and to replace Santovito, Ruffini (who has now become foreign minister) is rooting loudly for General D'Ambrosio, who has the peculiarity of being an Italo-American who has opted for Italian citizenship but still has relatives and business connections with people living in America.

A new SISDE chief is also being sought. At first Ugo Macera, appointed prefect after his retirement, was considered. But Macera is now too old. Moreover, though Grassini may not be an ace spy, he does have excellent relations with Ugo Pecchioli, the PCI's "shadow interior minister." This is a strong point in his favor.

It must also be borne in mind that in recent years a group composed of both soldiers and civilians, bound by extremely profitable business connected with the more or less legal international arms trade, has grown up around the Defense Ministry. With the aid of top secret service officials it is possible to sell and resell weapons, equipment, radar, ships and industrial plants. And it is also possible to deliver massive kickbacks to politicians willing to lend a helping hand. Adolfo Sarti, only very recently made defense minister, seems to be moving extremely cautiously in a situation with which he is not fully acquainted. Perhaps this is one reason why the reshuffle has not taken place yet.

RED BRIGADES SAID TO HAVE SHOT PERSONNEL MANAGER

[Text] Genoa, February 29 (ANSA)--The personnel manager of the Genoa shipbuilder "Italcantieri", Roberto Della Rocca, was wounded in the legs this morning by unidentified terrorist gunmen who fired two shots which hit their targets. Police said that a total of seven pistol shots were fired by the assailants. Responsibility for the attack against the 33-year-old engineer was claimed by the Red Brigades urban guerrillas.

TERRORIST GROUP CLAIMS RESPONSIBILITY FOR BAR BOMBING

[Text] Rome, March 1 (ANSA)--An organization calling itself "Revolutionary Action Groups" (GAR) has claimed responsibility for last night's attack against a Rome bar, "Rosati" in Rome's central Piazza del Popolo. An anonymous telephone caller told a Rome daily, "GAR speaking. We hit Rosati, a fascist hang-out". The bomb, which was not very powerful, nevertheless caused considerable damage. It had been placed in a rest room and exploded one hour after the bar closed. The explosion completely destroyed the rest room, knocking down walls and ceilings and blew up the water pipes. The blow also shattered windows on an inner courtyard and the heavy iron shutters of the front door. The bar, which had been a traditional watering hole of actors and artists, had recently been chosen as a meeting place by militant rightwing youths.

PARTIES DELIBERATE ON ELECTION OF NEW DC LEADER

[Excerpts] Rome, March 1 (ANSA)--The Italian political (?scene) was still in a state of late hibernation today as the political parties awaited next week's meeting of the Christian Democrat (DC) National Council. The council was elected by the recently concluded party congress and must now name the new secretary of the Rome Parliament's largest party to replace outgoing Benigno Zaccagnini. The majority at the congress came out against any concession of government responsibility to the Communists (PCI), the DC's closest parliamentary rivals. It is assumed that the choice of secretary and the policies he will be asked to pursue will be a close reflection of this majority.

Yesterday, interviewed by a news weekly, Christian Democrat Deputy Chairman Carlo Donat-Cattin, whose faction was in the majority cartel at the DC Congress, said that the choice of a new secretary was a problem of "autonomy and efficiency". Spokesman for the majority at the congress, Donat-Cattin added that the secretary must be someone who "can take the weight of the DC's generality," presumably an appeal for a man who can reknit the ranks after the congress's split between a 58 percent ballot for the winning cartel and 42 percent for the minority.

Former Foreign Minister Arnaldo Forlani, who has been tipped as a possible front-runner for the secretaryship, told this morning's edition of the Rome daily, LA REPUBBLICA, that he was not seeking any post. But he too called for what he described as "reasonable solutions that are as unitary as possible". With the Socialists [PSI] on the verge of turning their abstention into a vote against the Cossiga cabinet, he added that the coming government crisis would need a "patient comparison of positions" with the other parties. He added that there should be a search for "broader and more committed programmatic agreements" and that, in the meantime, the present government should be kept on its feet.

But his remarks seemed to run up against the brick wall of the Socialists' determination to end their indirect support for Cossiga. On Thursday, this position was formalized in a leadership meeting and, later, the PSI whips in the two houses, Alberto Cipellini for the Senate and Vincenzo Balzamo for the lower house, officially informed the premier of the decision. But the decision was not effective at once. The two spokesmen made it clear that it would not be applied until after the DC National Council meeting and a subsequent session of the Socialist Central Committee.

PSI'S WITHDRAWAL OF SUPPORT FOR COSSIGA APPLAUDED

AU030854 Rome ANSA in Egnlish 0830 GMT 3 Mar 80 AU

[Text] Rome, March 3 (ANSA)--The Socialist Party [PSI] held the center of the stage of the Italian political scene this weekend after formally serving notice on the Rome government that it was withdrawing its crucial abstention support from Premier Francesco Cossiga's minority coalition. The PSI has kept the Christian Democrat (DC), Social Democrat (PSDI) and Liberal (PLI) party governing partnership in power since August by abstaining in major parliamentary showdowns. Observers kept their attention geared to Socialist Party moves for the effects they might have on the government's immediate survival, practically disregarding the leadership battle going on in the ranks of the ruling Christian Democrat Party. The DC's National Council meets Wednesday to pick a new party leadership to replace out-going Secretary Benigno Zaccagnini.

PSI Secretary Bettino Craxi gave new assurances that his party would not bring down the government by tabling a no-confidence motion in Parliament until a workable alternative arrangement was in sight. "I will not stand up in Parliament to decree the death of this government unless I know what will replace it", Craxi said in an interview for the PANORAMA news weekly. According to the PSI leaders, there was a risk of another round of early elections "since a head-on clash with the DC is still possible". Craxi said in no uncertain terms that he will formally start a government crisis when his party has given him the authorization to propose something different than a "national unity" governing arrangement with the Communists, a virtually unworkable set-up in light of the DC's opposition (?to it).

The PSDI and PLI parties welcomed Craxi's latest statement, saying that it opened new possibilities for a solution to the nation's ruling predicament. PSDI spokesman Luigi Preti urged a united front tactical agreement between Social Democrats, Socialists, Republicans and Liberals.

INDUSTRY MINISTER REPORTS OIL SHORTFALL REDUCED

[Text] Rome, March 1 (ANSA)--Falling consumption of petroleum products and a new contract for oil imports from Venezuela have significantly cut the expected shortfall between Italy's oil needs and supplies, according to Italian Industry Minister Antonio Bisaglia. Interviewed by the RAI television network last night, Bisaglia said that the shortfall was now expected to be only three million tons. On November 15, it was put at twenty million tons and, on the same date in January, at six million tons. According to Bisaglia, the major factor was an agreement between ENI, the state-run natural fuels group, and Venezuela for an additional one and a half million tons of crude a year. The other oil companies also managed to put together a further two million tons for the first two months of the year, he reported. In parallel, Bisaglia said, consumption dropped by about six percent in January and February, meaning a saving of almost one and a half million tons in those two months alone.

EEC COMMISSIONER VISITS TO DISCUSS PORTUGUESE ENTRY

[Text] Lisbon, March 1 (ANSA)--The European Economic Community (EEC) now hopes to get an overall vision of the problems linked to Portuguese entry into the Community by the summer and to start on political negotiations with the Iberian state before the year is out, according to Vice-President of the EEC's Executive Commission Lorenzo Natali. The Italian Commission member flew in here Thursday for a five-day round of talks with the Portuguese leaders which he said he hoped would summarize progress so far and bring further advances on all fronts of the complex negotiations.

"We want to get an overall vision of the problems linked to Portuguese entry even before the summer, and we should start on political talks by the end of 1980," he told journalists yesterday as he wound up the second of his fifth visit to this capital. Yesterday's schedule saw him talking with Portuguese Foreign Minister Diego Freitas do Amaral and the Lisbon government's ministers for finance, agriculture, commerce and industry. Today, he will have a plenary session with the local government and will also meet with the EEC ambassadors here.

According to Natali, good progress has been made on the technical aspects of Portuguese entry, but similar progress has not been possible on the political aspects, partially due to the numberous changes of government in Lisbon. "We must now give a push to this side of the negotiations as well," he said. "The Portuguese Government has described EEC entry as a priority and there must now be concrete moves to ensure that this objective is realized."

In other points, Natali confirmed that the EEC was ready to earmark financial aid to ease Portuguese entry. "We have submitted a draft plan on aid to small and medium firms and, during my stay, we will analyze other forms of aid with the Portuguese ministers," he said. But he was more prudent when asked whether it would be possible to respect the planned deadline of January 1983 for full Portuguese membership of the EEC. "The Executive Commission will do everything in its power to ensure that the various deadlines are observed," Natali said. "But a lot will obviously depend on the Portuguese Government."

The next step will see Natali submit an extensive report on his talks here to a meeting of EEC foreign ministers scheduled this month. This meeting will be required to decide on the magnitude and conditions of the aid package for Portugal, also laying down a timetable for subsequent steps in the negotiations.

U.S. DELAY IN FIGHTER DELIVERY CAUSES 'DISPLEASURE'

LD291301 Lisbon EXPRESSO in Portuguese 23 Feb 80 p 1 LD

[Unattributed report: "Americans Delay Delivery of Aircraft"]

[Text] The delay of almost 2 years in the delivery of U.S. military equipment to Portugal is causing some displeasure in the Portuguese Air Force, which should have already received a considerable number of Corsair A-7 fighter aircraft, EXPRESSO has learned from a military source.

The supply of these aircraft is covered by the agreement on the leasing of the Lajes Base in the Azores, according to which $60 million out of the $140 million to be paid by the Americans would subsidize the Corsairs.

Expaining the delay in delivering these fighters, which will come to the Portuguese Air Force after being used by the Americans, Washington cited first the urgent need to deploy them in the Middle East, and, more recently, the commitments undertaken with Pakistan to arm that country and defend it against a possible threat from the Soviet Union, which recently invaded the neighboring country of Afghanistan.

According to the same source, Air Force Chief of Staff General Lemos Ferreira became impatient and contacted U.S. Ambassador in Lisbon Richard Bloomfield. This step caused a more rapid realization by the Americans of the need to honor commitments contractually undertaken with Portugal and with the Portuguese Air Force in particular.

"I believe that the Americans understood the message," our military informant told us. "Either I am very mistaken, or somebody in the Portuguese Air Force is prepared to make the air attache at the U.S. Embassy in Lisbon realize that the mood at our military installations is not very favorable toward him at present."

TRADE RELATIONS WITH CUBA CONTINUE TO EXPAND

[Unattributed report: "Ten Cuban Ships To Be Repaired in Portugal"]

[Text] Ten Cuban ships will be repaired in Portuguese shipyards this year under the existing trade agreement, according to the conclusions of the third meeting of the Portuguese-Cuban joint commission, which have now been disclosed. The Havana authorities expressed their intention to sign contracts for purchasing goods worth $10 million in our country. Under the trade agreement signed by the two countries, Portugal will purchase 70,000 tons of raw sugar from Cuba this year--a commitment undertaken in 1978 which is to last until 1981.

During the meeting, the Havana authorities expressed their interest in greater cooperation in the field of tourism, ranging from the exchange of information and experiences to the possibility of investment in the construction by Portuguese enterprises of several hotels, specifically in Varadoco, as well as the furnishing of tourist facilities and villas.

In this connection the Portuguese delegation submitted a draft agreement in the field of tourism, and it was agreed that the relevant departments of the two countries should contact each other to examine the document. In addition, a second proposal concerning an economic, technical and scientific cooperation agreement was submitted at the suggestion of the Portuguese Foreign Ministry.

Mention should also be made of Portugal's interest in expanding trading relations, extending them to areas as yet unexplored--specifically those of the construction industry, harbor works and textiles. Possible projects depend on the talks to be held by businessmen from the two countries.

The possibility of the construction of a floating dock--not yet decided on by the Cuban authorities--in addition to the supplying of rolling stock and projects in the Port of Havana should also be cited. A visit by representatives of [the enterprise] SOREFAME [United Metallic Structures Association] has been requested to this effect.

The inclusion in the agreement of Cuba's intention to make purchases from Portugal substantially exceeding the previous year's levels ($4 million) is also due to the visit by representatives of 16 Portuguese enterprises at the same time as the official delegation, which led to the conclusion of several contracts, while prospects for the signing of others were opened up.

CNT STAGES PROTEST IN NETHERLANDS EMBASSY IN MADRID

PA291318 Madrid EFE in Spanish 1245 GMT 29 Feb 80 PA

[Text] Madrid, 29 Feb (EFE)--Four members of the National Confederation of Labor ("CNT" anarchic labor central) at noon 28 February locked themselves in the Netherlands Embassy in Madrid.

Their intent is to claim that central's historic patrimony, part of which is at the International Institute of Social History of Amsterdam, according to information supplied to EFE by a spokesman of the CNT's National Committee.

The action is totally peaceful and they will abandon the embassy only when forced to do so, they told EFE. The initiative is earmarked within the campaign being carried out by the CNT to request the devolution of its labor patrimony.

MADRID COMMENTS ON ANDALUSIAN AUTONOMY REFERENDUM

LD292228 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1830 GMT 29 Feb 80 LD

[Text] The results of the referendum on the Andalusian autonomy initiative did not favor those who opted for the so-called faster procedure. However, they have not changed in any way the real possibility of acquiring a full statute of autonomy--an aspiration which is (?fully) shared by all Andalusians. Consequently, the referendum was only about deciding on the procedures provided for in the Constitution which, of course, no matter what route is chosen, cannot discriminate with regard to content. So the results of yesterday's voting imply neither defeat or victory for anyone; they only determine the route to be followed to the same inevitable goal. This explains why those who advocated a "yes" vote and those who defended abstention can, at least to a certain extent, consider themselves as much winners as losers.

This dual possibility makes it clear that the referendum was only concerned with procedure, thus safeguarding the true wishes of the Andalusians who justly aspire to their own autonomous identity and who wish to fully exercise the rights provided for in the Constitution.

In any event, the level of participation, the wish to reveal a region's personality and particularity were the positive aspects of a day which allows no doubt as to what the people truly want. Now it is a matter of abandoning all maximalist positions which would only have a negative influence on the autonomy process and work within a framework which allows the same results to be obtained. The important thing is not that things should be done all at once; it is that they should be permanent.

Now, when a common effort is needed to insure that the will of the people is carried out, which no procedural quarrel can change, the common task of Andalusians should be to overcome the tensions and passions of the electoral situation.

CARRINGTON PLAN FOR AFGHANISTAN GIVEN TO SOVIET ENVOY

[By Tom McMullan, PA diplomatic correspondent]

[Text] Soviet Ambassador Mr Nikolay Lunkov has been given an outline of Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington's idea of a neutral and non-aligned Afghanistan, the Foreign Office said today. A spokesman said the ambassador was called to the Foreign Office to see Permanent Under-Secretary Sir Michael Palliser and his deputy Sir Donald Maitland. Lord Carrington had outlined his plan to Common Market foreign ministers, and more details will be given to Russia later. The plan would enable the Soviet Union to withdraw its troops from Afghanistan, the foreign secretary suggested.

COMMONWEALTH OBSERVERS FIND RHODESIAN ELECTIONS 'FREE, FAIR'

[By Tom McMullan, PA diplomatic staff]

[Text] The 11 strong Commonwealth observer team has found that the Rhodesian elections were "free and fair." But in its interim report published in London and Salisbury the team accepted that intimidation had taken place during the campaign. Their report to the Commonwealth secretary general is now being sent to all Commonwealth governments. The team will return to London next weekend--after the results are announced on Tuesday--to prepare their final report.

In the interim report they said that "having regard to all the factors" they unanimously concluded "the election up to the end of polling can be considered to have been free and fair to the extent that it provided an adequate and acceptable means of determining the wishes of the people in a democratic manner." This view was fortified by the high turnout, the orderly and "manifestly relaxed" manner in which such a large percentage of voters went to the poll, they said. The team reported that there could be no doubt that intimidation, whether in the form of violence, threats of violence, or coercion, marred the election campaign. It was equally true that intimidation was not confined to any single quarter.

Certain official agencies--unnamed--were also culpable, the report said. It was impossible to judge accurately the extent to which intimidation had restricted the freedom and activity of the political parties or influenced voters. In many cases the group found from personal observation in the field that charges of intimidation were being exaggerated. Charges were sometimes deliberately vague or inspired by political expendiency. Any restrictions on parties were to a large extent overcome by radio and television broadcasts or extensive advertising.

The team, with an Indian chairman, was drawn from Australia, Barbados, Ghana, Nigeria, Sierra Leone, Bangladesh, Canada, Jamaica, Papua New Guinea and Sri Lanka.

Three MPs who were in Rhodesia as election observers said when they arrived in London today that the poll would reflect the will of the people. But former Labour Party Chairman Miss Joan Lestor warned the British Government that it must ensure that Lord Soames, the governor, invite the man with the most seats to form the new administration. To do otherwise would be to "ignite a potentially explosive situation," said Miss Lestor, MP for Eton and Slough. "Despite the many criticisms that can justifiably be made, the results of the elections in Zimbabwe-Rhodesia will reflect a consensus of the views of the people.

"They have flocked to the polls, despite the intimidation from many quarters," she said, "and it is important to place on record that not one of the leaders of the three main parties has said he cannot accept the result."

Not to invite the man with the most seats to form a government would be an endorsement of allegations that the British Government had already decided who it would like to see in power. "This must be avoided at all costs," she said. Secondly, Zimbabwe-Rhodesia has seen a great display of the might of the security forces during this election period. Speculation about a coup and the use of South African troops within the Rhodesian Army is not purely imaginary."

"The British Government must make it abundantly clear that it will see through its responsibilities and ensure that the will of the people of Zimbabwe will prevail."

Tory MP Mr Geoffrey Rippon and Labour MP Mr John Concannon, the first official observers to arrive back in Britain today, both said the elections had been fairly conducted. "We thought that in spite of the circumstances it was fairly representative of the views of the Zimbabwe people," Mr Rippon said. There had been very little intimidation at the polls although there had been violence during the run-up, but generally reports had been exagerated, he said.

THATCHER MEETS WITH KIPRIANOU ON INTER-CYPRIOT TALKS

It has been learned that Mr Kiprianou asked Mrs Thatcher to have the British Government play a more active role in the efforts to resume the talks and to promote a just solution within the UN framework and that there was a positive response to this. According to the same reports, Britain was also asked--in its role as a guarantor power, a Commonwealth member and permanent Security Council member--to exercise its influence on Turkey to abandon its intransigent policy of the Cyprus problem.

It has also been learned that the issues of economic compensation for the British bases in Cyprus and of fees for Cypriot students in British universities were discussed.

Concerning the issue of economic compensation for the bases--for which nothing has been paid to the Cyprus Republic since 1965--journalist circles expect that the Cypurs Government will deal with this further during the year and that it will be discussed at various levels.

The talks, which were held at the official residence of the prime minister, were also attended by Cyprus Foreign Minister Rolandhis, British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington and officials. The talks were continued during a luncheon given in Mr Kiprianou's honor by Mrs Thatcher.

DENKTAS DISCUSSES RESUMPTION OF TALKS WITH GALINDO-POHL

[Text] President Rauf Denktas has received the UN special representative in Cyprus, Reynaldo Galindo-Pohl, and has conferred with him for some time. Minister of Foreign Affairs, Defense and Tourism Kenan Atakol, the Turkish Cypriot interlocutor, Umit Onan and the special adviser to the UN representative, Remy Gorge, also attended the meeting, which began at 1500 and lasted about an hour. Replying to reporters' questions before the meeting, Galindo-Pohl said that the request for the meeting had come from Denktas and that the resumption of the talks will be taken up at the meeting. In a statement after the meeting Denktas said:

[Begin Denktas recording] Efforts for the resumption of the talks are continuing. We had a positive exchange of views with the honorable representatives today. They will continue their work within the framework of the views exchanged. They will contact New York. I believe that at this stage if we are careful and if we continue to exert efforts--though it might take time--a positive basis for the resumption of the talks can be achieved. The aim is to resume the talks and to achieve results through their smooth development. Otherwise, there would be no value if the talks resume today and end within 2 days. We have a positive and realistic approach which will enable us to avoid such an alternative. That is what we are trying to achieve.

This meeting gave us the opportunity to protest the recent Greek Cypriot move regarding our airspace. We have stated that this is an attempt to change the status quo, that the Greek Cypriot administration has no right or authority to do such a thing and that this is a form of piracy. The Greek Cypriots are obliged to return to the status quo because we will not renounce our rights. We will not let them change the status quo. Greek Cypriot persistence in this direction might change many things. We hope that Waldheim will use his influence on the Greek Cypriot administration and will prevent this very negative move on the eve of the talks. It is interesting to note that the Greek Cypriots have launched this attack based on the recent UN General Assembly resolution. I believe that it is now clear why the Turkish Cypriot side has not and will not accept this resolution and why the talks cannot resume under the shadow of this resolution. [end recording]

In reply to a question regarding the Lefkosa [Nicosia] airport, Denktas said that the Lefkosa airport [words indistinct] and that the Turkish Cypriot side has, for the past 5 years, been proposing to jointly open the airport. Denktas concluded by saying: It is the Greek Cypriot side which has been avoiding this. The Greek Cypriots thus aim at continuing the boycott against the Turkish Cypriot community and at sabotaging tourism in the Turkish Cypriot side. This is a prerequisite for their economic attack. Had they not launched an economic attack against the Turkish Cypriots and had they considered the Turkish Cypriot community as a part of Cyprus, they would speedily have opened this airport to traffic, which can serve both sides.

TURKISH CYPRIOT ASSEMBLY APPROVES 1980 BUDGET PROPOSAL

TA281821 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English 1730 GMT 28 Feb 80 TA

[Text] The Turkish Cypriot Legislative Assembly approved this afternoon, by a majority vote, the government's budget proposals for the fiscal year 1980. The voting was 21 for and 14 against the budget proposals, which provide for the spending of 3,473,29[illegible],902 Turkish lira. The budget comes into force as from Saturday, 1 March. The Legislative Assembly is to hold its next meeting on 6 March.

ROMANIAN FOREIGN MINISTER ARRIVES ON OFFICIAL VISIT

[Text] The Romanian Deputy Prime Minister and Minister for Foreign Affairs Stefan Andrei arrived in Athens this evening for a 4-day official visit. The Romanian official will be received by President of the Republic Tsatsos and Prime Minister Karamanlis, and will also have talks with Minister for Coordination Mitsotakis and Foreign Minister Rallis.

Andrei was received at Ellinikon Airport by his Greek counterpart, Rallis, Greek Ambassador in Bucharest Kottakis and Romanian Ambassador in Athens Brad. Upon arrival, Andrei stated that the purpose of his visit is to improve the already good relations between the two countries. He added that his talks in Athens will explore the possibilities for Greece and Romania to contribute to the maintenance of peace, in view of the international tension that has prevailed recently.

In addition, Rallis stated that the visit of the Romanian foreign minister coincides with the completion of 100 years of diplomatic relations between the two countries and that during the talks bilateral relations and the more general situation in the Balkans will be examined.

MINISTER DENIES PROBLEMS IN BILATERAL RELATIONS WITH USSR

[Text] Economic relations between Greece and the Soviet Union are developing at a very satisfactory pace. This statement was made by Minister for Industry and Energy Evert because of reports in some newspapers that Greek-Soviet relations have experienced problems. The minister stressed that economic relations between the two countries lie within the framework that was defined during Prime Minister Karamanlis' talks in Moscow and by the discussions that were held in Athens between the appropriate ministers and the leader of the Soviet economic delegation in Greece, (Novakovsky). Consequently, Evert concluded that no anxiety is justified regarding Greece's economic relations with the Soviet Union and, on the contrary, it is expected that the agreements will soon be implemented.

KKE (INTERIOR) ANNOUNCEMENT ON PRESIDENTIAL ELECTIONS

[Text] Yesterday, the KKE (Interior) Central Committee Executive Office issued the following announcement: "In its regular meeting yesterday, the KKE (Interior) Executive Office dealt with the political situation as it is shaping up under the influence of international developments and our internal course.

"On the specific issue of presidential elections, it considers as the correct solution the recommendation of a person who will be acceptable to the parties of the democratic opposition, who will enjoy the trust of the overwhelming majority of the Chamber of Deputies, who will constitute an expression of unity toward the dangers threatening national interests and who will be a guarantee for the smooth functioning of democratic institutions.

"It is on the basis of this direction that the KKE (Interior) parliamentary representative will define his position in the relevant parliamentary procedures and in the elections for a president of the republic. The party's Central Committee will discuss this issue at its next meeting."

[Text] The Yugoslav warship, which was stopped at the Dardanelles because it passed from the Black Sea to the Marmara Sea without notifying the Turkish authorities in violation of the Montreux Straits agreements, was permitted to continue on its way. According to the TRT Canakkale correspondent, the Yugoslav warship, which was stopped by the gendarme shore patrol boats off Kilitbahir, sailed into the Aegean Sea at 2130 last night following the permit issued by Turkish authorities.

VOTCP URGES RESISTANCE TO U.S. DEFENSE AGREEMENT

TA010929 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 1 Mar 80 TA

[Unattributed commentary: "Let Us Tear the Bilateral Slavery Agreement"]

[Excerpt] The Demirel government and a handful of collaborationist and proholding company bosses have tried to establish a system of tyranny in order to sustain a ruthless, exploitative system. They have also attempted to establish closer ties with imperialism, which favors and imposes such a system. Through the bilateral slavery agreement [the defense cooperation agreement between Turkey and the United States] they are chaining our country to U.S. imperialism. They are trying to force our people to bow down to truthless exploitation on the basis of this inauspicious and dishonorable dependence on imperialism. The bilateral slavery agreement grants a new 5-year status to the U.S. bases and nuclear concentrations, which keeps us on the verge of total ruin and disaster. Through the U.S. and NATO bases, our country and our people are being transformed into a means of attack against neighboring countries.

Dear listeners, the Demirel government and Foreign Minister Erkmen are attempting, through blatant lies and demagogy, to present this slavery agreement to our people and to the patriotic forces as an agreement based on equality and justice. These traitors, who do not cease to talk about country, nation and flag, are hypocrites, the U.S. masters and generals say that the heart of the country--Erzurum--is their first line of defense. The likes of Carter speak openly about the national interests of the United States in Turkey.

The U.S. threats of military intervention against Iran have once more exposed how our country would be dragged into the fire through the use of the bases. The recent developments, the annulment of NOTAM and the arrival of U.S. NATO Commander Rogers clearly shows that the imperialist pressures on Turkey have increased on the basis of the bilateral slavery agreement. The U.S. and NATO imperialists, who slyly exploit the economic crisis and who attempt to buy our national interests in return for every dollar they give, are using our country to draw Greece into the military flank of NATO. They are thus aiming to place the Mediterranean and the Aegean under their sovereignty.

However, the imperialists will not be allowed to realize their aggressive plans in our country and our region. The Greek Communist Party and all the progressive, democratic and patriotic forces of Greece are displaying a national resistance to the antipeace plans of the U.S. and NATO imperialists. The slogan "No to NATO" is being voiced throughout Greece. The duty of all progressive and patriotic forces in our country for the cause of national independence, friendship and fraternity among peoples, freedom and democracy is to tear up bilateral slavery agreement. Those who support national interests, those who are opposed to U.S. and NATO imperialists dragging our country into the fire and those who are in favor of regional and world peace, of international cooperation based on mutual interests and equality and of coexistence in peace, should act in solidarity. Let us not allow nuclear missiles, nuclear concentrations, U.S. and NATO bases and spy nests on our soil. Let us, therefore, prevent the signing of the bilateral slavery agreement. Let us tear up this slavery agreement. The Turkish Communist Party is ready to act in unity with any person, organization, party or institution that supports our national interests and independence. This is why it calls on our people to unite and struggle against imperialism.

ERKMEN RECEIVES SOVIET AMBASSADOR TO ANKARA

TA011702 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 1 Mar 80 TA

[Text] Minister of State Orhan Oren has left for Tripoli by air as the official guest of the Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriyah. In a statement at Yesilkoy Airport before his departure, Oren said that during his stay in Libya he will attend the opening of the international Tripoli fair and the Turkish day to be celebrated tomorrow. Noting that the government wished to improve the already good relations between the two countries, Oren added that he will hold talks with Libyan officials on commercial, technical and economic issues. He will return to Turkey on Tuesday, 4 March.

TFSC'S DENKTAS STOPS OVER IN ISTANBUL EN ROUTE TO LONDON

[Text] The president of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus, Rauf Denktas, has left for London on a private visit after stopping over in Istanbul. Replying to reporters' questions, Denktas said the following in connection with tourism in the Federated State: Our hotels and markets were full because Cyprus was a cheap holiday place; with the recent price hikes and especially with the recent air fare hikes tourists will no longer be able to visit Cyprus. Noting that there would be [economic] difficulties if Turkish tourists did not visit the Federated State, Denktas said that a way must be found to secure cheaper air fares to Cyprus.

[Text] The National Assembly concluded a few minutes ago the voting on the 1980 fiscal draft budget. The draft budget was approved by 228 votes against 210 votes. The Justice Party, the National Salvation Party and the Nationalist Action Party voted in favor of the draft and the RPP voted against it. Another nine deputies abstained.

EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES

'PREFERENTIAL' TRADE PACT CONCLUDED WITH YUGOSLAVIA

LD281633 Paris LE MONDE in French 27 Feb 80 p 6 LD

[Philippe Lemaitre report: "Yugoslavia and the EC Sign A Preferential Cooperation Agreement"]

[Text] Brussels--Yugoslavia and the EC are to be linked by a cooperation agreement initialed in Brussels on Monday 25 February by Yugoslav Foreign Trade Minister Andov and the Commission vice president responsible for foreign relations, Haferkamp. This preferential agreement marks an extension of relations between the EEC and Belgrade since it replaces a simple nondiscriminatory trade agreement.

The conclusion of the negotiations has come after months of marking time. It was made possible after the EC foreign ministers, concerned over the increase in East-West tension and anxious to show their support for the Yugoslav regime, gave the go-ahead last December to a considerable improvement in the concessions offered to Belgrade. The Yugoslavs have shown a twofold concern throughout these negotiations:

On the political plane, they have stressed that the agreement should make reference to Yugoslavia's specific character as a nonalined, socialist, developing, Mediterranean country. In order that this specific characteristic should not receive a purely superficial mention, the Yugoslavs asked that some of the clauses in the agreement be different from those appearing in the agreements signed by the EEC with other Mediterranean countries, and this was agreed;

On the commercial plane, the agreement gives Yugoslav industrial products duty-free access to the nine member countries' markets. However, with regard to "sensitive" products, this freedom has a ceiling set on it. The Yugoslavs fought for the list of products subject to the ceiling to be shortened.

However, the Nine's main effort relates to Yugoslav sales of beef (the country's main export product) and quality wines. The Nine have agreed to raise the amount of "baby beef" which the Yugoslavs can export to the EEC free of import duty or with greatly reduced duty to 40,000 tons instead of the 24,000 tons in the initial offer. The quota of quality wines which they will be allowed to export freely to the EEC has been set at 12,000 hectoliters per year instead of the 8,000 hectoliters originally offered. Finally, the agreement makes provision for financial aid in the form of opening a credit line worth 200 million accounting units, equivalent to Fr1.6 billion.

CSCE SCIENTIFIC FORUM ISSUES FINAL DOCUMENT

[Text] Hamburg--The final document of a scientific forum of states which signed the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe [CSCE] considers "respect for human rights and basic liberties by all states" to be "part of the basis for a significant improvement in their reciprocal relations and in international scientific cooperation at all levels." The document was unanimously approved in the early hours of this morning after 3 days and nights of deliberation at the end of a 2-week forum by delegates of the 35 CSCE participating states.

The report notes that following work by some [number indistinct] leading scientists that the present state of international scientific cooperation "still needs improving in various respects." These improvements should be achieved "bilaterally and multilaterally, at state and nonstate level, through interstate and other agreements" and "through the creation of appropriate possibilities for scientific research and for comprehensive links and travel."

The report also recommends examining "at a suitable time" the possible convening of a new scientific forum. The results of the Hamburg forum could, "insofar as appropriate" be taken into account at the CSCE meeting to be held in Madrid in November, the final document states. The four working groups held during the meeting on the subjects of energy, food, medicine and the social sciences have also published the results of their consultations in appendices to the report.

Final statements issued by approximately half the delegations, again showed the differing standpoints between East and West, which at times seemed to make a final document impossible.

The spokesman of the American delegation said that the result of the forum was satisfactory, but it was a "modest success." Only if the statements in the final document were actually implemented would it be possible to speak of a "good result." He expressed the hope that now, following the Hamburg meeting, Soviet nuclear physicist and Nobel Prize winner Andrey Sakharov would not "be subjected to humiliation" at the next meeting of the Soviet Academy of Sciences.

The French delegation was also critical of the result of the forum, regretting above all that scientists had been to too great an extent "instruments in the hands of the politicians." A new scientific forum should be held, not least because they had been "far removed from a satisfactory implementation of the Helsinki Final Act."

Britain regarded "CSCE practices and processes" as being "hardly suitable" for establishing "the framework for scientific meetings."

The head of the German delegation, Professor Eugen Seibol, stressed that the German participants "will continue to work for freedom and freedom of movement."

According to the head of the Soviet delegation, Nikolay Blochin, the "purely scientific part" of the forum "must be assessed highly." The general final report "should prove satisfactory." It had been shown that scientists, despite "world complications" can agree and thus "can set an example to other social groups." Poland, like the Soviet Union, assessed the consensus achieved as an "encouraging and important contribution to detente".

The spokesman of the GDR delegation described the result of the work as "a joint work of responsible specialists." However, the meeting had not been free from "unnecessary confrontation."

PAHR POSTPONES NETHERLANDS VISIT DUE TO BOGOTA SITUATION

AU031316 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1100 GMT 3 Mar 80 AU

[Text] Because of the Bogota hostage affair Foreign Minister Pahr has asked his Dutch counterpart, Van der Klaauw for a postponement of his official visit to the Netherlands. Pahr was to have left for The Hague tomorrow. According to a Vienna Foreign Ministry spokesman, Van der Klaauw showed complete understanding for this request. Foreign Minister Pahr's visit to the Netherlands is to be made as soon as possible.

TANZANIAN PRESIDENT NYERERE VISIT ITINERARY PLANNED

[Text] Dr Julius K. Nyerere, president of the United Republic of Tanzania, will pay a visit to Austria from 10-13 March at the invitation of Chancellor Kreisky. President Nyerere will be accompanied by several Cabinet members and other prominent figures as well as by high-ranking officials.

On the day of his arrival he is to call on the chancellor and to hold working talks at the Chancellery. In the evening the chancellor will give a dinner in honor of the guests at the Chancellery. On Tuesday, 11 March, visits to the Austrian president and to parliament, as well as the inspection of an enterprise are scheduled. At noon the Austrian president will give a luncheon at the Hofburg Palace, and in the evening President Nyerere will attend a dinner given for him by the Nationalrat Chairman Benya. In the afternoon, the guest will deliver a lecture at the Society for Foreign Politics.

On 12 March President Nyerere will visit the Voest Corporation in Linz. On 13 March, President Nyerere will inspect the Vienna International Center and then leave Vienna by air in the late morning.

FREEDOM PARTY CONGRESS ELECTS NEW PARTY CHAIRMAN

AU031223 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 3 Mar 80 p 1 AU

[Summary] On 2 March Norbert Steger, chairman of the Vienna organization of the Austrian Freedom Party [FPOe], was elected national party chairman by the FPOe special party congress held in Linz, with a narrow majority of 55.4 percent of the votes. His rival candidate, Harald Ofner, who was supported by former FPOe Chairman Alexander Goetz, obtained 44.6 percent of the votes. At a subsequent press conference, the newly elected FPOe chairman declared that he did not intend to give up his position as chairman of the Vienna FPOe organization, but that he would hold both positions simultaneously for the time being.

1979 TRADE WITH EAST--Austria's exports to Eastern Europe went up 10 percent to 26.7 billion schillings last year. As they were stagnant during the first half of 1979, the increase in the second half was proportionally higher. According to a Trade Ministry spokesman, this development is believed to be due to the attempt by some East bloc countries to come closer to the fulfillment of their plan targets in the final phase of the current 5-year plans. This factor may well produce favorable effects this year too, but in view of the foreign currency shortage of these countries a higher growth rate than in 1979 is hardly to be expected for this year, the spokesman declared. PLO OFFICE SCORES EGYPT-ISRAEL AMBASSADORS' EXCHANGE

AU270900 Rome ANSA in English 0830 GMT 27 Feb 80 AU

[Text] Brussels, February 27 (ANSA)--The Palestinian Liberation Organization (PLO) office here has voiced "deep indignation" over the exchange of ambassadors between Egypt and Israel.

A PLO communique issued here Tuesday announced the latest step in normalization of relations between the two Middle Eastern nations which "disdains all the legitimate and recognized national rights of the Palestinian people precisely while Israel is stepping up and intensifying its illegal colonization policy--repeatedly condemned by the international community and European Economic Community members--in the occupied Arab territories".

The PLO also criticized the Dutch Government for accepting to host the negotiations on Palestinian autonomy that are slated to take place at The Hague.

"This attitude, as well as the move of the Dutch Embassy to Jerusalem and the refusal to allow the opening of a PLO office, certainly harm Dutch-Arab relations and will not fail to negatively influence Euro-Arab relations", the communique concluded.

VAN AGT DEEMS FINANCE MINISTER'S RESIGNATION 'A MISTAKE'

[Unattributed report: "Andriessen's Resignation Mistaken"]

[Excerpt] The Hague, 23 February--Prime Minister Van Agt believes that Mr Andriessen's resignation as finance minister was a mistake. According to Van Agt, the difference between the Cabinet's viewpoint and Andriessen's was not so great as to occasion resignation. "I believe that Andriessen ought to have stayed," Van Agt stated at his weekly press conference.

According to Van Agt, the difference between Andriessen and the Cabinet lay primarily in the question as to whether the retrenchment measures should apply only to 1980 or to subsequent years as well. Andriessen wanted structural cuts totaling 3-4 billion guilders which would produce their full effect in the years after 1980. In addition, Andriessen wanted a wages curb which could be in force for several years.

On the other hand, Van Agt stated, the Cabinet wanted a combination of structural and nonstructural measures totaling 3 billion guilders. The decision to perpetuate part of the package need not necessarily be made today, Van Agt stated. The measures do have the effect of reducing the budgetary deficit by the full 3 billion guilders in 1980.

The reason why the Cabinet wishes to delay long-term cuts a little longer is that the central planning office's disappointing figures are only provisional. If in 3 months it happens that the budgetary deficit will indeed exceed 6 percent, we have already pledged to bend further, Van Agt stated.

As far as the wages curb is concerned, the Cabinet has deliberately chosen to make no pronouncement on the trend after 1980. "If possible, agreements should be reached on this with the social partners on a voluntary basis," Van Agt stated.

SCHMIDT CONDITIONALLY READY TO COOPERATE WITH U.S.

LD031558 Hamburg DPA in German 1452 GMT 3 Mar 80 LD

[Text] Bonn--Chancellor Helmut Schmidt is going to Washington tomorrow with the readiness to cooperate in the American measures against Moscow in response to the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, as long as the special German interests--above all in relations with the Soviet Union--are preserved.

Bonn government circles today said that the Federal Government is open to an extension planned by the United States of the so-called COCOM [Consultative Group Corporation Committee] list of export restrictions on strategically important goods--such as computers--in trade with the East. However, they said Schmidt would resist all demands for all trade restrictions by the Federal Republic which affected normal trade with the East and German contractual obligations to the Soviet Union. It is being increasingly recognized in Washington that the state-run Hermes Export Credit Guarantee Company in Bonn did not represent credit at favorable interest rates to the East.

According to Bonn sources, in his talks with President Carter on Wednesday Schmidt will continue to take the standpoint that the Federal Government does not at present want to decide whether or not to join in the boycott of the Moscow Olympics demanded by the United States. Moscow should be given the chance to create the conditions for the participation of all countries. At the same time the chancellor will leave no doubt that Bonn would join in a Western boycott if Moscow made no move regarding troop withdrawals from Afghanistan.

Schmidt will also have talks in Washington with Secretary of State Vance, security adviser Brzezinski and Defense Secretary Brown. The main topic during his 2-day visit to Washington, which will be followed by 2 days in New York, is the West's overall concept in response to the Soviet advance in the Middle East.

Even after the latest American efforts to revive contacts with the Soviet Union, the Federal Government sees "no true, solid signal" from Moscow for the USSR's readiness for talks on a solution to the Afghanistan problem. Pointing to the latest Soviet criticism of Schmidt, government circles said today that on the whole the signs for a relaxing of tension in the Afghanistan crisis were not favorable. There was also a hardening of the tone vis-a-vis Bonn. Regarding Schmidt's U.S. visit, they said that the above-mentioned conditions for talks aimed at providing Moscow with a way out of the Afghanistan situation were not ideal. During the weekend, Schmidt had supported the idea of helping Moscow to save face while withdrawing troops.

SPD Federal Secretary Egon Bahr wrote in an article in the German trade union federation newspaper WELT DER ARBEIT on the Schmidt visit that there could be no doubt about the partnership with the United States, but partnership was not seen nor desired to be--either here in Germany or in the United States--as blind allegiance. The European response to the crisis could not be identical with the American. Bahr spoke of a government policy of circumspection, firmness and reliability, and accused CDU/CSU chancellor candidate Franz-Josef Strauss of pursuing an erratic foreign policy course. Bahr's statements were prereleased to DPA in Bonn today.

GENSCHER MEETS WITH SAUDI FOREIGN MINISTER FOR TALKS

[Text] Bonn--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher met Saudi Arabian Foreign Minister Prince Sa'ud al-Faysal in Bonn for an exchange of views on the present situation in the Near and Middle East.

A meeting with Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt is scheduled to follow. The foreign minister will spend only a few hours in the federal capital and intends to leave this evening. The main topics of the talks are expected to be the effects of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, the special situation in the Arab Gulf states, the newly intensified crisis in Lebanon and oil supply problems. Diplomatic circles in Bonn stressed the intensive nature of the consultations between the Federal Republic and Saudi Arabia, which have been cultivated for a considerable time.

Agreement on Afghan Nonalinement

[Excerpt] Bonn-Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and Saudi Arabian Foreign Minister Prince Sa'ud al-Faysal,spoke in Bonn today in favor of Afghanistan's nonalinement and independence. Following an exchange of views lasting several hours, the two foreign ministers were received by Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt for a discussion on foreign policy.

Genscher stressed to his guest that as part of a comprehensive and lasting peace settlement in the Middle East, the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination must be implemented. This was also stressed by French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing during his visit to Kuwait. The federal foreign minister also underlined Bonn's wish to activate the Euro-Arab dialog.

The two foreign ministers agreed that the constructive exchange of views with Arab Gulf states, which Genscher also advocated in the EEC, should be continued.

CDU/CSU CHANCELLOR CANDIDATE STRAUSS ADDRESSES BUNDESTAG

DW030905 Bundfunk Network in German 1051 GMT 28 Feb 80 DW

[Speech by CDU/CSU chancellor candidate Franz Josef Strauss to the Bundestag in Bonn in response to Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's government statement--live]

[Text] Mr President, ladies and gentlemen, anyone having followed the speech by the chancellor and subsequently the speech by the federal foreign minister could not, with regard to several sections, suppress the impression that the two gentlemen are members of two different governments. [applause]

Above all much of what the federal foreign minister said about the new, or restored old, attitude of self-awareness and self-optimism in the United States was probably not addressed to the opposition but to a considerable part of the larger government party. It would have been desirable, however, had the chancellor as well as the foreign minister provided a clear definition of detente policy so that this pseudo-theological idolizing of a term filled with any given content, of a shell of a word, will cease at long last. [applause]

I may say on behalf of the CDU/CSU that we have always pursued a realistic policy of detente as the one policy deemed appropriate for the situation in the Federal Republic of Germany, and even more so in view of the development of modern arms technology. Nor was there any break in this respect in 1969; it is just that people began to link metaphysical ideas with the concept of detente policy and to divide our population into citizens advocating detente policy and citizens against it. And they continued in the same style to differentiate between those being for peace and those against peace. Those who therefore represent a security guarantee and those who constitute a security risk. This was a poisoning of German domestic policy on the basis of a simple political lie. [applause]

Anyone recalling the times of the grand coalition surely knows that the Soviet Union in the second half of the sixties sent out certain signals. I am not a Kremlim astrologist; I leave that to others. But one thing I know definitely, namely, that the futuristic vision as promulgated at the time by Mr Khrushchev will never materialize. You may recall that he spoke of the superiority of the socialist or communist system--it must have been in the late fifties or early sixties--and that this system would catch up with and surpass the democracies which he, naturally, called the capitalists. I still hear him saying the drastic words: And we will bury you, words which he addressed to the Western democracies.

In the second half of the sixties, a sobering process began, namely, the realization that the people in the Kremlin are not careless adventurers or people wrapped in illusions but solid realpolitik advocates. A sobering process began, namely, the realization that without a change in the East-West relationship and without the conclusion of economic cooperation agreements, the backlogs in Soviet planned economy, whose weaknesses are inherent in the system, and in addition the high share of the arms burden in the gross national product, could not be coped with without intensified cooperation with the West in the economic field. Here is where the realistic starting point of detente policy is to be found.

There is no sense in saying that I am for or against detente policy. It is necessary to know what contents are contained in this shell of a word, what is meant by it. It goes without saying that detente policy offers certain advantages to us, as it offers considerable risks to us. The same is true for the other side. Both sides should endeavor, or better yet, the Western side should also endeavor to get more out of what it contributes toward detente policy and thus also to the benefit of the Soviet Union. More than it has gained to this day, unfortunately. [applause]

One of the grotesque blunders--I will repeat here what I have said on an earlier occasion--was that as early as in October 1969, even prior to the election of a new chancellor, it was announced--I think it was State Secretary Ahlers who had to do it--that the new German Government proceeds from the existence of two German states. Thereby the advance concession was made which already set the course for the forthcoming negotiations clearly to our disadvantage. I do not claim that this could have been avoided in the long run. I am very careful in my judgment here. Yet if they decided to take this serious step, then it should have been done against the background of a conformity of views of all democratic parties in our country and against the background of a harmony of the groups of this house. Then this detente policy would have been supported by a broader basis and could have been pursued with greater emphasis, and in all probability it would also have produced better results that have unfortunately been achieved. [applause]

After all, for quite a while it has been known to us that it was the objective of Soviet policy to demonstrate the existence of two German states in public and to obtain recognition for it. It was for good reason that this step had not been taken for all of 20 years. And when it was taken, nothing was demanded in return. Nor was anything received in return. I am not a great expert on negotiations with communist states, but I know one thing for sure: What you give them is taken free of charge, and you do not even get a word of thanks, except perhaps the reputation that you are particularly naive. [applause]

Therefore, I want to stress most clearly that for us, for the opposition parties in this house, detente policy is a principle but not a dogma, a principle according to which we have to form our policy, but not a dogma. For us detente policy is a means to an end, but not an end in itself. For us detente policy is not the end of the conflict either but a part of the conflict. The East-West conflict, it is probably not necessary to discuss its moral-political background here, has two sides like a coin. One side is called cold war and the other side is called detente policy [3-minute passage missing due to transmitter failure] can be considered realistically, due to historical experience and due to the knowledge of political constellations.

In these 10 years during which SALT I has been implemented and SALT II prepared--well, I have been asked repeatedly by various American circles, some of whom said: Say something against it. I believe that we ought to maintain restraint here. The continuous advice given by the federal chancellor to the American President is not called for. It is irritating and obtrusive: it is superfluous. [applause]

The Americans themselves must know whether they want to ratify SALT II or not. By the way, if nonratification of SALT II is supposed to be detrimental to the Soviet Union, then it is logical for one not to be able to understand why SALT II is considered a balanced measure. I do not take part in this arithmetic. But if SALT II is a means of mastering the crisis or a means of crisis technology--if affirmation of SALT II is an advantage for the Soviet Union--rejection of SALT II would be detrimental to the Soviet Union. It is, therefore, best for us Europeans not to take part in this.

I mentioned SALT I here because with SALT I the Americans acknowledged the other big power as having strategic parity. Strategic parity is not merely expressed by the number of explosives, the character of the explosives, their yield, or however one calls it. Regarding the Soviet Union strategic parity also means a worldwide system of bases, the setup of a high seas fleet, the setup of a submarine fleet that is able to operate on a worldwide level--in other words, a military potential going far beyond the purely defensive purposes of a continental big power, but one having the character of a superpower.

One cannot close one's eyes to the fact either that the offensive components of the Soviet Armed Forces in these 10 years have been improved considerably, quantitatively as well as qualitatively: The offensive components of their ground forces, aviation and--as I have just stressed particularly--of their naval forces. In addition, there is the development of a worldwide system of bases.

Well, there is much talk now about the invasion of Afghanistan. Was it a sign of military strength, or was it a sign of political weakness? What is behind it? One should not believe erroneously that this was an unconsidered action taken at the spur of the moment and considered by the initiators shortly thereafter as a grave mistake so that the initiators are asking the world, so to speak, to help them to get out of this adventure. Those who believe that really should rather play in the sandbox than deal with strategic problems. [applause]

Despite the fact that information is scarce for us--I assume the federal chancellor and the foreign minister have better information--it has been learned that the Americans warned the Soviet Union about five times against invading Afghanistan. It has also been learned that the decision to make the invasion was made as early as October. It seems, however, that the allies of the Soviet Union were not informed of it at that time.

So this is not a spontaneous action prompted by, say, the provocative action of Islamic partisans. It was certainly a well-planned, large-scale action with the skill and planning of a general staff behind it which represents a most certain strategic will. When we ask the Soviet Union today to withdraw its troops from Afghanistan, it is not a matter of giving the Soviet Union an opportunity to withdraw its armed forces without loss of face. Certainly, the withdrawal of troops from an occupied area even for a big power is not a particularly honorable or glorious stand that would earn some laurels.

But this is not the problem involved. The problem involved is: What was the aim of the invasion of Afghanistan? What are the reasons? And why are the Soviet troops staying on? One ought to view Brezhnev's last speech which Colleague Kohl in a speech this weekend rightly termed cynical; the speech helps us to understand the connections.

What the Soviet Union terms a foreign provocation is nothing but the fact that without Soviet military help and without the direct intervention of Soviet troops a communist regime in Kabul complaisant to the Soviet Union cannot last. [applause] Naturally, Afghanistan is a strategic focal point. It has been one not just in this century, but just since there have been tanks and airplanes with jet propulsion.

If you check on the history of Afghanistan or the history of the Middle East you will find that as early as 150 years ago the interests of tsarist Russia on the one side and the interest of the former British Empire in the south of India on the other were facing each other there. The Khyber Pass was one of the great strategic passes in the world which has always played a great strategic role. You may rest assured that there is nobody in the Soviet leadership who is not aware of the significance of that country and the significance of the strategic control of the Khyber Pass. After all, this is most closely linked with that action. One should (?familiarize oneself) with the situation of this country, the vicinity of which I once visited. There are quite a few reliable literary sources and a number of reports by our ambassadors and our military attaches from earlier days.

Ladies and gentlemen, as early as during the era of the Afghan monarchy the Soviet Union offered its assistance in the construction of a highway from the border of the Soviet Union to Kabul and from there to Pakistan. The highway was originally designed for 35 to 40 tons. The Soviets then refused their assistance for a highway with that capacity and demanded it be improved to a capacity of 65 to 70 tons. This means that this kind of economic assistance, the opening of traffic routes, even at that time--if I recall correctly, it must have been in the late sixties or early seventies--was marked by strategic thinking, by a potential invasion of this country by Soviet tanks. An invasion at least deemed possible even then.

This part of Afghanistan had never been pacified. Tribes live there, and the borders there were established as they were in Africa at the time of colonial rule. These are not ethnic borders. The tribes live on both sides of these borders, and for this reason the Soviet Union knows just as well as the Americans and the Pakistanis that where an inadequately marked border, wooded mountains, deserts and inaccessible regions are involved the tribes naturally move back and forth across the border. These tribes have always been armed. The right to carry arms was part of the tribal right, as it were. On the one hand these tribes are ardent patriots and on the other passionate Muslims.

What the Soviet Union demands is not the withdrawal of foreign troops, because there are no foreign troops barring the Soviet troops there, but the discontinuation of the guerrilla activities by these people, whom some people call rebels and others liberation fighters. Because the inhabitants of the plains, and especially of the mountainous areas in that region have always rebelled against any communist regime, the Soviet Union was confronted with the question of either losing face through the overthrow of Amin and suffering a serious setback or linking with Amin's overthrow the appointment of a reliable satellite that would be suitable for their purposes. And this could be done only via a large-scale military invasion involving 90,000 to 100,000 men.

There is yet another component which should not fail to be tracked down. My attention was drawn to it through my talks in Romania, but actually it should have been obvious. The regimes in Kabul from Abu Daud through Taraki, Amin and now Karmal, had three presidents, each of whom had the party book of the Communist Party of Afghanistan in his pocket. In these circles it does not matter much that they killed each other off, but if the regime of a communist president in this country is overthrown by the victory of the Muslim liberation fighters, this also meant the collapse of the Marxist-Leninist philosophy of history.

If a country has already reached a further advanced social state which is being guaranteed by a communist regime, as it were, and Muslim liberation fighters overthrow this regime and throw this country--throw is intended to be in quotation marks--back to conditions, to the sociopolitical era prior to this regime, then this would be a signal in the Third World that the course of the communist philosophy of history is incorrect. In that respect, Afghanistan would be a very serious example.

I do not have any intention to level polemics at the Soviet Union or to talk here in embitterment or hatred. Yet we must be allowed to analyze these facts soberly. This has nothing to do with any negative or positive assessment. It is simply necessary for recognizing the motives and for judging the situation; it is also necessary for judging the expediency or inexpediency of measures. I am not advocating that Soviet troops stay in Afghanistan but, like all democratic politicians of the West, I advocate their withdrawal. But it is not as simple as some people think, that they could simply withdraw whereupon the world would go on as it had before. This great action was not undertaken for that.

I will now proceed to another point. Naturally the Red Army is now just 500 kilometers from the Indian Ocean. Some of its Pacific fleet has been relocated from Vladivostok to the former U.S. naval bases in South Vietnam which have now been restored. Considerable military operations are taking place nowadays in the south of the Arabian Peninsula: several thousand Cubans, several thousand soldiers of the National People's Army, several thousand Soviet Russians in South Yemen. What matters to us here and what converges here is more than just two attitudes toward the Olympic games, what converges here are two great hotbeds of crisis: the Far East hotbed of crisis, the Middle East and Africa hotbed of crisis. What also converges here are the two facts that our military security cannot be separated from our economic security [applause], military security and economic security.

Our military security is not acutely threatened by the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. Nobody has claimed that. Nevertheless, may I be permitted to point out here once again that detente must be indivisible geographically, even if the degree of tension may be different in different geographical regions. The degree of tension in the Middle East is essentially greater than that in Europe. Yet the problem of detente is geographically indivisible, and therefore we cannot allow the other side to prescribe for us the interpretation of the content of detent policy. Only which both sides have stipulated in harmony may be subject to detente policy. Because surely we would receive the highest marks for exemplary detente policy if we were to resign from NATO, for example, or if we were no longer to make our territory available to U.S. troops for the defense of Europe. Surely this would be an act immensely promoting detente, to go by Moscow's propaganda.

But then the expectation that detente must also guarantee security would no longer be so. Moreover, detente ceases automatically if one introduces a process of political-psychological self-neutralization through a lessening of the moral and material defense readiness. [applause] I do not say the following for reasons of dogmatism: What the misunderstood detente policy has created unfortunately is the destruction of the awareness of the problem through window-dressing and an illusory and beautifully rosy painting of connections by the ranks of the government parties and the federal government in the last 10 years. [applause]

Mr Foreign Minister, one can be very wrong. And this is not a dishonest charge. The federal foreign minister gave a speech to a great economic association in October. He said that future developments will be dominated by the fact that the Soviet Union and the other East European states will be involved more and more in the interdependence of the world economy. He said that, therefore, the socialist countries in the long run will not ignore the insight that it is much rather a development aimed at stable relations which will create advantages than gains in the Third World which are expansionist and dubious as to their existence and continuity, gains that are being achieved with more and more military costs and political risks.

Mr Federal Foreign Minister, in saying this you have assessed the Soviet policy the way you would like it to be, but not the way it really is. Other motives are underlying the Soviet policy than the desire to be intervowen as closely as possible in world economic interdependence and to achieve as many power policy advantages from detente policy as possible.

In this context I would like to ask the Federal Government to say a word about how it assesses the military movements that are taking place in east central Europe and southeastern Europe. A number of real considerations exist in this respect. Everything indicates that the Soviet Union is at least making preparations for becoming active in the southeastern part of Europe, in the Balkan area, if its political leadership considers it necessary. I do not say that it has made the decision. I do not assert that this will happen. But military preparations are being made so that such action will be possible within a short time.

I think that we must abandon, therefore, two favorite ideas. One is the idea that the Soviet Union can take action only after long and thorough preparations involving the clumsy military apparatus. The experience in Afghanistan shows that it can move units over a great distance within a much shorter time. We must at least critically examine another idea also, namely the idea that the Soviet Union shies away from taking a military risk.

I do not believe that the Soviet Union wants to have World War III. I do not believe either that it pursues a policy aimed intentionally at bringing about World War III. But in view of the failure of the West--keyword Angola--in the seventies, it shies back from actions less today than 5 or 10 years ago. It has always very carefully tested the reactions of the West, in this case it was limited to the Americans. The experience of the past 10 years obviously created the conviction on the part of the Soviet Union that it is in a position to run greater risks or take greater actions which earlier were linked to greater risks. Today, however, it believes that these risks do not exist that much any more.

For that reason it is so desirable and is a positive sign that the United States has now fallen in step again. I ask you here to make a clear differentiation--I think logically and usually I formulate precisely. If I have criticized the United States, it was due to certain decisions, mistakes or oversights made in the past. They belong to the past. It does not make sense to list them here, but nobody will believe, for example, that the arms embargo against Turkey and similar measures have been special acts of political farsightedness. But today it is important to strengthen the position of the American President. [applause]

I was rather shocked when a high-ranking American politician to whom I talked a few days ago--he does not hold a government office--told me that over there one has the impression that the chief of the Federal Government wanted to make Mr Carter a cartoon figure, so to speak. I do not say that the chief of the Federal Government has that intention or that he has done it. But the impression exists in the United States at any rate that American-German solidarity is more talked about than a policy that is being pursued.

It is not a matter either of criticizing the German-French communique. There are no doubts that German-French friendship is a firm element of our policy. I am happy that the SPD is now also stressing German-French friendship very much. Mr Wehner, you said once that De Gaulle had turned France into a domestic political desert. Today one is happy to be admitted to that desert as a highly esteemed guest. [laughter, applause]

Naturally we approve the condemnation of the Russian invasion of Afghanistan in the communique and the demand that the troops be withdrawn. But there is one thing that none of us has understood--and I believe it does not make sense to try to wash a blackamoor white--what does it mean that the policy of detente will not survive the next Soviet action. The next Soviet strike?

That is not the question, ladies and gentlemen. The question is: Will it be possible to pursue detente policy as before if the Russians do not withdraw from Afghanistan. That was the decisive question, but one dodged in the communique. Condemnation of the invasion--correct. Demand for withdrawal--correct. But what will happen to detente policy if the demand to withdraw from Afghanistan is not followed, or if requests are made that in practice cannot be fulfilled such as, for example, the West's guarantee that the regime the Soviet Union has set up will really remain in power?

In Afghanistan we have the case that the majority of the populace is opposed to the regime that has been forced on it. Since we are democrats, we demand a leadership agreed to by the populace.

Naturally one cannot apply the same standards to a country such as Afghanistan, parts of which have never been pacified, as to parliamentary democracies in Europe or North America. But I can say one thing without exaggeration: One of the main reasons for the occupation was the resistance of the Afghan people against the puppet regimes manipulated by Moscow. In order to cover up the shame of the overthrow of this regime, military power has been applied. The withdrawal is therefore such a difficult problem now.

I have discussed this just now. It is wonderful to speak of a neutralization of Afghanistan, but who will guarantee that the present regime--the Karmal regime--will be able to stay in power after the withdrawal of the Soviet troops?

Certainly the Russians have underrated some things, or erroneously assessed them. They have not correctly assessed the weakness of the Communist Party in Afghanistan. They did not correctly assess the strength of the resistance of the Muslim freedom fighters which is deeply rooted in the people. They may have underrated the troop strength they needed since they are having to reinforce their troops considerably to get the country under control--at least 3 more divisions and special units are necessary in order to get the country really under control.

For this reason I am authorized by the two parties, the CDU and the CSU, to promise to the Federal Government any support for giving emphasis to the demand for the withdrawal of the Soviet troops, because if the Soviet troops withdraw so that the Afghan people can choose their own form of government, social system, and form of rule as they have done over many generations, then this would be a new phase of international politics. This really would be a fundamental change toward a peaceful era. [applause]

But before this happens we must not suppose the results to have materialized or that they will materialize in the near future since it will entail a hard tug-of-war over an extended period of time. Besides, when I said earlier that economic security and military security are very closely linked, what I meant thereby is that the Soviet invasion naturally serves toward the 50 percent encirclement of Iran. After all, nobody can tell definitely now whether the Islamic Revolution in that country will not be followed by another convulsion. That brings us directly to the Middle East, the world's richest oil fields.

I would have liked to hear from the chancellor or from a member of the government how they visualize the future there. Just note that in 1977 our expenditures for crude came to DM10 billion, I believe that they came to DM28 billion in 1978 and that they reached DM47 billion in 1979. The prospects for this year are DM80 billion provided no further oil price hike comes. The ideas that can be heard occasionally from the federal finance minister, namely that this merely involves the problem of a monetary recycling, the reintroduction of the money into the cycle, is true only if we assess matters from the viewpoint of the balance of payments. But it is essential indeed who the owner of the money is and what is acquired with this money. This is generally true for money.

Here we cannot close our eyes to the fact that we are approaching a relative impoverishment of the European industrial world because we will have to pay essentially higher prices for oil and possibly more for raw materials than before. And the money just cannot be distributed twice or three times over, nor can it be balanced by wage hikes and salary increases or by higher prices. What is happening here is a shift in value of gigantic magnitude.

I believe that we must realize that by the year 2000 we in the Federal Republic will have to invest about DM500 billion, including DM375 billion to DM380 billion for productive purposes to energy extraction and about DM120 billion to DM130 billion for purposes of energy preservation, energy conservation, heat insulation, and the most efficient utilization of energy. We will be facing an immensely great problem.

It goes without saying--and the chancellor in this respect restricted himself to sibylline expressions while the federal foreign minister was a bit more plain today--the question concerning the oil quantities and oil prices is also linked with the Middle East problem, with the unsolved Arab-Israeli bone of contention. However, Mr Foreign Minister, incantations repeated with monotonous regularity have little chance of success. What does a just solution mean, which would guarantee the security interests of all states involved and which would live up to the just interests of the Palestinians? This is wonderful, this is a grandiose way of putting it. Yet what does it look like in reality? That is where things clash hard. I do not think that this can be dealt with in detail here from the rostrum. Yet there is no sense in producing time and again the same formulas, which ultimately turn out to be mere illusion.

Is there any strategy with which the solution of this problem could be managed? Otherwise the unsolved Israeli-Arab issue must be added as another burdening element to the rest of the difficulties in this region: the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, the events in Iran and the unrest in the Arab world.

I read in the magazine QUICK of 21 February this year, that the main manager of the SPD warns against gambling on the wrong people and supporting old, encrusted feudal regimes. We must be very careful here, ladies and gentlemen. We do not have the least interest in seeing the regimes existing today on the Arabian Peninsula--without exception they are monarchic, you might say feudal, regimes: Saudi Arabia, Oman, Qatar, Bahrain, United Emirates--replaced by, say, social revolutionary regimes a la Ethiopia or a la Afghanistan. [applause]

What matters here is not, and in that point I agree with the foreign minister, a classification of these developing countries into pro-Western and pro-Eastern countries. This is not the subject at hand, either, and I have certain doubts that Cuba or Fidel Castro are a particularly convincing example of nonalinement, to dabble in the art of understatement here. Nor is it important that we say we want to engage them for the West and thus mobilize them as a weapon, an instrument or an ally against the East. The difference, Mr Foreign Minister, is that the Soviet Union systematically supports its allies in Africa, even if they come from the weaker movement, not only with the export of revolutionary ideologies but also through massive arms exports including large units such as signal units and police units, among others, and thus makes them the strongest movement in the country. This not only happened in Angola but also in Ethiopia. We fully support the demand here that the great powers stay out of the developing countries.

But this, ladies and gentlemen, is not the question. The question is whether those feeling that they belong to the West without being allied with it, those wishing to cooperate with the West and having a more liberal, more democratic form of government than the others--you cannot demand too much of these countries in just a few years--are afraid today of being victimized by the Soviet will for power and the allies of the Soviet Union and being deserted by the West. This is the main problem. [applause]

The same is true, of course, for the Gulf states. Nobody would think of jeopardizing the integrity, independence and sovereignty of the Gulf states by a Western military intervention. Yet what will happen if revolutionary movements from the bottom, and I know what I am talking about, and military pressure from outside at the same time might lead to a new danger, a new hotbed of fire, or even a hotbed of explosion? There we depend on the Americans because the Europeans, even if they combined all of their present navies and air forces together, are not even remotely capable of putting anything serious up against a further expansion of Soviet power.

I do not claim that German warships should appear there; this is a question of NATO planning and no business of mine. Nor do I believe that German troops should be sent on missions there. But we must above all fill the gaps on European territory which emerge as a result of military involvements in other regions within the framework of NATO defense. [applause]

This involves defense against submarines as well as support for Turkey. It certainly also involves the creation of a European long-distance air transport capability, so that our European allies will not always have to borrow planes from the Americans. Maybe some time the Americans will need their long-distance planes themselves and then the Europeans will not have their own capability in this field.

These are things that will not endanger detente. I am in favor of speaking in a friendly way with the Soviets, of keeping to our demands and of following a give-and-take policy in economic relations, but not to make costly and long financing in advance in order to supply machines or industrial installations. But we must not accept any interference in what we consider necessary for our security. [applause]

Mr Federal Chancellor, in this respect your adversaries do not sit in the ranks of the opposition, although there is friction especially between you, Mr Kohl and the members of the faction. The adversaries of a sensible detente policy, the adversaries of a realistic security policy sit in your own ranks. [applause]

Here, ladies and gentlemen, one must be careful not to make two mistakes, namely not to term NATO's missile decision a provocation against the Soviet Union to which it must respond. This NATO decision is nothing but a belated answer to what was being set up for years in the other part, on the other side of the Iron Curtain, on the other side of the demarcation line on Soviet territory--the famous SS-20 with its mobile capabilities.

I consider something else also as not making sense, namely that we always point out our military weaknesses and in this almost masochistic self-torturing way tell the whole world how weak we are. The democracies are not as weak as one believes. Their government system is superior, their economic efficiency is superior and they must set the right priorities at the right time. [applause]

I said it here, and Colleague Kohl, Colleague Zimmermann and I have repeated it in the talk in the chancellor's office: We said that we are prepared to discuss the extension or delay of cost-effective expenditure programs, the extension of parts of or our entire tax package--with the desire to bear a common responsibility, that is, abstain as the opposition from exploiting such unpopular measures. That would be quite something.

But naturally this does not mean that you, Mr Federal Chancellor, get to distribute election gifts while we make the sacrifices. [shouts, applause] I want to repeat here that it will not work that way. The government must lead. It has a claim for the opposition, as a result of its responsibility toward the state, not to stab the government in the back in its efforts, but rather to support it. I have done so here. We did so in the talk in the chancellor's office, and I repeat it here again. We do not deserve any mocking or scorn or all kinds of criticism and games. We deserve praise and gratitude for this attitude. The opposition deserves it in this house.

We are not prepared, however, to do one thing, namely to finance higher expenditures for our security through another increase in our mountain of debts. [applause]

The mountain of debts is a ticking time bomb anyway--I believe that you, Colleague Hoppe, have used that expression--the mountain of debts that has grown from DM14 billion in 1969 to more than DM200 billion in 1979, so that now only new credits will help to pay for the interest rates of old debts. That mountain of debts cannot be increased once more.

If our people are supposed to make sacrifices for freedom and security, it must not be done via the sweet poison of making debts. The sweet poison of making debts just shifts the problems, burdening the next generation, and in the long run it will become a danger for the stability of our currency. [applause]

If one looks at the overall amount we have to cope with this year--DM30 billion this year instead of DM47 billion last year--just for the present volume of crude oil imports, and if one looks at the other burdens we have to bear--help for Turkey and Pakistan--the opposition in this house will not support credit financing for the defense budget. We are prepared to accept the sacrifices for the people if the government names them and in this way lives up to its leadership function. Unfortunately, however, so far it has always been the other way around. [applause]

Ladies and gentlemen, the federal chancellor must say eventually how he really assesses the situation and what he deems necessary in this situation. The problem will not solve itself, Mr Federal Chancellor. You cannot expect any fairytale solutions, and hocus-pocus, or any help from heaven such as "I wish it were night and that the Prussians would come." We are asked here to pursue a policy of our own, a policy that must be coordinated with the others.

Let me say something in conclusion about the Olympic problem. It is not right and it is not worthy of us to speak merely of solidarity with the Americans in this connection. I consider the expression solidarity as wrong. One cannot say: Because of solidarity, we will not go to Moscow.

Ladies and gentlemen, we must assess the situation ourselves, and out of our own assessment, our own initiative and our own steadfastness we must say what we consider be be correct. As regards solidarity, it has always sounded as follows: Actually it is utter nonsense what the Americans do, but unfortunately we cannot do anything else, unfortunately we must cooperate. That has been your attitude so far, Mr Federal Chancellor. [applause]

The fact that we cannot go if the Americans do not, this fact is known to everybody anyway. Let us not look at each other hypocritically. If the Americans do not go there, we cannot go there at all. If we went there anyway, it would result in a psychological breach so that there would be no need at all to speak of a transatlantic community. But for a "no" in May, Mr Federal Chancellor, you will not get anything. I heard on 21 February from you: We will make our decision in May. And then there was the additional remark: Helmut Schmidt wants to give the Soviet Union a chance. [laughter]

That is like Willy Brandt's role as mediator. We have heard very clear words today in this respect, namely that the Russians and the Americans do not need a mediator, that the Federal Republic is too small and too weak for it, and that the big powers can speak to each other themselves so that therefore they do not need the SPD party chairman. But that is not our problem, it is your problem here. [laughter, applause]

It is also wrong to use brief parts of talks one has had with the big ones of this world, remarks that were made in a corner, for party propaganda effects at home. [prolonged applause]

We say we will support a realistic detente policy that will pursue detente policy not as a dogma but as a principle, which will pursue detente policy as a means to an end and not as a means in itself. We will support a detente policy that knows that detente policy is part of a conflict and not the end of the conflict. We say we will support the strengthening of our security, of our military security and our alliance policy security. The burdens the German people most likely will have to cope with in the eighties must be jointly borne by all democratic forces in this country and in this house. Then we will have a chance to rally and see the light in the tunnel, Mr Foreign Minister. The light in the tunnel--I believe you have fallen for a miserable lamp [laughter, applause] when you said that light can be seen at the end of the tunnel.

There have been people who attached a pink cover over their field glasses and who have seen warm weather, melting snow and the end of cold war. In fact, it was only an optical illusion. In this case it was a political delusion.

But the question of how the Afghanistan conflict will be ended will be of decisive historical significance for the future of Europe and for the future of Germany--Germany with its two states, its two parts. We ought to prove worthy of this. [prolonged applause]

CHANCELLOR SCHMIDT RESPONDS TO BUNDESTAG CRITICISM

Commenting on criticism voiced by CDU/CSU floorleader Kohl on the allegedly poor preparation of the envisaged meeting of 4 foreign ministers which did not come about, the chancellor says that "this has been very carefully discussed with several capitals, and the fact that the meeting eventually did not come about has nothing to do with any person in the German Federal Government. Then you have said something which I believe must be most clearly rejected. You have repeatedly suggested the existence of a stupid German anti-Americanism of which you accused my party. I noticed that you did not mean me. But that does not make the thing more decent, Mr Kohl.

There are two possible profiteers of such remarks. You have not been making them for the first time. You certainly do not want to be identified with the first profiteer. It is the Soviet Union with its propaganda that tried to drive wedges between the partners of the Atlantic alliance on this side of the Atlantic and on the other side of the Atlantic. You certainly do not want to be identified with this."

Schmidt goes on to say that on the other hand there are also people in the West "who want to undermine the close ties with the United States." He continues that "using the German Social Democrats for that, I believe, can only have the motive that you want such statements to be printed by the American press, so that the German reactionary press can quote them here again giving you ammunition."

Commenting on Kohl's remarks that Germany and France allegedly have confused the European consensus and created the danger of a directorate, Schmidt says he does not believe that Kohl has an anti-French attitude, but he should consider whether his "colleague Strauss, who has been involved in political affairs a bit longer," is not right. He said in early February that "France and Germany must form a firm crystallization point from which and through which a common policy of global responsibility could get going again."

Regarding the passage in Kohl's speech where he criticizes the Western "inability to achieve common formulations," Schmidt says "it is sometimes difficult for 9 states to make common decisions and sometimes it is even more difficult to formulate them together." He goes on to say: "The way in which you deal with these neighbors and allies, Mr Kohl, still does not make me believe that clarity and ability will come from Mainz of all places."

Schmidt strictly rejects charges of anti-Americanism by the opposition and says that CDU/CSU chancellor candidate Strauss is right in drawing attention to a change in feelings in the United States. "Surely it is still a bit too early to say how profound this is and what it will encompass, whether it will last. No doubt it has been triggered by the experience of the taking of hostages in Tehran and by Afghanistan, and also by the realization of the limits of the power of the United States in the face of events such as those in Afghanistan, in Tehran. But I want to tell you that I welcome this change. I assume that I am in harmony with Mr Strauss on that point. I deemed it a danger that after Watergate and after Vietnam too great a part of the American nation repented in sackcloth and ashes for too long. I welcome this revitalization."

Schmidt continues by saying that this change in sentiment in the United States is not yet a policy but "rather a basis for a policy of the United States which is different in accent than that prior to Angola, for example, or at the time of Ethiopia and other expansive establishments of communist power of influences."

The chancellor then proceeds to declare that Germany must not seek to become a primus inter pares in the European part of the alliance. "We must not want to grow bigger here than our other European allies. This also applies to the military side. This is one of the essential prerequisites of what I may be allowed to define as the psychological balance in Europe."

Schmidt warns the opposition against rash statements, such as that of a CDU deputy in California who had said that the Federal Republic would station long-range tactical nuclear weapons on its territory alone if necessary since such statements only tend to inflict harm "on Germany's position in the psychological balance of Europe. In this context Schmidt makes it clear that the Federal Government has no intention to cancel the visiting voyage by two ships of the German Navy, and he also rejects as a newspaper hoax the contention that it was upon German initiative that a NATO staff exercise was postponed or canceled. "This was the decision of others which we, however, did not resist."

Schmidt then proceeds to refute the contention by CDU/CSU chancellor candidate Strauss that the Federal Republic has gained nothing in return for detente, drawing attention to the security of Berlin and, especially, the human alleviations. "Even if this did not involve several hundred thousand people, even if it involved only a few people, for whom we procured full civil human rights, you cannot say that this is too small a return concession. This is not justifiable", Schmidt claims to the applause of the SPD/FDP groups in the Bundestag. But it was hundreds of thousands, he says, "and you cannot measure this in terms of money."

Referring to Strauss' demand that the Federal Government cease urging the U.S. Government to ratify the SALT II agreement, Schmidt declares that President Carter himself in a "great speech explained that he continues to regard the ratification of this treaty as being in the security interest of the United States and in the security interest of the entire world, and that pending such ratification he proposes to treat this agreement as if it were ratified. So we are not urging any advice on anyone but underscoring the publicly declared view of the Government of the United States which is allied with us." Besides, Schmidt continues, "we are not underscoring this view of the American President for the sake of the much cited solidarity but because it is also in our confirmed interest to arrest the strategic armament on an equal level and to prevent a race from erupting which might lead the century into total destruction." This is our interest, as it also is, by the way, the interest of the Germans in the GDR and the people of Berlin, the interest of the Poles, Hungarians, the French, British, and of all people who would be endangered by the incalculable risks of an uninhibited race in nuclear-strategic weapons."

Analyzing Bavarian Minister President Strauss' Bundestag speech, the CDU/CSU candidate for chancellor, Schmidt says "one can only say that the man is right, he says what we think and what we have said. Nothing can be said against this. Far-reaching agreement with the Federal Government exists regarding the analytical part of the speech Commenting on sacrifices to be made by the FRG, Schmidt says that "all additional burdens resulting from the world situation--be it in the field of defense, be it in the field of military aid for Greece and Turkey, be it in the field of military and economic aid for Turkey, the field of economic aid for Pakistan, or in the field of the long-term defense program of the North Atlantic alliance--all these additional expenditures will involve only the federal cash box and the federal budget. If somebody is prepared to make sacrifices most of all it ought to be the minister presidents of the 11 federal lander in the negotiations on the turnover tax."

Schmidt quotes various speeches and interviews by Strauss to show that the CSU chairman varies his statements and utterances in line with the audience he addresses, adding that Strauss has contributed little to "the baggage to be taken along to Washington." However, Schmidt does support the view advocated by Strauss that democracies, as compared to dictatorships, are not weak. In fact, Schmidt concludes, the German democracy is very strong, "and I have the impression that the strength of the German democracy also becomes manifest in the calm with which the citizens of our country are looking around themselves today, in these international difficulties in which the whole world finds itself, and in the calm with which they trust that we here in Bonn, too, will remain calm and reasonable. Thank you very much."

PRESS COMMENTS ON SCHMIDT STATEMENT, BUNDESTAG DEBATE

DW291247 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0605 GMT 29 Feb 80 DW

[Press review on Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's government statement and the Bundestag foreign-policy discussion]

[Excerpt] Commenting on the Bundestag discussion the daily DIE WELT writes the following: The debate in the Bundestag was helpful for friend and foe.

However, it did not convey any surprising information. Doubts and uncertainty about the path of the Europeans, about all of the Germans, in the strategic environment of the crisis have not been removed thoroughly anywhere. All told, it was not an optimistic intermediate balance-sheet of a German answer on Afghanistan that would measure up to the requirements of the alliance. The road toward commonality with America, toward a mutual and credible strategy reaching beyond the day and the event of Afghanistan apparently remains complicated and difficult. All that remained cryptic yesterday in the government's contribution, irrespective of the massive challenge posed by the opposition, will have to be interpreted more precisely in Washington next week.

Frankfurter ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG writes: For Helmut Schmidt the Bundestag debate on Afghanistan and the consequences was a nuisance and he let it be seen. What carries even more weight is that he apparently prefers to discard the whole matter. Those who listened to his government statement finally had to ask themselves whether there was any world crisis at all. Soviet intervention must be ended, he said. But he was reluctant to say what must be done to this end. Whenever there is talk of sanctions then he prefers to outline everything that does not work. Nevertheless, he does not want to shut his eyes to participating in an Olympic boycott later on, but he left it to Foreign Minister Genscher to make the people understand it.

The Duesseldorf RHEINISCHE POST observes: Viewed by the foreign-political benefit Federal Chancellor Schmidt and his antagonist Strauss may be satisfied with yesterday's Bundestag debate. Both are traveling to the United States soon and both may assert there on behalf of a rather considerable and stable majority of the Bonn parliament that the so much battered term "solidarity" is not rooted in queer expediency considerations, but in the common destiny between West Europeans and Americans. The balance-sheet of the debate is that no ballast has been smuggled into Chancellor Schmidt's negotiating luggage for Washington and that chancellor candidate Strauss allowed neither friend nor foe to harass his preparations for the visit to the United States. It considers that yesterday's debate discussions will have to be continued after the chancellor and his rival return, when on 20 March they will report to the Bundestag, will make assessments and will try to succeed in the difficult venture of preventing commonality in the field of foreign policy from being exposed to election campaign-linked meanness and nevertheless remain opponents struggling for power in Bonn--in the face of a world-power conflict.

NEUE RUHR-ZEITUNG of Essen headlines its commentary "Useful--But Unnecessary" and ask: What did the opposition intend with this debate desired by it? Did it want to strengthen the chancellor's position in the interest of the whole and at the same time provide him with a parliamentary certificate on the solidarity, the oft-repeated solidarity with the United States, for his luggage to Washington? If this is so, then there can be actually no objection to such contribution to cooperation. The chancellor rightly pointed out that suspicion can be exaggerated so that it causes harm. But all told, he may be glad about the stand taken by the opposition: For unanimity prevails on all basic issues, and this despite of the looming election campaign. This really deserves to be appreciated.

ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG of Mainz arrives at the following conclusion: As to the avowal of unswerving partnership with America all parties of the Bundestag are united but views are split with regard to the West's joint defensive reactions in the crisis around Afghanistan. The foreign policy parliamentary debate, which was convened against the federal chancellor's declared will upon the urging of the opposition mirrors the Federal Government's uncertainty in assessing the current and medium-term policy of the Kremlin. What was denounced yesterday by Helmut Kohl as the helpless and insecure tactics of the chancellor, must be evaluated in Helmut Schmidt's view as activities of "thoroughly considered mastering of the conflict." This contradiction, above all, is a smokescreen over the issue of a Federal German Olympic boycott.

FRANCOIS-PONCET ON AFGHAN RESISTANCE, RELATIONS WITH USSR

[Unattributed report: "Mr Jean Francois-Poncet Emphasizes the Importance of Afghan Resistance Movements"]

[Text] On 28 February Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet delivered a speech to the National Assembly Foreign Affairs Committee. Mr Francois-Poncet emphasized among other things the importance of Afghan resistance movements and their truly popular and indigenous character. Any external aid they may be receiving does not explain either the origin or the scale of the rebellion, he stated, replying to a question put to him by Robert Mondargent (PCF, Fal-d'Oise). According to information in his possession, the Afghan resistance fighters seem to be poorly armed. It appears that most of their arms have been taken from the Afghan Army. According to several deputies who participated in the Foreign Affairs Committee meeting, Mr Francois-Poncet explained that the regular army, which was some 100,000 strong prior to the Soviet intervention, can now only rely on one-half of its previous manpower. An increasing flood of refugees has been observed, he added.

France deems it indispensable to maintain contacts with Soviet officials in both Paris and Moscow in accordance with the procedure laid down in Franco-Soviet protocols. It is within the framework of these contacts, the foreign minister continued, that explanations have been requested from the Soviet authorities, especially with respect to the question of the withdrawal of their troops. Mr Francois-Poncet explained that Leonid Brezhnev's statement, in which he announced the Soviet Union's intention to withdraw its troops provided it receives certain guarantees, is important and is carefully being studied by the government. Asked by Maxime Gremetz (PCF, Somme) whether it is true that France has laid down certain conditions for the holding of the Madrid conference, Mr Francois-Poncet stated that such a conference would be useful only if the Soviet Union made some gestures likely to restore an atmosphere of confidence.

PLO REPRESENTATIVE COMMENTS ON FRANCE'S MIDEAST POSITION

[Paris radio reporter Gilbert Denoyan interview with Ibrahim as-Sus, PLO representative in France--live]

[Excerpts] [Denoyan] The French-Kuwaiti communique shows that France is officially supporting the Palestinian people's self-determination. This decision, however important it may be, is in a way only a restatement of the position that France has held for some years on the Middle East issue. Ibrahim as-Sus, PLO representative in Paris, do you consider this statement of France's position to be a further step toward the Palestinian position?

[As-Sus] It is certainly a step toward the Palestinian position, certainly a step in the French analysis toward a recognition of the legitimate national rights of the Palestinian people. One must not forget that the French position hitherto made mention of a homeland only for the Palestinians. Now, to talk about self-determination means implicitly to recognize the right of the Palestinians to have an independent Palestinian state. Having said this, we are very encouraged by this position statement by France and we wish and hope that soon it will be followed by an explicit mention of the recognition of the necessity of having an independent Palestinian state.

[Question] We shall return to this notion of a homeland and a Palestinian state. France has often played the role of navigator in the Middle East as far as the Europeans are concerned.

Do you think that the content of the French-Kuwaiti communique says something more important on the European level? Do you think, for example, that Europe will follow the present French position?

[Answer] I believe that France would not have taken this position without previous consultation with its main European partners. Therefore we see this French initiative as a European initiative, and one that France has taken due to the fact that France heads the European Community.

I would also like to mention that we also hope that this step forward by France will eventually lead to official recognition of the PLO as the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people.

[Question] It has been said that after this statement of position, Yasir 'Arafat could come to France. Do you see it this way, too? Do you think that all the conditions have been created for a visit by Yasir 'Arafat to France?

[Answer] Certainly the conditions are improving for Yasir 'Arafat's visit to Paris. The chairman of the PLO Executive Committee has always said that he intended to pay an official visit to Paris but under the condition that all the political conditions were created which favor such a visit, and that these political conditions should be favorable to each side concerned. I mean that our bilateral relations with France are excellent and we want them to remain so. [sentence as heard]

[Question] But right now, after this communique, do you think that all the conditions have been created?

[Answer] All the conditions have not yet been created, I suppose, but they are on the way toward being improved or being created.

[Question] Do you think that right now the Palestinian cause is gaining ground and that the events surrounding oil are extremely profitable to you in this respect?

[Answer] The Palestinian cause has made gains in the diplomatic field, a new field, for the past 4 or 5 years. This is due to the diplomatic efforts of the PLO, and also to the diplomatic efforts of some friendly Arab countries that are supporting us and are supporting our cause in a very efficient and dynamic manner. We have always said as far as oil is concerned that if the West does not want to have an energy crisis bursting upon it, it is necessary that it should also give thought to the problems of the Middle East, in other words, the Palestinian problem. Why do you want us to take into consideration your energy problems while you, you Europeans and Westerners, do not take into consideration whatsoever our problems and our tragedy, the Palestinian tragedy, that of a people in exile for 30 years. This is not a one-way matter.

GISCARD SPEAKS ON AIMS OF GULF TOUR TO ARAB ENVOYS

[Unattributed report: "France's Arab Policy"]

[Text] On Thursday night [28 February], speaking at a dinner given in his honor at the Moroccan Embassy by the heads of Arab diplomatic missions accredited to Paris, Mr Giscard d'Estaing stated: "I attach the greatest importance to my upcoming visit to Gulf states, which will enable me to show the interest taken by France in continuing dialog and developing cooperation with countries now situated at the borders of a region confronted with great uncertainties."

The French head of state declared that he feels sure that the influence of the Arab world is "bound to extend and assert itself." Furthermore, Mr Giscard d'Estaing stated that as a result of the creation of an Arab World Institute in France, whose foundation act was signed Thursday, the French people will be able to learn more about the realities of the Arab world.

With the exception of the Egyptian ambassador, who was not invited, all heads of diplomatic missions, the Arab League director and the PLO representative in France were present at the Moroccan Embassy dinner.

BARRE VIEWS ECONOMIC OUTLOOK, DEFENSE SPENDING

LD031451 Paris LE FIGARO in French 1-2 Mar 80 p 4 LD

[Unattributed report: "Raymond Barre: An End to Pessimism!"]

"I would like to stand up against a pessimism which is tending to discourage the French people," he said. "For my part I have never tried to conceal the truth from my compatriots. I have asked them to make major efforts over the past 3 years and I have no intention of giving way to forced optimism now, but I do not think there is any point in painting an excessively black picture of the economic forecasts and analyses since experience has shown that they are not as reliable as some people would have us believe."

Raymond Barre would like the French people to have a twofold conviction: "First, that thanks to their efforts our country is now better able to face the constraints imposed by rising energy prices and the challenges of international competition."

Second, that "if we adhere to the vital discipline in monetary affairs, credit, public finance and wages, and if we relentlessly pursue our production, investment, innovation and export effort, we will be in a much better position than the experts in despair and systematic denigration would have us believe to overcome the problems assailing us which will inevitably produce a foreign trade deficit and high price indexes in the first months of 1980." In this way France will be able to "survive the present period of upheaval with as little difficulty as possible." The prime minister maintained that for him this policy implies "austerity and strength whatever the recriminations, criticisms and exaggerated statements."

Diversifying Defense System

The prime minister also made a speech during the closing session of the Institute of Higher National Defense Studies' regional meeting. The period now beginning is one of international tensions....

"The greatest challenge of the eighties will, of course, be that of peace," he said. "That is why the vast majority of French people approve of the sustained and consistent efforts being made by the government for our armed forces."

The prime minister explained that no element of our spending has been sacrificed. "The budgetary effort," he said, "is reflected in a continuous extension of our nuclear capability and the design of second generation strategic and tactical systems. However, we are also continuing the modernization of our conventional military forces with the same perserverance."

PAJETTA DEFENDS PCI AFGHAN STAND, SUPPORTS NEUTRALIZATION

LD291153 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 24 Feb 80 pp 1, 17 LD

[Unattributed report on PCI Directorate member Gian Carlo Pajetta undated speech in Turin: "The Only Solution to This Tragic Situation Is Independence"]

[Text] Turin--Speaking at the PCI national conference on the FIAT automobile firm, Comrade G.C. Pajetta said, among other things: I would like to state clearly and emphatically that the Afghan issue is here and now on the agenda. We would be shirking our duty as internationalists, we would not be communists or thinking men, if we said: "It is not our affair." I have read this remark, whose narrowmindedness shocked me, in a reply to the much discussed questionnaire [poll]. I interpreted the many "don't know" and "not interested" replies as a kind of reproach to us, as the working class vanguard party, which wants workers to be able to understand, to be thirsty for knowledge and to be aware of their class responsibilities with respect to the general interests of the country, not forgetting what Marx and Engels taught: "Proletarians of all countries, unite." Do you remember Vietnam? It was a comrade of ours, Ho Chi Minh, who taught us that the people's will and the support he received from other countries were essential weapons, just like rifles or field guns. Do you remember the Portuguese colonies, where the guerrillas taught the Portuguese soldiers democracy and were the protagonists not only of African liberation but also of the Lisbon revolution? We supported these causes, which we considered just; we gave and urged every kind of support, never forgetting that those liberation processes could take place and prove victorious within the framework of detente and peace. When, in the case of Afghanistan, we did not believe that that was how things stood, that the distortion of a military coup carried out by a vanguard split by fratricidal struggles and a foreign intervention did not meet the requirements of a national and popular process capable of success, we said so. Were we perhaps wrong to contribute our criticial verdict? To express our condemnation when we felt that it was being forgotten that observance of justice is an element of strength and that politics, popular support and international consensus are more important than weapons? We believe not.

We are not recalling this now so as to say that we were right. In view of the Kabul tragedy we must first ask ourselves what is the solution to that tragedy. A guarantee must be given to the patriots, even those waging a fierce struggle against the others, and to the people, even those influenced by conservative elements or motivated by foreign reactionary forces, that Afghanistan can and must be an independent state, that its people must be put in a position to emerge from the ruins and to prevent further disasters. This is why the issue of how to achieve the withdrawal of the foreign troops, to guarantee all the borders, to prevent interference and to insure a reconciliation which will allow the wounds to heal is becoming urgent.

Appeals concerning the entire area have come from Yugoslavia, India and other countries. The nonalined countries have shown their concern. Their vote must not be confused with that of the United States, whose representative said just yesterday that "perhaps in the Persian Gulf the nuclear bomb will not be used from the very first day of a possible conflict." As if this were news of peace. But at this moment we are looking primarily at Europe and the task which Italy can perform on this continent, as a contribution to world peace.

The United States seems dissatisfied with the failed attempt to involve NATO in events in the Persian Gulf, beyond the pact's commitments, and with the refusal by more than one European government to accept the reprisals policy or to accelerate the war spiral.

We believe that Italy, loyal to the European vocation which all the democratic parties invoked at the recent elections, must work with France, Germany and the countries which have already expressed their uncertainty or opposition regarding missile rearmament to persuade the major powers to negotiate, reminding them that, while their responsibility is great, they must not be the only ones to decide the world's future.

We read today that Brezhnev has announced in Moscow that the Soviets are not opposed to negotiations, an examination of the peace guarantees in the area which would make it possible for their troops to withdraw. These are principled assertions: Perhaps an electioneering speech could not have contained specific proposals, but the diplomats must consider these too. We hope that these remarks imply a turning point, an outstretched hand. We hope that the problems will be clarified--both those of the Afghan tragedy and those of European peace and security.

We Italian Communists have spoken in Moscow and will speak in Beijing with the same courage as we speak about Rome and Washington, facing facts directly. Let everyone else do the same; this will be of greater service to Italy than to submit us to examinations from the Christian Democratic Party Congress rostrum.

NEW PROTOCOL ON ECONOMIC EXCHANGES WITH HUNGARY SIGNED

[Unattributed report: "Italian-Hungarian Trade Developing"]

[Text] Rome--There has been a meeting in Rome of the Italian-Hungarian joint committee, which signed a new protocol reflecting both countries' commitment to developing and intensifying mutual economic relations. The two countries' delegations were headed by Hungarian Deputy Minister of Foreign Trade Istvan Torok and Italian Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs Antonio Haslini.

In recent years Hungarian-Italian trade has undergone dynamic development. Its volume in 1979 was $550 million. About half of Hungary's exports to Italy are in the form of agricultural and food products, with now traditional supplies of meat (about 60 percent of Italian imports of live sheep are supplied by Hungary), and unfinished products. Prominent exports to Hungary include chemical and iron and steel products and raw materials for the textile and paper industries. Hungary is a regular customer for Italian citrus fruits.

Both countries attach great importance to economic cooperation. While on the one hand lasting relations between Hungarian and Italian firms in production, research and marketing render economic relations between the two sides more stable, they also constitute the principal means for increasing exchange and regeneration and modernizing their structure. The joint committee has recently formed two working groups to further develop cooperation. One has the task of promoting cooperation in the mechanical engineering industry, while the other has the task of, among other things, identifying the areas and examining the conditions for joint supplies to third markets, especially in the following sectors: construction and equipment of hospitals and professional training schools; the supply of diesel vehicles and locomotives; and agricultural and irrigation projects.

Relations between Hungarian firms and certain major Italian industries are being developed. Framework agreements have been reached between interested Hungarian firms and Italian companies such as FIAT, Montecatini-Edison, the National Hydrocarbons Agency and Pirelli. One of the joint committee's concerns is to introduce small and medium Italian enterprises and Hungarian cooperatives into the exchange and cooperation activity. It was within this framework that a cooperation agreement was recently reached between the Hungarian cooperatives' national council and the National Cooperatives and Insurance Funds League.

PCP-ML'S VILAR VIEWS PARTY REORGANIZATION

LD292221 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 1930 GMT 29 Feb 80 LD

[Eduino Vilar, secretary general of the Portuguese Communist Party-Marxist Leninist, 29 February interview with unnamed correspondent--recorded]

[Excerpts] The Communist Party of Portugal-Marxist Leninist [PCP-ML] will dissolve itself tomorrow in the course of its eighth congress as a preliminary step toward the formation of what will be eventually called the Labor Party [Partido Trabalhista].

The PCP-ML was founded in 1970 out of the Portuguese Marxist-Leninist Committee which was, for its part, formed by dissidents from the Portuguese Communist Party in 1965. The PCP-ML was officially registered in the Supreme Court of Justice as a legal political party on 25 March 1976 and the aim was then to participate in the 1976 legislative elections, when it polled 0.29 percent of the votes. In the presidential elections, the PCP-ML backed General Ramalho Eanes's candidacy.

The Labor Party, into which the PCP-ML will integrate itself, was legalized on 6 July 1979, following a merger with the Workers' and Peasants' Alliance. The PCP-ML has been run by a central committee which, since its seventh congress held in March 1978, has been composed of 23 members.

Secretary General Eduino Vilar was interviewed tonight by Lisbon Radio. [begin recording]:

[Question] The eventual dissolution of the PCP-ML was already known and has being awaited for quite some time. How would you assess your party's role in the Portuguese political scene, taking into consideration above all the election results?

[Answer] Before 25 April we carried out intense activity against fascism and the colonial wars and after the 25 April our main activity was characterized by our fierce opposition to all those who wanted to replace one dictatorship with another, as in the well-known case of the PCP and its satellites.

[Question] The PCP-ML is the only Portuguese political party with official relations with the People's Republic of China. Will this legacy be carried over to the Labor Party after the dissolution of the PCP-ML?

[Answer] It is only natural that not only this legacy but also all the other aspects linked with it, such as our spirit of struggle and our ideals and practice of freedom, should be preserved. The legacy which the Labor Party will receive from our party will be certainly characterized by, among other things, our good relations with the People's Republic of China and other parties in the world.

[Question] In the 1976 elections the PCP-ML polled 0.29 percent of the vote. Do you expect much more from the Labor Party?

[Answer] Those results were unreal because the PCP-ML had withdrawn from the elections before polling day and never called on the voters to vote for it. We only wanted to make our presence felt and our ideas known. The Labor Party will certainly have a wider acceptance than the PCP-ML since the Labor Party is made up of people not only from one ideological quarter but also from people from the Socialist Party and other quarters, including Christians. It is normal, therefore, that the Labor Party, which will have a much wider basis of support, should secure much better results in the next elections. [end recording]

NORDIC COUNCIL'S 28TH SESSION OPENS IN REYKJAVIK

LD031904 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1530 GMT 3 Mar 80 LD

[Text] The Nordic Council opened its 28th session in Reykjavik today. Olof Palme, chairman of the Swedish Social Democratic Party, who opened the session, stressed in his speech that the Nordic Council is not a forum for the discussion of security problems. Finnish Prime Minister Mauno Koivisto said he supported Palme's position. According to Koivisto, there are no major unsolved problems between the Nordic countries. About 40 ministers from Nordic countries are attending the meeting. The Finnish delegation includes 8 ministers and 17 Diet deputies.

Opening Speeches

[Summary] The 28th session of the Nordic Council opened in Reykjavik today. Heikki Kymaelaeinen reports:

[Begin Kymaelaeinen relay] The fact that there have been no changes in the security policy of the Nordic countries, even if there have at times been attempts to interpret the matter differently, is a matter of great importance but not a dramatic one and that is why it often attracts insufficient attention. This was noted by the chairman of the Swedish delegation to the Nordic Council, Olof Palme of the Swedish Social Democratic Party, when he opened the Council session in Reykjavik. Palme said since the war the Nordic countries have been a zone of peace. This fact is important especially in the present crisis situation and it proves that the balance in the north has achieved stability. At the beginning of his speech Chairman Palme recalled the speeches of President Urho Kekkonen and Danish Foreign Minister H.C. Hansen in 1956 and noted in this connection that the Nordic Council should not discuss matters related to foreign or military policies. It is quite clear that Palme wanted to anticipate speeches prepared for the general debate which might deal with security and international policies. [end relay]

Elsi Hetemaeki-Olander of the Finnish Unionist Party and chairman of the Finnish delegation, stressed the importance of the Nordic Investment Bank.

[Begin Kymaelaeinen relay] The speech by Premier Mauno Koivisto gave evident support to Palme's opening speech. Even Koivisto aimed at reassuring his listeners. There are no major problems between the Nordic countries, and above all no unsolved problems. For those who would like to see Nordic cooperation as dramatic and exciting, this state of affairs may naturally present a problem. Most of us, however, regard Nordic cooperation as a continuation of the internal policies of these countries. Just now when international developments arouse serious concern it is particularly important that the Nordic countries have such good and trusting relations which enable them to have sincere talks with each other, Premier Koivisto said. He also said he was convinced that no Nordic country wants purposely to increase tension in our continent. [end relay]

["G.A." report: "Possible Talks With United States on Military Reinforcements"]

[Text] Defense Minister Poul Sogaard believes that the development of the East-West military balance in the seventies has made West Europe dependent on reinforcements which would come mainly from the United States.

The fact that Denmark does not permit the deployment of foreign troops in current circumstances necessitates a peacetime plan and possibly preparations to receive reinforcements in a given situation. The defense minister stated in the Folketing yesterday that talks on such reinforcements have not begun and that more specific commitments on reinforcements have not yet been received from the United States. If there is an offer from the United States it will be up to the government and the Folketing to assess the situation and also the question of establishing military depots in this country.

Yesterday's debate was called by the Socialist People's Party and the Left Socialists. It was a kind of prelude to a major Folketing debate tomorrow on Denmark's security policy position in light of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

Gert Petersen (Socialist People's Party) expressed his fear that there could be a change in Denmark's base policy hitherto, since a defense command report speaks of reinforcements in the early stages of a crisis, "even in peacetime," Gert Petersen said.

Steen Folke (Left Socialists) wanted information on the forthcoming defense plan. "We only know that there is talk of a 'no-change' solution but it is worth noting that it would cost 8 billion kroner."

The defense minister said that the timing of a bill will depend on the talks currently underway in the Folketing Defense Committee. The government has published an introduction to the talks and will place emphasis on achieving a broad-based settlement.

The Socialist People's Party proposal to reject reinforcements and depots and the Left Socialists' demand for military cutbacks will be voted on today in the Folketing.

KOIVISTO CLARIFIES REMARKS ON NORWEGIAN DEFENSE POLICY

LD031419 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 26 Feb 80 p 9 LD

[AFTENPOSTEN correspondent dispatch: "Koivisto Explains"]

[Text] Helsinki, 25 February--Finnish Prime Minister Mauno Koivisto chose his words deliberately so that he provoked a relatively critical reaction in the East in preference to a more indignant reaction in the West when, during his visit to Sweden earlier in the month, he said that the Norwegian-U.S. negotiations on advance storage of military materiel in Norway had not caused anxiety in Finland.

Koivisto has explained to the newspaper HELSINGIN SANOMAT why he said what he did. Mauno Koivisto and his Swedish counterpart, Thorbjorn Falldin, had agreed in advance to try to avoid statements which might be interpreted as adopting a stand on Norwegian policy.

The Finnish prime minister said that an affirmative answer to the question of whether the Norwegian-US negotiations had caused anxiety in Finland would automatically have resulted in a question of what the Finnish Government would then do about it.

"I immediately had a mental picture of those people who are always talking of Finlandization and who constantly wipe Finland off the world map making allegations that Finland's prime minister has interfered in Norway's affairs. On the other hand, it is clear that eyebrows were raised in the East when I replied in the negative. Yet I believed that we could expect calm reactions from the Russian side," Koivisto told the paper.

STOLTENBERG SUPPORTS NATO DEPOT PROPOSAL

LD291733 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1530 GMT 29 Feb 80 LD

[Finnish broadcasting correspondent Ulla-Maria Johansen report of Oslo interview with Norwegian Defense Minister Stoltenberg]

[Text] Norwegian Defense Minister Thorvald Stoltenberg, in an interview with the Finnish broadcasting company, has explained the need to store heavy military equipment intended for NATO troops in Norway.

The Soviet Union recently criticized these plans as it regards them as a change in Norway's policy according to which no foreign bases are permitted on Norwegian territory in peacetime. The chief Soviet paper PRAVDA last week also hinted that there might be components of tactical nuclear weapons among the weapons stored. Defense Minister Stoltenberg says that through storing the weapons, Norway may be able to avoid calling for the help of NATO troops too early in a possible crisis situation. He does not regard the storage plans as a change in Norway's policy with regard to bases.

The defense minister explained the storing of American military equipment in northern Norway by saying that Norway's policy with regard to bases bans the deployment of foreign troops in Norway in peacetime. Norway's defense policy provides, however, for help from NATO allies in a possible crisis situation. Technological developments have led to a situation in which the (?breaking off) of such aid will take place quickly at present. In order to avoid calling the NATO forces to help earlier than necessary and in order to avoid making a tense and difficult situation in a crisis even more difficult, Norway wants to store heavy military equipment in the country. According to the defense minister it is not yet clear what kind and what quantity of equipment will be stored. But there has been discussion of storing equipment for 8,000-10,000 Marines, and there has also been mention of storing heavy armaments for the defense of Norwegian airfields.

So how much NATO equipment can be stored in Norway without contradicting Norway's base policy? The substance of Norway's policy regarding bases is defined separately in each term by the Norwegian Government and the Storting, the defense minister stated, pointing out that there is absolutely no intention to alter the starting point of Norway's policy regarding bases: the deployment of foreign troops in Norway in peacetime.

NATO forces, which in a possible crisis situation would use the weapons stored in Norway, are usually partly equipped with tactical nuclear weapons. According to the often repeated assurances of the Norwegian Government, Norway will not, however, permit the storing of either nuclear weapons or components for them. There is no question of storing nuclear launchpads or other equipment for nuclear weapons, the defense minister assured, noting also that Norway will not accept any sealed consignments.

Concerning the NATO military exercises beginning in northern Norway, in which over 18,000 NATO troops are taking part, the defense minister noted that they can have no effect on the present East-West relations. Such exercises have been held over the past 10-12 years in the same area at a distance of over 500 km from the Soviet border.

Despite the persistent attacks by the Soviet media against Norway's security policy, the defense minister considers the present Norwegian-Soviet relations to be in good shape. This is shown, in his view, by the recent Soviet offer to start a new round of talks on the question of the Continental Shelf in the Barents Sea in order that a clear border between the countries can also be defined in the Barents Sea.

DEFENSE CHIEF RAPS PROSPECTS OF REDUCED DANISH DEFENSES

ID031535 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 25 Feb 80 p 4 LD

[Per Sabroe dispatch: "Defense Chief Critical of Danish Defenses"]

[Text] Copenhagen, 24 February--Norway may be forced to increase its defense expenditure by an amount corresponding to that which Denmark wants to save. "Denmark is actually Norway's first line of defense in the south." That was said by Norwegian Defense Chief Gen Sverre Hamre to BERLINGSKE TIDENDE.

The statement has caused a sensation in the debate on the Danish defense system. The Folketing is soon to make a decision on allocations for the next 4 years from 1981 when the defense agreement between the ruling party and several nonsocialist parties expires.

The Norwegian defense chief expressed criticism in line with that of NATO chiefs, U.S. administration members and high-ranking Danish NATO officers. This is in protest against the Social Democrats' new draft agreement on defense in which allocations are not to increase despite the NATO agreement on an annual 3-percent increase for defense. Danish generals have said that with less money they will have to give priority to Jutland and concentrate defenses there where allied help can be awaited, whereas Sjaelland will have to be abandoned.

General Hamre said that Norway relies on effective Danish and German defenses. If Sjaelland is abandoned the Soviet Navy could easily sail through Oresund and the Great Belt and thus southern Norway would be threatened with invasion. If Denmark reduces its defenses, Norway will have to reconsider its base policy and advance storage of material and use more money in southern Norway. The Norwegian general also warned Denmark that reduced defenses would also mean that the need for the deployment of foreign forces in Denmark could arise earlier. Danish generals have said the same.

The statements have been dismissed by Defense Minister Poul Sogaard, who says that the government has not changed its view on the deployment of foreign forces in peacetime. In the Danish draft for a new defense agreement there are three options this time: The same budget as hitherto, a 1.5-percent increase, or a 3-percent increase.

Hamre Interview

[Clav Trygge Storvik interview with the Norwegian defense chief, Gen Sverre Hamre: "Reassessment of Base Policy May Be of Interest"--date and place not specified]

[Text] "I speak only of military defense and the effects which this [the proposed agreement on Danish defense] will have for us and not about kroner and ore in the Danish defense budget," the Norwegian defense chief, Gen Sverre Hamre, commented to AFTENPOSTEN.

"It is clear that although the allocations for defense in Denmark are to be reduced, effectiveness need not diminish. It might be considered that the Germans might assume a greater share or that the Americans might have a stronger presence. It is precisely this balance which we will also encounter sooner or later and which is indicated in this year's draft budget. There is a limit to how far one can go before we would have to look at the base policy and nullify the weakness through budget measures in some other way as, for example, allowing for bases.

[Question] Are you prepared to reassess our plans if the Danish Government's draft is approved?

[Answer] That depends entirely on whether there is a weakening and eventually how great this is. It is clear that we will have to reassess our plans if there is a weakening, but it is also clear that there will have to be a relatively great weakness in Denmark before we have to take serious measures.

[Question] In that case, what form would a revision of our plans take?

[Answer] I would believe that if the weakness becomes too great we will have to raise for consideration the strong priority which we give to northern Norway in all we do.

[Question] Would this then help particularly if the line of defense at Sjaelland cannot be held?

[Answer] There are many ways in which such a problem may be resolved.

THATCHER SEES USSR AS 'MAIN EXTERNAL THREAT'

LD032045 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1943 GMT 3 Mar 80 LD

[Text] Mrs Thatcher tonight described the Soviet Union as "the main external threat to our way of life".

During the Airey Neave memorial lecture she said: "The Soviet Union is a totalitarian power greater in military strength than was Nazi Germany at the height of the last war.

"We are seeing in Afghanistan the fulfilment of the warnings, which the far-sighted among us have been seeking to give for several years".

She continued: "The threat which the Soviet Union poses indirectly to the West's sources of energy in the Middle East is obvious. Indeed the continued uncertainty in the Middle East as a whole in the aftermath of the fall of the shah of Iran offers evident opportunities to the Soviet Union".

And she added: "I think that in this country the truth about the growth of Soviet power has been generally appreciated. Increasingly it is now being understood elsewhere, and in this respect the tragedy of Afghanistan has been salutary".

ATHLETES ORGANIZATION PREPARED TO DEFY OLYMPIC BOYCOTT

[By Ray Dye, PA sports staff]

[Text] Most of Britain's likely Olympic contenders are prepared to defy any government-directed boycott of the Moscow games. They are so keen to take part that the International Athletes Club [IAC] is ready to pay out about 50,000 pounds sterling to send a 50-strong team if the British Olympic Association [BOA] backs the government's call to stay away.

The BOA will tomorrow meet representatives of the 26 Olympic sports to decide whether to accept the Moscow invitation.

But a poll conducted by the IAC has already given a clear indication of how the athletes feel about a boycott.

Out of 108 Olympic possibles, 78 have already agreed to sign a strongly-worded letter reaffirming their intention to go to Moscow. None of the rest has indicated support for a boycott.

IAC Secretary Mr Derek Johnson said today that the club was writing to Lord Killanin, president of the International Olympic Committee. The IAC wanted formal permission to select and send an athletics team even if the government or the BOA enforced a stay-at-home protest over Russian intervention in Afghanistan.

Mrs Thatcher, who has pleaded with British athletes to stay away from the Moscow games, was also being told of the IAC moves.

I MAKHI DISCLOSES AMENDMENT TO WALDHEIM'S FORMULA

NC041045 Nicosia I MAKHI in Greek 4 Mar 80 pp 1, 8 NC

[Excerpt] Reports from various political and diplomatic sources confirm that UN Secretary General Waldheim has truly amended the formula which the Greek Cypriot side had accepted for the resumption of the inter-Cypriot talks. These reports also confirm that Waldheim, through his special representative in Cyprus, Mr Galindo-Pohl, is trying to convince our side to make new concessions and accept the amended formula in order to satisfy the Turkish side and make possible the resumption of the dialog by the end of March at the latest.

According to the same reports, Mr Waldheim, through his amendments, is asking the Greek side to accept a paraphrasing of the latest UN resolution, to recognize the issue of the Turkish Cypriots' security, and to make further concessions on the issue of the return of the refugees and the rights of property and free circulation.

Authoritative political circles have remarked that the new amendments to Waldheim's formula fully satisfy the Turkish demands and their acceptance would be very harmful to the Greek side. Therefore, it is very doubtful whether the Greek Cypriot side will accept them, they said, adding that acceptance of these amendments would in essence mean acceptance of the Turkish terms, that are:

A) The return of some but not all refugees to their homes;
B) The banning of free circulation of a number of Greek Cypriots in areas that will remain under Turkish Cypriot control.

AKEL LEADER WARNS AGAINST 'DOUBLE ENOSIS' SOLUTION

NC040955 Nicosia KHARAVYI in Greek 4 Mar 80 pp 1, 7 NC

[Excerpts from speech delivered by AKEL Secretary General Papaioannou to the Nicosia-Kyrenia District AKEL conference in Nicosia on 2 March]

[Excerpts] The UN secretary general's representative in Cyprus is currently sounding out the two communities on the draft text of an opening speech to be delivered by the UN secretary general or his assistant in the event of the resumption of the intercommunal talks. This text is, in essence, the formula on the basis of which the talks would be resumed.

However, we believe we must stress the need to find an appropriate formula that will open the way for the intercommunal talks. We do not see why there should be any insurmountable obstacles in this direction. There are the UN resolutions. There is the Kiprianou-Denktas agreement. There are sufficient elements for a basis and formula for the resumption of talks.

Certain Greek Cypriot circles who oppose the talks are, in essence, happy about the Turkish leadership's negative stand because they think this vindicates them. But what is the aim of the Greek Cypriot circles who oppose the intercommunal talks? Is it double enosis? Or is it, perhaps, military confrontation regardless of what happens?

Many times in the past we have warned that both in Cyprus and Greece there are political circles that are devising a double enosis solution. Today, it is our duty to warn once again that the satanical plans for double enosis, which in essence are imperialist plans, are being promoted in many and varied ways. We feel compelled to warn that the suffering Cypriot people, who were betrayed, slaughtered, thrown out of their homes and trampled upon, do not intend to allow other betrayals and adventures.

There never has been and still is no possibility of solving the Cyprus problem by military means. This is not because we are in principle against such means; nor is it because we are cowards and defeatists, but because the balance of power is tremendously against us.

The UN secretary general's new effort must not fail, at least as far as this depends on the Greek Cypriot side. We must not in any way give the UN secretary general the opportunity to write in his report to the United Nations that both sides are to blame. If the UN secretary general's new effort for the resumption of substantive, constructive talks fails, this failure must not in any way be the result of the stand of the Greek Cypriots.

DENKTAS STIPULATES CONDITIONS FOR SINGLE ECONOMIC SYSTEM

TA291842 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1530 GMT 29 Feb 80 TA

Denktas noted that if the two autonomous administrations in Cyprus, namely the Turkish Federated State in the north and the Greek Cypriot state in the south, agree to unite under a central administration, then the integration of the economy as well as the economic guarantees which should be given to the Turkish Cypriot community will also be discussed. Denktas said that if the Greek Cypriots wanted to follow such a course they must immediately pay the money they have owed to the Turkish Cypriot community since 1963 and lift the inhuman, unethical and illegal economic embargo which they have imposed on the Turkish Cypriot community.

He said: The Greek Cypriots will be disappointed it they think that by their threats and economic restrictions they will again deprive the Turkish Cypriot community of the freedom and security it had won as a result of the peace operation. Noting that with each passing day the Turkish Cypriot community was becoming more prosperous and happier, Denktas said that the panicky statements made by the Greek Cypriot leade ship are aimed at deceiving the public because they have seen the realities and are convinced that the Turkish Cypriot community will be successful in its economic struggle as well.

[Text] Nicosia--It has been reported that as of March, Bursa Airlines will organize flights between the Turkish Cypriot sector and certain European countries for the purpose of easing foreign communications between the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus and the outside world.

Authoritative officials have announced that in March flights will be arranged between Ercan and Ankara, Ercan and Adana as well as between Ercan and London and Ercan and Amsterdam, using Istanbul as a link.

ROMANIAN FOREIGN MINISTER BEGINS TALKS IN ATHENS

[Text] Greek-Romanian talks began in Athens today. Stefan Andrei, deputy prime minister and foreign minister of the Romanian Government, met Foreign Minister Yeoryios Rallis at 0900 today. They discussed bilateral issues within the framework of the excellent Greek-Romanian relations. They also examined issues related to the Balkans and to the international situation.

In particular, the issues of detente and international peace as well as the role of small countries within these limits were discussed. They also discussed the Cyprus issue and the question of intervention in the internal affairs of other countries.

At 1330 Rallis gave a luncheon in honor of the Romanian minister.

In the afternoon Andrei visited Coordination Minister Konstandinos Mitsotakis. The meeting, which was also attended by Romanian Ambassador to Athens Ion Brad and by secretary general of the Ministry of Coordination, Papas, covered economic issues of interest to the two countries in view of Mitsotakis' forthcoming visit to Romania on an invitation from the Romanian Government.

Tomorrow the Romanian dignitary will be received by President of the Republic Konstandinos Tsatsos and by Prime Minister Konstandinos Karamanlis.

RALLIS AFFIRMS RIGHT TO EXTEND TERRITORIAL WATERS

AT291619 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1600 GMT 29 Feb 80 AT

[Text] Like every state Greece has the right to extend its territorial waters to 12 miles. Whether and when it will do so is a matter of government decision and it is not possible to commit the government in advance on both counts, that is, on the whether and the when. This was stressed by Foreign Minister Rallis in the Chamber today in reply to PASOK deputies Peponis and Nikolau who, while expounding their interpellation in connection with the law of the sea, claimed that national expediency dictates the extension of Greek territorial waters to 12 miles.

Papandreou Criticism

[Text] Last night, PASOK Chairman A. Papandreou made the following statement after Foreign Minister Rallis' reply in the Chamber on the issue of extending Greek territorial waters to 12 miles:

"We are surprised by the foreign minister's statement that, in connection with the extension of our territorial waters from 6 to 12 miles, not only the question of 'when' but also of 'whether' arises.

"The 'when' in any case was the summer of 1974. It would have been a minimum reply to Turkey's brutal invasion of Cyprus. However, the government undertakes a great responsibility toward the nation and the people when, with the 'whether', it renounces Greece's inalienable rights."

Late last night, the government spokesman stated in reply to the leader of the official opposition: "The government responsibly handles foreign policy issues using the national interest as its yardstick. It is sad that the PASOK chairman does not understand this."

CHIEF OF GENERAL STAFF LEAVES FOR BRITAIN, NORWAY

[Text] The chief of the General Staff, Gen Kenan Evren, left for London today as the official guest of the chief of the British Defense Staff, Adm Terence Lewin. General Evren will visit various military units and installations in Britain. He will leave Britain for Norway on 9 March. General Evren, who will be going to Norway as the official guest of the chief of the Norwegian General Staff, Gen Sverre Hamre, will hold various meetings in Oslo and will observe an exercise to be carried out within the framework of NATO. General Evren will also visit various military units and installations in Norway. General Evren was seen off in Istanbul by the commander of the First Army, Gen Necdet Urug, and other commanders.

OPPOSITION PARTY FAVORS BOYCOTT OF MOSCOW OLYMPICS

[Text] Ankara 3 Mar (AA)--Opposition Turkish Workers and Peasants Party leadership issued a statement today denouncing the Soviet Union as the chief provocateur of "civil wars" and called on the government to announce that Turkey would boycott the Moscow Olympics. "An appropriate response must be given to the Soviet Union's threat to turn Turkey into a nuclear cemetery," the statement said.

COMMUNISTS ISSUE JOINT COMMUNIQUE WITH DKP

TA040810 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 4 Mar 80 TA

[Joint communique issued by the German Communist Party [DKP] and the Turkish Communist Party [TCP]--time and place not given]

[Text] Turkish Communist Party [TCP] Central Committee representatives have met with the Federal German Communist Party [DKP] Secretary of the Executive Karl Heinz Schroeder and party Administrative Council adviser (Jacob Goldberg) and have exchanged views. During the talks, which were conducted in a friendly atmosphere, the DKP reiterated its support for the lifting of the unlawful ban imposed on the TCP since 1922 and for the democratic rights of all Turkish citizens.

The two parties strongly protest the use of police and military units against workers and producers who are fighting for the people and against the martial law provoked and imposed by rightists forces in Turkey. Both parties protest the ban on POLITIKA, a democratic daily, and on other progressive publications, the arrest of unionists and the closing down of democratic mass organizations. The DKP stresses its close ties with Turkish toilers, who are waging a struggle under difficult conditions, and especially its solidarity with workers on strike. Both parties stress their wish to contribute to measures taken to secure joint interests in the FRG and the cooperation of Turkish workers in the FRG to this end. Both parties support the democratic request submitted to the Federal Government to stop the activities of the terrorist organization of the bozkurts [grey wolves, which is the Nationalist Action Party emblem] and to ban this organization.

The TCP and the DKP denounce NATO efforts to justify armament on the pretext of Soviet aid to Afghanistan, which is aimed at contributing to the social and democratic progress of the Afghan people and at thwarting interference in Afghanistan's domestic affairs. Both parties categorically stress that there is no practical alternative other than peaceful coexistence in the face of the international tension being increased by imperialist aggressive forces since the NATO summits in 1978 and 1979.

Therefore, political detente should be continued and strengthened with steps toward military detente. Such a policy calls for a change in NATO plans to manufacture new nuclear missiles and to deploy them in Western European countries. Turkish and Federal German Communists believe that the decision by capitalist countries to suspend the so-called development aid, which they were extending to Afghanistan, one of the poorest countries in the world, is incompatible with humanitarian principles. An amount exceeding the aid jointly extended by the United States and the FRG to Afghanistan in the past is now being extended to Pakistan, where a military dictatorship is in power and martial law is in force, where parties, unions, youth and womens' organizations cannot freely function and where the issue of human rights is a foreign concept.

The large amount of money extended to Turkey by the United States and the FRG is not being employed for the good of the Turkish toilers. This aid is being used to expand further the NATO military bases in Turkey and to arm further the country. This policy can only benefit the extreme right and the fascists. Both parties favor the establishment of normal and good relations between the FRG and Turkey. Both parties are striving to secure the friendship of the two peoples and the contribution of the two states to detente and disarmament. Accepting the proposals submitted by the Soviet Union and other socialist countries will be in the interests of the Turkish and Federal German peoples as well as all the peoples of the world.

MARTIAL LAW COMMANDER DEMANDS REOPENING OF SHOPS IN ADANA

[Communique 32 issued by the VI Corps and Adana, Kahramanmaras, Gaziantep, Adiyaman and Hatay martial law commands]

[Text] It has been observed that certain shops have been closed by their owners in Adana as a result of the influence and threats of persons who disrupt peace and provoke crimes. This is illegal and violates general security and public order. For that reason, the martial law security forces have been sent to the area of the closed shops and the necessary measures have been taken. Shopkeepers who fail to open their shops by 1500 today will be considered suspicious and their shops will be opened by the security forces and s earched before the muhtar and the neighbors according to Martial Law Act 1402, article 3, clause A.

The responsibility will lie with the shopowner if he fails to be present during the search. For that reason, the shopowners are to open their doors immediately without being taken in by provocations. Legal action will be taken against those who insist on not opening their shops. This is an announcement to all those concerned and to the public.

[Signed] Lt Gen Nevzat Bolugiray, VI Corps and martial law commander

DEVELOPMENT CONFERENCE OPENS IN VIENNA

AU041140 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 4 Mar 80 p 2 AU

[Text] Yesterday [3 March] a 2-day conference of the group of "like-minded countries," held at the invitation of the Austrian Government, was opened in Vienna. Participants are cabinet members concerned with development questions as well as high-ranking officials from the Scandinavian countries, the Benelux countries, Ireland and Canada. Austria is represented by State Secretary Adolf Nussbaumer.

The conference agenda provides for discussions of the new international development strategy, the proposed North-South global negotiations, the unproclaimed decade for developing transportation and communication systems in Africa, a review of the third UNIDO general conference in New Delhi, the question of a joint development fund, a new definition of the term "poor states," and aid measures in political emergencies.

PANDOLFI SOUNDS OUT IMF STABILIZATION IDEA

[Text] Rome, March 3 (ANSA)--Italian Treasury Minister Filippo Maria Pandolfi got a good reaction in Latin America last week to the prospect of introducing a "substitution account" stabilizer into the international monetary system. Pandolfi returned home Sunday from a trip to four Latin American countries, Spain and the United States in his capacity as chairman of the International Monetary Fund's interim committee.

"I am satisfied with the outcome of the mission", Pandolfi told reporters upon his arrival in Rome, adding that he was especially pleased with the choice of Latin American countries singled out for the probe. The four states, Mexico, Venezuela, Brazil and Argentina, according to the Italian minister, represent "typical situations".

The introduction of the substitution account as a first step toward reforming the international monetary system and as a means of gradually making the system itself more stable was greeted with keen interest, he said.

The aim of the move, he explained, would be to give special drawing rights a more central role in the system, "a tough job but one that would open up new prospects for creating a system that was governed by the responsible solidarity of the IMF and no longer left unto itself".

Pandolfi conceded, however, that he did meet with some concern about technicalities of substitution account operations.

His next (?probes) will be with representatives of Arab countries and treasury ministers from European Economic Community (EEC) countries. "I believe that it will be possible this way to be well prepared for the Fund's April 25 meeting in Hamburg," he concluded.

GOVERNMENT WILLING TO COOPERATE WITH RHODESIA

LD041318 Hamburg DPA in German 1155 GMT 4 Mar 80 LD

[Text] Bonn--The Federal Government is prepared for partnerlike cooperation with an independent Zimbabwe Rhodesia and to contribute to the development of the new state, a foreign office spokesman said in Bonn today. It is now a case of the people's elected representatives acting in a spirit of national reconciliation. The spokesman said that the Federal Government is convinced that the elections in Rhodesia were free and fair. It also sees this assessment as being confirmed by the statement published on 1 March by the Bundestag all-party delegation sent to observe the Rhodesian elections.

CARTER CRITICIZED ON UN RESOLUTION MIXUP

'Inexplicable' Error

DW050851 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 5 Mar 80 p 3 DW

[Article signed -Zer: "Confusion"]

[Text] To err is human; we all know it. But the "error" of the U.S. Government under President Carter in connection with the UN resolution on Jewish settlements in the occupied Arab areas is hard to understand. This Security Council decision did not involve a problem that has suddenly appeared on the delegates' desk. It was much rather a political document over which one has been fighting for months.

President Carter was and is--that is also known--in a difficult situation with regard to this matter. On the one hand, he knows that without a solution of the Palestinian problem the Mideast conflict cannot be solved. On the other hand, however, his irritation over the inflexibility of the Begin government in Israel has constantly grown in the past months. And eventually Carter also knows on what a narrow edge he is wandering since he talked Egypt and Israel into making peace. In the background is always the danger that he might lose the significant bloc of votes of the Jewish Americans if he acted too harshly against Israel.

It is inexplicable, however, how it was possible that the delegate of a world power allegedly erroneously agreed with a resolution while he actually should have abstained.

Press Review

DW050825 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German 0605 GMT 5 Mar 80 DW

[Press review on the changed U.S. approach to the UN resolution on Israel]

[Text] ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG of Mainz writes: Jimmy Carter's statement about the alleged misunderstanding between the U.S. Department of State and the American UN Ambassador McHenry is too meager to eliminate Israel's irritation over Washington's cooperation in the UN Security Council's resolution on the problem of the Israeli settlement policy in the West Jordan country and the Gaza strip as well as the status of East Jerusalem. Both possible interpretations are equally embarrassing for the White House. If there really has been an information breakdown, it will make the United States' partners ponder how carelessly and superficially the State Department deals with matters of great importance. But if Carter has used a white lie, how seriously Carter's words and deeds ought sometimes to be taken will be pondered in other capitals.

STUTTGARTER NACHRICHTEN notes: It is remarkable with what carelessness politics are sometimes pursued in Washington. Predictability--one of the most important foreign political principles--is hardly involved if U.S. President Carter now states that the United States "erroneously" agreed to the anti-Israeli UN resolution. What the White House has performed on the world-political scene makes one shake one's head. All the twisted explanations Carter is trying to make now with regard to allegedly clogged communication channels in the State Department do not help any more.

RUHR-NACHRICHTEN of Dortmund maintains: The whole thing is so bad because it is not an individual case and because it revives doubts in the predictability of American policy. But with an unpredictable and confused leading power, long-term strategies for mastering the present critical situation are hard to develop.

CDU CHAIRMAN KOHL WELCOMES SCHMIDT-CARTER MEETING

LD042115 Hamburg DPA in German 2051 GMT 4 Mar 80 LD

[Text] Osnabrueck--CDU Chairman Helmut Kohl has expressly welcomed tomorrow's meeting between Federal Chancellor Schmidt and President Carter. Kohl, commenting on the exchange of views on the Afghanistan crisis, said that the CDU expects that during the visit it will be made unmistakeably clear on whose side the Federal Republic stands, and that friendship with the United States will not be threatened by a going it alone. The Soviet leadership must learn again and again that all attempts to drive a wedge into the Western alliance and to separate the Federal Republic from the United States are futile. The interview was prereleased to DPA in an edited version.

GOVERNMENT SPOKESMAN BOELLING VIEWS SCHMIDT U.S. VISIT

DW050814 West Berlin Sender Freies Berlin in German 0713 GMT 4 Mar 80 DW

[Text] [Question] A press review has said that the chancellor is embarking on a ticklish mission. Do you share this view?

[Answer] No, I do not. I do not share this view because I am government spokesman and, therefore, try to delete the word ticklish from my vocabulary, if possible. Highly important problems concerning the entire Western community of states are involved. But I am confident, no, let me say I am certain, that during this White House meeting between the U.S. President and the German chancellor, the common Western concept, which is to be an answer to the challenge by the Soviet Union and which has been developed quite a bit during the past few weeks, can be made even more dense, solid, and concrete. These are not just favorable prospects. I visualize them as a certainty.

[Question] The U.S. President was quite firm when he said that unless the Soviets withdraw from Afghanistan by 20 February we, that is the Americans, will not participate in the Olympic games in Moscow. The chancellor does not share this stand. He maintained that Moscow ought to be given a chance to create the prerequisites for the participation of all states. Reportedly, the chancellor plans to make it clear beyond any doubt that Bonn will join a Western Olympic boycott if Moscow fails to make a move in the question concerning the troop pullout from Afghanistan. I think this is an entirely divergent approach, so I cannot but ask this: Would it not have been appropriate to react just as Carter has reacted, namely, owing to the invasion of Afghanistan by the Soviets and not on the basis of a potential pullout?

[Answer] I do not think so. I am quite sure that President Carter and the whole U.S. Government understand the attitude of the Federal Government and that of other European allies. Why? Because the Americans may rest absolutely assured that unless the preconditions for the holding of the Olympic games in Moscow are created, unless the preconditions for the participation by all are created, unless the Soviet Union rectifies this invasion by leaving Afghanistan, there will be no participation. Repeated talks have been held on this issue with our American allies. I believe that I can predict this. This is not a controversial issue, for over the past several weeks, as Foreign Minister Genscher said yesterday, we have been shoulder to shoulder with the Americans, in the closest of contacts with them regarding to the Olympic games but also, which is even more important, regarding a Western counterconcept.

Our allies in Washington know very well that if the Soviet Union believes it can ignore the world opinion, our place is by the side of the United States. But there is still time for the leadership in Moscow to give some self-critical thought to the most negative effect this has for the balance in the world and to draw the consequences. We have no illusions in Bonn. We see very clearly that so far there has been no clear and positive signal from the Soviet side. Therefore, in his government last week the federal chancellor said that we do not want to prompt any wishful thinking with regard to the Olympic games. That will not be a controversial issue in Washington.

[Question] Is there any leeway in matters of the Olympic boycott? This is a followup question.

[Answer] What do you mean by leeway? I told you that if the Soviet Union is not prepared to correct the invasion of a nonalined country, the international scene will become even more sinister than it is already. The Soviet Union knows very well that it cannot drive a wedge between us and the United States. Yesterday and the day before you have seen with what excited Moscow polemics we have been covered--the federal chancellor in person and the entire Federal Government. You will realize that this is a confirmation of the actual fact that in this critical and unquiet time we cannot be separated from our allies.

[Question] I want to make it more clear....

[Answer] Yes!

[Question] President Carter has set an ultimatum for 20 February. That ultimatum has been ignored by the Soviets. They did not do what has been requested. What will be last deadline for the Soviet Union to indicate a recognizable will to withdraw from Afghanistan?

[Answer] You know that according to the rules of the International Olympic Committee, the national Olympic committees have until the end of this month to report for the games. I am absolutely certain that the European approach and the American approach will be in accord by that time at the latest. On principle, anyway no differences exist between us and the Americans in this matter.

PAPERS ASSESS SCHMIDT WASHINGTON VISIT

DW050823 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0605 GMT 5 Mar 80 DW

[Press review on Chancellor Schmidt's visit to the United States]

[Text] The Freiburg BADISCHE ZEITUNG writes: Probably it is appropriate to characterize Helmut Schmidt's visit with President Carter as the most difficult mission of a German chancellor in a long time.

But we should add that it has rarely been more urgent to bring about such a clarification. For since the beginning of the Afghan crisis there have been ample misunderstandings between Washington and Bonn, and it is high time to put an end to this dubious phase which was not only caused by the somewhat abrupt change in course by the United States. Notwithstanding all protestations to the contrary from Bonn, there was in reality also a different assessment of the conclusions to be drawn from the Soviet invasion.

The HESSISCHE NIEDERSAECHSISCHE ALLGEMEINE of Kassel states: What makes the meeting difficult is that Carter and Schmidt, who do not harmonize anyway, have entirely different experiences and expectations. The president has soared to new popularity on a wave of American outrage. He must include the popular ire in his reckoning lest he lose his good chances of being reelected. This is why he threatens the Soviets with having to pay a high price for Afghanistan. Quite to the contrary, the chancellor rather sees his election chances jeopardized by fear of crisis. This is why he seeks to preserve contacts with Moscow and to save of detente what can be saved. Notwithstanding the common goal of persuading the Soviets to withdraw from Afghanistan, the two statesmen probably will hardly succeed in completely reducing their strategies to a common denominator.

BRAUNSCHWEIGER ZEITUNG notes: The most important task of the summit talks is to patch up a rift between the United States and the European allies which seems to be imminent, for nobody would be facing greater risks as a result of such a rift that we would. And besides, a worsening in German-American relations would be a dubious recommendation for an incumbent chancellor in an election year.

GENSCHER ON AFGHANISTAN NEUTRALIZATION, OTHER ISSUES

DW031506 Baden Baden Suedwestfunk Network in German 1145 GMT 2 Mar 80 DW

[Excerpts from interview by unidentified reporter with Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, place not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] Mr Genscher, on the occasion of their Rome meeting the foreign ministers of the European Community suggested neutralizing Afghanistan and safeguarding its nonalined position with international guarantees. Have you heard sufficient Eastern reactions to that suggestion by the West?

[Answer] No, there are no sufficient reactions yet. One could not consider the Moscow speech of Soviet General Secretary Brezhnev a sufficient reaction. After all, he circumscribed the prerequisites the Soviet Union deems necessary for a withdrawal. It is now a matter of action the Soviet Union must take to follow up its words. Most of all it needs to explain exactly whether this speech was a reaction to the suggestion of the European Community. If so, it must exactly define the prerequisites for a withdrawal of Soviet troops.

I believe that we are in a very critical international situation. It is not only important to give merely public signals, but also to make an attempt in direct political contacts between the involved states to find out how the other side can be prompted to withdraw its troops within the framework of a political solution. Contacts between the two big powers are equally as important as contacts between the European states and the Soviet Union.

[Question] Is there not a difference between the European and the American suggestions in so far as the Americans make the withdrawal of troops a basic prerequisite for negotiations, while the Europeans are prepared to first talk with the Russians?

[Answer] Well, naturally the Americans are also talking with the Soviet Union, and no such irrevocable condition exists on the American side.

The U.S. secretary of state said immediately during the course of his Bonn visit that the U.S. Government supports our European suggestions. The President also expressed it in a letter to the Yugoslav leadership.

[Question] Mr Genscher, one is under the impression at present that the Americans are about to undergo a fundamental change with regard to taking over world responsibility again, a responsibility they refused to take for a long time following the Vietnam defeat. Do you think this is a lasting development, or do you think it is only a temporary development that possibly has something to do with the election campaign in the United States?

[Answer] It would be a fatal mistake by the Europeans to assume that present developments in America are some sort of an election campaign. A fundamental change is actually taking place in the United States. The Europeans have the chance to consider the Americans' fundamental change as a change in the Western world and to act accordingly.

The Soviet intervention in Afghanistan is a challenge involving Europe as much as the United States. Every challenge contains a danger, but also an opportunity. A danger if the challenged have no possibility of reacting properly. An opportunity if one recognizes the hour and--I am saying this now for the West as a whole--if one is prepared to cooperate not just with a view to the immediate future but also with a view to a long-range strategy of peace and safeguarding stability in the world and the stability of the balance.

Therefore I believe it would be most dangerous for the Europeans at that moment to philosophize about so-called special European interests or about the special situation in Europe. It is not a matter of taking up a special European position, but it is a matter of coordinating the long-term concept of European and American contributions because of our common interests and our common challenge.

In other words, we are at a crossroads of Western politics. I will use all my influence to make sure that the Europeans are aware of the significance of this hour and of the decision they must make, namely, to make together with the United States their contribution to a long-term, worldwide peace policy. That should be done to safeguard not merely our own security but also that of the states of the Third World which want to live independently, in a nonalined situation, and to give them the certainty that the aims of independence and of a nonalined situation can be achieved together with the economic development of these states.

[Question] Mr Genscher, is it not necessary that the fundamental change you have cited which is taking place in America be supported much more intensively from Europe? Is it not necessary to join the Americans' Olympic boycott right away for example?

[Answer] I would not use the word boycott on the Western side. The games are being boycotted by the Soviet Union, because due to the Afghanistan intervention it has made it impossible to have games of peace in Moscow. There are no doubts that only the Soviet Union can save the Olympic games. At the moment the prerequisites for German participation do not exist. This demonstrates that we see the position exactly as the United States, not merely out of solidarity with the United States, but due to our own decision and our own insight.

[Question] Peace policy means also support of certain countries that maintain at least a neutral if not friendly attitude toward the West, such as states bordering Afghanistan, for example.

Do you consider it correct to help Pakistan with a lot of assistance although it is ruled by a military dictatorship which certainly is not a state structure in line with democratic Western ideas?

[Answer] First of all, I would like to say that our stand vis-a-vis all states of the Third World is characterized by the fact that we do not merely respect the independence and sovereignty of these states, but we must help them to preserve their independence and sovereignty.

We do not want to have zones of influence. We do not want to bring states of the Third World under our influence. We want them to be truly nonalined. As it turns out, there is more and more support from within the nonalined movement for the strategy of independence and sovereignty.

That is simple to explain. There was a phase when the Soviet Union recommended itself as the natural ally of the nonalined states. Now these states realize that in reality the Soviet Union wants the nonalined states not merely to consider themselves as the natural allies of the Soviet Union; it also wants to bring its certain influence to bear on the nonalined states, and that is being rejected more and more due to their strong will for independence and sovereignty.

The reaction to the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan in the United Nations and also at the Islamic conference make that very clear. Through our help for the states of the Third World we will not interfere in the internal affairs of the states of the Third World. But we will have to see to it very much that a development of sound social and economic structures in all Third World states will create the prerequisite for internal stability. It would be a fatal mistake in this connection if the Europeans believed that they could force their ideas of political and social orders upon others.

[Question] On the other hand, however, one ought to bear in mind not to necessarily support bloody dictatorships so as not to be exposed to moral reproaches?

[Answer] I answer your question in the affirmative without, however, having a particular state in mind.

LAMESDORFF ON TRADE WITH USSR, HERMES INSURANCE

DW271113 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 2000 GMT 25 Feb 80 DW

[Reporter Philipp interview with Federal Minister of Economics Otto Graf Lambsdorff; place not given--recorded]

[Text] [Lambsdorff] The Hermes insurance is supposed to take over the political risk for enterprises, not the economic risk, of supplies to countries where one must expect such risks. These are developing countries and East bloc countries including the Soviet Union. The federal finance minister makes money with the Hermes insurances. The widespread idea that these are public subsidies is wrong. He gets the insurance premiums paid by the supplying firms.

[Question] You say political risk, but is it after all not also an economic risk when the firms do not get their money back because of political reasons. Why do the firms, the enterprises, not take over the risk for a time?

[Answer] Well, simply because they cannot do it. You know that one cannot sue in developing countries and have the court's decisions executed. But you can do that very well in the United States and Great Britain. The firms can conclude private contracts there, they have legal systems there that are similar to ours.

[Question] The Soviet Union is involved here.

[Answer] A legal system does not exist there similar to ours. No contracts according to the civil code exist there. Your negotiating partner is always the state. There are no private foreign trade firms in the Soviet Union. There is always only the state-owned foreign trade organization. Every private enterprise in the Federal Republic would be in the weaker position if there were some problems. Sufficient experience exists in this respect. This is why one concludes a Hermes insurance.

[Question] Its discontinuation stands on the list of American requests. Are you prepared to fulfill that wish?

[Answer] No, full discontinuation is not on the list of American requests. They had the idea originally. We have made it clear to them that in our system it would lead to the fact that from one day to the next trade with the Soviet Union would be brought from 100 to zero. The U.S. secretary of state told me expressly in Washington that this is not the aim of the United States.

[Question] What is the aim?

[Answer] The aim of the United States first of all is limitation of the supply of highly sensitive goods. That is the so-called COCOM [NATO coordinating committee] agreement.

[Question] Are we prepared for that?

[Answer] We are prepared for that. I have explicitly declared this. The Americans are working on suggestions which will be submitted to us and the other COCOM partners. I have explicitly stated that we--as in the past--naturally will adhere to the COCOM agreement. The Americans further desire that we not enter into contracts which have been dropped by the Americans at the request of their government. Naturally I agreed to that also.

[Question] Is the criticism from the CSU or the Bonn opposition a bit premature, saying that action is demanded and not merely words?

[Answer] That criticism is not only premature, it is characterized by a high degree of ignorance with regard to the facts. When I read that Hermes insurance coverage for the Soviet Union is being compared with the discontinuation of Hermes insurance for Turkey, I must state that Graf Huyn, who said this, unfortunately has no idea about it. Naturally we discontinued Hermes insurance for Turkey because Turkey was simply bankrupt and unable to pay. Naturally one cannot give guarantees in such a case. But that cannot be compared at all with the Soviet Union. The opposition ought to view the facts before stating criticism.

Further Details

DW271125 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 1620 GMT 26 Feb 80 DW

[Excerpts from reporter Milhan interview with Federal Minister of Economics Dr Otto Graf Lambsdorff; place not given--recorded]

[Excerpt] [Question] Did the United States directly request that the Federal Government change something about guarantees for export credits?

[Answer] The United States has repeatedly brought up the problem of whether export guarantees ought to be discontinued or banned. That would hit the Federal Republic.

We can examine general supply conditions of OECD countries as well as the level and duration of their interest rates and whether a curtailment of Hermes guarantees will be possible in this context, so that only supply guarantees will be given. That must be thought through and discussed.

[Question] Must that decision be made in the immediate future?

[Answer] I do not have that impression. In contrast to the fears of German economic circles, for example, and to the permanent demands voiced in great excitement but total ignorance by the opposition, there are so far no concrete ideas on the American side with regard to individual fields. No American ideas exist so far on the supply of highly technical goods, no ideas we could follow. So it is plain nonsense to criticize us by saying that we do not follow suggestions. They do not exist so far. There are no concrete or detailed suggestions made by the export insurance firm either.

[Question] Some opposition voices say that individual economic circles must make sacrifices for foreign policy reasons. Do you see the necessity that the economy ought to be urged and be prepared to make such sacrifices?

[Answer] We will certainly consider the interests of the economy, the trade unions and whoever else might be involved. But we will not apply the method where athletes say go ahead and curtail your trade, while the trade representatives say go ahead and curtail the Olympic games. It will not work according to the method: Wash my fur but leave it dry. The issue cannot be solved that way. These are, after all, political decisions that will be made by the government and nobody else.

APEL INTERVIEWED ON ATLANTIC DEFENSE ISSUES

DW040934 West Berlin RIAS Network in German 1200 GMT 2 Mar 80 DW

[Correspondent Herde interview with Federal Defense Minister Hans Apel; place of interview not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] The chancellor in his government statement to the Bundestag last week said that what primarily matters with regard to defense capability and defense readiness are the men, the soldiers, and that money only comes second. Let me ask you, as the pertinent minister, this: May we interpret this to mean that the Federal Government regards additional financial burdens as being of secondary importance, as it wer were? And may it also be interpreted as meaning that the United States is being urgently called upon to introduce conscription again?

[Answer] Let us begin with our own national experiences since we have general conscription, and since many young men subsequently are summoned for defense exercises in our country. We are in a position to increase the peacetime strength of the Bundeswehr, which currently is 495,000 men, to 1.2 million men on short notice in a defense case. This makes it clear what incredible potential for defense exists here in Central Europe as a result of conscription. Naturally this also requires funds, for the reserve units must be equipped with arms and equipment if they are to be effective. Some NATO member countries, including the United States in particular but also Great Britain, have abolished conscription and thus have incurred increased reserves problems, because those who once were conscripts are growing older and becoming exempt from registration, which makes the establishment of reserves a key problem. To this extent the chancellor's hint was meant to be general, though it was an important one. In particular it draws attention to the fact that conscription is an inalienable element of home defense. But I would like to add another element, namely the fact that our Bundeswehr is fresh--that our Bundeswehr thinks like the people think and that our Bundeswehr does not isolate itself becoming a state within a state--is also connected with conscription. Each year a fresh breeze comes into the army with 260,000 young men. This, too, is an important element.

[Question] Do you, as the defense minister, also see the order of importance which the chancellor has set?

[Answer] Well, what primarily matters to us in Germany is the money. This is quite obvious, for we must balance DM300 million for the increased fuel costs in the Bundeswehr since otherwise we would have to discontinue our exercise activities sometime in the late fall of this year. This is inconceivable, and therefore there will be a supplementary budget on this issue and some other issues. In other countries there is indeed the additional question of where do you get the soldiers?

[Question] A propos a supplementary budget, the Federal Defense Council this week decided definitely on a 3-percent increase in real terms in the defense budget for 1980. On the other hand, the Federal Government has always emphasized that it has lived up to its NATO commitments in the past. Why then this decision?

[Answer] There are at least two inevitable positions which must be covered with funds. I discussed one of these positions already on the occasion of the adoption of the federal budget last year. This is the coverage of the increased fuel costs. This keeps growing more expensive. In the meantime, we have reached at least DM300 million in additional expenses which we require. What has been added in the meantime as a new element is really urgent and not too modest aid to Turkey. This, too, must be financed via a supplementary budget. This already accounts for two very central elements of the supplementary budget for the strengthening of the West's defense capability, especially that of the Federal Republic. Other elements may, and I think will, be added. But I do not want to anticipate Cabinet discussions and talks with our allies. If we are supposed to do something about ammunition stockpiling, for example, then others must do that jointly with us. They must not rely on well-stocked German depots, believing that they need not make any financial sacrifices.

[Question] This discussion has really reached a peak after the invasion of Afghanistan by Soviet troops. Hence my question: What is necessary for NATO that can be obtained with money in connection with the crisis situation that ensued from this invasion?

[Answer] As I said, what we need on short notice is this DM300 million for fuel. This is not a topic, however, which is tied to the Afghan issue. It certainly would not be bad if we could do something about the ammunition stockpiling. What is new, to be sure, is the need to do more for Turkey on the southern flank of NATO. But it is necessary to add that it is out of the question for the solution of this urgent problem to ultimately turn into a German affair. Alliance solidarity is indicated here as well; the United States, Great Britain, all the others must do as we do. The fact that we have taken charge of the whole thing does not mean that we are the only ones who can sign the promissory note.

[Question] You have mentioned in passing that some irritations occurred in the Western alliance in the past several weeks, with accusations being made back and forth across the Atlantic. On one side the charge of inadequate information and consultation was leveled at the United States whereas, on the other side, the Europeans, and last but not least the Federal Republic, were accused of a lack of, or a hesitant solidarity. The chancellor and yourself have repeatedly drawn attention to the vulnerable position of the Federal Republic by which it differs from the situation of other countries for various reasons. What I am getting at is the division of labor in the alliance. Let me ask you: If this term did not exist, would it not have to be invented as a matter of urgency because the differences in interests that have indeed arisen in the present crisis as well as the different objectives of this or that side of the alliance can be covered up or bridged with it?

[Answer] NATO's division of labor is nothing new. In NATO we have at least two categories of member countries having different missions, namely the non-nuclear states and the states having nuclear weapons, the United States and Great Britain as well. There are also other divisions of labor in the alliance. Just remember that we have assumed a central mission for securing the Baltic Sea exits, that we are putting up 50 percent of the ground forces in Central Europe, while other NATO partners, for example Great Britain, have taken over missions which also apply to areas outside Central Europe. What matters in the alliance is not to submit in a servile way to the will of the alliance. On the contrary, it is reasonable and imperative to bring the national interest into the debate so as to arrive at results in solidarity through a debate in solidarity. This must perhaps be more strongly developed in the future.

In this respect it is not military cooperation alone that is at stake. That cooperation is very good in NATO. In that respect we have been practicing a division of labor. This is where all new incoming proposals have to go. You just cannot handle this quickly between Germany and the United States alone because there are no differences in membership rights in NATO; all members have the same rights and the same duties. But it seems important to me that we comprehend, beyond that, that the issues of energy supply, raw material supply, the relations with the Third World, for example, are central issues which require the solidarity and the division of labor of the West. But this again does not belong in NATO at all. This would all fall much too short since Japan, Australia, New Zealand as well as a number of already advanced developing countries or developing countries with a good financial situation, above all oil-exporting countries, have to undertake their commitments in that respect.

So you see, the term division of labor is not new, it may at best become a new term only to the extent that an alliance partner or two say that we need to get involved outside the NATO area and therefore you in Europe must take over additional tasks on our behalf. This debate can be and must be waged but, if you please, not the way it is proceeding at the moment. It must be shifted into the NATO institutions. In this context one thing must be absolutely clear: The close interlocking of all allied troops on German territory must be fully preserved, for in it also rests a bit of deterrence against any lust for aggression from Eastern Europe.

[Question] Where is the actual problem in the question concerning alliance solidarity or lack of solidarity? After all, it cannot be the fact that differences in interests exist. These are only natural between all countries. Misunderstandings and disturbances in contracts may happen any day, too. Now as far as the United States and Europe are concerned, is it not that the longer the period is that separates us from the past war, and despite all the great sacrifices made by the people of the United States in the past wars, a threat to the existence of their own country, to their own people has never prevailed in the United States, while there is a far greater awareness of the terrible destructiveness war may entail in Europe, an awareness that nearly borders on a trauma? And does this not exert influence on politics? What I mean is this: Is the United States not much more often prepared to take risks than we, who still very clearly remember at least from the past war what this may entail?

[Answer] I would like to divide my answer up into two parts. What is being heard of discord on this side and beyond the Atlantic mostly transpires in published opinion. This does not mean that I want to put all the blame on the journalists; they rather reflect in part what is being said behind closed doors. There is no such discord between those who are politically responsible, between the governments, between the ministers, for instance between Harold Brown, the U.S. secretary of defense, and myself. What exists between them is a very exact knowledge about mutual wishes. Granted, differences of opinion do occur now and then which mostly can be reduced to terms of money, yet there is the receptiveness to compromise.

Let me now turn to the difference in interest: I do not have the impression at all that the United States runs risks more readily, as it were. Thank God Vietnam and its psychological consequences have been overcome in the American people. The United States is finding its way back to its role as a world power. Yet Vietnam also made it clear to many Americans how sad it is to die and how unsuited war is for settling problems. Hence, this is not where the difference lies, nor is it to be found in Europe's experiences from two world wars. The difference is that the former is a world power with an undivided worldwide responsibility and that the others have learned from two world wars that they are not a world power and that they bear a central responsibility especially for the area of Europe.

For us as a nation, another thing must be added: After all, we have a chance of being united again only if peace is preserved in the world at large and particularly in Europe. This alone accounts for different approaches which, however, ultimately converge again. There is one thing that cannot be overlooked: The crown to ostpolitik of the past decade, the keystone, is the Quadrapartite Agreement on Berlin. It bears the signature of both the United States and the Soviet Union. Though I do not want to value signatures differently, I must say that the United States' signature constitutes the security guarantee for Berlin and thus the security guarantee for our country. This goes to show that ultimately the interests of the superpower United States and the interests of the Federal Republic of Germany are bound to converge.

[Question] The Federal Government has outlined two things, as far as they have been disputed at all. As before no arms will be supplied to tension areas, that is, not to Pakistan either. NATO's sphere of authority will not be extended either as a consequence of the double crisis in Southwest Asia. In the meantime, President Carter announced a doctrine bearing his name that indicates that in an emergency the United States would defend vital interests with military power in the Persian Gulf region if these interests were threatened by a third party.

The Federal Republic has no opportunity to join this doctrine, although its vital interests could also be threatened in such a case. The United States is setting up an emergency unit. Talks are taking place with the countries involved about the availability of bases. Far-reaching military assistance is being given or will be given to Pakistan, a regime that certainly cannot be called Western democratic.

In short, a military reflex is visible with regard to the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan, a reflex that stands out. Maybe it is paradoxical to ask a defense minister the following: Are you not concerned by this development with regard to shortcomings in the past, mistakes that have been made in the past, and maybe also with a view to the future with regard to what George Kennan once called the militarization of political thinking?

[Answer] If we want to master and stand up to the present Afghanistan challenge, we must draw lessons from the past. For me that means specifically that only in a limited way can we transfer our Western ideas of democracy and social systems to countries of the Third World, making this some sort of standard with regard to whether or not we can give these countries development aid or not. A second thing must also be added: We must know exactly how we will help and for what purpose. In other words, the money must be given in such a way that the populace will be helped, that it will gain a perspective so that it will not be susceptible to communist ideas and promises that will not be kept later on.

Military policy must be a policy with a certain continuity. In other words, one cannot say stop and go, or we will help and we will not help. We must show more continuity.

We will live up to the problem of that region, to the problems of the Third and the Fourth worlds only when we make continuity the basis of our policy. These countries will refuse to be put under some sort of Western protectorate. They want to develop in a nonalined way, in a way they themselves will choose. Everything else would be foolish. The massive protest against the Soviet Union demonstrates that the countries want to embark on their own course.

On the other hand, however, it would be illusory to believe that everything will be accompanied by giving development aid, social support, by showing preparedness to open our markets to the products of these countries. That will certainly not suffice.

It must be possible, or it must become possible to help these countries militarily when they want. Against their will it will be impossible anyway. It will indeed be a task for our superpower, the United States. It is the only one that has the abilities and possibilities to do this. But then it needs to be accepted as much as one accepts other actions of assistance.

To this extent there is a clear division of labor in that region as well as in the world as such. We will do what we can, namely, give economic assistance, assistance through the European Community to set up a social system, diplomatic assistance and political aid. Others will render their assistance in another area. But it must be stressed again that, for example, the oil coming from this region is not the oil supply for NATO but naturally the oil for Japan, Australia, New Zealand and the developing countries. The indivisible responsibility of an indivisible strategy here, a strategy that must be developed, becomes obvious.

[Question] Maybe the question I was asking ought to be formulated a bit more sharply and personally, if that is permissible. What ideas has Federal Defense Minister Hans Apel, also the Social Democrat Hans Apel, when he sees photographs of American security adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski at the Khyber pass with a submachine gun?

[Answer] I am very much against public debates on matters of style. It is important to demonstrate to the countries of that region in a credible way that we do not want to subordinate them to our political will, that we will not pursue our egotistical aims at their expense, that we want them to be nonalined, that we want to support their nonalinement, particularly with economic aid but if requested also with military help, but with one definite restriction: no German soldiers outside the NATO area, no German arms supplies to tension areas--neither to Pakistan nor India nor to any other area. We will stick to our policy.

[Question] The Soviet Union must end its military intervention in Afghanistan. That is the basic prerequisite for the solution of the crisis. In this respect, at any rate, the members of the Western alliance agree. There are signs indicating that with the passage of time, the Soviet Union wants to find a solution which will offer an opportunity to save face, that is, no military defeat and no establishment of an anti-Soviet regime in Kabul. On the other hand, it wants to cut down as much as possible on the political and financial burdens that are increasingly becoming involved through this adventure. That is becoming more and more obvious. Do you assess it in a similar way?

[Answer] It is very hard to say what real intentions are behind the words of those who are politically responsible in Moscow. What we need is action. A talk would certainly make sense on the conditions for reducing and eventually removing the Soviet troops from Afghanistan.

One thing must be absolutely clear, however: The Soviet Union was not asked to invade Afghanistan. Nobody called, although this is being said by the propaganda. The Soviet Union has attacked a nonalined country. Therefore the Soviet Union will have to look for ways and means to get out of that bad engagement. We should be helpful in this respect, if possible. However, the initiative must come from those who have created the problem and not from those who have been surprised by that attack and who must now draw the political and military consequences.

[Question] You say help. Can that be interpreted in such a way that as much as possible ought to be done by the Western side? And I want to include China, although it is naturally not a Western country, and although China's relations with the Soviet Union are characterized by completely different premises than those of the Western countries. This thinking or change of thinking that would possible set in--or if I may rephrase the question--is there a limit of pressure one can exert on the Soviet Union where the danger could really exist that the Soviet Union could act irrationally even if that would be against its own interests.

[Answer] Problems of the region must be solved particularly by the bordering countries of the region. Naturally it is obvious that we could render assistance. In other words, the idea seems rather adventurous that one would want to solve problems over the heads of the bordering countries or over the heads of the Afghan people. These countries must be the initiators of a solution, if I may put it that way, and they must be prepared to support it. Otherwise the whole affair would be hopeless. But this is natrually an issue that ought to be the subject of talks that are not public. The European countries, the foreign ministers of the European Community, made a suggestion in Rome that is considered interesting by the United States and that is approved by it. It is now up to Moscow to continue arguing and to show interest. Initial reactions have taken place so far. I cannot and I do not want to assess them because I am not one of those who engage in Kremlin astrology. That would not get us anywhere politically.

[Question] Does the federal defense minister have any objections to the participation of German politicans in the establishment of contacts to and fro?

[Answer] Certainly no objection. But one must be aware of proportions. The situation is such that there is a formal agreement between the United States and the Soviet Union to have consultations whenever the situation becomes serious, to put it casually. In other words, there are enough opportunities, formal and factual opportunities, to have a dialog which I would consider called for.

Naturally we could give advice. But we are not mediators. We are not made of jelly, we stand firmly in the Western camp. No doubts at all exist with regard to the Federal Republic's belonging to the European Community and to NATO. Our political leeway--foreign policy, domestic policy and social policy--is characterized by this stance. We introduce our national interests in the alliance as well as in the European Community. They result from the situation of a divided country and the special situation of the city of Berlin. But the role of mediator for something that is undecided, for someone going back and forth between two shores? For God's sake no. Thank God no one in this republic thinks along such unreal lines. We know where we belong, and we know where our political present and future are being secured.

[Question] The Soviet Union has not indicated so far that it is prepared following the NATO decision about the so-called closing of the arms gap in the medium-range field to enter negotiations on that problem. Do you see signs indicating that this could happen in the not too distant future? If not, on what do you base your hope that these problems can be brought under control?

[Answer] The existing facts are incontestable and they are not being denied by anybody. The Soviet Union is setting up new SS-20 medium-range missiles every week. These missiles fly over a distance of 4,000 kilometers. They have warheads, they are mobile and a very dangerous and very effective instrument. If the Soviet Union wants to negotiate with us on arms limitations in this field, we are happy to comply. We have submitted to them a most detailed offer.

If that is impossible, the American medium-range missiles, once they are produced in 1983, will have to be brought to Europe to preserve the balance in Europe.

We, the Social Democrats, and I believe all citizens of our country, would prefer to renounce them and aim for a low level in this field. However, in order to achieve this, there must be the desire and the preparedness of the Soviet Union. A unilateral advance concession by the West in this matter is out.

The consequence is that I personally do not speak of hopes with regard to negotiations. Commonsense speaks for negotiations, and commonsense ought to make such negotiation possible, even more so since otherwise the firm wish of NATO is known: To establish balance in this field--if necessary through closing the arms gap.

CDU OFFICIAL ASKS FOR SUPPORT OF OLYMPIC BOYCOTT

[Text] Bonn--CDU General Secretary Heiner Geissler has appealed to the West for a joint foreign policy and a cohesive stance vis-a-vis the Soviet Union in response to the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

At the opening of a 2-day CDU foreign policy congress in Bonn, Geissler said today that no one in the CDU is considering countering the Soviet aggression with military action. But precisely because the use of weapons is renounced, the possibilities of resistance without force must be fully exploited. "We therefore once again appeal to the Federal Government to join in the U.S. boycott of the Olympic games in Moscow."

Geissler said that Bonn must make the possibility of economic sanctions credible and increase the Federal Republic's defense contribution within the alliance. To date there have been many declarations of solidarity by the Federal Government, but we have to ask what they are worth when there has not even been an examination of which economic measures are possible under foreign trade law and which would be politically effective.

Geissler stressed that the congress, which was planned long before the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, is intended to contribute to the elaboration of the criteria for a correct foreign policy analysis. The disappointment now experienced in the West at events in Afghanistan is also a result of allowing oneself to be deceived for a long time prior to this. Afghanistan has thus become the Waterloo of a self-deceiving policy allegedly of peace and detente.

New Initiative on Palestinians

NC031747 Paris AFP in English 1700 GMT 3 Mar 80 NC

[Report by Daniele Eyquem]

[Text] Manama, March 3, (AFP)--All signs point to a new French effort to end the diplomatic stalemate (?surrounding) the Palestinian problem, observers said today commenting on French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing's tour of the Gulf region, Jordan and Saudi Arabia. But despite skepticism in Paris as to the potential for success for the Palestinian autonomy negotiations being conducted by the United States, Egypt and Israel, the observers predict that no definitive steps will be taken by France before the May 26 deadline for completion of the tripartite talks.

In the 48 hours since Mr. Giscard d'Estaing left Paris, he has recognized the "right of the Palestinian people to self-determination," a term used for the first time in an official text signed by France--in this case, in the joint communique released at the end of the French leader's stay in Kuwait. Such recognition carries implicit acknowledgement of the Palestinians' right to an independent state, the observers said. They added that President Giscard d'Estaing's statement that "the Palestinian problem is not a refugee problem" was aimed at pointing up the "insufficiency" in United Nations Security Council Resolution 242, the current basis for all (?attempts to) work out a global solution for the Mideast.

This interpretation was confirmed here in the Bahrain capital today by a spokesman for the French delegation, who neither confirmed nor denied that Mr. Giscard d'Estaing's stance could lead to a fresh French initiative such as proposing a new resolution on the problem to the United Nations. The spokesman said that the notion of "self-determination" should be added to the list of principles considered by Paris to be pre-requisites for finding a comprehensive, permanent solution. This list includes evacuation of the Arab territories occupied by Israel in 1967, the right of all states in the region, including Israel, to exist within safe, recognized and guaranteed boundaries, and the right of the Palestinians to a homeland, the spokesman added.

For the French delegation, there is nothing ambiguous about this stand, he said. France is as concerned for the security of Israel and all other states in the region as it is over the aspirations of the Palestinian people. The fact that this attitude was not stated in the French-Kuwaiti communique was attributed by the spokesman to France's positions being "known," as well as Arab non-recognition of Israel.

By espousing the Palestinian cause for self-determination during this trip, Mr. Giscard d'Estaing has already put himself on record as a possible negotiator in the event the peace process stemming from the Camp David accords should fail, the observers said. This new stance was advocated by the French president despite clear indications by him before he began his Gulf tour that he intended to "listen" to the suggestions of his Arab hosts rather than proposing solutions to the Arab-Israeli conflict.

In the Gulf countries--where this conflict is apparently considered more important than the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan--the extent of French support for the Palestinians cannot be estimated at present.

But it is clear that in coming meetings of the European Community, France will attempt to obtain diplomatic advantages for the Palestinians comparable to those [words indistinct]. In this initiative, France is assured of the support of Belgium and Ireland, which have already adopted similar positions. President Giscard d'Estaing also met at length with West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt before leaving for the Middle East.

LE MONDE Commentary

[Editorial: "Filling the Gap"]

[Text] The aim of the visit to four Gulf countries--Kuwait, Bahrain, Qatar and the United Arab Emirates--on which the president sets forth on 1 March, before paying a visit to Jordan on 8-9 March, is to tighten the bonds of friendship between Arab countries and France. When Mr Giscard d'Estaing became president in 1974, Europe had just realized the vulnerability of its raw materials supplies in general and its energy supplies in particular. At the same time, the Arabs were becoming aware of the power of the oil weapon. The energy crisis in the West was beginning; it will not end until industrialized countries stop waste and secure new sources of energy.

General de Gaulle, as long ago as the Six-Day War in 1967, and later Georges Pompidou, a started a Franco-Arab rapprochement in earnest, obviously at the expense of relations with Israel. Mr Giscard d'Estaing was bound to pursue this policy even more decidedly even though many of his supporters hoped during the presidential campaign that he would change it. Jerusalem now bitterly observes that no French head of state has visited Israel and, according to the French weekly TRIBUNE JUIVE, wonders whether the purpose of the visit to Amman is not to prepare an operation, in which London would participate, aimed at modifying UN Resolution 242 to include a statement asserting the Palestinian people's political rights.

For the past 6 years the head of state has been active on two fronts. On the one hand, he has made strenuous efforts to organize collective cooperation based on complementarity between industrialized and developing countries in the spheres of resources and requirements--European-Arab dialog, North-South dialog, tripartite talks and so forth--efforts which have met with only limited success in view of very considerable reservations on the part of Western countries and, to a lesser extent, disagreements among Arabs; while on the other hand, he has developed bilateral relations and was the first French president to pay an official visit to Maghreb countries, Egypt, Saudi Arabia and now the Gulf states.

The emirates--small countries enjoying an unequaled economic boom and situated at a point where the shock waves of conflicts in the Near East and Central Asia meet--have found themselves since the Iranian Revolution and Soviet intervention in Afghanistan in a strategic area which has become even more sensitive and an object of rivalries and greed among all powers. For France, this is a region of vital importance--70 percent of its oil supplies pass through the Gulf and nearly 15 percent of its requirements come from Kuwait, Qatar and the United Arab Emirates. Since they are well supplied with foreign exchange, these countries are also important purchasers of heavy equipment and arms. Even though it often trails far behind Japan, the FRG, some other European countries and the United States, France has become one of their main suppliers.

President Giscard d'Estaing's visit should encourage the current negotiations between the Gulf countries and the European Community. The Europe of the Nine has concluded cooperation agreements with the three Maghreb countries and several other Arab countries, including Jordan, and is on the point of concluding, in March, agreements with several countries in Southeast Asia; so the Gulf region represented a gap in its foreign relations. [paragraph continues]

Since both Europeans and emirs seem to be keen to fill this gap, the present visit is bound to accelerate this process and encourage dialog between the two entities.

MARCHAIS CHAIRS MEETING OF 'HUMAN RIGHTS' COMMITTEE

LD031255 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 28 Feb 80 p 4 LD

[Unattributed report: "To Develop Action in an Attacking Spirit"]

[Text] The "Committee for the Defense of Freedom and Human Rights" met on 27 February under the chairmanship of Georges Marchais. It studied the various reactions and appreciations of Georges Marchais' press conference and the publication of his first document on 20 years of murder, massacre and genocide throughout the world.

The outburst of the main information media against this important PCF initiative shows the disarray into which it plunges all those who use human rights to combat socialism, democracy and the peoples' struggles for liberty. Their wrath is all the more intense since they could attach no serious criticism to the committee's document and consequently chose to impose a cloak of silence on its contents.

At the same time, immediately after the press conference, the committee received a considerable number of letters and telephone calls which bear testimony to this initiative's immediate and profound impact throughout the PCF and beyond. These very positive reactions confirm that the creation of the committee meets a need felt by all consistent human rights defenders in France and throughout the world. They confirm that all the PCF's organizations and all Communists must seize on this issue in order to develop their action in an attacking spirit. Thus the committee considers it essential that the PCF in its entirety should, in the coming days, distribute the document published in 5,000 copies as a supplement to L'HUMANITE.

Being concerned with efficiency, the committee has set up its Secretariat (L'HUMANITE note: this comprises Pierre Juquin, Francis Wurtz, Francis Combes and Patrick le Mahec), and formed several working committees charged with giving force to its activity in the different spheres of intervention. It specified the concrete means of the initiatives which it has announced for the coming weeks.

[Text] Rome, March 1 (ANSA)--A delegation from ANIC [National Hydrocarbon Company], the chemicals subsidary of the Italian state-run natural fuels group, ENI [National Hydrocarbon Corporation], has left here for a visit to China and talks with senior officials of the Chinese chemicals industry. Invited by the China National Chemical Import and Export Corporation, the delegation will be meeting with representatives of Peking's Chemical Industry Ministry and other chemical corporations in order to examine openings for an expansion of cooperation within China's development programs. Also on the schedule is a seminar during which the mission will describe the activities of ANIC's various divisions and their member companies.

MERCHANT MARINE MINISTER RESIGNS FOLLOWING FUNDING SCANDALS

[Text] Franco Evangelisti has resigned as Minister of the Merchant Marine. He submitted his letter of resignation to Prime Minister Cossiga and then read its text to the Steering Committee of Christian Democratic deputies in the Chamber of Deputies. This decision was urged and desired by various political sides after an interview in which Evangelisti declared that he received funds for his election campaign and for his faction and party from builder Gaetano Caltagirone. The resignation also followed an investigation concerning the use of funds from Italcasse [financing institution of Central Savings Bank], involving among others the Caltagirone brothers, which ended with surprise developments. Last night, in fact, Judge Alibrandi issued 49 warrants in connection with serious speculations, involving members of the Italcasse board, who are accused of granting loans without demanding adequate guarantees, and private persons who are accused of receiving loans amounting to several hundred billion lire without security. Many of the warrants have already been carried out. Among others, Dell'amore, president of the savings bank of the Lombardian provinces; (Caleri Di Sana), vice president of Italcasse; and Alzio Marchini, a Rome builder, have been arrested.

New Minister Appointed

[Excerpts] Prime Minister Cossiga took Evangelisti's letter of resignation to the Quirinal Palace to report to the head of state who has just returned from a 3-day visit to Apulia. In addition to the decree formally accepting Evangelisti's resignation, President Pertini also signed the decree appointing Senator Nicola Signorello as his successor. The decision by Franco Evangelisti to leave the department of the Merchant Marine concludes, at least for the time being, an affair which caused all other parties to line up against the government and the Christian Democrats.

CABINET ISSUES COMMUNIQUE ON GOVERNMENTAL ETHICS

LD041953 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 1900 GMT 4 Mar 80 LD

[Text] Prime Minister Sa Carneiro this afternoon called on President Ramalho Eanes in Belem Palace. During the meeting he is believed to have briefed General Eanes on the decisions reached by an extraordinary meeting of the Council of Ministers held this morning and on the communique issued at the conclusion of the meeting.

In the communique, the Council of Ministers considers incompatible with the ethics that should govern relations between members of organs of sovereignty recent statements by members of the Council of the Revolution. Without specifying any Council of the Revolution members the communique states that this morning's cabinet meeting requested that the prime minister explain to the chairman of the Council of the Revolution the interpretation ascribed to the political statements under reference.

The communique notes a strange (?concertation) and identity of the viewpoints publicly made by opposition leaders and some members of the Council of the Revolution.

In the communique, the cabinet states that it places its firm confidence in the loyalty of the armed forces to institutions and the democratic system, but feels it necessary to clarify the political conditions which characterize the destabilizing outbreak announced--and already tested--by the opposition forces.

The government is unanimous in considering that the public transport strikes unleashed today are an integral part of a strategy of political confrontation and destabilization of the democratic institutions announced by one of the opposition parties.

PRESIDENCY DENIES 'ABNORMAL' RELATIONS IN RULING ORGANS

[Text] The presidency of the republic tonight issued a communique which reads as follows:

On taking cognizance of the reports published today by the newspaper O DIA, O DIABO and A TARDE in a concerted design to create the public belief that a state of abnormality prevails in relations between the organs of sovereignty, the president of the republic deems it necessary to clarify the following points:

1. The reports published in those newspapers, involving the president of the republic and other organs [word indistinct] of sovereignty, are false, although they exploit the various aspects of facts without special significance, in terms that could disturb public opinion and distract the country's attention from the real problems which concern the nation at the moment.

2. Adequate information will be published so that the Portuguese people can form a sure judgement of the falsehoods disseminated and of the intentions of their authors.

PSOE FAVORS REPLACING NATO WITH EUROPEAN DEFENSE SYSTEM

LD280915 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 22 Feb 80 LD

[EFE report: "Spanish Socialist Workers Party (PSOE) Favors European Defense Disposition"]

[Text] Madrid, 21 February--The PSOE is in favor of a European Defense disposition as an alternative to NATO, which it regards as obsolete, according to remarks made by Luis Solana, Socialist deputy and member of the Congress of Deputies Defense Committee, at a press conference. Mr Solana explained the Socialist stance as follows:

--With regard to defense it is necessary for every party to state whether or not it belongs to the Western world. The PSOE's answer is definitely in the affirmative.

--Depending on this answer, there are various options: NATO yes, or NATO no. The PSOE is against Spain's entry into NATO because it regards NATO an obsolete pact formed at a particular time when the Soviets might have advanced and Europe was defenseless.

In view of its rejection of NATO membership, the PSOE proposes (as a long-term project) the revival of a European disposition. It is untenable, Solana said, for an economic and political community not to be a military community as well. If we have to join an alliance then let it be Europe as a whole, and not each individual country with the United States. Until we finally achieve this European defense, Spain could maintain its agreements with the United States and gradually extend agreements with European countries.

The PSOE also believes that Spain can play a mollifying role in connection with European defense between the European countries and Germany, since some European countries still have reservations regarding a powerfully armed Germany. Last, he pointed out that Europe does not have the capability to defend itself, but that it can make the cost of an invasion very high, which might deter a potential aggressor.

CARRILLO COMMENTS ON PROVINCIAL POLITICAL SITUATIONS

LD012054 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1830 GMT 1 Mar 80 LD

[Text] The secretary general of the Spanish Communist Party [PCE], Santiago Carrillo, said in Barcelona that the Unified Socialist Party of Catalonia, this region's communist party, would be prepared to be part of a coalition government made up of the political forces of Catalonia. During a press conference given to support the party's electoral campaign for the elections to the Catalonian Parliament, the communist leader said that it would be a mistake for this party not to be part of a coalition government.

On the results of the referendum on Andalusian autonomy, Carrillo said that his party had not yet reached a decision on the subject, but that he personally felt the Andalusian people, by a real if not a legal majority, had come out in support of the rapid route to autonomy. Elsewhere in his speech the PCE secretary general said that the governing party must work out a formula that will allow Andalusia to achieve autonomy quickly. Otherwise, he said, quote: The frustration in Andalusia will give rise to serious problems with repercussions for the whole of Spain.

On the situation in the Basque Country, after saying that a response from the political forces is urgently needed, Santiago Carrillo blamed what he called Madrid's short-sightedness and the Basque Nationalist Party's evasiveness, particularly in relation to ETA's terrorism and the worsening of the economic situation in the region.

NORDIC COUNCIL MEETING CONTINUES IN REYKJAVIK

Jorgensen Address on Afghanistan

LD041212 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1030 GMT 4 Mar 80 LD

[Text] Danish Prime Minister Anker Jorgensen dealt with the situation in Afghanistan at the plenary session of the Nordic Council in Reykjavik today. He said that the Soviet Union is responsible for the slowing-down of the detente process.

According to Jorgensen's estimate, a clear violation of sovereignty has taken place in Afghanistan. Jorgensen's speech differed from the other Nordic prime ministers' general references to the aggravated international situation. Security policy has become a central subject of the general debate, although it is not part of the official agenda of the meeting. Finnish viewpoints on international situation can also be expected today.

Norway Cautioned; Rhodesian Results Hailed

LD042044 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 2000 GMT 4 Mar 80 LD

[Text] [Finnish] Foreign Minister Paavo Vayrynen has called on Norway to consider its security political measures carefully. Minister Vayrynen said in Reykjavik today that Finland is closely following the development of the situation in Norway.

Norway has stated that it will continue its policy on bases and nuclear weapons, which means that there will not be any foreign troops or nuclear weapons on Norwegian territory in peacetime. Vayrynen stressed that the continuation of this principle is essential for the security of the north.

The Nordic foreign ministers, who are meeting in Reykjavik, today welcomed the news that the elections in Zimbabwe-Rhodesia seem to have been free and just despite the difficult external conditions. According to the foreign ministers, the elections have created the conditions necessary for a united and democratic Zimbabwe.

NORWAY

DEFENSE CHIEF HAMRE VIEWS PRESENT, FUTURE NEEDS

[Unattributed report: "Greater NATO Coordination of Norwegian Defenses Necessary"]

[Text] Because the significance of Norwegian territory will increase, our defenses will have to be coordinated in some way to an even greater extent with NATO's joint defenses, Defense Chief Gen Sverre Hamre said in a speech to Oslo's Military Society yesterday. The significance of support and reinforcements from our allies is also increasing, and effective aid is to a great extent dependent on the defense effort which we ourselves are willing to assume, the defense chief stressed.

He pointed out that the continued expansion of the Soviet Navy with aircraft carriers, among other things, indicates a new dimension in the eighties compared with previous expansion programs. In the coming decade the Soviet Union's amphibious potential is expected to have improved still further, something which has a direct influence on our own defense situation, General Hamre stressed. As an example he mentioned the new type of Soviet warship under construction--a nuclear-powered battle cruiser of more than 30,000 tons.

We must assume that the Soviet Union has deployed the forces deemed necessary to defend its own interests on Kola Peninsula which is small in geographical terms but where there is a high military concentration. A potential marked change in the composition and size of the fighting forces on Kola would influence the general security policy situation. In this context, Hamre pointed out that while army and naval activity has increased moderately the air force's activity has increased considerably in recent years.

Our constitutional authorities place great emphasis on the importance of both safeguards and assurances for our area. Our NATO membership and Norway's self-assumed restrictions regarding bases, nuclear weapons and exercises must be seen in such a persepective. The same applies to our surveillance of contiquous air and sea areas which would otherwise have to be performed by others, Hamre said.

He also went into more detail on the intensified threat to transatlantic transport lines. The transfer of allied reinforcements to our area in a crisis or war situation has clearly become more difficult, the defense chief said but added that a considerable effort has been made in recent years to counteract this development. It is these measures which are the subject of attacks in the Soviet press organs at present.

The most recent years' budget proposals clearly register the importance which our constitutional authorities attach to the problem of reinforcements. These are measures which date from long before the latest deterioration in the international situation.

General Hamre warned against the idea of abolishing refresher exercises. He also warned against seeking economies by reducing the training of draft officers and men or by neglecting to renew mobilization materiel. The armed forces are seeking to reduce the use of personnel in peacetime, but there is definitely a limit to how far we can reduce regular military personnel without detriment to the mobilization forces.

In his speech, General Hamre gave the following description of the Storting bill based on the Defense Commission's report: If the Storting gives its support to the commission's framework plan and other prerequisites, the armed forces will have a sober framework plan to work toward. The effects of all steps which are undertaken annually will then be able to be measured against this defense structure and not against a percentage rate where the content is unspecified, Hamre said.

LEADERS ADDRESS PARLIAMENT ON RHODESIAN ELECTION OUTCOME

[Text] Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington said in the Lords today that he had been "greatly encouraged" by statements made by former guerrilla leader Mr Robert Mugabe immediately after his landslide election victory in Rhodesia. But he warned: "I don't think success has been achieved--until we see what happens in the new Zimbabwe." The need in Rhodesia now was for "national unity and reconciliation".

This thought was echoed in the Commons by the prime minister, who said: "Now is the time for reconciliation, hope and encouragement that all those who fought in the election will work together."

Lord Carrington said he had sent messages to countries bordering Rhodesia asking for "constructive help" to the new independent state. But he rejected suggestions that Rhodesia's Governor Lord Soames should stay on after independence. Lord Carrington said in his statement that results of the elections last week and announced today gave Mr Mugabe's ZANU (PF) [Zimbabwe African National Union--Patriotic Front] Party 57 seats, Mr Joshua Nkomo's Patriotic Front Party 20 seats and Bishop Abel Muzorewa's UANC [United African National Council] party three seats. Lord Carrington added: "The exceptionally high turnout provides an indication of the confidence of the Rhodesian people in the conduct of the elections and the secrecy of the vote. The need now is for national unity and reconciliation. The governor has seen Mr Mugabe, as leader of the party with an absolute majority of the seats in the House of Assembly, and asked him to set in train the process of forming a government which can contribute effectively to these goals.

"The independence Constitution which will shortly come into force provides safeguards for the minority community and will ensure that they can continue to play their full part in the life of the country. Britain's task now is to assist in the orderly transfer of power to a stable government. The governor will do all that he can to ease the transition and to help overcome whatever problems may arise in the period until independence."

Replying to questions, Lord Carrington said: "Congratulations are only due when we see that the outcome of this has been a free and fair multiracial society operating in peaceful conditions. I don't think success has been achieved until we see what happens in the new Zimbabwe."

Lord Carrington said: "With regard to the position of the governor, a great deal depends on the date of independence, in which Mr Mugabe will have a great deal to say. I doubt whether it would be proper for the governor, who would then have no constitutional responsibilities, to stay on after independence." He went on: "Lord Soames was sniped at and criticised from every quarter by almost everybody including some peers, and I think he has emerged triumphant in having organised and supervised an election which has been seen by everybody to be free and fair." Lord Carrington could not confirm whether General Walls had been asked by Mr Mugabe to stay on in Rhodesia as head of the security forces. However, he praised General Walls for his "very constructive and sensible" part in the Lancaster House talks and Rhodesia election.

Lord Carrington told Liberal Lord Avebury he would look into the question of land resettlement in Rhodesia, to which the government was committed. He added: "We have to think of all this in the context of our position at home."

The foreign secretary told Lord Shinwell he was wrong to make allegations about Mr Mugabe's Russian connections. "In point of fact, it was from the Chinese that Mr Mugabe very largely got his weapons, and Mr Nkomo from the Russians."

Lord Shinwell had said that Mr Mugabe was a self-proclaimed Marxist and that the Patriotic Front had obtained "a vast amount of war materials from the Soviet Union". Opposition foreign affairs spokesman Lord Goronwy-Roberts welcomed Mr Mugabe's success, and said he hoped it would be possible for Rhodesia to remain a member of the Commonwealth. Former Tory prime minister and foreign secretary, Lord Home of the Hirsel said that "togetherness" was a word Mr Mugabe had used in his public statements since the election. Such a spirit would create "a multiracial and prosperous state in the new Zimbabwe." For the Liberals, Lord Gladwyn congratulated Lord Carrington on his "incredible success".

In the Commons, the prime minister expressed hope that all parties who fought in the recent Rhodesian elections would now work together. Mrs Thatcher said: "I think the most appropriate thing I can do is to say that the arrangement of free and fair elections under all the circumstances has been an outstanding achievement, which many, a few months ago, would have thought impossible. The governor is to be warmly congratulated. So is the army, the monitoring forces and the police. The object was to arrange these elections. It was for the people of Rhodesia to say exactly who they wished to have."

Liberal leader Mr David Steel told the prime minister she had made a "strange" omission in her list of people to be congratulated--Mr Mugabe himself. Mrs Thatcher said: "We usually do that on the day when independence is given. Of course we wish the whole of Zimbabwe well in forming a government."

Later Lord Privy Seal Sir Ian Gilmour's statement on Rhodesia to the Commons was warmly welcomed by former Labour Foreign Secretary David Owen. He fully endorsed the view that the elections had been conducted freely and fairly. Dr Owen, who was standing in for shadow Foreign Secretary Mr Peter Shore, who is in Rhodesia, congratulated Mr Mugabe and paid tribute to his "statesmanship."

Sir Ian said that he could not give an exact assurance on how long it would be before independence. That depends on the action of Mr Mugabe on the formation of his government. Mr Mugabe had asked the governor, Lord Soames, to stay on as long as he thought fit. "There will be no rush," Sir Ian said. The government would discuss with the new Zimbabwe Government what help would be necessary for their country. Sir Ian told Liberal leader Mr David Steel that in "unprecedented" difficult circumstances, the holding of free and fair elections was "an extraordinary achievement."

Tory backbencher Mr Mulian Amery, formerly a junior minister in the Colonial Office, charged that Mr Mugabe's victory was "a major defeat for the West." He said that "it brings Soviet influence to within a few hundred miles of the mineral resources of South Africa on which Western and Japanese industry depended. And to that extent the situation was comparable to the danger it poses to the Soviet takeover of Afghanistan. Mr Mugabe's victory owes much to the systematic destruction of Bishop Muzorewa's authority by the government. Is it not time to embark on a total revision of British policy towards central and southern Africa?" Mr Amery asked.

Sir Ian replied that he disagreed with "every part" of what Mr Amery had said. "To say free and fair elections are a major defeat for the West is surely not a very Western attitude" he said to Tory cheers. I think it was Mr Molotov who said the trouble with a free election is that you can never be sure of the result." And Sir Ian added: "I have no evidence that Mugabe is under Soviet influence--quite the contrary." Sir Ian insisted that there was no parallel to be drawn with Afghanistan. "For you to say that we have gone in for the systematic destruction of Bishop Muzorewa is really totally unjustified," he told Mr Amery.

But Tory MP Sir Ronald Bell (Beaconsfield) told Sir Ian "that real elections in Africa with universal suffrage are an illusion. Will you say whether your department is still living in a dreamland after Kenyatta, after it has just forged another Nyerere or worse," he asked.

But Sir Ian said: "There has been overwhelming evidence that these elections were free and fair. It may be an illusion to you, but they were a reality to everyone else. What I would agree to certainly is that free or real elections in Africa are certainly rare, so I think some of the Commonwealth governments who were criticising us in the United Nations up to the elections should perhaps do some rethinking."

Tory right-winger Mr Michael Brotherton (Louth) said a victory by Marxists could "hardly be described as favourable to the West". He said Bishop Muzorewa was entitled to feel "a betrayed and disillusioned man". And he urged the government to have talks with the South African authorities over the defence of Britain's interests--particularly the trade route round the Cape.

But Sir Ian argued against "tying labels" on people, "calling it a Marxist government seems to be totally fallacious", he said. Sir Ian said the fact that Bishop Muzorewa lost the election could hardly mean he was betrayed. "We provided free and fair elections," he insisted.

GOVERNMENT FOLLOWS FRENCH ON PALESTINIAN SELF-DETERMINATION

LD051041 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 5 Mar 80 p 6 LD

[John Bulloch report: "Britain Supports Self-rule Right for Palestinians"]

[Text] Britain committed itself yesterday to the European Middle East policy spelt out by President Giscard d'Estaing during his trip this week to Kuwait.

A Foreign Office statement said Britain believed the Palestinian people had the right to self-determination. Foreign Office officials said this was a considerable policy change which implied that Britain would support an independent Palestinian state, and by inference was critical of Israel's delaying tactics over the Camp David agreements.

Already smarting from the United Nations condemnation of its policies over West Bank settlements, Israel is certain to see the new British and European line as a considerable threat to its security.

But Britain now intends to go further. It is to press for an amendment of United Nations Resolution 242 so that "the legitimate rights of the Palestinians" can be officially recognised. Resolution 242, passed by the Security Council in November, 1967, urged withdrawal of Israeli forces from occupied territories; that the Arabs should recognise Israel's right to exist as a nation; and spoke of a "just settlement" of the Palestinian refugee problem.

The new British attitude is largely the result of the arguments by forward by Saudi Arabian ministers during Lord Carrington's visit to that country earlier this year.

I SIMERINI: KIPRIANOU'S EUROPEAN TRIP HAD NO RESULTS

NC050938 Nicosia I SIMERINI in Greek 5 Mar 80 p 1 NC

[Text] According to I SIMERINI reports from Paris and London, President Kiprianou's visit to these capitals had no substantive result and was a mere courtesy or acquaintance visit. According to the same reports, during his brief talks with Mr Giscard d'Estaing in Paris and Mrs Thatcher in London, Mr Kiprianou had no opportunity to discuss substantive issues.

The same sources also inform us that: During the Kiprianou-Thatcher meeting, the British side expressed surprise because the Cyprus Government had rejected the Western plan submitted in November 1978 by the United States, Britain and Canada.

Meanwhile, both the French and the British press have given almost no publicity to Mr Kiprianou's visit to the two capitals. Large-circulation newspapers, in particular THE OBSERVER and THE SUNDAY TIMES, published not even one column last Sunday about Mr Kiprianou when he was in London. The same reports say that this reflects the fact that Mr Kiprianou's visit was considered only a formality and without substance.

Besides, a member of our diplomatic mission in Paris has pointed out that Mr Kiprianou's visit to Paris had coincided with a statement by French Foreign Minister Francois-Poncet on France's decision to grant aid to Turkey "because its stability constitutes a basic prerequisite for balance in the region." On the same day Mr Francois-Poncet had also stressed the "importance that France attaches to relations with its ally, Turkey."

Political observers have, on the contrary, pointed out that no official communiques were released after Mr Kiprianou's meetings in Paris and London. Finally, the same observers say that nothing concrete has been officially announced regarding the goals and outcome of Mr Kiprianou's trip.

ROLANDHIS CLARIFIES HIS INTERVIEWS ABROAD

NC021250 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 2 Mar 80 NC

[Text] Certain foreign news agencies and newspapers have reported or published interviews by Foreign Minister Rolandhis. These have been reprinted in Cyprus but stressed certain points and omitted some points in a manner that created wrong impressions in some cases. An official announcement was issued today, saying that Mr Rolandhis has made it clear that in referring to the role, responsibilities and interests of the Western countries in his interviews, he stressed:

1. The fact that the Western countries are actually maintaining the Turkish invasion in Cyprus because part of the money they give to Turkey in the form of grants or loans, as well as part of the arms they give it, are used for the perpetuation of the Turkish invasion in Cyprus.

2. That the lever of influence that the Western countries are exerting on Ankara is strictly due to these grants and loans.

3. The fact that the Western countries have every reason to use this lever because such a utilization serves their own interests and alliances.

Mr Rolandhis added: A Cyprus solution would contribute to the improvement of the relations between Greece and Turkey. This improvement of relations would be more useful to the Western countries than the unilateral strengthening of Turkey.

DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS ESTABLISHED WITH SRI LANKA

ATAKOL PROTESTS GREEK CYPRIOT 'DESTRUCTIVE ACTIVITIES'

TA010848 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 0415 GMT 1 Mar 80 TA

[Text] Foreign Affairs, Defense and Tourism Minister Kenan Atakol has asked UN Secretary General Kurt Waldheim to use his influence to prevent the Greek Cypriot administration from engaging in destructive activities aimed at destroying the Turkish Cypriot community economically and politically and which hinder the resumption of the intercommunal talks.

Atakol sent a letter to Waldheim noting that the Greek Cypriot administration has recently launched an intensive propaganda campaign against the Turkish Cypriot community and is attempting to prevent foreign tourists from going to northern Cyprus. Recalling that the Greek Cypriots' attitude is contrary to the sixth article of the agreement reached by President Denktas and Greek Cypriot leader Kiprianou on 19 May, Atakol said that the fact that these activities coincide with efforts to insure the resumption of the stalled intercommunal talks is extremely significant, because it displays the hypocricy and unwillingness of the Greek Cypriot side regarding bilateral talks.

Requesting that his letter be published as a UN General Assembly and Security Council document, Atakol concluded: I condemn these destructive activities on behalf of the Turkish Cypriot community and ask your excellency to use your influence in insuring that the Greek Cypriot side abandon its hostile attitude in a bid to resume the intercommunal talks and attain a peaceful solution. I would like to stress that if the Greek Cypriot administration refuses to do so, the intercommunal talks and the hopes for a peaceful solution will be adversely affected.

GREEK CYPRIOT PROPOSALS ON VAROSHA HOTELS REPORTED

TA041757 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1730 GMT 4 Mar 80 TA

[Text] There are reports that Greek Cypriot hotel owners have proposed partnerships to Turkish Cypriot businessmen for operating hotels in Varosha. Well-informed sources say that contacts on this subject have reached a positive stage. A spokesman for the Turkish Cypriot mission in London said that several of the Turkish Cypriot businessmen have asked whether the federated State authorities would give permission for such partnerships and that these requests had been communicated to the authorities in Nicosia.

TURKISH CYPRIOT OPPOSITION PARTY BUILDING ATTACKED

TA041602 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1030 GMT 4 Mar 80 TA

ROMANIAN FOREIGN MINISTER CONCLUDES OFFICIAL VISIT, DEPARTS

Talks End

AT041300 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1230 GMT 4 Mar 80 AT

[Text] Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister of the Romanian Government Stefan Andrei was received this morning by President of the Republic Konstandinos Tsatsos. Later Andrei was received at the political office by Prime Minister Konstandinos Karamanlis who conferred with him. The Romanian official was accompanied by Greek Foreign Minister Yeoryios Rallis. Andrei leaves for Bucharest this afternoon after a 4-day official visit to Greece.

Joint Statement

As foreseen at the outset, the visit I made to Greece on an inviation from Foreign Minister Rallis was a success. It gave us the opportunity to exchange views on the development of our bilateral relations and to strengthen cooperation between our two countries at international levels, within the spirit of the meetings held in the past between President Ceausescu and President Tsatsos and Prime Minister Karamanlis.

During my visit I had fruitful meetings and discussions with Rallis and Coordination Minister Mitsotakis on the development of our economic relations. I would particularly like to stress the importance of my meetings with the president and prime minister of Greece. I believe my visit has contributed to development of multifaceted bilateral cooperation but at the same time it also provided us with the opportunity of reaffirming our common positions on the protection of peace and cooperation in the Balkans, Europe and the world through strengthening the policy of detente, peace and independence.

Greece and Romania desire to continue their efforts for expanding cooperation in trade, economic, scientific and cultural relations according to a joint statement released after Andrei's talks in Athens ended.

Bilateral relations were examined in the light of what was resolved during the meetings of the Greek prime minister and the Romanian president.

Rallis and Andrei reaffirmed the faith of the two countries in the principles of full equality of rights, independence, national sovereignty, nonintervention in the internal affairs of third countries in any form, not using force or the threat of force and the right of every country for its free development.

The two ministers also stressed the desire of their two countries to work toward neutralizing the negative developments in the international climate and the deterioration of the international situation.

Within this framework they focused their attention on the conference on European peace and security to be held in Madrid for the purpose of implementing--in a constructive way and as a whole--the Final Act of Helsinki.

The joint statement adds that in examining the situation in the Balkans the two ministers stressed the great significance they attach to developing neighborly relations and cooperation among all Balkan countries in such a way that the area will become an area of confidence, cooperation and peace.

On the situation in Cyprus the ministers stressed the need for a just and lasting solution on the basis of intercommunal talks in such a way that respect of the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity and the unity and nonalined character of Cyprus are guaranteed, according to UN resolutions.

After stressing the imperative need for adopting measures to strengthen disarmament both in the nuclear and conventional sectors, the ministers expressed concern over the seats of tension in the world. They also stressed the need for a strict respect of the principles and rules of international law. They reaffirmed their belief that resolving differences must be undertaken through peaceful means without resort to force or to the threat of force, as provided for under the UN Charter.

In conclusion the joint statement mentions that the two ministers attributed special significance to the periodic meetings held between the two countries at all levels and expressed their satisfaction over the positive results of their meeting. Andrei invited Rallis to visit Romania officially. The invitation was accepted with satisfaction.

Departure

ATO41622 Athens Armed Forces Television Service in Greek 1600 GMT 4 Mar 80 AT

At Ellinikon Airport Andrei was seen off by Foreign Minister Rallis, Romanian Ambassador Ion Brad and Greek ambassador to Bucharest, Mikhail Kottakis.

Prior to his departure Andrei said the talks he had in Athens contributed not only to development of multifaceted bilateral cooperation but also provided an opportunity for talks on peace and cooperation in the Balkans, in Europe and throughout the world.

TERCUMAN SCORES PRAVDA ARTICLE ON U.S. DEFENSE AGREEMENT

NC031029 Istanbul TERCUMAN in Turkish 29 Feb 80 p 4 NC

[Article by Prof Fahir Armaoglu: "Our Neighbor Soviet Russia"]

[Text] A point was worth noting in the Demirel government's attitude toward the Soviet occupation of Afghanistan: Though great anxiety was felt at this act of invasion and occupation, care was taken to refrain from reacting too strongly toward Soviet Russia. During the Security Council debate on this issue, the Turkish delegate condemned the Soviet action on the one hand but stressed the importance of goodneighborly relations with Soviet Russia on the other. Again, during the Islamic conference held in Islamabad in January, Turkey took meticulous care not to be too harsh on the Soviet Union even though such an attitude could offend some of our Arab friends. Finally, we could also say that in making a great step toward the West through the recent economic decisions, Turkey is determined not to alter the nature of goodneighborly relations with the Soviet Union.

However, it is apparent from an article in PRAVDA the other day that Turkey's careful attitude has had little or no effect on our neighbor. Referring to the Turkish-American defense cooperation agreement, PRAVDA threatened that in the event Turkey abandoned goodneighborly relations it could become a "nuclear cemetery" in case of a conflict. Let us hasten to remind PRAVDA that Russia will suffer the same fate in the event of such a conflict; we do not doubt in the least that they are aware of this as otherwise they would not attach so much importance to the limitation of strategic arms.

If by any chance through this threat PRAVDA wanted to torpedo the goodneighborly relations between Turkey and the Soviet Union, Turkey will not, by any means, be responsible for any consequences. We prefer to attribute this sudden outburst of our neighbor, the Soviet Union, to the anxiety caused by the unpleasant repercussions in Afghanistan. But as the Turkish saying goes: 'Everybody has to bear the consequences of his own acts.' The Soviet Union cannot extricate itself from its awkward predicament in Afghanistan by frowning at other people. If our neighbor, the Soviet Union, chooses to further such a policy--particularly in the case of Turkey--it must risk having to face certain natural consequences. However, despite everything we wish to believe that PRAVDA's harsh and unnecessary outburst will confine itself to an impulsive act.

VOTCP Lauds PRAVDA

TA050807 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 5 Mar 80 TA

[Unattributed commentary: "The Excuses of the Guilty"]

[Text] An article on Turkey in the Soviet daily PRAVDA on 27 February 1980 provokes a deep reaction among the reactionary ruling circles in Turkey. This article caused an outcry among press organs which are the tools of these circles. All reactionaries, fascists, Maoists, people like [Senator] Metin Toker, and Foreign Minister Erkmen as well as the gang leaders of anti-Sovietism and anticommunism participated in the outcry. Why has the PRAVDA article caused such an outcry among these circles? Because the article pointed out that the aggressive U.S. and NATO bases and the nuclear arsenals in these bases in Turkey represented a great threat to Turkey's security and independence, as well as for the peoples of the Middle East, Near East and of the Mediterranean and the Black Sea regions. The article notes that in a war that might be caused because of the nuclear arms deployed on our soil, our country could become a nuclear cemetery for 45 million people.

Foreign Minister Erkmen tried to deny these realities which are known by our people as well as by the world public. The bourgeois journalists who kept quiet when, in an insulting statement, FRG Chancellor Schmidt compared the economic situation in Turkey to a pig sty, have now resorted to demagogy to hide these realities. In a bid to please their U.S. masters, newspapers such as TERCUMAN, SON HAVADIS, HERGUN, HURRIYET which are always full of articles slandering and attacking the Soviet Union, are now busy trying to hide from the public the realities stressed in the PRAVDA article. Foreign Minister Erkmen says that there is nothing new about the bases and adds that the deployment of nuclear arms on these bases is out of the question. Erkmen is lying. It is true that these U.S. bases have existed on our soil since the 1950's. The new slavery agreement initialed between Turkey and the United States on 10 January 1980 envisages the establishment of three more bases. This is what is new.

Regarding the claims that no nuclear arms are to be deployed on these bases, let us examine the Istanbul daily TERCUMAN, the biggest supporter of the pro-American Demirel government. In its 25 January 1980 issue, TERCUMAN has printed a map on which the U.S. bases of aggression are shown. According to TERCUMAN, out of about 30 U.S. bases on our soil, 7 contain nuclear arms. The daily lists the names of these bases as follows: Balikesir, Izmit, Eskisehir, Cakmak, Murted, (Erhac) and Erzurum. This revelation by the TERCUMAN should be enough to prove that the denials of the foreign minister are baseless. Or is TERCUMAN also lying?

Dear listeners, the question of whether nuclear arms exist on these bases on our soil is not what concerns our people. What concerns them is the terrible threat which these bases pose and the prevention of our country's becoming a nuclear cemetery.

As stressed by the 51 RPP deputies, Turkey is now at the crossroads: Either it will live in peaceful conditions with its neighbors and the Middle East and Near East countries or, by permitting the establishment of new bases on its soil, it will spoil its relations with its neighboring countries in accordance with the wishes of its masters across the ocean and their imperialist interests.

As recalled, the Demirel government has not only initialed the Turkish-U.S. slavery agreement, it has also adopted the NATO plan to transform Western Europe into a nuclear region and has agreed to the production of certain Pershing missile parts in our country. These are clear signs of efforts by the reactionary ruling forces to link our country more intensively with Washington's strategic plans, to use us as a tool in its cold war policies, and to drag us into the adventurist plans of imperialism. The aim of the United States is to take advantage of Turkey's economic and military possibilities and its strategic placement for its imperialist expansion, to strengthen its hegemony, to closely monitor our neighbor, the Soviet Union, through its aggressive bases on our soil with electronic and radar equipment and to completely control the Mediterranean, the Aegean, and the Middle East.

In a letter sent to the heads of all the governments, Comrade Brezhnev points out that the Soviet Union will never use nuclear arms against countries which do not have such arms, and adds that the Soviet Union is always ready to strengthen friendship and cooperation with those countries and to sign nonaggression agreements with them. In his statement of 23 February in Moscow addressing the electors of the (Bauman) region, Comrade Brezhnev said the following: All countries that break the chains of colonialism are faced with the difficult task of establishing a new, independent administration. A lasting peace, respecting the sovereign rights of peoples and countries and insuring equality in international relations are factors necessary to these countries as much as they are to socialist countries.

We are promoting our relations with African, Asian and Latin American countries, with big India and small Benin, with the Algerian Republic, the Kingdom of Jordan, with neighboring Turkey and far away (?Brazil) based on mutual benefits. We place great value on our developing relations with these countries. We are respecting the peoples of these countries. We do not covet their wealth. We are not trying to establish bases on their soil and to dictate their policies to them.

Dear listeners, these statements by Comrade Brezhnev carry an extraordinary significance for Turkey and our people. Our people do not want our country to be turned into a nuclear cemetery for the sake of those like Demirel, Turkes, Metin Toker and the imperialist interests of their masters across the ocean. Our people want to live in peace and friendship with all our neighbors--first and foremost with the Soviet Union, its friend in need. That is why they are crying out the slogans of: The aggressive bases should be dismantled, the slavery agreements should be torn up, converging their forces around these slogans of struggle.

GUNAYDIN COMMENTS ON 'ROGERS PLAN', RELATIONS WITH USSR

NC031136 Istanbul GUNAYDIN in Turkish 29 Feb 80 p 5 NC

["The Situation in Ankara" column by Teoman Erel: "Relations With the Soviets Are Cooling Off"]

[Excerpts] The Justice Party minority government is taking fast strides in foreign policy. We have learned from the disclosures made by Foreign Minister Erkmen that the cancellation of NOTAM 714 signified not only a mere gesture of good will, but also a change in policy toward the Aegean.

The idea of discussing disputes connected with the Aegean as a package has been abandoned. At least, the package seems to have been divided into two: Military and civilian matters will be discussed separately.

Turkey will no longer insist on the settlement of all issues connected with the Aegean before consenting to Greece's return to NATO's military wing. It will be satisfied with only the settlement of the military issues.

This is what kept General Rogers busy. The proposal, referred to as the Rogers plan, was connected with regulating areas of responsibility in the Aegean. Whereas our competent authorities described the plan as "non-existent", officials in Brussels said "Turkey has consented" and Greece officialy rejected it--this plan envisaged a region in the middle of the Aegean under NATO control.

As he was leaving London for Ankara, General Rogers confirmed the existence of such a plan, but added that Greece had rejected it. The American commander-in-chief of NATO deplored the fact that Greece had disclosed its decision to the public before notifying him. However, he added that he would try to develop new proposals.

We do not know whether Rogers' new proposals contain an area in the middle of the Aegean to be under the control of NATO or indirectly by the United States. However, various circles in Ankara believe that these efforts are extremely dangerous. The anxieties of our serious and experienced bureaucrats as well as our statesmen are too grave to be overlooked.

As these discussions were being held in Ankara, no one was aware of the serious Soviet warning or reaction to the Turkish Government. However, compared with relations between Turkey and the Soviet Union a few months ago, one could sense some deterioration in these relations.

Last week, Turkish diplomats did not attend a party given by the Soviet Union on the occasion of Soviet Army Day. So it was becoming quite clear that relations between the two countries were beginning to cool off. And the PRAVDA commentary followed these developments. PRAVDA maintained that Turkey was pursuing a perilous path between strategies of crisis and detente which could lead to a nuclear war.

It is understood from this commentary that the new foreign policy of the Justice Party minority government and the agreement to be signed with the United States regarding the bases are disturbing the Soviet Union. It can also be said that the possibility of increased American influence in the Aegean, which the Soviet ships ply so frequently, bothers the Soviet Union too. We must, therefore, bear in mind that a Soviet Union, disturbed by Turkey, may cause more discomfort for Turkey than for the West. The national interests of Turkey demand that it maintain good relations with all its neighbors. It would particularly be a great risk to get involved in serious disputes and animosity with a world giant.

It is quite likely that the United States would like to convert Turkey into a more militant ally for its own interests and to compensate for Afghanistan. And Federal Germany may wish to see the major part of the Soviet Army in Central Europe glide toward the countries in the NATO wings, particularly toward Turkey. But naturally, Turkey's national interests come before everything else. Suleyman Bey [the prime minister] is aware of all this too. So much so that in the past he had expedited efforts for the development of relations with the Soviet Union. We hope that his speed in negotiating such a dangerous bend in foreign policy is not dictated by the great need for Western credits.

TFSC'S DENKTAS OPPOSED TO LIFTING OF NOTAM 714

TA031437 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1420 GMT 3 Mar 80 TA

[Text] Istanbul 3 Mar (AA)--President Rauf Denktas of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus said today he was against Turkey's recent decision to lift the restrictions on air traffic over the Aegean Sea (NOTAM No. 714) and said this could endanger the intercommunal talks in Cyprus. Denktas made his views known in a statement at Istanbul's Yesilkoy Airport during a stopover on his way to London for a private visit. Annulment of the NOTAM enabled the Greek Cypriot side to take "a very dangerous step", President Denktas said, adding: "We definitely cannot accept operation of Greek Cypriot services on our own territory and their (piracy). In case they insist on this course there will be complications which can endanger the intercommunal talks."

POLICE SEIZE CONTRABAND ARMS DESTINED FOR IRAN

[Text] Ankara 4 Mar (AA)--Gendarmerie in the eastern province of Van, in a clash with a group of smugglers, seized 10 million lira worth of arms and ammunition destined for Iran across the border. The governor said the contraband arms included 80 7.65 mm "Vizor" brand Czechoslovak-made pistols, and over 59,000 300 mm "Geco" bullets for automatic pistols. The band of smugglers escaped under cover of darkness, he said, leaving behind nine horses worth another 1 million lira. One suspected accomplice was taken under custody. With 12,000 more bullets seized in two other towns of Van, the total value of smuggled arms and ammunition seized rose up to 12 million lira, the governor added.

In Ankara, the Interior Ministry announced the special "Department of Smuggling" at the general directorate of security had seized members of an arms smuggling ring operating in the Black Sea region. They had seized a pusher, a boss, and the big boss, for the region, together with 35 pistols and 11,000 bullets. The Black Sea branch of the smuggling ring had been completely wiped out, the ministry said, and teams were working on other branches.

KREISKY 'UNRESERVEDLY READY FOR COOPERATION WITH IRAN'

AU061002 Vienna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German 6 Mar 80 p 1 AU

[Report on Kreisky statement to ARBEITER-ZEITUNG--date and place not given]

[Excerpt] Vienna (AZ, AP)--"Like any country giving itself a new social system, Iran needs cooperation with progressive democratic states in Europe which do not shy at the mere word revolution," Chancellor Kreisky declared in a talk with ARBEITER-ZEITUNG. "We are unreservedly ready for cooperation with Iran." But certain minimum forms of human freedom must be observed, Kreisky added, alluding to the detention of the hostages in the U.S. Embassy.

One is losing the moral credit earned by blasting open prisons and by the release of thousands of prisoners, if one then goes and deprives 50 people of their freedom unwarrantedly and without court trial, Kreisky said, adding: "The number is quite immaterial in this respect." This must be said to the young people concerned, regardless of one's full understanding of the fact that they are filled with rage at the old regime, Kreisky said.

GENERAL SPANNOCCHI URGES PURCHASE OF INTERCEPTORS

AU041452 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 4 Mar 80 pp 1, 4 AU

[Georg Possanner report on an interview with General Spannocchi, chief of the Austrian Army Command, in Vienna--no date given]

[Summary] The delay in the acquisition of interceptor planes by the Austrian Army is causing General Spannocchi grave concern. "'To keep our borders fairly safe so that in the event of our having to defend our neutrality we are not overrun by entire battalions which then operate from our territory is something that is possible to a reassuring extent with the means at our disposal, but this does not apply to our airspace.' That is where our sovereignty and neturality are most likely to be disregarded, if only out of negligence or carelessness, so that this constitutes 'a ticket to hell as far as the policy of neutrality is concerned,' Spannocchi says."

"'It is absolutely permissible to recall that in both crises that have occurred in our neighborhood--1956 and 1968--others assumed control over our airspace. This simply must not be allowed to happen again.'" Spannocchi then flatly rejected the widely used argument that Austria should simply forget all about air defense, save the 3-4 billion schillings needed for buying interceptors, and use the money for other weapons. "'We simply do not stand to gain anything if we fail in our international duties, thus staggering into the end of our neutrality,'" he says, arguing that Austria's political leadership is assumming a tremendous political responsibility in neglecting the protection of neutrality in the air.

"In the antitank defense sector, no equivalent substitute for missile weapons exists today, Spannocchi declares in reply to a pertinent question. 'Nevertheless the challenge can be answered by a whole system. I believe that, within the framework of territorial defense, we have succeeded in establishing a functioning antitank defense system with other weapons, stationary installations and obstacles.'" Spannocchi's main arguments: At the given distance of 500-1000 meters, modern antitank guns have a likely hit rate of 90 percent and can pierce any armor; the speed of attack is slowed down by prepared obstacles and stationary installations; protection against combat helicopters is currently being worked out.

"So one could actually do without missiles? 'As chief of the Austrian Army Command it is my task to implement the government's defense policy in line with the given directives,' Spannocchi says evasively. But, taking a look at the immediate future, he adds: 'The tanks of tomorrow will be operational as early as in the middle of this decade.' Their armor can no longer be pierced by conventional missiles. 'But, if that is the case, the missile will become useless.' Spannocchi thus draws this conclusion: 'By the end of the 1980's the [antitank] missile will be outdated--but, until then, no general can renounce this optimal antitank weapon.' The development of weapons is moving in the direction of the high-velocity gun with low-caliber hard-core projectiles [hochrasanz kanone mit unterkalibrigen hartkerngeschossen]--weapons for which there are no restrictions whatsoever in the State Treaty, and which offer great chances for Austria's arms industry."

According to Spannocchi, the big maneuvers held last fall showed the need to focus attention on the following three points in particular: synchronization of the training of reserve and of active officers; more emphasis on the construction and expansion of stationary defense installations and obstacles; priority for night combat training including the development of electronic appliances. In this context, Spannocchi says: "'I consider it simply inexcusable not to make use of the capacity of Austria's technology in this sector. If a small country does not master the problem of electronics for its defense capability in the 1980's, it will find itself incapable of defense in the 1990's.'"

In reply to DIE PRESSE's last question, about the role of Austria's civil defense, he declares: "'I want to say quite plainly that it is high time for those who are responsible for it in peacetime to rack their brains, rather than pretend that this is our responsibility. It is not, nor are we responsible for the shortcomings that quite obviously exist in that field.'" Spannocchi adds that although it would be possible to fight for a few days without regard for the needs of the civilian population, he sees this as something for which it is difficult to assume responsibility.

'Political Question' Involved

AU051007 [Editorial Report AU] The Socialist Vienna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German on 5 March 1980 carries on page 2 a Michael Strand report on an interview granted to ARBEITER-ZEITUNG on 4 March by General Spannocchi, chief of the Austrian Army Command. Highlighting Spannocchi's demand for the purchase of interceptors the paper quotes the general as saying: "Neutrality is three-dimensional. We cannot let a country's readiness for defense end 5 meters above the ground."

Noting that General Kuntner, head of the National Defense Academy, was criticized by Moscow PRAVDA for demanding missile weapons only a month ago, the paper states that General Spannocchi adopted a rather reserved position on this issue and quotes him as saying: "'Naturally, a general can wish for his army to have such optimal anti-tank defense, but it remains a political question whether or not this wish can be fulfilled.'"

WEST BERLIN MAYOR STOBBE PAYS 4-DAY VISIT TO VIENNA

AU061056 Vienna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German 6 Mar 80 p 1 AU

[Text] Vienna (APA)--Wednesday night [5 March] Dietrich Stobbe, governing mayor of Berlin, arrived in Vienna for a 4-day visit at the invitation of Vienna Mayor Gratz. The visitor is also scheduled to meet Chancellor Kreisky. Questions of detente will be a central issue of his talks in Vienna.

SCHMIDT EXPECTS GREAT DEAL OF HARMONY IN U.S. TALKS

DW051231 Hamburg ARD Television Network in German 2130 GMT 4 Mar 80 DW

[Gerd H. Pelletier interview with Chancellor Helmut Schmidt at Cologne-Wahn Airport just before the chancellor's departure for Washington--recorded]

[Text] [Question] Your seventh trip to the United States in your capacity as head of government is considered here as the most important and perhaps most difficult journey. American journals and newspapers level more criticism than ever at you. One newspaper even says that you are an unwilling ally. Are you amused by such a formulation or does it annoy you?

[Answer] No, I am not amused by it, nor does it irk me; for I have been familiar indeed with the public opinion in the United States for past 30 years, including the publicized opinion, which are two different things. I, too, have read the essay to which you refer, and I believe that you did not translate it quite properly. The correct translation should be: The reluctant ally, and this solely pertains to the Olympic games. In many other questions, in most issues, the U.S. Government and especially the U.S. President are in agreement with us. The degree of harmony is quite great, and some people take pleasure in especially stressing nuances now and then in their journalistic work. After all, it is in no way different here in Germany.

By the way, it may be that this is a chancellor's seventh trip. I do not recall it so specifically anymore. But all told it is the 40th or 45th trip which I have made to the United States, I feel quite at home there. And I am quite sure that the great deal of harmony which the U.S. Government and the German Federal Government have achieved already will be even enhanced on this occasion.

[Question] Since you have been there so often, as you just stressed, can you at all understand that some Americans say that the assistance of their most important ally, the Federal Republic, was not sufficient?

[Answer] I can understand that, but I cannot find it right. First, I find it wrong that we are being termed the most important ally. We are important. That is true. We play an important role in the alliance. We contribute considerably to the common defense ability. But France is equally important. England is equally important, and the smaller states in their way also contribute to the common defense. It begins with Canada and it ends with Luxembourg. I consider it improper that Germany is being set off. I do not want to agree to that.

Some American journalists may maintain that we do not contribute enough. They will note in the next days that the U.S. Government does not share that opinion.

CHANCELLOR PRAISES CARTER'S 'STATESMANLIKE CONDUCT'

LD052302 Hamburg DPA in German 2230 GMT 5 Mar 80 LD

[Excerpt] Washington--After talks in the White House lasting almost 2 and 1/2 hours, Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and U.S. President Jimmy Carter today noted broad agreement in their assessment of the international situation, but did not hide the fact that, not least for geographical reasons, there are differences of opinion.

In a statement to the international press the chancellor underlined that the consultation between the United States and its European partners are seldom better than the current ones, and he praised President Carter for his statesmanlike conduct in the present situation.

Schmidt and Carter made a point of showing unanimity in their assessment of the situation following the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, but gave no indication of whether agreement was reached at the meeting on specific countermeasures. Schmidt said in this connection that the discussions, which have already gone on longer than planned, have not yet been concluded. Contrary to his original intention of going back to the American Government's guest house, Schmidt returned to the President's study after making his statement to journalists.

PRESS COMMENTS ON SCHMIDT VISIT TO WASHINGTON

DW060900 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German 0605 GMT 6 Mar 80 DW

[Press review on Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's Visit to the United States]

[Text] WESTDEUTSCHE ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG writes the following: The chancellor must come to terms with Carter, the leader of the Western big power. The chancellor of a country that depends more than any other country on the ups and downs of the balance and the deterioration of detente, what Helmut Schmidt must and will bring back from Washington is already a fact: on the one hand support of the alliance that feels challenged by the Soviet aggression in Afghanistan, and on the other confirmation of a policy that in the long run seeks equalization with Moscow. Carter will aim more for the first element, Schmidt more for the second, according to WESTDEUTSCHE ALLGEMEINE.

NUERNBERGER NACHRICHTEN notes: Preliminary to the chancellor's visit, Bonn tried to disperse the impression that Schmidt was really irritated by the lack of U.S. preparedness to consult its allies sufficiently. Government spokesmen untiringly stressed that contacts between Washington and the Europeans have become closer again, permitting rapid progress in working out a Western counterconcept as an answer to the Soviet invasion in Afghanistan. Schmidt and Carter could work out the final matters immediately, judging by what was taking place prior to the meeting between the chancellor and the president in Washington. The statements that have been disseminated read like descriptions of wishful thinking. They have little to do with reality.

SCHWARZWAELDER BOTE of Oberndorf writes under the headline "Pressure for Unity": At the German-American summit meeting in Washington, both sides obviously want to demonstrate unity. That ought not to be too difficult because a great part of the difference between Bonn and Washington were caused mostly by lack of communications, which seems to have been practically eliminated now. But that does not rule out the existence of some differences of opinion--regarding for example to the extent of an economic boycott of Moscow, or who is supposed to make available that additional means for Turkey and Pakistan. Neither Carter nor Schmidt can be interested in stressing such differences. The American President knows that a stiffened stand in Bonn will necessarily bring influence to bear on the other Europeans, and the chancellor must bear in mind that the opposition would very much like to make the lack of loyalty with regard to the United States an issue of its election campaign.

The Ulm SUEDWESTPRESSE stresses this point: The stage play is well tested, and Bonn policy now produces it once again: The way it presents it, not a single cloud is dulling the sunshine over the German-American relations. Yet the truth is that the inclination of the U.S. administration to include European positions in its reckoning as well is infinitesimal. The U.S. election campaign is overshadowing all actions. All the more laborious is Schmidt's attempt to be solidary with the United States without simultaneously abandoning the leeway of the Federal Republic for its special requirements. Schmidt's effort at harmony is a tightrope walk. It is intended to please the Americans and gain him time in the issue at hand.

MANNHEIMER MORGEN views the situation as follows: The chancellor's short visit to Washington has often been termed a journey aimed at improving the climate. After all, the suspicion has arisen in the American public that the Federal Republic is trying to play a dubious special role within the European alliance, all the more so since Willy Brandt's strange utterances are interpreted to be a kowtow to Soviet anger, which indeed caused PRAVDA to babble about Schmidt's forked tongue. Thus, Schmidt's talks with the U.S. statesmen and with Carter personally will boil down to the request not to press him for time and to understand that the current treaties with the Soviet Union will not be called in question despite all preparedness for boycott and sanctions.

Discussing an alleged special role of Europe in the present world political situation, BRAUNSCHWEIGER ZEITUNG writes: In the description of the crisis after the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan a false tone is creeping in now and then which is objectionable as it blurrs the power of realization and leads to slanted conclusion. What we mean is the rivalry of the superpowers, the United States and the Soviet Union, which allegedly has become evident again in the case of Afghanistan. This view prevails, for instance, in part of the nonalined camp. Yet France, too, has chosen a similar way of describing things since it cultivates its anti-Americanism which is so effective domestically. On several occasions, Willy Brandt has also strummed this string. Yet there is no such thing as a Soviet-American power struggle over Afghanistan but rather another Soviet seizure by which the Kremlin has enlarged its empire piece by piece for the past 40 years.

GENSCHER SEES BENEFIT IN CLOSE COOPERATION WITH AMERICANS

[Text] Bonn--In the view of FDP Chairman and Federal Foreign Minister Hans Dietrich Genscher, close cooperation with Washington in the present world crisis is also in the Federal Republic's and Europe's own best interests. Therefore, Europe would do well to make the new U.S. political emergence one of the entire West, Genscher writes in an article published by FDP in the latest issue of BUNTE magazine.

Genscher warns against underestimating the regained determination of the Americans to uphold their world political responsibility as a "short-term action influenced by the election campaign." The illusion that Europe could play a special role between the United States and Soviet Union as [word indistinct] to Moscow's challenge would only lead to "our falling between two stools," the FDP chairman said.

One of the main consequences to be drawn from the crisis is the economic and social stabilization of developing countries, Genscher stressed. However, political stability should not be confused in this respect with "short-term support for outdated regimes."

GENSCHER LEAVES FOR EC-ASEAN TALKS IN KUALA LUMPUR

LD041753 Hamburg DPA in German 1641 GMT 4 Mar 80

[Summary] Bonn--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher left for Kuala Lumpur today for a conference of European Community and ASEAN foreign ministers. Before the conference begins, he is due to have bilateral talks with the Malaysian Government. A cooperation agreement is due to be signed in Kuala Lumpur between the European Community and ASEAN.

On his return flight on 8 March he will stop over in Cairo and discuss the possibilities of a solution to the Middle East conflict with President as-Sadat and Egyptian Prime Minister Khalil.

DPA REPORTS U.S. DECISION TO DEPLOY F-16'S IN GERMANY

LD051836 Hamburg DPA in German 1724 GMT 5 Mar 80 LD

[Excerpt] Ramstein--The U.S. Defense Department plans to station 3 squadrons of the tactical F-16's in the Federal Republic some time in mid-1981. They will replace the older F-4 Phantoms at Hann Airbase, the headquarters of the U.S. Air Force in Europe (USAFE) announced at Ramstein today. This will be the first time that U.S. aircraft of this type will be stationed in Europe.

CDU CHAIRMAN KOHL STRESSES NEED FOR NATO FLEXIBILITY

[Text] Bonn--In the opinion of CDU Chairman Kohl NATO will continue to be indispensable as a Western defense alliance in the 1980's. At the end of his party's 2-day foreign policy congress, Kohl demanded in Bonn today that NATO's political importance and military deterrance should be strengthened. In the future however, NATO will also be required to react more flexibly to changes in international affairs.

The need for the NATO alliance was also stressed at the congress by Dutch Prime Minister Van Agt. He supported a Western response to match the Soviet SS-20 missiles but at the same time called for negotiations on arms control since counterarming and arms control should go hand in hand.

Kohl declared that the Federal Republic's future foreign policy must rest on the twin pillars of security and detente. A policy of detente is not an end in itself but an attempt to arrive at a sensible balance of interest between East and West. It could lead to military equilibrium at a lower level within the framework of disarmament and arms control. Kohl accused the USSR of trying to destroy the basis of such a policy of international understanding by an arms buildup and by extending its spheres of interest.

DIE WELT COMMENTS ON MOSCOW'S ATTEMPTS TO DIVIDE WEST

Oil Issue

DW031631 Bonn DIE WELT in German 3 Mar 80 p 6 DW

[Commentary signed KEM.: "Moscow's Bolt"]

[Text] The Soviet Union is turning tables and doing so in the most interesting temporal context. Giscard's visit to the Arabian Peninsula seemed to provide the suitable context for Moscow's latest bolt: It is not the Russian intervention in Afghanistan which threatens the oil supply of the Western world and above all of Europe but the "adventurous policy of the United States" in the Near and Middle East.

This brazen mistaking of cause and effect--after all, Carter's Gulf doctrine was the reply to the Soviet Afghanistan adventure--is followed by a clear statement, namely, the proposal concerning a West European-Russian conference on the security of the international access to the oil wells of Arabia. As clumsy as this move apparently aimed at the weak spot in a European-American divergence of interest seems, as logical is its starting point that is beyond propaganda.

For unlike the objective geopolitical threat in the Afghanistan coup, it manifests Soviet interest in the Middle East oil in a "legitimate" way, as it were; Moscow even thinks of a UN guarantee. At a time of extremely nervous receptiveness to signals from the Kremlin in Bonn and Paris, the intention of talking is gaining real significance. What would be indicated all the more urgently now is signals to Moscow that hopes for European unilateral actions within the Western Alliance are inappropriate and that it is not worthwhile to fish in troubled waters in an attempt to divert attention from Moscow's own cruel game in Afghanistan.

Soviet Bloc Disarmament Effort

[Commentary signed CGS.: "Synchronized"]

[Text] The "European Disarmament Conference," which a ranking neutral statesman, Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky, recently said is without value, has lately been propagandized not only by the Poles and Hungarians but also by SED [Socialist Unity Party] chief Honecker. This shows that this project is not at all a "lone Polish action" as had been occasionally assured after Gierek's party congress speech. Rather, what is involved is a synchronized Soviet action.

Mowcow's objective is clear: to divert attention from Afghanistan through an endless disarmament palaver, to mobilize the anti-American forces in Western Europe and to offer a "divisible" detente to the Federal Republic and to other West European countries. All Europe needs to do is pretend that nothing has happened.

We may make allowances for the fact that the Poles and Hungarians are clinging to this conference project as to a straw to save at least a last remnant of their own leeway for maneuver. However, the West, notwithstanding all sympathy for the precarious situation of the smaller East European states, must recognize above all the Soviets' strategic intention to smashing the American-European partnership.

EGYPT'S KHALIL ON GISCARD PALESTINIAN STATEMENT, MIDEAST

LD051207 Paris LE MONDE in French 5 Mar 80 pp 1, 4 LD

[Jacques Amalric and Eric Rouleau interview with Egyptian Prime Minister Mustafa Khalil in Paris: "The Peace Treaty With Israel Will Be Implemented Even if Negotiations on Autonomy for the West Bank and the Gaza Strip Fail"--date of interview not specified]

[Text] [Question] What do you think of Mr Giscard d'Estaing's stance in favor of the Palestinians' right to self-determination?

[Answer] We welcome any stance in favor of self-determination. However, we do not yet know whether or not the declaration of this principle will be followed by a plan for implementing it. Mr Giscard d'Estaing did not say how he will persuade the Israelis and Palestinians to accept his viewpoint and sit down at the negotiating table together. Who does the president of the republic regard as competent to speak on the Palestinians' behalf? How will he force Israel to accept the Palestinian interlocutor chosen? Unless we obtain satisfactory answers to these questions we have no alternative but to continue along the path which we laid down at Camp David. We hope that others will not raise obstacles in our path.

[Question] Last week President as-Sadat made statements virtually identical to those in the Franco-Kuwaiti communique. Have Cairo and Paris exchanged views on this subject?

[Answer] We keep France informed of our position. We do likewise with most EEC countries, Arab countries and countries in the socialist camp. Even the PLO, with which we do not maintain relations, knows essentially what we think either from direct information or through intermediaries. For instance, President Carter's special envoy Sol Linowitz met with Palestinian leaders during his visit to Israel....

[Question] Did France inform you in return of its intention to recognize the Palestinians' right to self-determination?

[Answer] No. We had no idea. We have decided to adopt the course of explaining our viewpoint and asking those who do not agree with it to suggest another solution. Unfortunately we have so far received no alternative solution from any European or Arab country. The Rejection Front states merely condemned the Camp David agreements. However, we think that the international situation makes a solution to the Palestinian problem urgent: It cannot be delayed or postponed. That is why we regard 26 May as a limit (note: limit set by the Camp David agreements for completing negotiations on autonomy for the West Bank and the Gaza Strip) and not just as a target. No other date can be fixed beyond 26 May. I repeat that the international situation is such that we cannot afford the luxury of postponement.

[Question] President as-Sadat has spoken of Palestinian self-determination in the context of negotiations on autonomy for the West Bank and the Gaza Strip while Mr Giscard d'Estaing seems to be referring to the direct exercise of that right. Is this a difference of opinion?

[Answer] First, I do not think it is possible to assess Mr Giscard d'Estaing's opinion at this stage. We still do not know whether he had the Camp David agreements in mind. [paragraph continues]

As far as we are concerned, we believe that the path laid down by Camp David consists of establishing a self-government authority freely elected by the people with the help of the Israelis, Egyptians, Americans and Jordanians (if the Jordanians agree to take part in this process) before starting negotiations to define the final status of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip. For the Palestinians this is a way of exercising their right to self-determination.

Three Categories of Palestinians

[Question] For Cairo, self-determination is aimed at the West Bank and Gaza Strip territories. Jerusalem maintains, however, that only the populations of these two entities can determine their future since the land on which they are established is part of the Jewish heritage.

[Answer] The Camp David agreements are clear to us. Autonomy is logically granted to the population and not to the territory. In our view there are three categories of Palestinians: Those who reside on the West Bank and in the Gaza Strip; those who reside elsewhere and have become citizens of their host countries, and finally, the emigres who have kept their nationality. Camp David states that only the inhabitants of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip will elect an autonomous authority.

[Question] How do you picture the autonomous Palestinian authority?

[Answer] In our view it should have three powers: legislative, executive and judiciary. That is the normal view of internal sovereignty. The negotiations which will follow later will be intended to extend to external sovereignty.

Of course there are differences of opinion. We told our Israeli interlocutors right from the start that the powers held by the military government in the occupied territories and by the civilian administration should be transfered to the autonomous authority in accordance with the Camp David agreements. However, we could not reach agreement on the full transfer of these powers. The Israelis mentioned their concern for security in almost all spheres even as regards public health, education, radio and television....

At our meeting in The Hague last week we succeeded in agreeing that the notion of security should only be applied to the spheres mentioned by the Camp David agreements. Therefore the Israeli forces would be withdrawn or redeployed: Outposts would be set up on the demarcation line between the West Bank and Jordan and this line would be monitored by mixed Israeli-Jordanian patrols to prevent the infiltration of subversive elements. Camp David also made provision for the creation of a police force with Palestinian, Jordanian and Egyptian liaison officers under the auspices of the autonomous authority. The Israelis object that such a system does not correspond to their defense concerns. However, I replied that the Camp David agreements did not give them the right to defend the West Bank.

[Question] What would happen if the Palestinians and Jordanians were to persist in their refusal to take part in this process?

[Answer] If we were to succeed in reaching a fair agreement on the transitional period it would be up to the Palestinians to accept it or reject it, to take part in the elections which will be held 1 month after the agreement is signed or refuse to take part in them. Our mission goes no further than that. We cannot take the Palestinians' place.

[Question] Have you received indications that the PLO would be prepared to accept such an agreement?

[Answer] We make a distinction between the PLO and the inhabitants of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip. However, I can tell you that we have received encouragement from the Palestinians and even from King Husayn.

[Question] Is it possible that you might pursue negotiations after 26 May if no agreement emerged before then? Is it true that there are plans for a meeting between Mr Carter, Mr Begin and Mr as-Sadat should the deadlock continue?

[Answer] Such a meeting could only take place after our differences had been reduced to the essential points. Moreover it is not necessary for the three presidents to meet immediately. There could first be one-to-one meetings between Carter and Begin or Carter and As-Sadat. Everything will depend on Israel and its good will. Our Israeli interlocutors' attitude when negotiations on autonomy are resumed in Cairo on 25 March will indicate whether they are really interested in an agreement or whether they are trying to stall. In any case we are determined to conclude negotiations before 26 May unless there is an imperative need to continue. That is why we are working day and night.

[Question] What would you do in case of a failure which even President Carter could not prevent?

[Answer] We do not envisage such a hypothesis: Mr Carter is officially committed to solving the Palestinian problem.

[Question] Is a deadlock on the Palestinian problem not likely to undermine the Israeli-Egyptian peace treaty and damage your bilateral relations with Jerusalem?

[Answer] Not in the least. Everything which has been written on this subject in the Israeli press is merely aimed at disturbing public opinion in that country. Whatever happens, our relations with Israel will be maintained and we will normalize them. It is very important that Israeli public opinion should know that the peace treaty will be respected and applied by Egypt. We will not give Israel justification for failing to do likewise. This treaty is binding on us all and the Israelis, like us, are obliged to respect it.

Settlements and Security

[Question] Some people in Israel say that you are waiting until you have recovered the last part of the Sinai to change your minds on the normalization of bilateral relations.

[Answer] It is completely irresponsible to say that. I must stress this. We cannot accept such statements. We are men of honor and of our word. The Israelis must recognize that. If some people think such things, the Egyptian people and government certainly do not. The Israelis have no right to attribute such intentions to us. During negotiations it is intolerable to say that you suspect the other side's behavior. It is intolerable, and nobody has the right to cast doubt among the public to give the "hawks" a pretext.

[Question] Have you noticed a change in Israeli public opinion?

[Answer] Yes, very definitely. I think public opinion in Israel is favorable to peace. Most Israelis would like peace. The only thing which concerns them is security and we do not think that the security problem should be confused with that of the territories. The occupied territories do not mean security. [paragraph continues]

When talking of security it is vital to think of all sides as specified in the Camp David agreements. The agreements never mention security for Israel alone. Security is mentioned as applying to all the sides. When the Israelis say that the security question is the most important question we say that the same is true of security for the Palestinians, Egyptians, Syrians and Jordanians. If you look at the past four wars you will see that all, aside from the fourth, were launched by Israel.

[Question] Do you think that the establishment of new colonies by Israel constitutes a violation of the Camp David agreements or was this question not dealt with by the agreements?

[Answer] First, the settlements have nothing to do with security. At present there are no more than 16,000 people in these colonies and some of them are only there on weekends. It is the army which insures security. The Israelis are confusing the problem of security with that of expansionism.

Mr Begin himself promised President Carter that he would freeze the settlements during the negotiation period. Unfortunately Mr Begin later claimed there had been a misunderstanding. However there was no misunderstanding....

[Question] Do you think that Egypt could break its isolation in the Arab world?

[Answer] We have always had close relations with the other Arab countries, and we do not accept the deterioration in those relations. However, Arab solidarity cannot mean accepting a resolution adopted by a majority of Arab countries which runs counter to our sovereignty.

[Question] How do you view the regional situation?

[Answer] At the moment the Arab world is threatened with destablization. Take Syria, for instance, which is trying to force Lebanon to sign a treaty and aline with it. We are well acquainted with Syria's policy. It rejected Camp David and did not condemn the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. To the west of our borders lies Libya which is trying to move closer to Algeria and which has intervened in Tunisia, Chad and Central Africa. To the south you have Ethiopia which is under Soviet influence. Libya, Ethiopia and Southern Yemen have treaties with the Soviet Union which might lead to the same situation as Afghanistan. If Southern Yemen and Northern Yemen are reunited that too will be achieved under Marxist influence. All this is a threat to the region, to Sudan, Oman and Saudi Arabia itself. The Soviet weapons sent to Ethiopia, Southern Yemen and Libya and the mercenaries--whether Cuban or East German--are playing a destablizing role. We do not intend to sit back and accept this. That would be a bad policy. We should take the initiative in stopping the intervention before it happens.

U.S., FRENCH 'REPUDIATION' OF ISRAEL VIEWED

[Editorial: "A Double Repudiation"]

[Text] On 2 March France and the United States inflicted on Israel a double repudiation, which cannot fail to be felt keenly by the majority of Israeli opinion.

Undoubtedly, the Israelis consider they have been "dumped" by the United States which voted in the Security Council for a resolution condemning the Jewish settlements in Gaza and the West Bank region. [paragraph continues]

Certainly, Washington never hid its disapproval of a "colonization" which "constitutes an obstacle (...) to the establishment of a global peace" in the Near East. But this is the first time that the U.S. delegate has voted with the most resolute opponents of the Jerusalem government, notably the communist countries, in a quite severe denunciation of Mr Menahem Begin's policy.

The conjunctions of this condemnation with Paris' new stance on the future of Palestine was immediately noted in Jerusalem, not without bitterness and anxiety. Indeed, since General de Gaulle's presidency, few Israelis have considered France a "friendly" country. But while France spoke many times in favor of restoring to the Arabs lands conquered in June 1967, it had used deliberately vague terms in talking of the Palestinians' "legitimate rights," and in particular of the right "to possess a homeland."

The "little phrase," which appears in the Franco-Kuwaiti communique recognizing the Palestinians' "right to self-determination," is a notable evolution in France's position. It could be fraught with consequences. Paris seems thus to have dismissed the Palestinians' "simple participation" in the Camp David negotiations "process" between Israel, Egypt and the United States which have, in practice, set themselves up as guardians of the people of Gaza and the West Bank. The Franco-Kuwaiti communique again questions Security Council Resolution 242, the basis of any settlement, by asserting that this is not a "refugee" problem--the term used in Resolution 242--but one of a "people which must possess (...) its own right to self-determination."

Mr Yasir 'Arafat would not have put any differently the principle which he has ceaselessly defended for years. The PLO, folllowed by practically all the Palestinians, claims nothing less than the recognition of the Palestinians' right to build their own independent state "in the whole of Palestine," especially on the West Bank and Gaza.

Mr Giscard d'Estaing has chosen the time and place well to announce his spectacular change of direction in French policy, while recalling other principles, outside of the communique, such as the recognition of all the states of the region. The Egyptian-Israeli-U.S. negotiations are marking time, and no one really believes that an agreement on the autonomy of the occupied territories will appear by 26 May as anticipated. Moreover, the French president's remarks are phrased to arouse broad, favorable echoes in a region populated by Palestinians who occupy key posts in the administration and the economy and which is also anxious at American "blindness." After the Iranian Revolution and the Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan, Persian Gulf leaders believe that the protection of their region depends more on a solution of the Palestinian problem than on a strengthening of the U.S. military disposition in that part of the world.

LE MONDE PRAISES UK ROLE IN RHODESIA; EXAMINES FUTURE

[Editorial: "The Guerrillas" Reward"]

[Text] Although they have surprised the opinion poll experts, the election results are, in their way, the logical result of the rebellion against the white government. Before the 4 January ceasefire, Mr Mugabe's guerrillas had infiltrated two-thirds of the territory. They have obtained around two-thirds of the votes and an absolute majority of seats. Mr Nkomo's armed supporters had appeared in the rest of the country; they obtained virtually the rest of the votes. The African nationalists who did not rebel against the minority European government--especially Bishop Muzorewa--were swept aside despite the financial and military support they received from Salisbury and Pretoria.

Therefore the election verdict has rewarded those who fought most fiercely against Mr Ian Smith. Mr Mugabe, the bete noire of the European colonialists, who advocates a socialism spurned by the whites, has been asked by British Governor Lord Soames to form independent Zimbabwe's first government. Therefore the operation launched by Lord Carrington last September to end 14 years of rebellion against the crown and a 7-year armed conflict has entered its most delicate phase: the real transfer of power from the white colonialists who rebelled against their mother country in 1965 to the black nationalist guerrillas.

In this respect the British deserve gratitude for having succeeded in silencing the guns and organizing elections in conditions generally deemed to be "free and honest." It was not an easy task, particularly since Lord Soames, installed in Salisbury without much preparation, could only count on a small Commonwealth contingent to support his action. Aside from that the British governor could do no more than rely on the good will of all those over whom he exercises his ephemeral pro-consulate.

The British, and also the South Africans, learned Mr Mugabe's victory soon enough to take the vital precautions together with Mr Mugabe for maintaining order after the election. In the past few days contact had been increased with the help of Mozambique, of which Mr Mugabe is the "protege," in order to allay the fears of Rhodesia's whites, reassure the South African giant and moderate possibly excessive expressions of enthusiasm by the blacks.

The moderation which Mr Mugabe himself has shown--particularly in stating that General Walls would remain as army chief and in guaranteeing the Europeans' interests--stresses just how concerned he is not to provoke irresponsible gestures either from white extremists or from the disappointed supporters of Mr Nkomo whom the elections have deprived of the key role everybody promised him. In the longer term, Mr Mugabe will also have to prevent a European exodus which could ruin Zimbabwe.

Therefore Mr Mugabe must logically preach reconciliation, advocate a government of union, giving one or two portfolios to Mr Smith's white Rhodesian front deputies. However, will such a policy, should it be confirmed, be enough to insure coexistence between forces which have waged a merciless struggle for many years? Southern Africa's future now depends on peace being firmly established in Zimbabwe.

MARCHAIS INTERVIEWED ON AFGHANISTAN, HUMAN RIGHTS

LD031112 Budapest MTI in English 0610 GMT 3 Mar 80 LD

[Excerpts] Budapest, March 2 (MTI)--"Our conviction remains that the international situation is basically advancing to the advantage of peace, independence and the forces struggling for socialism. We are witnessing the failure of imperialism from Iran to Nicaragua, from Angola to Mozambique. But just to defend their positions, imperialism has gone into a counter-defensive, trying to use every possible means except unleashing of a world war. The arms race is at the same time a huge source of profit to them while they are seeking to make the socialist countries brake their development through the military expenses entailed by the arms race. Such being the condition, the communist parties have to do everything possible to maintain the process of peace and detente vital for the peoples," said Georges Marchais, secretary-general of the French Communist Party, in an interview given to the NEPSZABADSAG correspondent in Paris. The central daily of the Hungarian Socialist Workers' Party carries the interview in its Sunday issue.

In connection with the allegations of NATO politicians and Western mass media that the recent heightening of international tensions is attributed to the Soviet Union's so-called interference in Afghanistan's internal affairs, Marchais pointed out:

"Tensions have been sharpening for a pretty long time, a fact to be associated with the imperialist decision to start a counter-attack because of their failures. As for Afghanistan, our party's position is known to all: Every government has a right to make agreements for the security of its country. For example, France is a member of the Atlantic treaty. In a televised statement this week, the president of the French Republic referred to article 5 of this treaty providing for mutual assistance to be given by the signatories in the event of outside attack. Why is France entitled to sign such a treaty, and why should the Afghan Government and people have no right to make agreement with the Soviet Union to defend themselves from outside attacks? We think if the president of the French Republic can declare his claim for solidarity among the capitalist states, the progressive revolutionary forces, too, have the right to be at one with each other.

Speaking of the activities of the PCF commission formed to protect human rights, Marchais, who is the chairman of this commission, said: The French Communist Party has founded this commission to give new momentum to the fight for human rights inside Franch and worldwide.

"When the imperialists proclaimed themselves as human rights champions, they did so to throw dust in the eyes of the masses, to make themselves appear as the advocators of these rights, and the communist parties and the socialist countries as the violators of them. We must not forget either: They are talking of individual rights alone. What is more, Carter and his aides, the ill-famed Trilateral Committee, defend the rights of solely those they call dissidents of the socialist societies.

"Our commission wants to show the truth, the difference between the capitalist and the socialist society. We intend to prove on a large-scale basis that the balance of the socialist countries is completely positive in regard of the human rights as well."

Marchais further said he had been authorized by his commission to put forward a proposal for the establishment of a human rights commission at the forthcoming session of the Europe Parliament to be held in March in Strassbourg. "It is time for this body to take care not only of people living in remoter parts of the world but begin to sweep before its own door in the first place. It should face the bleak picture shown by the human rights situation of the masses in its nine member countries," said Marchais. Next he turned to speak of his visit to the Soviet Union. Pointing out:

"My meeting with the Soviet comrades, which came about early this year following long and thorough preparations, enabled us to sign an important statement which opened up a new perspective in our parties' relations. We established during the talks: We share the endeavour to join hands in realizing the common, basic goals, including the struggle for peace, disarmament and international cooperation. This is especially important today when internationalist solidarity has become imperative for all of us."

Concluding the interview, Marchais described the contacts between the French Communist Party and the Hungarian Socialist Workers' Party as excellent, stressing:

"We are in agreement as to our views of the international situation and the tasks faced in the struggle for disarmament and peace. We have the same desire that the cooperation between our countries continue and develop to the good of our peoples. I am convinced that our contacts, the consultations between our parties should be further boosted. None of us can do without discussing the questions posed by life in a debate which rests on the basis of scientific socialism and is devoid of any sort of dogmatism. Our party was pleased to receive the HSWP [MSZMP] invitation for its 12th Congress. I personally also count on having the opportunity in the foreseeable future to meet again with the leader of your party, our old friend, Janos Kadar," said Georges Marchais in his interview to NEPSZABADSAG.

Comment on 'Brezhnev Proposal'

AU0411429 Budapest NEPSZABADSAG in Hungarian 2 Mar 80 p 5 AU

[Interview by NEPSZABADSAG editiorial committee member Ferenc Varnai and Paris correspondent Laszlo Rozsa in Paris with PCF Secretary General Georges Marchais: "NEPSZABADSAG Interview with PCF Secretary General Georges Marchais on the French and the World Situation"--date not given]

[Excerpts] [Question] What is your opinion of Leonid Brezhnev's proposal of last week on conditions for the withdrawal of Soviet troops [from Afghanistan]

[Answer] Afghanistan's Government requested assistance from the Soviet Union because the United States, China and Pakistan had intervened in the country's domestic affairs. Consequently, what Leonid Brezhnev proposes is just. These countries should stop intervening and should guarantee that they will give up intervening in the Afghan people's domestic affairs once and for all and then the reason the Afghan Government was obliged to avail itself of the Soviet Government's assistance would cease.

We are pursuing a principled attitude in this matter; we oppose the exporting of the revolution, but we most resolutely oppose the exporting of counterrevolution as well. All people--the Afghan people as well--are entitled to choose the social system in which they wish to live without any intervention from outside.

We do not accept the explanations to the effect that an agreement has been reached in Yalta near the end of World War II about where the boundary lies between capitalism and socialism. Such allegations are aimed at making us acquiesce to living under capitalist exploitation until the end of the world. Well, there was not and there could not have been any such agreement. Although we accept the need for peaceful coexistence and the elimination of war from the path of settling disputed issues between different social systems, we are not willing to acquiesce to some social status quo.

We are against the policy of military blocs. Although NATO and its military organizations have been established and, in response, the European socialist countries formed the Warsaw Pact military organization, we adopt a position in favor of a simultaneous liquidation of both military blocs and in favor of disarmament. It is generally known: In the interests of the multinatonal trusts, the imperialists are forcing armament on the world.

GREMETZ SCORES GISCARD ANALYSIS OF INTERNATIONAL SITUATION

[Unattributed report on French television Channel One statement by PCF Politburo member Gremetz: "Mr Giscard d'Estaing Is Fundamentally in Agreement With the United States"]

[Text] Maxime Gremetz was yesterday invited to express the opinion of the Communists on Mr Valery Giscard d'Estaing's statements on his government's international policy. Participating in the same broadcast were Mr de Lipkowski (Rally for the Republic), Mr Pinton (Union for French Democracy) and Mr Jospin (Socialist Party).

"I consider," Maxime Gremetz said in particular, "that the president of the republic spoke correctly yesterday when he spoke specifically of the consensus. He said quite rightly: In foreign policy there is the PCF on one side and all the rest on the other.

"Of course, I believe this and on the basis of the facts.

"What is our opinion? We strongly criticize this French policy. It is not an independent policy. Everyone rejoiced, the three organizations have rejoiced at the Franco-German statement. Now we have considered this Franco-German statement. We, the Communists, consider it an act with grave implications for French independence. Mr Giscard d'Estaing is accepting that Germany plays the leading role, a hegemonist role in Europe and also accepts a second-rate role for France.

"As for the wish for European, supranational intergration, well, you are all in agreement on that: We are not, because French independence is put at risk.

"Then again, with regard to Carter and the United States, this is Schmidt's and Mr Valery Giscard d'Estaing's joint allegiance. We need do no more than remember what the president of the republic said about the United States when analyzing the international situation: "We agree on objectives,' he said. 'What we do not agree on is the means.' Well, we do not agree either with the analysis or with the objectives.

"This is, in fact, a strengthening of Atlanticism.

"I add, the French Government and Mr V. Giscard d'Estaing want to 'retrieve' the nonalined movement. But I want to draw your attention to the fact that there has been no French initiative in the struggle against hunger, for a new economic order and for the development of the Third World. On the contrary, France has sided with the United States and with all the capitalist countries again to say no, no, no, to all the claims put forward by the nonalined movement.

"And then 'there is solidarity,' the president said. Well, on the question of solidarity it must be stated that the Giscard government never sides with the peoples struggling for their independence, their sovereignty and for their dignity.

"The president of the republic stated yesterday: 'We do not disapprove of, and we have not criticized, the actions taken by the United States to strengthen itself.' The French president has thus given a clear 'yes' to the U.S. missiles that NATO has decided to deploy in Europe. In this case let there be no talk of a policy of peace and disarmament.

"I add that it is his clear intention to justify his interventions in Africa; contrary to the peoples' will to be free, independent and sovereign."

L'HUMANITE QUESTIONS U.S. SUPPORT FOR AFGHAN NEUTRALITY

LD051113 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 28 Feb 80 p 9 LD

[Michel Strulovici commentary: "Guarantee or 'Pax Americana'"]

[Text] Has the U.S. President been touched by an act of grace or is he preparing to relaunch international tension while brandishing the olive branch? The question follows from Mr Carter's statements that "the United States is ready to join with Afghanistan's neighbors to guarantee a genuine neutrality of this country if the Soviet forces withdraw rapidly."

An indirect answer, but an answer nonetheless to Leonid Brezhnev's 22 February proposals which emphasized in particular: "If the United States and Afghanistan's neighbors guarantee that there will be no interference in that country's internal affairs, then military assistance will no longer be needed."

However, note should be taken of Washington's insistence, identical to the Nine's, on the nature of the government to be installed in Kabul. Mr Carter declares himself a supporter of "Afghanistan's genuine neutrality." Are its terms to be laid down at the White House?

Such a claim, arrogating to itself the right to decide Afghan policy from Washington, makes the U.S. President's remarks suspect, to say the least. We seem to be watching an operation intended for international public opinion, which is justifiable concerned at the sound of American boots.

A joint Indo-Algerian plan of action on Afghanistan confirmed this concern yesterday when the two countries asserted their opposition to any attempt at turning the nonalined movement into an anti-Soviet force.

Many facts corroborate the deliberate choice by the United States and its allies of a policy of aggravated tension: The decision to install new U.S. nuclear missiles in West Europe, the sabotage of the SALT II accords and the marked increase in Western military budgets.

The United States and their allies are simultaneously staging major maneuvers from Norway to Korea via the Indian and Pacific oceans!

Mr Carter's remarks on Afghan "neutrality" are open to question when Washington organizes the Pakistani dictatorship's fantastic overarming, including the granting of the nuclear weapon, and when you also realize what support General Zia is granting the Afghan counterrevolutionaries, with U.S. assistance.

When Mr Carter was lowering the tone, the NATO commander in chief, U.S. General Rogers was asserting in London "that an aggression excused is an aggression encouraged," and he scolded the NATO members without reply for what he called "an equivocal resolution which could well spur Soviet adventurism still further."

Practice remains the criterion of the sincerity of the intentions of the United States and their allies.

POLICE HALT CGT MARCH ON BARRE'S OFFICE

NC051207 Paris AFP in English 1146 GMT 5 Mar 80 NC

[Text] Paris, March 5 (AFP)--Police today stopped several thousand trade unionists, some dragging chains, reaching Premier Raymond Barre's office during a free speech demonstration in the French capital.

The demo was organized by the General Labour Confederation (CGT) after a "free speech" programme featuring the CGT was banned on television. Union Secretary Georges Seguy said the programme was to have included details on the suicide of an union official at a motor factory.

The march on Mr Barre's office, the Hotel Matignon, came after the premier turned down a meeting with Mr. Seguy.

The Communist-led CGT said 8,000 people took part in today's demonstration. They were from Renault, Air France, teaching, journalism and other sectors.

CYPRIOT PRESIDENT, FOREIGN MINISTER VISIT ROME

AU060833 Rome ANSA in English 0810 GMT 6 Mar 80 AU

[Text] Rome, March 6 (ANSA)--Italy has promised that it will put pressure on Turkey to accept a solution to the problem of Cyprus with the creation of a federated state, Cypriot Foreign Minister Nicos Rolandhis said in a press conference here last night.

Rolandhis accompanied Cypriot President Spiros Kiprianou for a two-day visit to the Italian head of state Sandro Pertini. On Tuesday they had talks with Premier Francesco Cossiga and with Foreign Minister Attilio Ruffini. Today they will be received in a private audience by Pope John Paul II.

Rolandhis said that the Western world has the means to put pressure on Turkey which it supplies with billions of dollars in aid and weapons. "This gives (the West) manoeuvering room and it behooves it to use it also because a solution of the Cyprus problem can lead to a rapprochement between Greece and Turkey", the foreign minister said.

Nearly half the island of Cyprus, which is a non-aligned country, has been occupied since 1974 by Turkish troops and, according to Greek Cypriots, the Ankara government wants to perpetuate this situation.

Rolandhis added that Ruffini also promised that Italy will back Cyprus request for renewal of association agreements with the European Economic Community (EEC).

DC ELECTS PICCOLI SECRETARY, FORLANI CHAIRMAN

AU060838 Rome ANSA in English 0805 GMT 6 Mar 80 AU

[Excerpt] Rome, March 6 (ANSA)--The Christian Democrat Party (DC) National Council elected Flaminio Piccoli the new party secretary and Arnaldo Forlani chairman in its meeting here last night. The choice of Piccoli and Forlani confirms the division between the two groupings which emerged in the recent "DC" National Congress.

The two groupings, which are divided over the thorny issue of Communist entry in the government, were unable to breach [as received] a united solution after a day of feverish encounters.

The faction around outgoing Secretary Benigno Zaccagnini and the faction around former Premier Giulio Andreotti--which are flexible towards the Communist Party (PC)--decided to cast blank ballots in the voting for both the secretary and the party chairman.

MINISTERIAL POSTS RESHUFFLED, NEW APPOINTMENT MADE

[Mogens Auning report: "Jorgensen Reshuffles Government"]

[Excerpt] The question of who was to succeed the late Niels Matthiasen as culture minister was resolved yesterday afternoon.

On the advice of Prime Minister Anker Jorgensen, a royal decree prescribed that Minister Without Portfolio Lise Ostergaard should take over the Ministry of Culture.

At the same time a new environment minister was appointed to replace Ivar Norgaard, who has hitherto occupied the posts of economy minister and environment minister. The new environment minister is Erik Holst, 57, Social Democrat Folketing member for the Storstroms District.

Lise Ostergaard's appointment as culture minister means that Foreign Minister Kjeld Olesen is solely responsible for his ministry, where Lise Ostergaard had the very demanding post of minister for developing countries affairs. However, Lise Ostergaard will not lose contact completely with foreign policy. As well as culture minister she has been appointed minister for Nordic affairs, a completely new ministerial position in the government.

SOVIET PROPOSAL TO RENEW BARENTS SEA TALKS ACCEPTED

LD050941 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 28 Feb 80 p 12 LD

[Olav Trygge Storvik report: "Talks Following Soviet Request"]

[Excerpts] On 22 February the Foreign Minister received a message from the Soviet Union proposing a resumption of talks on the Continental Shelf demarcation line in the Barents Sea. The Norwegian Embassy in Moscow was instructed to inform the Soviet authorities that the proposal has been accepted. The talks will take place in April, this time in Moscow.

Commenting on the Soviet initiative, Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund said:

"Our departure point for these talks has been the median line principle, but since 1977 we have said that we are willing to reach a compromise solution. Whether the Soviet Union is also willing to reach a compromise solution will emerge during the coming talks."

USSR's Turn To Invite

"It was the Soviet Union's turn to invite us and we for our part have long declared ourselves willing to send a delegation to Moscow at any appropriate time suggested by the Soviet side," Knut Frydenlund told the NORSK TELEGRAMBYRA agency.

"We are interested in seeing a clarification of the unresolved border issue in the Barents Sea," he continued. The last foreign policy report to the Storting since the invasion in Afghanistan stated that we are prepared to conduct talks on unresolved problems in the northern regions despite the aggravated international situation.

"The Soviet side is requested to propose a more specific time within the established schedule," Frydenlund said.

Nordli Reiteration

LD050943 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 1 Mar 80 p 18 LD

[Unattributed report: "Nordli: 'Willingness to Compromise in Northern Areas'"]

[Text] "We must view the Soviet initiative on pursuing the negotiations on the Barents Sea demarcation line as an expression of the Soviet desire to keep the specific issues of the northern areas outside the exacerbation which has recently taken place in the international situation." This was said by Prime Minister Odvar Nordli in a speech to the Amli chapter of the Labor Party on Friday.

"As regards the choice of time for negotiations the Soviet side must have assessed the context, both concerning the international situation and other outstanding problems in Norwegian-Soviet relations. I will not indulge in speculations on this aspect of the matter," Nordli said.

The prime minister was pleased with the Soviet proposal which might perhaps prove to imply a willingness to compromise on the Soviets' part. "We will see during the coming meeting for negotiation. We must hope that there is enough willingness to reach a negotiated solution which is satisfactory to both sides," Nordli said.

"Ever since 1977 we on the Norwegian side have expressed our willingness to cooperate in finding a compromise solution between the Soviet Union's proposal based on a median line," the prime minister said.

The talks will begin in April after the government has accepted the Soviet Union's proposal of negotiations. The negotiations on the demarcation line have been in progress since 1970, and the last formal meetings for negotiation were held in Oslo in December 1976. It is the practice to hold the meetings alternately in Oslo and Moscow.

OLYMPIC COMMITTEE LIKELY TO DEFY GOVERNMENT ON MOSCOW GAMES

Decision Deferred

LD042214 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1920 GMT 4 Mar 80 LD

[By Ray Dye, Alan Jones and Mark Garrod, PA staff reporters]

[Text] Britain's Olympic sports chiefs today put back for three weeks a decision on whether to accept the invitation to take part in this summer's Moscow games. But when they meet to make a final decision on March 25 they are almost certain to defy the government's call for a boycott.

After a two-and-a-half hour meeting of the British Olympic Association [BOA] in London, attended by representatives of 26 sports, Chairman Sir Denis Follows said: "The national Olympic committee confirmed today that it is its present intention to send a British team to Moscow. However, we will defer the reply to the invitation until after the next meeting on March 25."

The meeting will be held three days after British Olympic officials have met representatives of the Western European Olympic committees in Brussels. Sir Denis said: "It would have been impolite, injudicious perhaps, to take a firm decision without consultation."

Asked whether he felt Britain would ultimately accept the invitation, he replied: "On the basis of what has been said today, the answer is yes." The BOA chairman said that one of the reasons for deferring the decision was that some of the governing bodies of the sports represented had not had the opportunity to make a firm decision in their own right.

On the question of outside pressures which have built up on the BOA to accept the invitation, Sir Denis said: "The committee inevitably had at the back of their minds the political situation. But it did not allow political thoughts or persuasion to influence the decision. Today's vote was not unanimous and a number of people were anxious to accept the invitation immediately."

He said that about threequarters of those present were in favour of deferring. But Sir Denis confirmed that the British team could go to Moscow without certain sports. He mentioned no names, but it is known that three bodies--the British Equestrian Federation, the Amateur Rowing Association and the Joint Shooting Committee--have indicated that they may be prepared to go along with a government call for a boycott.

Referring to the present uncertainty, Sir Denis said: "We are conscious of the need to reassure competitors of our intention to participate. These people are subject to great mental, if not physical, pressures and we have tried to remove that feeling of apprehension."

Sir Denis added that the BOA also had an obligation to businesses that had entered into agreements with them. "We want people to know we still need a great deal of money to make sure our boys and girls are properly equipped to go to Moscow."

Sir Denis also said that there was no question of the BOA going against the wishes of the government because International Olympic Committee rules specified there should be no "external pressures". He said: "What has been said has been mulled over, but any pressures from the government did not enter into our considerations."

Sir Denis said every member of the committee was aware of their obligations, and added: "As far as I could ascertain today, Russian aggression was universally condemned. But there is a very marked difference of opinion as to whether sport should be used as the front line means to halt a regime which any other country doesn't like."

Delegates to the meeting declined to comment as they left, but one said that he was very unhappy that a firm decision had not been taken.

Opposition sport spokesman Mr Denis Howell said: "I fully appreciate the unprecedented political pressures placed upon the BOA and their natural desire not to hinder any peace initiative which may have a chance of success.

"In these circumstances I am sure they are right to say that this is not a matter which can be left over for any length of time. To do so would be monstrously unfair to the peace of minds and commitment of purpose which is absolutely essential for any sports competitor hoping to achieve distinction in the Olympic games."

Mrs Thatcher said in the Commons today that to continue to hold the Olympics in Moscow would be taken as "a tremendous feat of propaganda" for the Soviet Government.

A group of about a dozen demonstrators from the Freedom Society, led by their Deputy Chairman Norris McWhirter, staged a placard-waving demonstration before today's BOA meeting, appealing to the members to support a boycott.

Thatcher Urges Delay

LD041931 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1835 GMT 4 Mar 80 LD

[Text] As the British Olympic Association today deferred a decision to accept an invitation to the Moscow Olympics, the prime minister urged delay before commiting Britain's sportsmen and women to go.

Tory backbencher Mr Robert Dunn (Dartford) said in the Commons that all MPs would be disappointed by the decision of some Olympic athletes not to boycott the Moscow games.

Mrs Thatcher told him: "The government can only advise and people are free to make their own decisions. I hope there will be some delay before a final decision is made."

TURKISH CYPRIOT LEADER ADDRESSES PARLIAMENTARIANS

TA041828 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1530 GMT 4 Mar 80 TA

[Text] President Rauf Denktas has repeated that the Turkish Cypriot community could not make concessions concerning its status as the cofounder of the Cyprus Republic. Denktas was speaking at a dinner in his honor at the House of Commons in London given by British parliamentarians who sympathize with the Turkish Cypriot views.

In an address made during the dinner party, Denktas briefed the British parliamentarians on the latest developments in Cyprus. Denktas noted that the continuation of attacks both in Cyprus and abroad against the Turkish Cypriot community by the Greek Cypriot side--which has usurped the partnership government since 1963, acting under the guise of the legal Cypriot government--constituted a large obstacle in the resumption of the intercommunal talks.

Pointing out that any discussions the British Government held with the Greek Cypriot administration on the issue of the bases would contradict the 1960 agreements, Denktas said that by engaging in such discussions the United Kingdom--which is a guarantor state--would take a stand against the Turkish Cypriot community.

Recalling that the existance of two separate, equal and autonomous governments in Cyprus had been acknowledged during the Geneva conference, Denktas said that anyone who desires the solution of the Cyprus problem must accept this tangible truth.

It has been announced that the British parliamentarians received the points made by President Denktas with understanding.

TURKISH CHIEF OF STAFF ON VISIT; WILL REVIEW ARMED FORCES

TA041603 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1400 GMT 4 Mar 80 TA

[Text] TRT London correspondent Ozur Sevisler sent the following report in connection with the visit by chief of the [Turkish] General Staff Gen Kenan Evren to Britain:

[Begin recording] Chief of the General Staff General Evren, who is in London as the official guest of the chief of the British Defense Staff, Admiral Terence (Lewin), has started his contacts. During his stay in Britain, General Evren will visit ground, air and naval units of the British Armed Forces.

Today General Evren attended a briefing at the British Defense Ministry. The British minister of state for defense was also present at the briefing. Military aid to Turkey within the framework of NATO was discussed at the briefing.

In a statement after the briefing, Defense Ministry spokesman Martin Helm told the TRT that topics discussed were not determined beforehand, but that details of military aid to be extended to Turkey within NATO were reviewed in detail.

Special significance is being attached to visits General Evren is to make to various tactical air force headquarters. A spokesman for the British Royal Air Force said that during his visits to these headquarters, General Evren would witness various demonstrations to be held for him and would familiarize himself with military arms and equipment produced by the United Kingdom.

General Evren will leave for Norway from Britain on 9 March. [end recording]

GOVERNMENT HAILS RHODESIA ELECTION RESULTS

NC061150 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1000 GMT 6 Mar 80 NC

[Text] The Cyprus Government has expressed satisfaction over the election results in Zimbabwe and approves of the decision of its elected leadership to join the nonalined movement and the Commonwealth. An official statement says that the election results represent the free and democratic demonstration of the will of the people of Zimbabwe and that the Cyprus Government shares the joy of the people of Zimbabwe and hails the new independent republic.

PARLIAMENTARY CHAIRMAN WANTS REVIVAL OF U.S. PLAN

NC060847 Nicosia CYPRUS MAIL in English 6 Mar 80 pp 1,3 NC

[Excerpts] Mr Alexis Galanos, chairman of the foreign relations parliamentary committee, at a "Lions" gathering at Paralimni last night, said that the Greek Cypriot approach to the American plan of November last should be reconsidered if the plan was still on the table.

Mr Galanos has repeated his view that he disagreed with the rejection of the American plan. "The American plan should have been approached differently by the Greek Cypriot side", he said.

He said that reference to the plan was made in the Waldheim formula and he hopes that this would be discussed in any resumed talks without implying by this that the U.N. resolutions should be ignored. The American plan could be discussed with reservations as to its negative points, he said.

Mr Galanos said the Greek Cypriot side could not reject initiatives from the West while anticipating the West to assist in a settlement.

Mr Galanos underlined that he supports President Kiprianou and dismissed as wrong the view that he was acting in opposition to him. "I am offering him my advice as a real friend and not as a flatterer", Mr Galanos said.

PAPER SAYS WALDHEIM'S INITIATIVE FAILING; TURKS BLAMED

NC061130 Nicosia ELEVTHERI KIPROS in Greek 6 Mar 80 pp 1, 7 NC

[Excerpts] Authoritative diplomatic circles in Nicosia disclosed yesterday that the contacts of UN Secretary General Waldheim and his two representatives with the two sides so far have once again established that the Turkish side is not prepared to sit at the negotiating table, despite the confusion and even optimism that was momentarily cultivated about the future of Dr Waldheim's new initiative.

At the same time, our information is that the Turkish side has no intention of resuming talks for a Cyprus solution that would be based on the principles and framework of past agreements--the Kiprianou-Denktas and Makarios-Denktas agreements with the four guidelines.

"So far the Turkish side has been trying to make the Greek Cypriot side appear responsible for the deadlock in the efforts to solve the problem. It has also been trying to make international opinion believe that it posesses good will and is willing to hold substantive and constructive talks. But the stand of the Turkish Cypriot side was ascertained from the contents of the document Rauf Denktas submitted to the UN secretary general's special representative in Cyprus, Mr Galindo-Pohl. This document, in essence, contains the views of the Turkish side against the new formula that Mr Waldheim had submitted to the two sides for the resumption of the talks."

The same circles also disclosed that in the Turkish Cypriot leader's document--and in his discussions with Mr Galindo-Pohl--the Turkish side insists that the Greek side accept in advance: the Turkish terms for a bizonal form of solution, the demand that the expediencies of what Denktas calls the security of the Turkish Cypriots have priority over the guidelines--which as is known concern the right of settlement, property and movement--and finally the demand that the last UN General Assembly resolution on Cyprus be publicly renounced.

With these and other terms submitted by the Turkish side it is clear that the Turkish side is working for a camouflaged confederation of two separate states: that is, in the final analysis a partitionist solution.

The same authoritative reports concluded: "The Greek side has also made it clear to Mr Galindo-Pohl, and through him to Mr Waldheim, that it insists on the unconditional resumption of the talks and that it rejects every attempt which aims at prejudging the form of the solution in accordance with Turkish aspirations."

TFSC COMMITTEE REJECTS JOINT PARTICIPATION IN OLYMPICS

TA051255 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1215 GMT 5 Mar 80 TA

[Text] The Turkish Cypriot General Sports Committee has rejected a Greek Cypriot call for joint participation of the Turkish and Greek Cypriot athletes in the Moscow Olympics. In a written statement today, the committee said the so-called Cyprus Sports Organization which is purely a Greek Cypriot institution has no right or authority to speak or act on behalf of all Cypriot athletes under this false and self-assumed identity.

It stressed that it was the Greek Cypriot community which had expelled Turkish Cypriot athletes from sports grounds by force of arms and which had tried to prevent the development of the Turkish Cypriot community in sports and refused to respect its rights in this field. The very same people were now proposing the participation of the Turkish Cypriots in the Olympic games under the umbrella of the Greek Cypriot sports organization.

It added: We consider this offer part of the Greek Cypriot propaganda aimed at misleading world public opinion. The committee also said that if the Greek Cypriots were sincere in their call they should immediately dissolve the so-called sports organization and give their organization its real identity. They should also stop using sports as an instrument of propaganda and accept the principle of full equality between Turkish and Greek Cypriots in this respect.

TFSC OPPOSITION PARTY STATEMENT ON INTERCOMMUNAL TALKS

TA051251 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1215 GMT 5 Mar 80 TA

[Text] The opposition Populist Party has said that the resumption of the Cyprus intercommunal talks would be meaningless if the Greek Cypriot side continued to seek a Cyprus settlement at international forums. In a written statement signed by the chairman of the Nicosia district committee, Mr Kozoglu, the party said that Greek Cypriot efforts in that field underminded the resumption of the intercommunal talks.

Stressing that a settlement was possible only through the intercommunal talks, it called on the Greek Cypriot side to come to the conference table in good faith. The party repeated its view that a settlement could only be realistic if it was based on a bicommunal, bizonal, independent and nonalined federal system of government which could also safeguard the freedom and rights of the Turkish Cypriot community.

REPORTS CONFIRM PROGRESS IN RELATIONS WITH SOVIET UNION

'No Change in Agreements'

AT051445 Athens I AVYI in Greek 5 Mar 80 p 6 AT

[Text] Minister of Coordination Mitsotakis stated yesterday that there is no change in agreements with the Soviet Union. He added that "things agreed upon are proceeding smoothly despite the fact that there are certain petty differences." On Friday Mitsotakis will meet with head of the Soviet commercial delegation in Athens (Novakovsky) to discuss the promotion of relations between the two countries.

As is well known, during Prime Minister Karamanlis' visit to Moscow in October it was agreed that an alumina plant be established in Greece with equipment from the Soviet Union, that 300 million kWh of electricity be supplied by the Soviet Union in 1980, that natural gas be bought and that the quantity of crude oil supplied to us by the Soviet Union be increased from 1.2 to 2 million tons yearly.

Neorion Shipyards Prospering

AT051250 Athens NEWS in English 4 Mar 80 p 4 AT

[Text] The Russians are queuing to get their ships repaired at the Neorion shipyards on the Island of Syros--and the Greek Government seems to be welcoming the influx of foreign exchange, according to press sources Monday afternoon. While the United States has decided to freeze trade relations with the Soviets after the invasion of Afghanistan, this has not affected Greek-Soviet trade relations which appear to be on the upsurge and supported by both Greek and Soviet government officials.

Industry and Energy Minister Evert recently denied reports stating that Greek-Soviet relations were experiencing "problems." He said that the opposite is true, and as press sources revealed, he probably had his eye on the 2 million tons of crude oil promised to Greece by the USSR after Premier Karamanlis' visit to Moscow last year.

The director of Neorion shipyards is currently in the Soviet Union for talks with the Russians on increased cooperation and to sign an agreement for the repair of eight more Soviet vessels. The decision by Neorion shipyards had brought opposition from certain NATO circles who objected to the Soviets being allowed "a foothold" in the Mediterranean.

RIZOSPASTIS SCORES GOVERNMENT DESIRE FOR RETURN TO NATO

[Unattributed article: "Antinational Haggling"]

[Text] The government does not want to learn its lesson from the new setback caused by the Rogers plan. It feigns ignorance about the public's intentions. It does not understand where its steps lead and it always leaves open the door of negotiations with NATO. It seeks with even greater persistence the "new" ideas which will "sweeten the pill" of reconfinement. The comings and goings of Rogers and his assistants have begun again. Backstage consultations have burgeoned and the NATO "brains" have again begun making proposals, "new" thoughts and "new" plans.

Justifiably, everyone asks: For what purpose? Will the essence of the return to NATO change? Will the serious concessions that the return to NATO inevitably entails be restricted? All these things are granted and unchangeable from the beginning. Whether with this or with the other "formula," reconfinement will have the same end result: The fundamental undermining of national interests and complete submission to the will of foreign guardians. [paragraph continues]

Therefore, it cannot be an act of "one-time significance," an "independent" event whose importance will begin and end with a simple "reconnection" of Greece's military mechanism to NATO. Its ramifications will go much farther because in its turn it will open the way to unacceptable commitments over the entire spectrum of the area's problems--especially in the Aegean and Cyprus; to the complete change of our country into a NATO bridgehead in the Balkans the Middle and the Near East; and to the permanent undermining of detente and security in the area with Greece in the sad and disastrous role of "forceful" underminer.

The government is not unaware of the dimensions of the venture it has undertaken. It has had the opportunity many times to be informed of what its Western allies "want," what "facilities" they seek and are determined to secure by all means in the Aegean, the Balkans and Cyprus. It knows the role that is in store for our country and the heavy consequences of its possible acceptance.

And here lies the difficulty--its "problem." How will things "be managed," how will the irreconcilables be reconciled: Greece's complete return to the NATO pen with all resultant repercussions and the keeping of our people on the sidelines as passive spectators of the government task.

The government's goals lack realism and wisdom because no hand, however dexterous it may seem will be able to tighten the NATO rope without punishment on the neck of the Greek people who are struggling to finally remove it. Even at this late hour the government should become aware of its immense responsibilities and follow the voice of reason, putting "a final stop" to the illegal haggling with NATO. The Greek people will never accept the new ties which are methodically being forged in the dark backstage.

I VRADHINI REPORTS SERIOUS RIFT EMERGING IN KKE

AT051409 Athens I VRADHINI in Greek 5 Mar 80 p 14 AT [Text] The crisis which has erupted in the KKE is more than a simple protest by 200 or 300 former cadres, members of the KNE [Communist Youth of Athens] Central Committee, and its principal target is the "line of Kharilaos Florakis" who is the faithful representative of Moscow's views. This was learned after the I AVYI revelation yesterday and the clarifications that were given by the "group's" representatives in a letter to newspapers.

After mentioning that the publication of excerpts from their text "runs contrary to political and journalistic propriety," they add in the letter: "We want to confirm that the procedure of negotiations and endorsement of the text continues and that soon it will be possible to publish it responsibly at the initiative of its editors."

This letter confirms the existence of a "dissident group" and its declaration which is increasingly being signed by other cadres. It also confirms that this group wants to appear publicly when it has guaranteed enough signatures.

There are reports that the principal target of the group is KKE Secretary General Kharilaos Florakis and the docile pro-Soviet line he follows in both Greek issues (the Aegean and so forth) and international issues (Afghanistan).

The same reports mention that among those who have signed the text are candidate deputies of the KKE who had submitted candidacies in areas they were not expected to be elected and others who returned to KKE and KNE--despite their differences--in order to impose their viewpoints.

MILLIYET CALLS FOR INDEPENDENT NATIONAL DEFENSE CONCEPT

NC060900 Istanbul MILLIYET in Turkish 4 Mar 80 p 2 NC

["Viewpoint" column by Mumtaz Soysal: "Thinking Without Getting Angry"]

[Excerpts] Angering reports have again started coming from Washington. The United States is creating difficulties in delivering the arms which Turkey had requested. It is reported that the American authorities are advancing a host of excuses for delaying the sale of F-4 planes, which are becoming outmoded and even F-104 planes, which are completely outmoded. It is also reported that Turkey has postponed the signing of the joint defense cooperation agreement, and will not sign until President Carter gives a written assurance as to what type of arms will be provided and when.

It is high time to get angry with the United States. But before getting angry, it is also time to think calmly. Turkey cannot depend for its defense, and for the equipment required for this defense, solely on a single source, which changes its attitude according to the fluctuation of world conjectures. This is what happens when you set out with an ally who says: "No one deserves aid more than the Turks" when tension mounts and, when tension subsides: "If you are armed, the Greeks become restless."

Nowadays, creating alarming situations for everybody is the monopoly of the two superpowers. Events become important if they wish them to be seen important, otherwise no one cares. Those in control of big news agencies and the press are capable of straining or ameliorating conditions. In other words, whether or not Turkey will be able to get the arms it needs, is to a large extent determined by the way they present events happening around the world.

Moreover, it is doubtful whether the arms "given" to Turkey under such circumstances are really the arms needed for its defense. That is why "the concept of national defense," once so much talked about but later dropped, is now of more importance than ever before. Instead of remaining dependent on a worldwide strategy, Turkey could develop a defense strategy in line with its needs, its own position, its own situation and the characteristics of its own people. Such a Turkey would be capable of looking to the future with greater confidence, no matter what shape conditions and conjectures assume.

Furthermore, when such a defense concept is developed, Turkey would be able to secure a wider arena of maneuverability in international economic and political relations. It is understood that the greatest factor compelling Turkey, after only a few weak trials, to revert to its policy of "inspiring the West with confidence," stems from the fact that it strictly depends on the West for its defense requirements. From this point of view, we find it difficult to understand why the present main opposition leader who for a long time championed the idea of a multilateral foreign policy, has given up the "national defense concept."

Before we express anger at the United States and without resorting to demagogy, we must calmly ponder over the possibilities of developing a national defense concept.

IMF DELEGATION CONCLUDES CONTACTS IN ANKARA

TA052021 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 5 Mar 80 TA

[Text] The IMF delegation has concluded its contacts in Ankara. During its 8-day stay in Ankara the IMF delegation, headed by the Fund's chief of the Turkish desk, Charles Woodward, met with officials from the Finance Ministry, the Turkish Central Bank and the State Planning Organization.

During the meetings the IMF delegation was given technical information on the recent economic measures and the 1980 fiscal budget. The new stand-by [last word in English] agreement to be signed between Turkey and the IMF was also discussed during the meetings. Technical details concerning the stand-by agreement are expected to be determined during talks to be held next month. Finance Ministry officials said that with the new stand-by agreement the amount of loan to be extended to Turkey will increase considerably. Officials added that the delegation's contacts in Ankara had been positive.

NAP OFFICIAL WARNS OF COMMUNIST ROLE IN VIOLENCE

TA051721 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 5 Mar 80 TA

[Text] Nationalist Action Party [NAP] deputy leader Somuncuoglu has said that no one can portray as a strife between the left and the fight the planned treachery of imperialism aimed at destroying the last [as heard] independent Turkish state. In a statement in Ankara, Somuncuoglu said that the expansionist communist movement has now begun to attack policemen and soldiers following its attacks against NAP members. He added that two gendarmes were killed in Istanbul today. He said: No intelligent person can interpret this bitter but true treachery as a clash between the right and the left. It has become apparent that irresponsible and makeshift policies based on party interests have prepared the ground desired by collaborationist communists. He concluded by saying that he expected the nation and above all those responsible to take a stand against the local lackeys of communism.

NSP OPPOSES GOVERNMENT, CALLS FOR 'NEW SOLUTION'

TA041700 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 4 Mar 80 TA

[Text] National Salvation Party [NSP] deputy leader Sevket Kazan, has said that, after the RPP, the Justice Party administration is also bankrupt and that it is time for the parliament to present a new solution.

In a written statement in Ankara today, Kazan said that the 100-day period for the government has ended. Pointing out that the NSP kept its promise to support the government when it was established and that is has on numerous occasions indicated the way out of the crisis, Kazan noted that the Justice Party did not keep any of its promises.

Stating that anarchic incidents have increased and the economic crisis is even graver, Kazan said that the tears and suffering of the people will not be quelled through radio statements and new conferences.

BRIEFS

ATAS REFINERY LEASED--Minister of Energy and Natural Resources Esat Kiratlioglu said that the ATAS [Anatolian Refinery Corporation], which belongs to foreign oil companies, has been leased and that payment will be made in crude oil worth 140 lira per ton. He said that the oil to be refined at the ATAS refinery will be supplied by the Turkish Petroleum Corporation. Recalling that the refinery has been producing at 30 percent of its full capacity for the last 2 years, Kiratlioglu said that as of now the refinery will produce at full capacity refining some 4.4 million tons of crude oil annually. CONFERENCE ON DEVELOPMENT ENDS IN VIENNA

AU0[illegible]1232 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 5 Mar 80 p 3 AU

[Text] The 2-day conference of "like-minded countries"--held for the first time in Vienna--ended yesterday [4 March]. The informally and loosely organized group of states with largely concurrent views about the further development of the North-South dialog meets at irregular intervals for an exchange of opinions. No decisions are made on these occasions. The Vienna conference was held at the invitation of Austrian State Secretary Adolf Nussbaumer.

The topics dealt with at this session were determined by international discussion about the development policy of the 1980's.

Thus a special session of the UN General Assembly is to adopt the development strategy for this decade in August this year. At present, there is no agreement between the developing and the industrialized countries on the goals of this stragety nor on the steps necessary to attain these goals.

Within the framework of the exchange of opinions, the transport and communications decade of the United Nations for Africa and the results of the third UNIDO general assembly were also discussed.

EMERGENCY AID PLANNED FOR SENEGAL, JAMAICA, SWAZILAND

AB051455 Paris AFP in French 1124 GMT 5 Mar 80 AB

[Text] Brussels, 5 Mar (AFP)--The EEC has decided to grant Senegal emergency assistance worth 700,000 European units of account (1 unit of account--FR5.9 or $1.39) to help this country overcome the drought which has caused damage to the agricultural areas. This was announced on Wednesday in Brussels by sources close to the European Commission.

According to estimates, the Senegalese production of food crops this year will amount to only 63,000 tons, which is 329,000 tons less than last year. In 1977 too, Senegal was hard hit by the drought.

The EEC has also granted Jamaica an emergency assistance worth 600,000 units of account to contribute to repairs due to June 1979 flood, as well as an assistance worth 35,000 units of account to Swaziland to help fight the epidemic of foot and mouth disease from Mozambique.

RETIRED GENERALS CRITICIZE DEFENSE EFFORTS

LD061231 Brussels LE SOIR in French 4 Mar 80 p 2 LD

[Unattributed report: "Defense Policy and Military Service: The Views of 15 Retired and... Angry Generals"]

[Excerpts] On Saturday, 15 retired Belgian generals sent the government an open letter denouncing the weakness of an army handicapped by the reduction in military service, the inadequate number of professional volunteers, the rarity of exercises on a war footing and the slackness of discipline.

This letter's arrival, at a time when the chiefs of staff are themselves stressing the deficiencies in our armed forces within NATO and the inadequate spending on day-to-day fuel supply to the navy and air force, strikes an even more particular note since it seems to fit into the context of General Close's removal from his post as president of the Commission for National Defense Problems.

Questioned on the general's letter, National Defense Minister Jose Desmarets stated in particular that "these problems are not strictly speaking purely Belgian." In fact, he said, they stem "from the imbalance between the Warsaw Pact forces and the NATO army, which is due to the Soviet Army's major rearmament."

The minister again explained that his budget will be discussed at a Senate public session on 11 March, and that the commission's debates had been "very fruitful."

FOREIGN MINISTER VIEWS MIDEAST SCENE, DUTCH, EC ROLES

LD061043 Rotterdam NRC HANDELSBLAD in Dutch 25 Feb 80 p 3 LD

[An Salomonson interview with Dutch Foreign Minister Christoph van der Klaauw: "Balanced Policy Operates in Two Directions"--date and place not specified]

[Text] [Question] The cancellation of your visit to Iraq so close to your departure is a clear affront. What are the consequences?

[Answer] I find it disappointing. I spoke at length with the Iraqi Ambassador yesterday, and this took place in a very calm and pleasant atmosphere. I do not regard it as an insult; it is, I believe, a misunderstanding. It is believed that the Netherlands is associated with the tripartite talks in The Hague next week. We are not. We received a request from the United States as to whether we objected to the talks being held in The Hague. But we are not involved in them. We are not organizing them. We are making no facilities available. Everything is being arranged by the U.S. Embassy. The only thing in which we are involved is, at their request, the security aspects.

[Question] Could you not have refused, could you not have said that the time is unfavorable, being so close to your visit to Iraq?

[Answer] We pondered how it would be interpreted. I believe that it would be contrary to the openness which the Netherlands always seeks to practice to oppose it. We did not oppose the antineutron bomb activies--for which people also came from abroad--either.

[Question] It was clear from the outset that the tripartite talks in The Hague represented a provocation to the Arab countries. Did you believe that solidarity with the partners of the Camp David agreements should take precedence over the need to improve relations with the Arab countries?

[Answer] If you seek to conduct a balanced policy, it operates in two directions. Bear in mind that shortly before, Van Dijl (director for Africa and the Middle East at the Foreign Ministry--An Salomonson) spoke with some PLO leaders. I am seeking to conduct a very active policy in the Middle East. Within that context, I could see no reason for saying "no" to the United States. Moreover, I believed that it was sufficiently clear to everybody that it was merely a go-ahead. A misunderstanding has arisen about this. It is believed that the conference is taking place under the auspices of the Dutch Government. I have been able to dispel that idea in my conversation with the Iraqi Ambassador.

It was under consideration for a long time. When I became foreign minister, relations were at a very low level. We had a charge d'affaires there. I sent an ambassador there again. They were delighted about this in Iraq. My colleague Van der Stee has made a visit there with an entire delegation.

The planned visit was a political confirmation of relations which have been made good and normal. My hope is that what I regard as a misunderstanding has now been explained to the Iraqi Government, and that an attempt will be made to set a new date for the visit. I told the Iraqi ambassador that this once more demonstrates how useful and necessary it is to have contacts in our capital cities in order to discuss this. Of course, I also said that I am very well aware that Iraq's policy is bitterly opposed to the Camp David agreements.

Obstacle

[Question] What do you expect from the negotiations on Palestinian autonomy?

[Answer] I agree with the Nine that we must at all events wait and see how the talks proceed until the end of May. After the conference in The Hague there will be a little more clarity about this. I still believe that the Israeli settlements policy is a major obstacle to a solution. If no result is achieved, I believe that the Nine will consider whether they would be able to undertake another initiative somehow. I believe that this must be done in close consultation with the United States.

[Question] What kind of initiative do you have in mind?

[Answer] That depends on how the situation stands at the time. It will no longer be a matter than of Egypt and Israel: An attempt must be made within a broader framework. I have always said that Camp David could be a first step toward a peace settlement, but the other Arab states--Syria, Lebanon and Jordan--must also be involved. The Palestinians must also, of course, be able to take part in one way or another. In addition, we are confronted with the problem of the recognition of Israel. There are still no specific ideas, but we are constantly approached with the question as to whether Europe cannot do something.

Assuming that the United States succeeds in securing agreement between Egypt and Israel on the Palestinian issue, I still believe that it will be necessary also to involve the other Arab countries and the Palestinians. The United States will be unable to do so, in view of the other Arab countries' reaction to Camp David. That is a possibility on which the Nine can perhaps attempt something.

If the talks fail, we will have an entirely new situation. We have not specifically discussed this with the Nine. It does appear that they will fail. I am pessimistic, even if the deadline of 26 May is postponed. The talks in The Hague will be crucial.

Veto Countries

[Question] It recently became known that consensus prevails within the Nine on the need to amend Resolution 242. Do you agree with this?

[Answer] No change can be made in the basic elements, such as secure borders. The preamble to Resolution 242 speaks of the Palestinian problem as a refugee problem. I believe that in this respect a chance of stance has taken place among the Nine--for instance, with respect to legitimate rights.

In the first place, this will have to be debated, especially among the five veto countries. We can attempt nothing before the end of May. If the matter is at a deadlock at that time, the EPS [Europese Politieke Samenwerking; literally "European Political Cooperation"] would be a good forum for debating the issue.

Then something will have to be said in the wording of the resolution about resolving the Palestinian issue, quite apart from the question of whether there should be a state or a federation.

[Question] That would represent further pressure on Israel. Will that not lead to a further erosion of relations between the Netherlands and Israel?

[Answer] From the Israeli viewpoint, I realize that people there are disappointed about our recent contacts with the PLO. But there are simply realities which Israel must also take into account. Two senior officials will be visiting Jerusalem next month.

Contrary to my normal practice, I myself have held a conversation lasting over 1 hour with the Israeli ambassador concerning relations between the two countries.

[Question] Do you personally advocate contacts with the PLO?

[Answer] Yes, I have no objection at all to the Brinkhorst motion (in which an overwhelming majority of the second chamber urged actual contacts with the PLO--An Salomonson).

We do not recognize the PLO as the representative of the Palestinian people. We have never done this in the case of such movements which set themselves up. But it is indisputable that the PLO represents an important current among the Palestinians. The PLO is not monolithic, either, but has every conceivable faction.

[Question] Do you intend to meet with PLO leader 'Arafat himself in the future?

[Answer] I do not believe that this rests with me at present. We are talking about actual contacts; we are holding these on an official level. If matters proceed well I can see no reason why contacts should not be held ultimately at another level. That depends on the recognition of Israel, which has always played an extremely important role in our contacts with the PLO. At present, I regard the passages in the PLO Charter which are directed against Israel as an obstacle to a meeting with 'Arafat.

[Question] 'Arafat said 2 weeks ago in an interview with the Venezuelan newspaper EL MUNDO: "Peace means for us the destruction of Israel.... The destruction of Israel is the the aim of our struggle." Do you regard such statements as no obstacle to a meeting between Van Dijl and Al-Qaddumi, who holds the foreign affairs portfolio on behalf of 'Arafat?

[Answer] These are statements from which I distance myself most vigorously. But Al-Qaddumi has not spoken to Van Dijl in this language.

Other Factors

[Question] Do you still maintain that you are conducting a policy of evenhandedness, now that there is contact with the PLO at a high official level and relations with Israel are deteriorating increasingly?

[Answer] Yes, I regard my policy as evenhanded. The fact is that it takes into account the developments which are taking place in the region. To take a specific instance, Resolution 242 was drafted at a time when everybody spoke only about Israel versus the Arab states, and the Palestinians were dismissed as refugees. Since then, the Palestinian issue has arisen and become a crucial factor. This must be taken into account. This means that other factors supervene which have ultimately led to these actual contacts.

On the other hand, the Netherlands will play a prominent role in helping Israel--for instance, in the EC--where Israel's economic interests are concerned. This can also be seen very clearly in our voting record at the United Nations. I do not deny that I have some problems with Israeli policy, especially with the settlements policy.

[Question] How do you assess the consequences of the situation in Afghanistan and Iran for the Middle East?

[Answer] This makes the need for a solution all the more urgent. The situation in Iran has so far been characterized by considerable unrest, discord and the lack of central authority. Hopefully, matters will improve now, after the presidential elections and when the parliament begins to function. But the revival of Islam may also influence other countries, certainly the Arabian Peninsula, as well. A return to traditionalism and a religious social organization could have repercussions on foreign policy in the form of a fanaticizing. That could again lead to a further polarization in the Middle East.

As far as the Russian push in the Middle East is concerned, I agree with [FRG Foreign Minister] Genscher that Brezhnev's recent remarks on a neutral Afghanistan are in themselves interesting.

Ferret Out

[Answer continues] Brezhnev took up the words which we, as the Nine, used. It could be an indirect reply. These things are never said for no reason. I assume that such a remark was carefully considered. We should ferret out what exactly Brezhnev has in mind and what significance we should attribute to these words. It could mean that the Soviet Union is not immediately unsympathetic toward our proposal of a neutral Afghanistan. We must see whether we can find a basis for neutrality by virtue of which the Soviet troops can be withdrawn.

[Question] What is the aim of the visit which two senior officials of your ministry will be making to Jerusalem next month?

[Answer] These are normal consultations which we hold with many countries, including Israel, at that level. The Israeli counterparts have also been here. No special message is being delivered. At this stage in the Camp David talks, I deem it extremely useful to hold a dialog with Jerusalem.

[Question] Do such periodic consultations also take place with the Arab countries, and, if not, are they in keeping with a policy of evenhandedness?

[Answer] We do not hold them with the Arab countries. I would have no objection at all to them, but the need clearly does not exist in the Arab countries. Contact there proceeds more through diplomatic channels; for instance, our ambassador in Damascus is extremely active. In Saudi Arabia, too. But I do see in these high-level official contacts with Israel a reflection of the special relationship which exists between the Netherlands and Israel. Every statement that we make in the Arab countries and in our contacts with the PLO proceeds from the traditional Dutch-Israeli friendship and special relations. Every Arab will tell you: We know and appreciate this; because of this you can put forward certain things all the more effectively in Jerusalem, too. This often strikes Israel differently. There they ask instead: Why the Netherlands of all countries?

Frankly

[Question] Are we not in danger of losing that influence, now that the relationship with Israel is becoming increasingly strained?

[Answer] It is natural that they should not be delighted about the contacts with the PLO. As long as they say: It is another step forward; I quite understand it. It need not affect the essence of the matter. I have the impression that this influence is not waning and that we can say things frankly; our ambassador plays an extremely useful role there.

[Question] Safeguarding oil supplies is of crucial importance for our future. Is this a predominant factor in determining Middle East policy?

[Answer] All factors are taken into account. Such as, for instance, the large-scale Dutch activity in all kinds of Arab countries. It is not the case that one factor is predominant. Of course, oil is also an important factor. It is not necessarily the case that an oil policy based exclusively on this is conducted. It is also a matter of dignity. There is no threat of the use of the oil weapon. Of course, the oil in the Middle East generally plays an extremely important role within the context of Western policy, but not especially in the case of the Netherlands.

[Question] Is there still any spark of hope at all for the Middle East?

[Answer] I am very pessimistic, but you cannot afford to be so. The alternative means a constant state of insecurity, for Israel as well. It also means that neither is there any solution to the human fate of the Palestinians, who are indeed a people but still refugees too. As far as Israel is concerned, it is strong now, but can it remain so in the long run, with its small population and heavily armed, and all the resulting enormous economic problems?

CHANCELLOR SCHMIDT INTERVIEWED ON WASHINGTON TALKS

Results of Talks

DW070815 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 1105 GMT 6 Mar 80 DW

[Werner Sonne interview with Chancellor Helmut Schmidt in Washington--recorded]

[Text] [Question] Have you been able to develop a common concept on the management of the Afghanistan crisis during your visit here in Washington?

[Answer] The discussion on all of the goals to be pursued, of the step and remedies eligible and the method of their application, the question of who will apply which instruments or, as we put it here, the question concerning division of labor--all this naturally commanded the focus of our conversation, especially the talks between President Carter and myself. Some of that is not suited for public discussion.

[Question] Yet you made some definite promises to the Americans here, especially with respect to the aid for Turkey and the help to Pakistan. Do you have the impression that the Americans will be satisfied, that they will recognize this as the German contribution?

[Answer] It is not appropriate to say that we have made definite promises. We made up our minds on our own, and the Americans have welcomed that.

[Question] Reportedly you were urged here once again to join the American Olympic boycott. Has the German position in this issue changed in any way?

[Answer] No, it has not. The position of the Federal Government was specifically expounded once again through the government statement in the Bundestag last Thursday. The U.S. Government was aware of that, of course.

[Question] Do you share the American view that detente policy should be continued as the Federal Government has explained on several occasions, or do any differences of opinion prevail on this point?

[Answer] No; the President expressly stated his agreement with this, in public, at a dinner speech tonight. I have said it is important to discuss directly the policy on balance, which forms the prerequisite for the continuation of detente policy, not just last week but earlier as well, in the government statement of 17 January, as well as here in my conversation with the President and in public statements here.

[Question] Has the unpleasant consultation problem been shelved? Can you rest assured that in the future the Americans will adequately consult the Federal Republic when ost-politik, for instance, is involved?

[Answer] What matters is not just the consultation between the United States and the Federal Republic of Germany. Through the years a certain feeling had become discernible on the part of the Americans--but also on our part--that the mutual consultations ought to be improved. This has been done during the past 3 weeks. The joint statement to the press which was published here today on behalf of the President and myself expressly refers to the need for improving the consultations.

However you may wish to judge it; I would forget what did not work during the weeks of January as well as people would have wished it to work, and I would suggest that it be forgotten. What is the sense in racking one's brains about past events of a technical nature for long?

Statement on Afghanistan

DW070829 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 1800 GMT 6 Mar 80 DW

[Correspondent Hans-Joachim Reiche interview with Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt in Washington--recorded]

[Text] [Question] Do you think that the Western concept has been made more specific in these talks?

[Answer] That question must be answered in the affirmative. The common concept of the West has been developed and made specific. It will further develop in talks with the other allies.

[Question] According to the communique, President Carter's opinion is very similar to yours with regard to the assessment of the Soviet invasion in Afghanistan. Where are the differences?

[Answer] Although the common press statement is very extensive, it still only hints at several points. You are right that a closer explanation is actually missing. Naturally the world power United States considers the advance of the Soviet influence through the military intervention in Afghanistan, for example, a most important event between the West and the East. We see it the same way, but we also stress, and there is just a slight difference from the American view, that the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan is an intervention in a nonalined country of the Third World, a country that does not belong to any alliance system; it is not only a violation of the territorial integrity, of the self-determination right of Afghanistan, but also it is a conflict involving a great number of Third World states, which are nonalined and which want to remain nonalined. We very much stress the independence of the states, of the nonalined states of the Third World, and we are concerned that this violation of the rights of the Third World will not merely be considered an outflow of the East-West conflict.

Further Comment

[Washington correspondent Peter Merseburger interview with Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt--recorded]

[Text] [Question] The meeting between the chancellor and the President helped to eliminate misunderstandings. Helmut Schmidt found understanding for the special situation of the Federal Republic, which was particularly stressed by the President. Schmidt even found understanding of the Olympic problem, where the Germans, although loyal on principle in this matter, are playing for time. The governments are closer to each other than can be gathered from the American medias' criticism of alleged lack of solidarity. The voluminous communique contains slight differences despite agreement on basic problems.

[Answer] The slight differences you are asking about lie in part in the concept that the intervention in Afghanistan is not merely an event in the conflict between the East and the West, but that it is an event involving the Third World, the world of nonalined countries. Basically the Americans see it as clearly as we do. Maybe they see the event--with regard to mutual relations of the two world powers--more as an event of the East-West conflict than of the conflict between the communists, the communist states, the Soviet Union and the South.

I want to add that hardly ever has there been such a detailed press conference, a common press conference, at a visit here in Washington. We considered it necessary because in contrast to some reports carried by the press--also at home in Germany--we wanted to demonstrate how far-reaching our agreement is and in how many areas it exists.

I will go home from here with a very satisfactory feeling of far-reaching agreement, and with the feeling that also in matters where full agrement does not exist, each understands the other well.

PAPERS ASSESS RESULTS OF U.S.-GERMAN CONSULTATIONS

DW070840 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0605 GMT 7 Mar 80 DW

[Press review on Chancellor Schmidt's visit to the United States]

[Excerpt] The LUDWIGSHAFEN RHEINPFALZ writes: Helmut Schmidt wound up his visit with President Carter in Washington with a success for which he will be envied by many other statesman and by the opposition at home. For the talks at the White House have produced a document of 180 lines in which the German chancellor and the U.S. President express their conformity of views and unanimity in view of the dangerous international situation but in which the German head of government nevertheless had kept the floor of steering an independent course open for himself. It is a document which the opposition in Bonn will not shelve and which Franz Josef Strauss, too must study very minutely before he goes to Washington next week.

BRAUNSCHWEIGER ZEITUNG says in this connection: What is missing in the verbose statement to the press is statements on specific countermeasures. What is to go beyond what has been known anyway? The stabilization of Turkey and the aid to Pakistan had been settled before. Nothing new has been added there, nor have the Americans made any special contribution toward the concept of a durable policy. In the Olympic issue, too, there are no new findings. Thus what remains is the conclusion that the positive element is to be found in the renewed meeting. Perhaps in the future intensified contacts will really prevent misunderstandings from cropping up at all.

Duesseldorf's RHEINISCHE POST makes the following comment: This visit happened at the worst conceivable time for the U.S. Government. When Schmidt was with the President the protest storm over the U.S. approval of the UN resolution condemning Israel and Carter's retraction 2 days later had not yet abated. Carter's blunder only strengthened European apprehensions again that the master of the White House is erratic and uncertain in the establishment of his foreign policy course. The Europeans do not wish to be tied down to a course on a long-term basis which the helmsman might change on short notice and which would then leave them in an untenable position.

Freiburg's BADISCHE ZEITUNG states: Helmut Schmidt has not abandoned the position he has held to date toward the Olympic boycott or toward the economic measures against the Soviet Union, and it looks as though Carter meanwhile has great understanding for the reasons with which Schmidt justified this. Last not least this is attributable to the fact that the government in Washington itself does not at all want to destroy its bridges to the Soviets but wants to, and must, stay in contact with them for reasons of vital problems, especially because of arms control.

MEDIA COMMENTATORS ANALYZE U.S.-GERMAN PARLEY

DIE WELT on Communique

DW0709Ø1 Bonn DIE WELT in German 7 Mar 80 p 6 DW

[Friedhelm Kemna article: "Very Close Together"]

[Text] All told, the two protagonists may be satisfied. The piece, which incurred difficulties in stage direction, after a coordination recess was put back on the play schedule. What has been created there in mutual, thoroughly worked general revision definitely is not a Magna Charta of an Entente cordiale of German-American relations.

Yet, Helmut Schmidt and Jimmy Carter succeeded in agreeing on a joint strategic framework declaration which would yet require a lot of supplementation as an all-round recipe of Atlantic crisis management. In the clear and convincing manifestation of the will to always place the unifing element above the rather ample separating factors, this visit and its result were noteworthy after all. Despite some quickly marketed irritation the German-American relations are better than their reputation. What occupied the headlines to the detriment of reputation was not the visit by the German but a new, nearly incomprehensible example of the American "unpredictability" which so strongly irritated Bonn--the voting scandal in the United Nations and Carter's about-face.

The administration is under pressure to make hair-raising things explicable and to keep the Jewish vote in line in the next primaries in New York State. And in the meantime it is audibly moaning under the burden of galloping inflation and inflationary interest-rate gallop. There is a hail of budget cuts and energy austerity programs. The concern about the hostages in Tehran, slowly growing impatience about the power condemned to patience and impotence, may well unite into a dangerous explosive and might level the bonus of feeling of the Afghanistan awakening.

This was the domestic scene within which Washington did not want to call into question foreign and alliance policy to boot. Carter must have sensed the good will of the German chancellor, the forced optimism which hardly covered up the dismay about the creeping devaluation of the relationship with the Atlantic leading power. Hence, peaceableness had been signalled from the White House.

So now the demand for a catalog of punishment so ungraciously received by Bonn is off the table: The intention to have the Soviets pay as steep a price as possible for its power-policy challenge is not in the forefront but rather the precaution against another escalation of the conflict and its extension to other world regions.

The chancellor introduced his main motive for the hitherto low standing of German crisis management into the joint communique. Preserving the "framework of East-West relations" achieved in 2 decades, especially in times of aggravated tensions, is the express common intention of German and American policy. What is indicated here at the same time, however, is the--nonexistent--footnote.

For under this rather vague formula, of course, a dangerous lot of dubious things can be subsumed. What is decisive, and from the latest experiences also impregnated with conflict within the alliance, is the question of the price at which the framework of relations between East and West is retained and should be retained.

At any rate, for the time being America has accepted that the Federal Republic of Germany and with it Europe, because of the special "vulnerability" and the hostage situation of 17 million Germans, pursues a quite crisis management. Trade with the East, which has been supported by the business bosses in the chancellor's entourage with brilliantly prepared figures and factual arguments, is now being considered as approved by Washington.

With the exception of the so-called COCOM [NATO coordinating committee] lists on the prohibition against supplying most strategically important goods to the Soviet Union and the commitment not to torpedo the American ally's economic boycott, trade with the East will remain undisturbed.

Even Schmidt's maneuvering with regard to the Olympic boycott, which is particularly hard to understand for the Americans, is given a honorable place by Carter next to his own unchanged hard stance. He could wrestle just a bit more determination from the chancellor. In the next 10 weeks neither will charge the other with exaggerated reactions or lack of courage. Then the hopes for the 5 rings will disappear for the Germans. Schmidt left no doubts in this respect.

In the phase of increasing hardness in the dialog between the Americans and their President on a American acceptance of the hostage drama and the challenge of the Soviet superpower, this would have been hardly imaginable. The demonstratively high value of arms control negotiations which have been described in detail, despite and because of the crisis, are a late product of conflict considerations. It seems that German and American interests are being jointly assessed without reservations. Agreement can be seen easily also with regard to economic and energy postulates, where the chancellor enjoys authority.

And yet there was a trace of unreality in the President's laudatio with regard to the European Schmidt and his horror of cold war. It was, and everybody felt it, a bow to the guest and maybe a reverence to the statement of John Adams over the fireplace of the banquet hall: "May only honorable and wise men rule under this roof."

Jimmy Carter acted wisely in this dialog with Schmidt, but in the evening of this unusual day at the White House nobody wanted to bet his head that this rather rough structure of common action would stand a hard test in crisis times. Both sides showed satisfaction that they are "very close to each other" in their assessments of the consequences of the Soviet invasion. That may be acceptable in the context of the mutually recognized crisis therapy; it is a prerequisite, however, that both sides realize at all times the compatibility and digestibility of the existing deficit with regard to agreement.

Level of Agreement

DW071021 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 7 Mar 80 p 3 DW

[Commentary by Washington correspondent signed RDS: "How Close Is Very Close?"]

[Text] Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt prides himself on "particular honesty" after his meetings with American President Jimmy Carter, because of the passage in the final common communique that the approaches of both countries to the Soviet invasion in Afghanistan are "very close" to each other. Indeed this formulation permits sufficient leeway for public speculations as to what this "very close" might be. For a final communique in which the diplomats usually demonstrate their high skill of window-dressing and bridge their differences of opinion, this confession is something special indeed.

Only the one who expects the Federal Government's unconditional adherence vis-a-vis the United States, will see in this formulation space for some deterioration of mutual relations. Even more convincing is the interpretation of the German Government chief who considers relations so stable that they can stand honest dealings with each other. That was probably even more expressed behind the closed doors of the White House than in the verbose final communique.

Where the common statement could have been more clear, namely with regard to the Western solidarity action in support of economically and politically endangered Turkey, the language artists of both sides seek refuge in noncommittal declarations of intent and promises. But money is also an important means for the assessment of mutual relations.

Federal Finance Minister Matthoefer, Bonn's envoy to Turkey--Bonn is heading the Western assistance action for Turkey--certainly expected more from his American friends. His disappointment over the reserved attitude of the Carter government with regard to this strategically important action was therefore [word indistinct]. Hints by the Bonn delegation of the unpredicatbility of some Washington reactions should not be ignored. Sometimes it is the [word indistinc], rather than an opinion poll that makes the Carter adminstration set new priorities in the election campaign.

Some observers have the suspicion, because of the flexibility in Washington, that Afghanistan suddenly could not be as important any more because the U.S. public opinion experts have discovered new and important issues, which are mostly of an economic nature.

APEL CALLS FOR 'PROMPT' NATO AID FOR TURKEY

[Text] Saarbruecken--An appeal for prompt aid for Turkey by all NATO states was made by Federal Defense Minister Apel in an interview with Saarland Radio today. The Turkish problem is "urgent" both economically and politically. The aid must not turn into an action which is financed exclusively from the coffers of the Federal Republic. "Everybody must take part not only in words but also in deed," Apel said.

So far the United States has not requested Bonn to relieve it of some of the burden of NATO's naval defense. The possibility of such a request can, however, not be excluded and if it comes it cannot be a question "of the United States and the Federal Republic tackling the problems of Western Europe and the alliance by themselves." This could easily create the impression among the other partners in Western Europe that the call "to put in a little extra if need be" does not concern them.

APEL SAYS NEW RESERVISTS' SCHEME TO BE INTRODUCED

LD071105 Hamburg DPA in German 0151 GMT 7 Mar 80 LD

[Excerpt] Bonn--Federal Defense Minister Apel has announced the introduction of a new reservists' scheme this summer. Speaking at a meeting of the Friedrich-Ebert Foundation in Saarbruecken today, he said that it would contain proposals of how more reservists could be deployed for a rapid increase in the fighting strength of the Bundeswehr and be trained accordingly. In the past insufficient use has been made of the reservist potential.

RESULTS OF GISCARD GULF VISIT EXAMINED

[Excerpt] The president of the republic's visit to the Persian Gulf emirates ended in Abu Dhabi late this morning. The president of the republic had extensive talks with Shaykh Zayid, and he has left the Gulf for Jordan and Aqaba. Mr and Mrs Giscard d'Estaing arrived a few minutes ago in Aqaba, where they will be relaxing for a day. Then they will be paying an official visit to Amman, the capital of Jordan, at the invitation of King Husayn before going to Saudi Arabia and then returning to Paris.

The security of the Gulf was much discussed in Abu Dhabi, the capital of the United Arab Emirates. The French president again stressed that the countries of the region should insure their security themselves and, repeating what he had already said in Kuwait, Bahrain and Qatar, avoid being drawn into a power struggle on a global level. The political content of this visit to the Gulf states is thus particularly important. But one must not forget that Oil-France [French oil interests?] has been assured of its supplies--or the economic aspect of this trip which will have allowed the consolidation of France's penetration into this extraordinarily rich region, which in the past, however, has been more open to Japanese and American offers than to those of Europe. We link up with one of our special correspondents in Abu Dhabi, Ralph Pinto:

[Begin Pinto recording] The security of the Gulf was the main or one of the main subjects of the president of the republic's talks during his entire trip to the Gulf. Whether in Kuwait, Bahrain, Qatar or Abu Dhabi, the leaders of these states, these emirates, wanted to discuss this burning issue as soon as possible. And each time they said: We do not want to be precipitated into the rivalry of the two superpowers against our will; each time the formula was repeated: Security and stability in the Gulf are the sole responsibility of the states of the region. It is clear, but this is also Paris' own position and thus it is a source of satisfaction for French diplomacy.

The second permanent and repetitive element was the Middle East and the Palestinian people's right to self-determination, the Gulf leaders said. The French president also announced this in a speech which was to become famous, namely, the Kuwait speech. His remarks were approved, and now people are waiting for France to take initiatives so that it happens quickly. Numerous economic agreements, first and foremost in the oil or petrochemical field, were concluded, with a new kind of two-way cooperation, namely, joint investments in France or elsewhere.

Finally, the last point in this analysis of the Gulf trip is the three-way dialog. The United Arab Emirates showed itself to be the most (?willing) to puruse it and not only in the economic field, because Europe, Africa and the Arab world for Abu Dhabi can together ward off the threat that the contest between the United States and the Soviet Union might one day provoke. [end recording] Yes, before leaving Abu Dhabi, Valery Giscard d'Estaing also spoke about what Ralph Pinto calls a three-way dialog; he returned to what in his eyes is essential--this necessary dialog between the three Mediterranean groups: Europe, Africa, and the Arab world.

[Begin Giscard recording] There are currently in the world three groupings around the Mediterranean: the European grouping, i.e., West Europe; the African grouping, which reaches the Mediterranean; and this Arab grouping of the Middle East which also extends to the Mediterranean. These three groupings are outside the superpowers, and I believe that these three groupings should meet more. Naturally, this is a long-term job, but I have spoken about it to all of my interlocutors and [word indistinct] in the communique published here in Abu Dhabi, we make reference to this three-way dialog of these three groupings as one of our objectives. [end recording]

BRAZILIAN PLANNING MINISTER MEETS WITH GISCARD, BARRE

[Unattributed report: "Brazilian Planning Minister Received at the Elysee"]

[Text] On 28 February, Mr Giscard d'Estaing received Brazilian Planning Minister Antonio Delfim Neto, who arrived in Paris Wednesday night [27 February] on a 2-day working visit. Mr Neto also had talks with Mr Barre and Economy Minister Monory. The Brazilian minister is seeking financial, economic and political support in France in view of the difficult situation in which Brazil has found itself. Among other things, France could participate in hydroelectric projects in Brazil.

PCP DELEGATION CONFERS WITH PCF OFFICIALS

[Text] The Portuguese Communist Party study delegation which was visiting France at the PCF's invitation left Paris for Lisbon yesterday. It had further talks, notably with Marcel Rosette and other leaders of the national association of Communist and Republican elected deputies. It was received by Irene Bourgois, deputy mayor of Dieppe, and by D. Bioton, mayor of Pierrefitte. The numberous meetings have confirmed the bonds of friendship between the French and Portuguese peoples and the good relations between the two parties.

MARCHAIS ATTACKS SOCIALISTS, EXPOUNDS CURRENT GOALS

LD061151 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 1 Mar 80 p 3 LD

[Unattributed report on Marchais speech at Villejuif PCF rally on 29 February: "Struggle to Bring the Hour of Change Nearer"—capitalized passages are printed in italics]

[Text] During his speech, Georges Marchais stated in particular:

How can we bring the moment of democratic change nearer? By what road should we achieve it? Given the Socialist Party [PS] orientation, how can we succeed in rallying a popular majority without which democratic change is impossible?

It is indeed true that the present PS attitude justifies the posing of such questions.

Thus, 2 days ago, I listened to Francois Mitterrand at the National Assembly saying: "The Communists want revolution.... They want violence.... They want their big night...." And I said to myself: "What talk! Comparing revolution and violence! Here is Francois Mitterrand reduced to acting the part of all the rightwing leaders of social democracy: Stir up fear of the Reds to frighten the middle class! Perhaps that will get a few delightful shudders on the Avenue Foch or the Faubourg Saint-Honore. But all this is far, far removed from the cares and hopes of the working people!" While I was thining this, Francois Mitterrand had gone on to another subject: the elections. I heard him speak of the Communist votes: He wondered which way they would go, if they were to be added or subtracted.... In short, I thought I was watching a performance of Moliere's "The Miser." Like Harpagon forever repeating: "My cashbox! My cashbox! My cashbox!". So Francois Mitterrand turned toward me, repeating: "Your votes! Your votes! Your votes!"

Of course, all these attacks on our party, all these electoral calculations coming a few days after Francois Mitterrand and Michel Rocard had planned, in full agreement with each other, on "the PS's possibility of governing alone"--all this will permit those who, perhaps, were still in some doubt about this to establish the accuracy of what we said about the rightist orientation of the PS....

The PS' Steadfast Orientation

This orientation is not new.

In 1972, the very day after signing the joint program, Francois Mitterrand explained the reasons for his choice to the Vienna Socialist International in these terms: "Our fundamental aim is to rebuild a great Socialist Party on the ground occupied by the PCF itself, to demonstrate that out of the 5 million Communist voters, 3 million could vote Socialist. That is the reason for this agreement." The matter is thus clear. Francois Mitterrand and the PS had but one aim, one objective in signing the 1972 joint program: To weaken the PCF and use it as a stepping stone to power while preventing Communist participation in government.

This had been the PS strategy during the 6 years of the joint program. It did everything to weaken us, to reduce our influence and strengthen itself to our detriment. It did not succeed. It did succeed in its self-appointed aim: that of becoming a "dominant party," capable of "imposing its will" on the PCF. It was in those conditions, because the decisive date of the parliamentary elections was approaching, that the PS, under Socialist International pressure, decided to throw off what it called the joint program's "yoke," to smash the union and thus assume the responsibility for causing the left's failure in March 1978.

In brief, the new element now in the statements of Francois Mitterrand and the PS leadership is not in their rightwing, social democrat orientation. The new element is that, having been led into their present impasse by this orientation, Francois Mitterrand and the PS leaders are having to reveal themselves and say openly what their intention always was.

Extensive Convergences With Giscard d'Estaing

This explains the extent of the convergences with Mr Giscard d'Estaing which the PS is henceforth fostering.

Mr Giscard d'Estaing needs what he terms the social "consensus" on his policy of unemployment and austerity? So the PS thus terms the working people's struggles "rearguard actions."

Mr Giscard d'Estaing approves the siting of U.S. missiles in West Europe? So the PS thus expresses satisfaction at the NATO decision and stirs up thoughts of a supposed Soviet "threat." Mr Giscard d'Estaing alines himself with Schmidt? The PS applauds with both hands. Mr Giscard d'Estaing supports Carter's policy in Iran? The PS expresses great satisfaction.

Ultimately, there is only one point on which Francois Mitterrand and Michel Rocard criticze Mr Giscard d'Estaing: They reproach him for not alining himself with Carter quickly enough on Afghanistan.

Of course, you can see how difficult it is for the PS leaders to admit to their members and electors such a conniving approach to power. This explains the violence of the anti-communist attacks in which they have since incessantly indulged.

Just now I mentioned Francois Mitterrand's words at the National Assembly. This intervention follows the many attacks directed against our party recently by the PS leaders. Listening to them, the PCF would seem to have become the devil incarnate. It would seem to be "totalitarian." It has supposedly "veered to the East." According to Gaston Defferre, it has even become a den of spies. And, a few weeks ago, you heard Francois Mitterrand committing himself to a pitiful attempt at luring PCF members and voters away.

Francois Mitterrand's Paradoxical Argument

Impelled by their own momentum, the PS leaders are not afraid of proceding to the point of absurdity. Thus they have for some time been imagining a new argument with which they are clearly particularly content. They do not tire of using it. This argument runs thus: Not only is the PCF all that they have said already, but, more than that, it is in fact Giscard d'Estaing's accomplice!

In short, the PS leadership's reasoning can be summarized thus: The closer the PS comes to Giscard d'Estaing and approves his policy, the more it is, allegedly, against him. And, conversely, the more resolutely the PCF fights Giscard's policy, the more it is allegedly playing into his hands.

Clearly this is a paradox, to say the least. There was something unreal about Francois Mitterrand last Wednesday at the National Assembly, indicting what he calls the PCF's "objective complicity" with Mr Giscard d'Estaing, with Mr Barre then following him by saying--and I quote: "I know that I expect no complicity or support from the PCF." This might not happen again, but Mr Barre is quite right!

Yes, this is true, one must not, one really must not rely on the PCF to help implement the government's policy or to subscribe to the PS' conciliatory attitude toward Mr Giscard d'Estaing!

And since everyone is calling on us to explain our own real aims, well, I am going to come back to them once more:

We Want To Force the Government and Management To Yield, Through Struggle

What do we, the Communists want? What are our aims? What is the meaning of all our action? First, it is to defend the working people's interests under all circumstances, to struggle alongside them to make the government and management yield, to get all we can. We are struggling for a guaranteed minimum wage of Fr2,900, for the raising of low salaries, of family allowances, benefits and pensions, for safeguarding and improving social security. We are fighting all dismissals, all removal of machinery, all business closures. [paragraph continues]

We are fighting for a 35-hour workweek without loss of pay, for retirement normally at 60 and at 55 for men and women performing arduous jobs, for 5 weeks' paid leave, for a limitation in the work rate and workload. In a word, we are backing all the people's struggles for the immediate improvement in the lives of the working people and their families.

We want to win new rights for the working people and our citizens. We are struggling against the constraint, the arbitrary and authoritarian behaviour of the government and management, and against bureaucracy. We are struggling to impose respect of labor union rights, to institute the right to information and to engage in political activity at work, and to form workshop and departmental councils. We are struggling to free the information media from Giscard's dictatorship. We are struggling for human rights and liberties wherever they are threatened.

We want to control production. We are struggling to safeguard and extend the public sector, to nationalize the steel and nuclear industries with workers' participation on administrative councils, and to make the profiteers pay.

We Want Union, Change, Socialism

We want to preserve France's independence. We are struggling against the Giscard government's abandonment of the nation and its alinement with the Federal Republic of Germany and U.S. imperialism. We are struggling for detente and peaceful coexistence, for the bypassing and for the simultaneous dissolution of blocs. We oppose both supranational Europe and its enlargements with all our might.

We want union. Through all popular struggles we want to build the union of all the victims of capital, in their social, political, spiritual and ideological diversity. We want the union of all the popular forces, the union of the left. We want to defeat the right. We want to rally the majority of our people against Giscard's policy and promote democratic change. And we want this as soon as possible. The sooner the better. We want to implement a policy which is in the interests of the country's working people, and for this we, as the party of the working class, want to take our rightful place at all levels including in the government.

We want change, real change. We want the right to work; the right to feed oneself healthily; the right to suitable accommodation; the right to health protection; the right to have the children one wants and to insure their education by giving them a good occupation; the right to sport, culture, rest, travel--we want all these rights, which are at the moment dead letters, to ultimately become a real part of life. We want the working people, men, women and youth to have their say in all matters which concern them. We want self-management. We want to suppress the absolute power of management at work. We want to extend the scope of elected representatives at all levels, to institute genuine power and give a boost to communal self-government. We want peace. We want a general, controlled disarmament. We want to establish a new world economic and political order. And we want progress on this road toward profound social transformations. We want a still broader administration of society by the working people and citizens themselves. We want to wrest the major means of production, exchange and finance from the capitalist groups. We want political power to represent the working people. We want the intolerable inequalities generated by capitalist society to disappear. We want the quality and content of work to change. We want new relationships between people, founded on new liberties, new solidarities and new moral values that permit each individual to flourish.

In a word, we want another society: socialism. A democratic, self-managing socialism meeting the preferences and aspirations of our people: Socialism in French colors.

What Is Revolution?

Well, friends and comrades, I put this question to you: Is that not a revolution? Certainly, its ways and means are not those of other times or other countries. We propose a democratic advance to socialism, a new road toward a new society which attaches the greatest importance to our country's conditions. The issue is to promote still further the class struggle against capital, to promote profound changes in the economy, state management and in all social relations. In a word, to defeat capitalism in France. If all these are not revolutionary transformations, then someone must explain to me what "revolution" means.

Basically, you see, when Francois Mitterrand attacked revolution 2 days ago, comparing it to violence and disorder, he merely confirmed that he contemplates the socialist transformation of society with dread. He simply confirmed the goal that he has set for his party for some years: to make itself a reinforcement for the right in order to create the conditions for a German-style alternation, and an eventual change permitting the continuation of capitalist policy.

Everything Depends on the Strengthening of the PCF

In these conditions, there is one conclusion imposed by the experience of the past and the present situation. If the PS was able to smash the union, it was because the party of union, the PCF, was not strong enough to preserve the unity of the popular movement all the way to victory. If the PS was able to prevent change, it was because the party of change, the PCF, was not strong enough to enable our people to overcome the obstacles raised against them by the class enemy and social democracy.

One imperative condition is now necessary for a fundamental, new union in all the people's struggles; for the development of a powerful, popular movement and to insure that the top-level political agreements that must one day be concluded should be under the control and watchful eye of the working people; for advancing via democracy toward change and socialism: THE PCF, THE MAJOR ASSET OF THE FRENCH PEOPLE'S AND WORKERS' MOVEMENT, MUST BE STRENGTHENED.

One thing is certain: If things go badly in our country, if the crisis does not result in a positive outcome, it is because the party of the working people, the PCF, has for too long been kept from positions of responsibility, does not occupy its rightful place in the country, and is not yet the great revolutionary and mass party which our people need in order to triumph. All will thus depend on this party's strength, influence and appeal, and its ability to rally the working class and people of France in the struggle against capitalist policy. This, now, is the key to change.

Into the Offensive!

For this reason, I want to speak to all Communists. I want to say to them: Comrades, the fight is hard but it is full of hope. The middle class and social democracy wanted to smash and isolate us. To this end it used all the means at its disposal. It provoked a veritable unleashing of anticommunist attacks. It could not undermine our influence. On the contrary, we feel the people's trust growing everywhere around us. The struggles are developing. The by-election results are favorable to us on the whole. The distribution of L'HUMANITE DIMANCHE is up by 60,000 copies. Since the beginning of January, 22,000 men and women have joined the PCF. Under such conditions, there is only one order that each party cell, each section and each federation must now write in capital letters on each daily agenda: INTO THE OFFENSIVE! May all Communists redouble their efforts to strengthen our party. May they boldly approach those millions of our country's men and women who aspire to a different life, may they call on them to become Communists in their turn--this is now possible and necessary if we are to move forward.

GIAN CARLO PAJETTA IN SFRY INTERVIEWED ON PCI POLICIES

AU052025 Ljubljana DELO in Slovene 1 Mar 80 p 21 AU

[Janko Tedesko report on DELO interview with Gian Carlos Pajetta, member of the PCI Directorate, in Rome in February]

[Text] We discussed with Gian Carlo Pajetta, member of the PCI Directorate and the party's "foreign minister," the views of Italian Communists on international events. The PCI advocates world peace, relaxation of tension and cooperation among all states on the basis of equality. And the Italian Communists refuse to be "sycophants" to foreigners or to be anyone's "satellites" or "vassals." In the same manner they also do not want to see Italy uncritically accepting the decisions of the great ally. Therefore the PCI advocates an autonomous and active role for Italy within the framework of the military and political alliances to which it belongs. For this reason the Christian Democratic "no" is essentially an expression of a political prejudice even though a majority of the speakers at the [Christian Democratic] congress repeatedly declared that all prejudices have been long since eliminated.

[Question] Comrade Pajetta, I am interested in the views of the Italian party on some international events. But if we discuss this, we cannot avoid certain peculiarities of Italian politics. The Christian Democratic Party Congress, which was held recently, declared itself against any joint decisionmaking with the Communists primarily because of different values in the international policies of the two parties and because of the alleged role that the PCI plays within the constellation of international events. Why did the Christian Democrats say "no" to the Communists primarily because of international politics?

Pajetta: The part of the Christian Democratic Party which declared itself to be studying the possibility of our participation in the government is not much greater than a half of the party; although we believe that that decision can have grave consequences in the country, we must emphasize that nearly half of the Christian Democratic Party advocated a discussion with the Communist Party. It is true that one of the central topics of the discussion was--and it could not be otherwise--international politics. Some of the leaders of that significant minority emphasized in the congress discussion that it is precisely the difficulties in international relations which represent a motive for national unity, for a dialog with the Communists, particularly as the Italian Communists have proved in recent years that they are waging a struggle for peace, international cooperation, for creating a climate of a relaxation of tension and that they oppose and wage a struggle against all possible lies of anticommunist propaganda. The Italian Communists have proved that they set the national interests above the party's interests, while at the same time they jealously guard their own autonomy, both toward any other party and toward foreign countries. The PCI is working for Italy's autonomous activity within the alliances to which it belongs.

[Question] The other part of the Christian Democratic Party--I am speaking about the minority which received 42 percent of the congress votes and which advocates joint decisionmaking with the PCI--also warns that the international developments and different assessments of the international developments by the Christian Democratic Party and the PCI are an obstacle on the road of closer cooperation between the two big parties. Zaccagnini's report, for instance, speaks very clearly about this.

Pajetta: I view Zaccagnini's speech as a speech expressing concern, doubts and even prejudices on which the Christian Democratic Party insists despite the reality, which is different. However, it is necessary to point out that Zaccagnini asked the congress to discuss those questions. For, if a situation exists in our country which calls for a unity of political forces, it is also true that that affects the questions of peace, detente and a greater role for Europe. It also means that it is necessary to reject dictates of allies.

We are not surprised that some people want to convinced themselves that we are working for Italy's independence within the Atlantic alliance; particularly because we would also like to be convinced that our possible government allies, who jealously guard Italy's independence, would not accept such gross interference such as the speech by the German Kohl, who thought that he could dictate the conditions for forming an Italian Government, although for the sake of truth it is necessary to say that in his own country he was not capable of forming a government. We also reject speeches such as the one by Donat-Cattin who forgot the territorial limits of NATO and raised the question of military policy regarding oil, instead of advocating cooperation, the search for peace in the Mediterranean, negotiations with the Arab countries and at the same time a continuation of cooperation with the Soviet Union regarding energy resources.

[Question] Four years ago you voted for the government foreign policy resolution. Now things have changed and it would be difficult to unite all democratic parties on the question of foreign policy. How did this happen?

Pajetta: It was not a government resolution, but rather a resolution of the majority to which we belonged. If we were concerned 4 years ago over the dangers that existed, and if we jointly expressed that concern, then there are now many more reasons indicating that a joint accord is needed so as to make our country a peaceful force, so that our country, belonging to the EEC, could operate in a way which would ensure the EEC a greater role in international cooperation--in that context let me recall the agreements reached between Yugoslavia and the EEC--in the policy of peace and detente. At the same the EEC should, as we say, decline an uncritical sycophancy in relation to the United States. We belong to an alliance, but we do not think that we belong to a constellation of satellites and vassals. We are working for the policy of peace and that is not contrary to anyone's interests, or contrary to the interests of those who are perhaps not aware of all the dangers of the present moment.

[Question] The international situation has become strained. The culmination of this strained situation was at the time of the Soviet troops' invasion of Afghanistan. How does the PCI assess that event?

Pajetta: We condemned the intervention. We believe that it is necessary to seek every opportunity which would create conditions for relaxation of tension in that part of the world by withdrawing foreign troops and which would obligate other countries not to exert pressure on the Afghan borders. We believe that in such an Afghanistan the Afghans will find internal balance, and they will themselves decide their destiny. If one looks at Afghanistan as a country which should be occupied or on which pressure should be exerted, that is certainly negative. Primarily for the Afghans, but not only for them.

[Question] The PCI has negatively assessed the U.S. measures against the Soviet Union which should be a reply to the Soviet invasion....

Pajetta: Some people tried to justify the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan as a countermeasure to the decision to deploy new U.S. missiles in Western Europe, including in Italy. We said that by such a countermeasure it is certainly not possible to settle the questions of detente. Now, when food assistance has been withdrawn, when a hysteric campaign is being waged against the Olympic games and when military steps are being prepared, we believe this method borders on madness. It is not possible to condemn solely the last step. What is needed is a slow withdrawal to the original starting points. For that reason we advocate the withdrawal of troops from Afghanistan, while at the same time we demand a new study of balance in the field of nuclear warheads before new missiles are deployed in Europe. We believe that it is necessary to adopt SALT II and to prepare SALT III. We will safeguard peace solely by deeds.

[Question] The American fever was also transferred to Europe: Let us take the vote in the European Parliament in connection with participation in the Olympic games as an example. With which European forces does the PCI intend to cooperate in Europe?

Pajetta: We have on several occasions found a common language with socialist from various countries. It is also possible to create alliances if there are not completely identical views. I do not know whether all those who condemned the Soviet occupation of Afghanistan are in favor of the U.S. policy of straining relations. Among those which condemned the Soviet invasion are also forces, primarily the nonalined countries and Yugoslavia, among them, which are an expression of peace-loving will. That is something other than the policy of countermeasures and a new arms race that would be dangerous for all.

[Question] What is the PCI's view about the proposal made by the EEC foreign ministers on Afghanistan's neutralization?

Pajetta: We have not yet studied that proposal. I do not know what Afghanistan's neutralization means in view of the fact that Afghanistan is a nonalined country and as such neutral. If the proposal is sincere, it can become a component part of other proposals, such as, if I am not mistaken, the Indian proposal and the proposal of the socialist states. Briefly, the Afghans should make decisions in Afghanistan, while the security on the border with Pakistan and other countries must be insured. In view of the fact that the Soviet Union stated that it intervened in Afghanistan so as to protect those borders, the Soviet Union should withdraw once it establishes that no one threatens the borders and should leave it to the Afghans to make their own decisions.

[Question] Afghanistan has brought international tension to a boiling point. However, before that, other developments set off an escalation of tension. What were those developments?

Pajetta: The concern over the situation in Iran is really a concern for oil. Then there is the decision on new American missiles in Western Europe. One must understand that American medium-range missiles once in Europe become long-range missiles that can hit the Soviet Union. For that reason the missiles, in view of their deployment, are an innovation; and if we speak about Pershing and cruise missiles there is also a quality factor. We have proposed a moratorium for the Soviet SS-20 missiles, which are said to be something new, and we propose negotiations before the production and deployment of the American missiles begin.

[Question] The PCI voted against the new American missiles. According to the Christian Democratic Party, that vote, together with your "no" to joining the European monetary system, was an act which could cause Italy's alienation from Europe.

Pajetta: The PCI is not a party which believes that an alliance means dependence on the U.S. chief of staff and the U.S. President. The PCI will also never allow a foreign guest to lecture us on domestic policy at our congress. Before the Christian Democratic Party demands from us guarantees, which we are always prepared to give, let it first look in a mirror and ask itself whether it can prove that it is an independent party which is not under an alien influence and that it wants an Italy that will, within the Atlantic alliance, be capable of becoming a force which has its own opinion and which protects its international interests.

[Question] Somebody in the Christian Democratic Party has said that it is better to be in NATO even when the alliance makes mistakes....

Pajetta: Perhaps it is precisely for that reason that I am in the PCI, because those kinds of people are in the Christian Democratic Party.

[Question] The PCI advocates an autonomous role of Europe between the two superpowers. What do your propose to the EEC regarding a common foreign policy?

Pajetta: Europe, the countries which make up the Economic Community, do not want to become a third bloc. They do not want to be a third nuclear power. We Communists advocate an elimination of blocs. We are in favor of a policy which would protect European interests and which would make possible cooperation in the world, a dialog with the two superpowers, while recognizing Europe's role. Such a Europe could play a positive role. Briefly, it would not be an enemy which would introduce unrest, which could threaten the Soviet Union and the United States. Such a Europe could remind the two superpowers that there is someone else in the world and not solely the two superpowers. As an example I can mention Yugoslavia, which is nonalined and which maintains good relations with all European countries. Yugoslavia does not demand, for instance, that Hungary leave the Warsaw Pact, just as it does not demand that Italy leave NATO, and when Yugoslavia proposes something they are always proposals aimed at encouraging cooperation.

[Question] Which peace proposals can in the future contribute to elimination of tension in Europe and in the world?

Pajetta: We view the Polish proposal with great interest. We have also said that the French proposal, which is analogous to the Polish one, is interesting. A step forward must be made until the Madrid conference. We can take a step forward only if we substitute a global discussion for the useless discussion on a different weight and value of the "three baskets." Progress is necessary on the front of security and disarmament, on the front of economic cooperation and on the front of freedom of communications and human rights.

[Question] The PCI advocates a new policy toward the developing countries, the Mediterranean countries in particular. Your delegation was in Algeria. What are the results of those contacts?

Pajetta: The results are good relations with Algeria and the POLISARIO. As to Algeria, we are not only working for increased economic cooperation, but also for different relations between Italy and Algeria, which is an important nonalined, Arab and Mediterranean country. It is necessary to understand that such countries are not only a market and producers of oil and other raw materials, but are states which also take initiatives and provide ideas. Therefore, it is necessary to understand that these countries want recognition, that they want a new economic system and that they do not want only to make a favorable deal or obtain a favorable loan.

[Question] Do you plan any other trips?

Pajetta: We were also in Jordan. We are now planning a study delegation which will leave for the countries of the Persian Gulf. We are working, and we maintain good contacts with Yugoslavia, which is also a Mediterranean country.

[Question] What are the relations between the LCY and the PCI like, particularly after the visit of Comrade Buffalini to Belgrade and your visit to Ljubljana?

Pajetta: Our contacts are good. We believe that mutual discussions and exchanges of views are useful. In Ljubljana, I had an interesting political talk with Comrade Popit, who recently attended the Polish Party's congress. As far as my trip to Ljubljana is concerned: My intention was to express feelings of solidarity and to inquire about the state of health of Comrade Tito, whom not only the Italian Communists, but all Italians respect.

BOFFA DEFENDS PCI EVOLUTION ON WORLD PROBLEMS

LD061315 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 2 Mar 80 p 1 LD

[Guiseppe Boffa article: "Latecomers"]

[Text] One just feels like shrugging one's shoulders when one hears it said--at the recent Christian Democratic Party congress, for instance, but also by other people--that the Communists are good little boys because they have changed their ideas on foreign policy, but a bit stupid because it took them so many years to realize what the Christian Democrats, for instance, realized so long before. Such an argument, if not polemical cheating, is proof of a great blindness, an inability to understand what is happening in the world.

It is strange how some of our critics forget a certain elementary fact. In the grave international crisis which we are experiencing, the gains of detente achieved over the past decade are one of the few refuges which enable us to weather the storm. Who are the people who are committed to their defense, considering them a reality to be safeguarded, an essential precondition for promoting broader international cooperation? Of course, we are not the only ones, but we are certainly not new recruits on that front. Even in the darkest years of cold war, unforgettable speeches by Togliatti subordinated our every task to promoting a policy of detente in the international field. But even in the sixties, when the battle in Europe was at its fiercest, our adversaries refused even to use the word detente, considering it a kind of subversive trap.

It is not our intention now to establish merits or priorities. The important thing is that something has been built in this direction in Europe, partly with our help. Do we realize where we might be today had it not been for this patient work? But, people object, Europe is not everything and detente must be "indivisible." Very well, but who, if not we ourselves, has always urged Italy and Europe as a whole to seek a new and more constructive attitude toward the rest of the world, its enormous and unprecedented problems and the upheavals taking place within it? Can we recall the deafness and silence of others?

This is why we regard the Christian Democrats' polemic as inconsistent, vitiated not so much by a factious attitude as by a blindness to today's problems. I would like to proceed from an observation which, in view of all the present troubles, might seem unimportant or eccentric. But it is promoted by one of the latest issues of London's THE ECONOMIST, in which British Sinologist MacFarquhar has written a lengthy essay asserting that the real "challenge" facing "the West" is now constituted not so much by the "Russians" or "Arabs" as by the "post-Confucianism" allegedly now approaching Japan, China and their neighboring countries, in short, the whole of the Far East which is now in the midst of an upheaval. MacFarquhar is a serious scholar and, though we consider his analyses extremely questionable, it is not with him that we now want to take issue. Indeed, our initial thought on reading his thesis was: Thank goodness, some of our own pompous editorial writers or politician friends of theirs have not yet realized this!

Because it is quite true that Europe has to come to terms with an increasing number of conceptions, ambitions and protests developing in historical and cultural environments very different from our own, and it may even be that these "challenges" include a neo-Confucianism grated onto much more modern currents of thought. In any case there are already many others: Suffice it to consider the Islamic revival. The thorough upheaval which has overtaken the world in our century could not have produced less than this--these innovations which were inconceivable until yesterday because they are divorced from the old order of things. [paragraph continues]

The tensions and dangers stem partly from this. But how have our critics in certain papers and certain parties always approached them? For years they have portrayed--and continue to portray--these problems as if they were merely the result of certain "evil spirits" appearing on the earth. The demons' name varied. They were called "the Kremlin," then Mao, Ho Chi Minh, An-Nasir, then "the Kremlin" again, then Lumumba, Castro, "the Shaykh", Al-Qadhdhafi, Khomeyni and yet again "the Kremlin." But they always remained evil spirits. Will we be able to add another diabolical Far Eastern figure to the list tomorrow?

We would not be surprised, since people have been closing their eyes for so long to the most cataclysmic and lasting aspects of the revolutionary movement of our time--a movement with which we, however, have always sought an understanding dialog without paternalism, simply because we have felt and still feel part of it. Now this dialog is more than ever a vital necessity for our country and for the whole of Europe.

Indeed, comes the reply: But you too are criticizing the USSR now. In fact, our arguments with the Soviets have a long history too. But there is a difference which remains valid. Many of our critics have always attacked the USSR precisely because of its revolutionary origins. We have never done this, and we have no intention of doing so. Our criticism is of what we consider an inability (due to decades of Stalinism, an incomplete regeneration and a prevalent conservative outlook) to bring its ideas and policy into line with the changes caused in the world by a revolutionary process which cannot be controlled by any hegemonic center. The USSR has paid for this mistake and risks paying for it even more dearly.

We have never concealed the changes introduced into our stances. We have always debated them openly. "Only fools never change," a certain French conservative--certainly no fool himself--used to say. We have changed our attitude toward both the Atlantic pact and the EC. But even in these contexts we have not in the least abandoned our own ideas, doubts and political and cultural heritage. It is not a matter of equidistance, neutralism or mental reservations--all empty labels sometimes used in polemicizing with us. It is no coincidence if--whether on detente, international cooperation, arms reduction, an autonomous role for a united Europe in a world in transformation or North-South relations--our concerns converge, even in a strictly Western context, with the concerns of other important political forces, whether in government or in opposition in their various countries.

Have there been any delays or uncertainties in the evolution of our ideas? We are constantly asking ourselves this kind of question. It is our habit to do so. If only other people started asking themselves similar questions from time to time. They would discover a great deal. At least we can state that apart from delays in our evolution there have probably also been some early steps. Perhaps sometimes we have even rushed too far ahead, set our sights too high and regarded as mature situations which were not yet mature. In the political struggle these too are errors. But in a country where the government cannot see further than 24 hours ahead and in a world in which in fact we should be looking forward into the next millennium, we really have nothing to be ashamed of. How greatly we would all benefit if the other political forces also started looking a little beyond their own affairs.

PREMIER AFFIRMS ALLIANCE'S RESOLVE TO DEFEND DEMOCRACY

[Live relay of a speech by Portuguese Prime Minister Sa Carneiro to parliament at the conclusion of a debate on the government's economic policies]

[Excerpts] The government's policy can be summed up in terms of two principal goals. These are the building of a democratic state and the pursuit of social justice. The defense of a representative democracy, to which the government is committed, means the functioning of elected organs of sovereignty and full respect for the functioning of the parliamentary opposition. But it also means that we will not yield to any attempts to overthrow the government by nonparliamentary means--whether in the form of appeals to insurrection, disobedience and disrespect for the law, or attempts to bring about confrontations between the organs of sovereignty, or even by manipulating the workers' legitimate rights.

The opposition has acted as if the government were about to be ousted. But the government is not going to be ousted because the oppositions [as heard--Carneiro often differenciates between the Socialist and Communist opposition] do not have enough strength to do it and because the Portuguese people continue to support the government even more than they did on 2 December.

Any idea about fresh elections, or any tactics or strategy to that effect would be in fact--in view of the 2 December elections and of the immutability of the government majority--a violation of the principles of representative democracy and an attempt to pervert the results of the 2 December elections, which the oppositions have been unable to accept democratically and serenely. What the oppositions desperately want is to govern, even though they do not command a majority. Thus, they seek to bring about confrontations likely to lead to the fall of this government. Falling short of this, they want, at least, to dictate their views to the government. But, honorable members of the opposition, we are the government and we are the ones who have the majority, and you will remain in the opposition until the next elections--and, we trust, after the elections.

In order to attain its objectives--building a democratic state and the pursuit of social justice--the government requires stability, secured here in parliament by the support of the parliamentary majority. In this case, there is in fact institutional solidarity between the government and the parliament, guaranteed by the support of the majority.

In my opinion, it is not possible to have institutional solidarity without political solidarity. Without political solidarity there is only an institutional functioning, or, if you will, a functional coexistence between the organs of sovereignty. And we know perfectly well--as none of this was concealed from the Portuguese--that there were fundamental political differences between the blueprint of the Democratic Alliance and certain organs of sovereignty, differences which were not, and are not, concealed. They are not concealed by these organs of sovereignty themselves. In effect, the ideal situation for the pursuit of these national objectives is one characterized by full institutional solidarity, which is indeed, in the long term, the blueprint of the Democratic Alliance.

This full institutional solidarity will only come into being when the active political leadership of a government supported by a parliamentary majority is eventually coupled with the national representation embodied in the president of the republic. Only then will the institutional solidarity between the three organs of sovereignty come to function in full. This proviso is indeed the condition necessary for the fulfillment of the Democratic Alliance blueprint. This can only be achieved after this year's elections. That is why, aware of this situation and aware that the only existing institutional solidarity is between these two organs of sovereignty--the government and parliament--because only there does political solidarity exist, the government and the parliamentary majority have done and will continue to do their utmost to avoid any political confrontations between the organs of sovereignty.

This is the essential condition for stability. And we have to follow this line, if only out of self-interest, because this condition is indispensable--or rather, necessary--for the continuation of the government's action. It is not with instability or confrontation that the government can effectively pursue its course. On the contrary, that is why we are not the ones who are interested in bringing about a confrontation because it is in our interest to avoid it. Rather, it is the other forces, possibly from the parliamentary opposition and the extraparliamentary opposition, that have come out against the government.

In fact, one might even say that there has been an onslaught by the parliamentary and extraparliamentary opposition. And while this onslaught can be regarded as legitimate when it takes the form of debates like this one, it becomes illegitimate and must be rejected when it originates from an extraparliamentary opposition--even from members of organs of sovereignty--because, by promoting it, they are rendering a disservice to the nation by seeking it--whether or not they are aware of it. I do not wish to pass any judgments to bring about conditions that will make it impossible for the government to govern and carry out its duties peacefully.

The government will act--not at the party level but rather at the national level--and will prove itself capable of governing and solving the concrete problems of all Portuguese. It will prove capable of securing the conditions for and the implementation of social justice. That is why we will win the next elections and the oppositions will lose.

At the end of this debate we will continue to govern, identified even more strongly, if possible, with the Portuguese people who work, who want to suffer less, who want better conditions and who do not take any notice of intrigues and perfidies. Therefore, we will continue to work with serenity and will fully maintain our serenity and efficiency, because that is what the responsibility which the Portuguese bestowed upon us requires of us.

REVOLUTION COUNCIL DENIES ANTIGOVERNMENT INITIATIVES

LD061314 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 0400 GMT 6 Mar 80 LD

[Text] The Council of the Revolution will not be the source of initiatives likely to unleash an artificial political crisis. This is stated in a lengthy communique issued early this morning by the Council of the Revolution after having been in session since yesterday afternoon. The final stand of this organ of sovereignty was awaited with much expectation.

The Council communique views recent press reports of a military plot to oust the government as slanderous, and as being aimed at spreading unrest among the military, provoking a confrontation between the organs of sovereignty and hindering the normal functioning of the democratic institutions. The communique describes the reports as maneuvers of professionals in the art of intoxicating opinions and of unscrupulous politicians.

Among the various clarifications contained in the communique, it is stated that the Council of the Revolution can discuss, with total critical freedom, all matters brought before it, also its members are free to publicly express their personal views on political matters, but these views should not in any way be taken as those of the organization to which they belong.

The communique, in conclusion, states threats to democracy established on 25 April 1974 would never come from the Council of the Revolution or any of its members.

[Unattributed reports: "Socialists Step up Opposition to Sixth Government"]

[Excerpts] [Portuguese Socialist Party (PS) Secretary General] Mario Soares announced at a press conference yesterday that the PS is to step up its opposition to the sixth government, specifically by means of a parliamentary interpellation concerning the recent economic measures. At the same time, the PS has taken "the initiative of leading" the 25 April celebrations and has decided to begin contacts for the formation of a "Progress Front" embracing parties, movements and individuals of the democratic left.

Making an "initial assessment" of the government's activity after 6 weeks in office, during which time the PS has maintained a "wait-and-see attitude," Mario Soares said that the Democratic Alliance "has not yet fulfilled in the least the promises it made to the electorate."

Instead of the promised fall in prices, we are witnessing a "general escalation" without any compensatory pay and social benefits. Apart from being "very vague and inadequate," the announced measures for continuing inflation were taken in accordance with "a highly questionable order of priorities," "are challenging the renewed thrust to expansion" and, furthermore, were decided without consulting the two sides of industry or the opposition.

Therefore, with a view to starting a debate on the government's economic and financial policy options, the PS has taken the initiative of a parliamentary interpellation "in the belief that these measures stem from inadequate options for resolving the problems of the Portuguese economy or for satisfying the basic needs of the population."

Leaving the economic field, Soares presented another long list of criticisms of the government, accusing it first of "the intention of obstructing the activity of the Assembly of the Republic" by means of successive requests for ratification [of legislation passed by previous government]. "It is unusual in any democratic system," he said, "for everything to be called into question after a change of government."

Furthermore, he said that by requesting authority to legislate in certain essential fields, the government is "subordinating" and "evading debate" in the Assembly of the Republic, "despite the fact that it does have a certain small relative majority--or perhaps for that very reason," Soares added.

As for foreign policy, "an extremely dangerous swing" is taking place, with the "alinement with the so-called 'hawks' of Europe," that is, with the espousal of the approaches of Margaret Thatcher and Strauss, as against "moderates" such as Schmidt and Giscard. Therefore, the Socialist secretary general said, we are witnessing a "cooling of relations" with the Portuguese-speaking African countries.

Soares also criticized the dismissal of public officials, pointing to a "scandalous policy of purges," especially in the media.

Furthermore, in a "kind of headlong rush," the government is setting its sights on a "deliberate confrontation with other states bodies." The conflicts with the president and the Council of the Revolution seem, he said, "entirely artificial and invented to divert attention from a real inability to resolve the problems."

"Progress Front" Will Embrace Democratic Left

Regarding preparations for the next elections, Soares also announced the appointment of a Socialist committee whose task will be to take "the first steps toward creating a Progress Front embracing the democratic left" and to establish contacts with political and social forces ("parties, movements, semi-party organizations and individuals") of this political area.

The Socialist Secretariat has appointed Vitor Constancio, Antonio Reis and Jose Manuel Galvao Teles members of the committee.

The independent Social Democratic Association, the Social Democratic Movement and the Union of the Left for Social Democracy were specifically named as forces to be contacted by the PS. Soares said that the Socialists "have never ceased to maintain very close contacts" with Maria Lourdes de Pintasilgo, though "so far there have been no formal contacts."

As for the possibility that the Reformists may join the front, Soares said that "everything depends" on them "establishing themselves in the area of the democratic left." "The PS," he added, "does not tie people down to what they have done in the past" and "even through there is a situation of conflict it is willing to hold a dialog in which they can try to convince us that they are in the same area as we."

With regard to the Social Democratic Party, Soares ruled out "the possibility of the PS taking any initiative." The Portuguese Communist Party is also outside the area of the democratic left, the Socialist leader explained.

With regard to the presidential elections, he said next that his party is awaiting a decision from Ramalho Eanes as to whether he will stand as a candidate again, since the PS has not yet defined "clearly its position concerning which candidate to field or support."

However, he did say that his "prospects" do not include standing for the presidency of the republic himself, when asked about suggestions to this effect made by the Democratic Alliance.

Soares said that a boycott of the Moscow Olympic games will be "inevitable" unless the Soviet forces withdraw from Afghanistan. He expressed this opinion in a personal capacity, since the PS has not discussed the issue and the decision must be taken essentially by the sporting organizations and governments.

CARRILLO HITS UCD DECISION TO GOVERN SPAIN ALONE

LD051613 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 29 Feb 80 p 13 LD

[Unattributed report on PCE Secretary General Santiago Carrillo 28 February speech in Madrid: "Spain Needs Strong Government"]

[Text] Madrid, 28 February--"The Union of the Democratic Center's [UCD] aim to govern alone and in an increasingly rightwing fashion has not simplified political, economic or social problems. On the political plane, the greatest confusion reigns. On the economic plane it has left the solution of the crisis to market interplay in a system which is anything but liberal, and on the social plane the government has driven a wedge between the trade unions, ostracizing the Workers Commissions on the pretext of dealing a blow to communist influence," PCE Secretary General Santiago Carrillo said in his talk to the 21st Century Club this evening.

He added that Spain needs a strong government, because a weak government like the UCD's is ineffective in a transition period such as the country is now experiencing and in a world crisis of current proportions. "The strong government which we advocate," he said, "must be parliamentary, with a broad basis of support in the Cortes and throughout the country, with a clear policy, with the courage to deal with speculation and corruption and to implement state reform and a policy of peace and detente in the international field."

"Real Opposition Not in Parliament"

Next he said that the real political opposition in Spain is not in parliament, or if so, only to a very small extent, "because there is a power bloc obstructing the democratic process which is not clearly visible in public life, but which is thoroughly rooted in the institutions inherited from the past." He said that this is preventing agreement between the national parties and the Basque nationalists and that this social bloc is then directing itself against the unforgotten target of its wrath--the Communist Party. "This corrosive activity," the PCE leader added, "is affecting a number of independent individuals of great liberal prestige and is also making itself felt in the obstruction being raised to the trade union confederation's legitimate powers, thus gradually creating an atmosphere of dissatisfaction and despondency."

He said that unless the democratic forces react, this social power bloc, having managed to smash Spanish democracy and wear out and drive out even the UCD, will present itself openly in public and will declare an end to the constitutional and democratic monarchy.

He added that there is a solution to the problem and that he does not claim--with a superficially Marxist analysis--that this power group represents capitalism in our country, because it is acting not only against the working class but also against other sectors of capitalism itself.

Having pointed out that, following the Andalusian referendum and the election of the Catalonian and Basque parliaments, the representatives of all the parliamentary parties must meet in the Cortes to try to reach agreement on the development of the economic process, the speaker said that, without working class representatives in the government, the workers would not feel like workers, adding that "either they too participate in the government, or the social power bloc which I have mentioned will consume both the UCD and democracy."

The Communist leader condemned the Soviet troops' occupation of Afghanistan, which he said has prompted a very grave escalation in international tension. "I believe," he said, "that we are witnessing the crisis of bipolarity, of the system of splitting the world into blocs headed by the U.S. and USSR leaderships. Under these conditions the new Spanish democracy could play an autonomous role in the international scene."

"We Cannot Be a U.S. Satellite"

But so far the only reaction to the conflict in distant Afghanistan has been Prime Minister Suarez' sudden visit to Washington, and in view of the government's apathy with respect to the decision to deploy new nuclear missiles in Europe. [sentence as published] The visit to Iraq and Jordan seems more like an errand on President Carter's behalf than an autonomous initiative, and, "if Spain is to be a unifying link between Western Europe and the Arab and Latin American worlds, its policy cannot be that of a U.S. satellite or go-between."

UCD, PSOE ISSUE COMMUNIQUES ON ANDALUSIAN REFERENDUM

LD061643 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 1 Mar 80 p 14 LD

[Unattributed report: "Over Half of Andalusia Said 'Yes'"]

[Excerpts] The first statements by the leaders of the principal political parties [on the outcome of the Andalusian autonomy referendum] are concurrent, except in the foreseeable instances of the Union of the Democratic Center [UCD] and the Democratic Coalition. In fact they have all very positively assessed the outcome of the referendum, emphasizing, above all, one fact: Taking the Andalusian population as a whole, 55 percent voted in favor. This fact, they assert, makes it possible to speak of a moral victory for the Andalusian people, who have reaffirmed their desire for autonomy. On the other hand, the UCD believes that the Andalusian people have expressed their desire to conduct their autonomy process in accordance with article 143 [of the Spanish Constitution], which, it asserts, allows a ceiling identical to that for Catalonia and the Basque Country.

UCD: "Result Clarifies Method To Be Followed"

The UCD press office has released to the news media a communique setting out its stance, from which we single out the following paragraphs:

"The UCD believes that the results of the Andalusian autonomy referendum, in rejecting the procedural option of article 151, clarify the method to be followed for the full attainment of autonomy in this Spanish region.

"In light of these results, the UCD believes that it is not desirable to delay Andalusia's autonomy by waiting 5 years in order to decide again on article 151, and that the other course laid down in the Constitution--which is that of article 143--should be followed."

"Now that this matter of procedure has been resolved and the uncertainty about the method for implementing it has been clarified, the UCD is immediately preparing to ask the government to issue the regulations necessary for convening the assembly of parliamentarians and provincial deputies."

"Because the autonomy process requires an appropriate pace, capable of being assimilated by the autonomous institutions, which will guarantee the functioning of the state during and after the highly complex process of transferring powers, the path of article 143 enables each statute to fit harmoniously with the others in the Spanish legal system, averts or reduces the economic and social costs of the process, helps reduce the danger of political instability posed by the prospect of constant electoral processes and guarantees the full functioning of the autonomous institutions.

"Last, the path of article 143 guarantees that at the conclusion of the process, absolutely all the autonomies will be alike."

PSOE: "Result Wrecks Government Plan"

"The results of the referendum known so far are regarded by the Spanish Socialist Workers Party Executive Committee as a great victory for the Andalusian people," states a communique issued by that party's press office at the conclusion of the meeting held by the Executive Committee this afternoon.

The text of the communique continues as follows:

"These results make clear the Andalusian people's massive support for a full autonomy with maximum powers, on an equal footing with the other peoples of Spain. The figures demonstrate that the Andalusian people's desire for autonomy is as great as that among the peoples currently enjoying it.

"This result also represents a renewed hope for all the peoples of Spain in the task of achieving a genuine state of the autonomies, with equality in the levels of self-government and without discriminations.

"The outcome of the referendum also represents the failure of the government's political plan, which is seeking to impede the implementation of autonomy envisaged in the Constitution and to turn this process into a mere administrative decentralization.

"The victory is all the more significant if one takes into account the boycott, extraordinary in the history of democracy, which the government itself set in motion with the aim of preventing free expression on the part of the Andalusian people, using the dirtiest tricks to this end. The Andalusian people have taught a great lesson which both the government and the UCD will be unable to disregard in implementing the autonomy process."

PLO ASKED TO RECOGNIZE ISRAEL'S RIGHT TO EXIST

[John Bulloch report: "'Recognise Israeli Nation,' Britain Urges PLO"]

[Text] Britain called on the Palestine Liberation Organisation yesterday to recognize Israel's right to exist within secure borders. Such a move would enable the British Government to have a dialogue with the Palestinians, an official said. Britain had always considered the PLO an important voice, "but not the sole representatives of the Palestinian people."

This statement came after this week's earlier unequivocal endorsement of President Giscard's call for "self determination" for the Palestinian people. "Any solution in the Middle East had to recognise that the Palestinians had the right to self-determination within the framework of a negotiated settlement," the Foreign Office said.

But since then the farce of the American vote-that-shouldn't-have-been at the United Nations has taken place. President Carter has said that America voted for a resolution condemning the Israeli policy of establishing settlements in the West Bank "by mistake."

This American volte-face, seen in Europe as a result of pressure during a presidential campaign, appeared yesterday to have had some effect in London. The American ambassador, Mr Kingman Brewster, reported to Washington that the Foreign Office had been "horrified" at the debacle over the United Nations vote. Yesterday all that officials would admit was that they had been "surprised" at what had taken place.

In fact, Britain remains committed to what is fast becoming a general European policy of starting a new Middle East dialogue designed to break the deadlock which has developed from the Camp David accords. Mr Douglas Hurd, minister of state at the Foreign Office, had hoped to be able to announce some new movement during the trip to the Gulf region he began last night with a stop-over in Jiddah. But as a result of the American improglio, he is now unlikely to be able to do so.

At the same time, Britain remains committed to securing an amendment to Resolution 242, which speaks of the Palestinians merely as "refugees." The British Government, like the French and most of the rest of Europe, believes that a change in this basic resolution which recognised the Palestinians might clear the way for negotiations.

MINISTER HURD ON MIDDLE EAST POLICY, AFGHANISTAN

LD061357 Kuwait KUNA in English 1011 GMT 6 Mar 80 LD

[By John Evans]

[Text] London, March 6 (KUNA)--Britain supports the French policy on the Middle East centred on self determination for the Palestinian people, which President Valery Giscard d'Estaing proclaimed during his visit to Kuwait this week, the British Foreign Office Minister Douglas Hurd has said.

In an interview here with the Kuwait News Agency (KUNA) Wednesday, Hurd, who travels to Kuwait in the next few days declared that the Palestinians must have a right to determine their own future. At the same time, Britain was continuing to discuss actively with its European partners a move which could be helpful to the Middle East situation, he said.

Hurd is minister of state responsible, under the Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington, for Britain's relations with the Middle East. After visiting Kuwait, he travels on to the Yemen Arab Republic. The minister told KUNA he expected to have discussions at ministerial level on bilateral relations in both (?countries), but anticipated spending considerable talking [as received] about the international situation, including the Palestine question and the Islamic response to the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

Commenting on the French president's joint declaration with Kuwait, Hurd said the announcement was in line with Britain's views. He added "if you look at what President Giscard said in the communique and compare that with what Lord Carrington said to the United Nations last September and what the Irish foreign minister, Mr Kennedy, stated on behalf of the nine European states at the General Assembly, all three are very close together.

"We all accept that, within the framework of a negotiated settlement which is important, the Palestinians must have a right to determine their own future. And this is a point which the British Government has impressed on all concerned, including the Israelis, on every opportunity we have had in recent months." He went on "so I think it is very satisfactory that the countries in the European Community should clearly now be very close together in their analysis. This is very hopeful for the future."

Asked if the French declaration implied acceptance of the concept of a Palestinian homeland, Hurd replied "again, we have used the phrase--a right to a land of their own--within the context of an agreed settlement. Without such a settlement, these are phrases. What we have to do is to find a way of moving toward an agreed settlement."

The British minister said he understood that President Giscard's declaration reflected solely his position as the French leader. The French statesman was not in Kuwait specifically on behalf of the nine European Community states, "although what he (President Giscard) has said is extremely close to what the Nine have been saying".

Spelling out Britain's own policy moves on the Middle East, Hurd went on "we have been discussing with our European partners the possibility of a European move which would be helpful. We are still in discussions and no decisions have yet been taken".

But Hurd confirmed that Britain, as part of such a joint European policy, supports action on the United Nations Resolution 242 on the Middle East. The resolution, passed by the Security Council in November, 1967, urged withdrawal of Israeli forces from occupied territories, said that the Arab states should recognise Israel's right to exist and referred to a "just settlement" of the Palestinian refugee problem.

"Our starting point is the need which we see to reaffirm and supplement--not to alter, as it is a fact of history--Resolution 242 by putting into resolution form the thoughts which Lord Carrington, Irish Minister Kennedy and now President Giscard have expressed about the right of the Palestinians," Hurd said.

He added, "President Giscard is right, and the joint communique is right, by saying their rights cannot be discussed simply in terms of a refugee problem. This is the gap in Resolution 242, as Lord Carrington pointed out last September at the UN. There is a case for putting something helpful in that gap, if we can find a useful way of doing it. That is what we are considering."

Turning to Britain's neutrality proposals for Afghanistan, as well as its ideas on the Middle East, the minister told KUNA "I think that they are both signs of an active and I hope intelligent British diplomacy in trying to get a move on in sorting out major international problems."

The suggestion for a neutral and non-aligned Afghanistan--and it has to be both--has been endorsed by the EEC foreign ministers and has been put to the Soviet ambassador in London, Nikolay Lunkov, he noted. "We are not trying to impose any status upon Afghanistan. We are thinking in terms of a declaration by the Afghans themselves which would be recognised and accepted in some formal way by other states. That is the heart of the idea."

"I will certainly be asking the governments in Kuwait and San'a' for their reactions to it because we are very anxious to get as much reaction and suggestions as we can, particularly from the non-aligned countries."

Commenting on the possibility of external threat to the security of the Middle East, Hurd declared, "I think the days of the stationing of foreign troops in the Gulf and the existence of foreign bases are past. We certainly do not propose anything of that kind."

What Britain does hope--"as old friends"--is that the Gulf nations will discuss amongst each other effective means of cooperation over security, he said. The British Minister concluded: "But the initiative and the cooperation must, in the 1980's be theirs (the Arab nations). It is not something the great powers of Britain or France can impose from outside.

DAILY TELEGRAPH OPPOSES UK, FRENCH POLICY ON PALESTINIANS

[Editorial: "Mideast Blunderland"]

[Text] Western relations with Israel are becoming poisoned by a tragedy of errors on both sides. This column has often criticised Israel's settlement policy, which gives the impression that, in addition to justifiably insisting on some solid defense positions, she may also be determined to hold on to large parts of the West Bank for ever. This prejudices progress on the Palestinian problem and the highly creditable peace with Egypt, and also gives her inveterate enemies gratuitous ammunition to use against her. In this sensitive area of the world explosive over-all Middle East situation there now land the "accidental" rocket of the "mistaken" American United Nations vote condemning Israel, and the deliberate French landmine calling for "self-determination" for the Palestinians and for a Palestinian state. This was followed next day by an identical one from Britain.

The United Nations gaffe has upset President Carter's relations with Israel and damaged both his international credibility and his election campaign. The Security Council resolution, made unanimous by America's vote, not only condemned Israel's settlement policy, but demanded the dismantling of existing settlements, including those in East Jerusalem. Naturally, when Mr Carter apoligised to Israel and made the astonishing statement that it had all been a mistake and that America's delegate should have been instructed to abstain in the vote, his electoral opponents pounced. They said he had been brought to heel by the Jewish lobby and made the long-suffering Mr Vance take the rap.

The moves by Britain and France amount to support for a Palestinian state ruled by Yasir 'Arafat, Russia's favourite Arab stooge. France's opportunistic policies are something we have to learn to live with. That Britain should now follow her lead on such a course is a disturbing new departure. It will not encourage Israel to take chances on the West Bank, nor will it appease the Arab extremists. As for the moderates, however gratified they may appear in public, what they want above all is stability in the Middle East. They well know that 'Arafat will not contribute to this--far from it.

CARRINGTON ARRIVES IN KUALA LUMPUR, COMMENTS ON MUGABE

BK060855 Hong Kong AFP in English 0810 GMT 6 Mar 80 BK

[Text] Kuala Lumpur, 6 Mar (AFP)--British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington said today he was "encouraged" by the Rhodesian leader, Mr Robert Mugabe's call for a government of reconciliation.

Mr Mugabe's landslide victory surprised the British Government and Lord Carrington initially cancelled his visit to Kuala Lumpur for the ASEAN-EEC meetings when the results were known.

Lord Carrington later changed his mind. On arrival, he told reporters that Mr Mugabe's call was an encouraging sign for the future of the new nation, to be renamed Zimbabwe. He expressed confidence that the absence of public disorder spoke well for the future of the country.

Lord Carrington said that Mr Mugabe appeared "determined to build a government representing all factions, including the whites." "This is a good sign," he added.

DENKTAS CRITICIZES GREEK CYPRIOTS TO PARLIAMENTARIANS

TA062023 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1930 GMT 6 Mar 80 TA

[Text] President Rauf Denktas has said that the refusal by the Greek Cypriot side to acknowledge the Turkish Cypriot community's partnership status in the Cyprus Republic constituted one of the main obstacles to the resumption of the intercommunal talks.

Denktas made this statement while addressing the members of the British-Cyprus Commonwealth parliamentary association in London. Denktas was invited by the president of this association, (Cyril Townsend), to address the British parliamentarians.

In his address, Denktas briefed the association members on the latest developments in Cyprus. Denktas explained in detail the difficulties currently encountered in Cyprus in light of the incidents which have been occurring since 1960. Denktas noted that unless serious warnings were issued on the irreversible right of the Turkish side to a partnership status in Cyrpus, there was no hope that the Greek Cypriot side--which has no right to represent the whole of Cyrpus--would give up its present stand.

After the meeting, the president invited the British parliamentarians to visit northern Cyprus.

KIPRIANOU RETURNS FROM WESTERN EUROPE, MAKES STATEMENT

NC070632 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 0430 GMT 7 Mar 80 NC

[Text] At dawn today President Kiprianou returned to Cyprus from his visit to Paris, London and Rome, where he had talks on the Cyprus problem with French President Giscard d'Estaing, British Prime Minister Thatcher, Italian President Pertini, Italian Prime Minister Cossiga and other political personalities.

In a statement at Larnaca Airport, President Kiprianou described his talks as constructive and useful in all respects; he added that during these talks views were exchanged on ways in which these countries could contribute toward a solution to the Cyprus problem. President Kiprianou stressed that any assistance from these countries must be within the UN framework and in the correct direction. The president said that it was not possible for him to give details about his discussions because, he said, this would be likely to do more harm than good. However, he reiterated that his talks were very useful and that no initiative outside the UN framework is being considered.

Referring to his talks with the French president, Mr Kiprianou said that great understanding of the Cyprus problem was displayed and that he believes France will agree to play a role in the developments of the Cyprus problem.

President Kiprianou also described his London talks with Prime Minister Thatcher and Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington as constructive. He said that during these talks the Cyprus problem was extensively discussed in view of the role that Britain can play and its obligations toward Cyprus. In London, President Kiprianou also met opposition leader Mr Callaghan and Commonwealth Secretary General Ramphal.

Mr Kiprianou described his Rome talks with President Pertini and Prime Minister Cossiga as very cordial. The president said that Italy is particularly interested in the Cyprus problem and in the Mediterranean region, and added that he has been assured that this country will do everything possible to help resolve the Cyprus problem. In Rome, President Kiprianou was received by Pope John Paul II, with whom he mainly discussed the question of missing persons. The president said: The pope showed very great interest and assured us that he will do everything he can to help resolve this question. The president also met the secretary of state of the Vatican.

Foreign Minister Rolandhis and the other officials who accompanied the president also returned to Cyprus on board the same plane. At Larnaca Airport, President Kiprianou was met by House President Mikhailidhis, members of the Council of Ministers, the diplomatic envoys of the countries visited by the president, the chiefs of the National Guard and police and other officials.

KHARAVYI SCORES ROLANDHIS FOR LINKING CYPRIOT SOLUTION TO NATO

NC070701 Nicosia KHARAVYI in Greek 7 Mar 80 p 1 NC

[Editorial: "No Dangerous Illusions"]

[Excerpts] The official communiques, the statements and reports on President Kiprianou's visits to Paris, London and Rome speak about full understanding and positive change in the attitude of the Western countries toward the Cyprus problem. We are of the impression that an effort is being made to conceal and to black out the really negative attitude of the NATO countries toward the Cyprus drama. [paragraph continues]

This is tantamount not only to promoting dangerous illusions among our people but also to misleading the political circles, which must be aware of harsh reality so that they may be able to properly guide our struggle and the efforts to lead Cyprus out of the tragic stalemate and the faits accomplis of the invasion.

Following the events in Iran and Afghanistan, following the U.S.-Turkish agreement on the bases and above all following the huge U.S., West German and other NATO aid to Turkey, Turkey has become the gendarme and protege of imperialism in our region. It is precisely all this that has made Turkey so intransigent and Denktas' attitude toward the question of intercommunal talks so negative.

The NATO countries that have condoned and encouraged the Turkish invasion, the countries that have always undermined our cause at the United Nations and have disregarded the UN decisions, have been refusing to put any pressure on Turkey to agree to a fair Cyprus solution and to withdraw its NATO occupation troops from Cyprus. Britain in particular, which has contractual obligations to do this as a guarantor power, shows no intention of supporting our cause even by words alone.

The NATO stratocrats care only about converting Cyprus into a missile bridgehead. They fear that Cyprus might become a fully independent, nonalined, sovereign and demilitarized republic as its people wish it to be. They want Cyprus, as well as Greece and Turkey, to be part of the Western military bloc. This is why they are hostile to our cause. This is why they have been refusing to help find a solution based on UN resolutions and within the UN framework.

Unfortunately the republic's foreign minister, who accompanied President Kiprianou on his trip, in a statement to the foreign press has linked the solution of the Cyprus problem with the strengthening of the eastern wing of NATO. This statement, apart from its negative repercussions among the circles of our firm supporters--the nonalined and socialist countries--shows the existence of illusions about the possibility of harmonizing our liberation struggle with the interests of the NATO imperialist countries. This is a dangerous illusion which, if promoted, would undermine our struggle and the effort to further internationalize the just cause of the Republic of Cyprus and its people. Thus, it is imperative that with Mr Kiprianou's return things should be clarified and sound, and objective appraisals be made that would serve our struggle.

GREEK EMBASSY ISSUES STATEMENT DENYING NICOSIA RUMORS

NC052203 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 2100 GMT 5 Mar 80 NC

[Text of 5 March statement issued by the Embassy of Greece in Nicosia]

[Text] The Embassy of Greece is authorized to state that National Defense Minister Averof, having been informed of what is rumored in Nicosia concerning his stand on the Cyprus issue, has asked the embassy to announce the following: Undoubtedly the rumors that have circulated are fictitious. I have not talked with anyone recently on the Cyprus issue. Had I, it would have been impossible for me to say the untinational nonsense that has been attributed to me.

HURRIYET REPORTS STATEMENT BY GREEK CYPRIOT HOUSE LEADER

NC070718 Istanbul HURRIYET in Turkish 5 Mar 80 p 7 NC

[Text] In a statement to HURRIYET in Nicosia Mr Alekos Mikhailidhis, vice president of the Greek Cypriot administration [as published] and president of the Greek Cypriot House of Representatives, said: "Following UN Secretary General Kurt Waldheim's pressure, their excellencies Rauf Denktas and Spiros Kiprianou may start intercommunal talks in the very near future. [paragraph continues]

"It is difficult to say how long these talks will last, but I wish to stress categorically that this is my own personal view. As in the past, the two will fail to reach an agreement, and the talks will prove abortive because of these two leaders, who do not like to compromise."

Mr Mikhailidhis, who is political leader number two in the Greek Cypriot sector, said there is antipathy between Denktas and Kiprianou and added: "Both of them are pleased with the situation. One receives help from Greece and the other from Turkey. They are both presidents. Because of such antipathies, we have been unable to obtain positive results for the past 6 years."

The Greek Cypriot vice president has stressed that the rights of the Turkish Cypriots and certain facts have to be recognized, and suggested that the talks should start by dealing not with the most difficult issues but with those of secondary importance. Denktas and Kiprianou may, he suggested, be able to reach agreement on these points: A) The joint use of the Nicosia airport. B) The joint construction of the Larnaca-Nicosia road, a project which would provide employment for Turkish Cypriots. C) The establishment of joint industrial centers of the new Famagusta road.

Alekos Mikhailidhis concluded: "You cannot establish a republic for only 125,000 people under Denktas' presidency, because when you leave out the personnel of the government departments, the municipalities, security and police forces, teachers and doctors, as well as the women and children, who will be left in the country? Who is going to do the work? Who is going to produce the consumer goods?

"The current situation offers ample proof: The TFSC, which has been devouring aid from Turkey for the past 6 years, has gone backwards, while we have gone forward. Therefore, the settlement of differences is inevitable for both sides. But, let me repeat: I am not at all hopeful of the outcome of the intercommunal talks. I am even doubtful whether the talks will take place at all."

ELEVTHEROS KOSMOS WANTS NEORION AGREEMENT CLARIFIED

[From the "Judgements and Comments" column: "The Neorion Agreements"]

[Text] It has been reported that on orders [last two words in boldface type] from Prime Minister K. Karamanlis, the Greek-Soviet agreement for shipbuilding [as published] facilities to support vessels of the Russian Navy at Neorion Siros will be renewed--will be valid for 1980 despite "NATO recommendations" and while "eight Soviet ships are lining up:" The relevant report was published last Monday and so far has not been denied. The report is surprising because the political world and the public according to Foreign Minister Y. Rallis' statement, expect the submission of the bilateral agreement to the Chamber after some of its articles have been amended. Consequently, what will be in force for 1980? The agreement which has already been signed or the other with the amendments--and what amendments? In any case, whatever may be happening, the government's promise to submit the relevant texts to the Chamber for a briefing is still valid.

KARAMANLIS TO VISIT FRANCE--Prime Minister Karamanlis will leave for France on the 15th of March for the Schuman Award ceremony. According to reliable government sources, he has not yet made up his mind as to which personalities he will meet. By March 16th, Karamanlis must leave France, because on 17th March, the president of the republic, Mr. Tsatsos will be leaving for Lausanne. On March 18th, the Coudenhove Prize of Kalergi will be awarded to Mr. Tsatsos. According to reliable sources, Prime Minister Karamanlis will most likely have personal talks with President Giscard d'Estaing on the 15th or 16th of March. NEGOTIATIONS WITH HUNGARY--The Greek delegation of experts which had negotiated with Hungarian officials to conclude a bilateral social insurance agreement has returned from Budapest. In this connection, Deputy Minister for Social Services Apostolatos has stated: The fact that the Hungarian side, after a delay of 3 years, has agreed to discuss such a significant issue of our social policy is especially pleasing. Unfortunately, also in the instance of Hungary the results were not immediate since our interlocutors reserved the right to reply to the Greek plan for an agreement, thus following the policy which the other Eastern countries also follow on this issue. In any case, the deputy minister concluded, it is significant that another socialist country has been added to the negotiating table and only with East Germany have social insurance negotiations not yet begun. MINISTER RETURNS FROM VISIT TO LIBYA, MAKES STATEMENT

[Text] State Minister Orhan Oren, who was in Libya to participate in the inauguration of the international fair in Tripoli, returned home today. In a statement at Istanbul's Yesilkoy Airport, Oren said that he had held beneficial talks with officials of the Libyan Government on the subject of further promoting relations between the two countries.

Oren added that Libya was as interested as Turkey in the further development of relations. Oren said that during his visit to Libya he had met with the representatives of some 30 Turkish construction firms now engaged in building activities in Libya and had been briefed on their problems.

NSP DEPUTIES SUBMIT MOTION ON RELATIONS WITH GREECE

TA061658 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1640 GMT 6 Mar 80 TA

[Text] Ankara, 6 Mar (AA)--A group of National Salvation Party [NSP] deputies tabled a motion for a parliamentary investigation on Turkish, Greek relations and the lifting of the NOTAM restricting flights in Aegean airspace.

Deputy Konya Sener Battal and 10 other NSP deputies believed parliament should review a whole package of problems including the Aegean FIR [flight information region] line, Cyprus, and problems of the Turkish community in Western Thrace.

The lifting of the NOTAM on Aegean airspace allegedly "under the suggestion of foreign circles" such as the Federal German finance minister, the U.S. and the IMF, was also an important question to be considered.

They claimed Greece, "the spoiled child of Europe," was "oppressing" the Turks of Western Thrace because they were Turks and Muslims, and Turkey could not remain "indifferent" to their state.

DEMIREL TO HOLD NEWS CONFERENCES TO DISCUSS DOMESTIC ISSUES

TA061129 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 6 Mar 80 TA

[Text] Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel has expressed the conviction that the entire nation will resist those who kill their own soldiers. In a statement made on his way to a Council of Ministers meeting, which began at 1030, Demirel said that he will hold three separate news conferences on 8, 9, and 10 March and that he will explain Turkey's problems during these conferences. Demirel said: What does Turkey want to do? Where does it want to go? And where does it not want to go? What is it doing in order to solve its problems? This is what I will explain. Pointing out that the country will solve the problems it is currently facing, Demirel said:

[Begin Demirel recording] Very grieving and sad events are occurring daily. Traitors and mean people have sprung into existence. They are sufficiently remorseless, brutal and impudent to shoot at a Turkish soldier. The nation will not let them get away with their actions. The state will not let them get away with their actions. Everyone should have learned the necessary lesson from these events. This baseness, impudence, remorselessness and criminality should, under no circumstances, be protected by anyone. I am convinced that the entire nation will resist those who shoot their own soldiers. We should never have reached this stage. However, I state clearly that both our state and our nation is strong enough not to surrender the country to these impudent people. We are exerting joint efforts in a bid to save our nation despite all the suffering and sorrow. [end recording]

In reply to a question, Demirel said the reports that the prices of certain basic products will be increased again are false. He said: This is mere speculation. Price increases are out of the question. Everything necessary has been done. As long as we are able to preserve these balances, Turkey will be comfortable. Demirel noted that these reports are spread in order to cause panic and force the citizens to rush for the goods.

Replying to another question, Demirel added that the government is trying to prevent the Turkish lira from being devalued further.

COUNCIL OF MINISTERS MEETS, REVIEWS ANARCHY

TA061441 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1400 GMT 6 Mar 80 TA

[Text] A statement was issued after the Council of Ministers meeting held in Ankara today. The meeting lasted 3 hours. The statement says that struggle against anarchy, divisionism, destructionism and terror was reviewed during the meeting. The statement adds that a decision was reached to implement fully Law No 1481 regarding the prevention of acts which disturb peace and tranquillity. Promoting the war industry in accordance with the strategy set by the Council of Ministers and stepping up all programs connected with this subject was also decided in the meeting.

TURKISH-FRG TOURISM AGREEMENT--An agreement envisaging cooperation in the field of tourism between Turkey and the FRG has been signed in Bonn. The agreement was signed on behalf of Turkey by Tourism and Information Minister Barlas Kuntay and on behalf of the FRG by the FRG minister of foreign affairs, Hans-Dietrich Genscher. In a statement at the signing ceremony, Kuntay said that the agreement will bring the two nations closer together. Noting that the agreement will greatly contribute to increasing Turkey's foreign currency revenues, Kuntay said that the agreement was concrete proof of the efforts exerted by the Turkish Government in this direction. Genscher said that the FRG is ready to extend every possible aid to enable Turkey to overcome its economic problems. He noted that with this agreement Turkish-FRG friendship has been strengthened. The agreement envisages cooperation in the fields of investment, personnel training and management. [Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 3 Mar 80 TA]

LIRA REVALUED--The value of the Turkish lira against various foreign currencies has been readjusted following fluctuations in the world foreign exchange market. The Turkish lira has been revalued against various foreign currencies. According to the Turkish Central Bank directive issued in the official gazette on 5 March, the exchange rate of the lira has been increased by 81 kurus against the German mark, by 37 against the French franc, by 110 against the British pound and by 241 against the Swiss franc. The new exchange rate for the German mark is 39.64 lira, for the British pound 158.40, for the French franc 16.91, for the Dutch florin 36.09 lira. One Austrian schilling will be worth 5.55 lira, the Belgian franc 2.44, the Danish krone 12.71, the Swedish krona 16.69, the Swiss franc 41.23, the Canadian dollar 61.24 and 100 Italian lira 8.57. KREISKY ON BOGOTA HOSTAGES, AFGHANISTAN, NONALINED MOVEMENT

AU091556 [Editorial Report AU] Vienna Domestic Television Service in German at 2020 GMT on 7 March carries a 1-hour recorded AlfonDalma interview with Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky on "hotbeds of crisis in the world." In this interview, which took place presumably in Vienna on 7 March, Kreisky discussed a wide range of questions including terrorism in connection with the Bogota hostage affair and the release of Austrian Ambassador Selzer, the situation 2 months after the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, the Middle East problem, the policy of detente, the policy of strength, NATO complementary armament, parallels between the situation before the conclusion of the Austrian State Treaty and the current situation, the role of neutral and of neutralist states, Austria's energy dependence on the East, and the role of detente in the situation of West Berlin.

Regarding the Bogota hostage affairs, Kreisky stressed that the letter he wrote to the terrorists was not a letter of thanks but rather a letter that he had drawn up earlier to plead for the release of Ambassador Selzer--and of the other hostages--for humanitarian reasons, and that he merely amended the text to briefly express his thanks for the ambassador's release.

Regarding Afghanistan, Kreisky expressed his conviction that the Soviet invasion was an isolated action rather than part of a more far-reaching concept aimed at obtaining control of the Persian Gulf region. Those who decided to take that action obviously neither reckoned with such a worldwide condemnation of the invasion, nor with such a strong armed resistance by the Afghan people. Hence, he said, he believed that there are quite a few reasons for the USSR to end its Afghan adventure, but the USSR would hardly yield to the United States, nor would it accept the British or EEC neutralization plan for Afghanistan. "I believe that if there is any possibility at all--which I do not know and actually doubt--if there is any chance of the Soviet Union's coming around, then, in my opinion, the nonalined states would have to declare: Afghanistan is a country that belongs to us; Afghanistan has the right to be free of foreign troops, and we want to talk about that with you--with you, the Soviet Union: What are the conditions, how could we come to a restoration of the status that actually existed before, namely, that in the Afghan capital of Kabul there is a government that is loyal and friendly toward the Soviet Union--that was always been so, and the world acknowledged it--and that you pull out with your troops."

Noting that it would be interesting to see how Cuba would react to the idea of such a joint action by the nonalined countries, considering that it is now virtually their spokesman although it is actually not nonalined but closely linked with the Soviet Union, Kreisky said: "All the same, I think one could and should not relieve Cuba from the responsibility." He answered negatively to the question of whether he believed the nonalined countries are presently capable of jointly taking effective action regarding Afghanistan, but added: "Nevertheless, I am making this proposal because I believe that, if no political action materializes, then this will lead to a parting of the roads within the nonalined camp. Very soon it will be recognized who is really for genuine nonalinement and for a policy of nonalinement, which should also have a protective function--in any case, a moral one--who is really for genuine nonalinement and who is actually a sham ally."

Asked about the NATO complementary arms plans, Kreisky said NATO's decision to deploy the new medium-range missiles in West Europe constituted no real threat to the policy of detente because, at the same time, the West had expressed readiness to discuss, within the framework of SALT III, the establishment of a genuine arms balance in the 3 years until the implementation of that decision. This has left ample opportunities for continuing the policy of detente. "Afghanistan," he added, "is quite a different matter, as it has created a climate that is very, very dangerous to detente."

He further said: "I believe that now the Soviet Union on its part would have to supply very concrete proof, aside from Afghanistan, that it wants to continue the policy of detente, because the other side's argument is: The Soviet Union does not want detente, hence, we cannot pursue any policy of detente. Thus the Soviet Union would have to prove that it continues to want it, and it would have to prove it through very concrete examples." Such examples could be provided, he added, at the Vienna MBFR talks and at the forthcoming Madrid CSCE followup conference. If the Soviet Union were to make really substantial and concrete proposals there, then even its toughest opponents in the West would find it very difficult to turn them down. "Thus, every possibility is still open, and this policy [of detente] could still be saved even today. But when I say this I am also saying that detente is in serious danger."

Asked about Austrian energy dependence on the East, Kreisky said Austria would always be dependent on foreign energy suppliers, be it on Al-Qadhdhafi in Libya or on Ayatollah Khomeyni in Iran, or on Poland and the Soviet Union. But the difference, he said, is that many Arab states no longer really need Austria's money as they have earned so much in the past, whereas for example Poland very urgently needs every schilling it can get from Austria--thus, the East is much more dependent on Austria than are the Arab oil countries.

In conclusion, Kreisky cited the improvement of conditions in West Berlin as a result of the policy of detente as an example of the achievements of this policy--achievements that, he said, no one actually wants to endanger. He advocated neither a policy of weakness nor one of strength, but a continuation of the policy of detente with continued efforts to solve the regional problems--including the Middle East problem--that might really jeopardize detente.

CHARTER 77 SIGNATORY ARRIVES FROM CSSR

[Text] Vienna--One of the first signatories of the Czechoslovak Charter 77 civil rights manifesto, the evangelical Pastor Svatopluk Karasek, has received permission from the Czechoslovak authorities to go to the West. He arrived in Vienna today, accompanied by his wife and son. This was learned from Czechoslovak civil rights activists' circles. The 39-year-old clergyman made a name for himself in Czechoslovakia as the composer of the lyrics for the songs of the "Plastic People" pop group. Like the members of this group, he was given a prison sentence 4 years ago.

BRIEFS

AUSTRIAN-EAST TRADE--According to the latest monthly report of the Austrian Institute for Economic Research, Austrian exports to East European countries, in terms of adjusted prices, went up only 2 percent annually as against an annual expansion of overall exports of 10 percent. The share of exports to East European countries in total exports in this period declined from 17 percent to 12.5 percent. In trade with East European countries, without the Soviet Union, Austria obtained a surplus of 6-7 billion schillings annually, while it incurred deficits of about 4 billion schillings annually in trade with the Soviet Union. The USSR uses only about 60 percent of the proceeds of its exports to Austria--about three-fourths of them are oil and natural gas--for buying Austrian goods. In the period 1965-1975, Austria's market share in the USSR declined from 4.3 percent to 1.7 percent, but it picked up again in the second half of the 1970's. In the other East European countries, Austria has succeeded in holding its market share of 8 percent. [Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 2 Mar 80 p 7 AU]

CPN'S HOEKSTRA ANALYZES DUTCH POLITICAL SITUATION

LD061603 Lisbon AVANTE! in Portuguese 28 Feb 80 p 10 LD

[Report on unattributed, undated interview in Lisbon with Netherlands Communist Party (CPN) Chairman Henk Hoekstra: "Workers' Unity Increasing and Communist Party Activity Strengthening in Netherlands"]

[Text] The causes of the crisis currently affecting the government are to be found in the Dutch people's major reaction against its antisocial policy. We were told this by CPN Chairman Comrade Henk Hoekstra in an interview which he granted to AVANTE! during a visit to this country at the Portuguese Communist Party Central Committee's invitation.

Explaining that the crisis in the Christian Democratic-Liberal coalition government is causing an unstable situation which could provoke a government crisis, Comrade Hoekstra continued his analysis of the causes of this crisis as follows:

The population's growing opposition to the government's antisocial policy--manifested, for instance last week when it adopted a law envisaging a long-term suspension of collective bargaining--stems from the great intensification of the struggle within the workers movement, especially among metal, shipbuilding and dock workers. This intensification of the struggle, which is not simply a protest movement but presents specific alternatives in the political and economic fields, was triggered by the strike of 12,000 workers at the Rotterdam docks, which began in September last year. The resignation of the finance minister, a reactionary extreme rightwinger, is a manifestation of this crisis.

Next the CPN chairman emphasized the fact that the present crisis has a social and political basis reflected, for instance, in the issue of the attitude to peace and disarmament. In this connection Comrade Henk Hoekstra said:

In the Netherlands it was possible to achieve a parliamentary majority against the neutron bomb and against the deployment of the new missiles in Europe. This was a unique situation among the countries of capitalist Europe.

Comrade Henk Hoekstra stressed that this was not a sudden majority, but the result of the victory of the major popular struggles reflected, for instance, in the gathering of 1.2 million signatures against the neutron bomb.

This parliamentary majority, the CPN chairman continued, as the parliamentary expression of the people's protest, also reflects the fact that within the Christian Democratic Party itself, apart from the most aggressive sectors subordinate to NATO and the United States, there are also some more realistic sectors which are aware that such an anti-people policy cannot prosper.

Comrade Hoekstra stressed that the Dutch Communists can state that they are in the frontline of the offensive with regard to both peace and the social aspect.

Broadening Unity

The Dutch workers movement has continuously broadened its unity, so that the Social Democratic leaders have had to alter their position within the trade unions to avoid isolation, the CPN chairman told us.

In this connection, Comrade Hoekstra pointed out that the trade union leaderships did their utmost to boycott the dock workers' 7-week strike. Nevertheless, these leaderships joined the strike while it was in progress, in view of the new situation and in an attempt to derive political advantages from it.

Comrade Hoekstra stressed that the workers movement is beginning to refuse to passively accept the government's policy, is beginning to reject the policy of the trade union leaderships, which is based solely on concessions, and is beginning to demand new forms of struggle.

The party chairman added that the CPN is talking about the need to proceed to a new alliance of the progressive majority which already exists in connection with these important issues, which reflects on the political level the unity which already exists among the masses and among the population.

Taking the peace and disarmament movement as an example, Comrade Hoekstra stressed that this movement reflects a very broad democratic movement of the progressive majority and that it embraces Communists, Social Democrats, pacifist sectors, Radicals and even Christian Democratic sectors. In this connection he said:

We Communists have been in the front line; we have tirelessly struggled, as have other democratic and progressive sectors, to strengthen this unitary current.

This movement, he continued, is possible on the basis of the idea that peace is absolutely vital to Europe. This awareness means that, despite the pressure from NATO, the United States and other imperialist circles trying to break this unitary front, this movement is growing stronger and stronger and new initiatives are also developing.

Dealing last with the CPN's own efforts, Comrade Henk Hoekstra concluded as follows: Since May 1977, since the formation of the present conservative Cabinet, the CPN has been stepping up its work to forge links with the masses and has been carrying out a major task of political offensive in three basic directions: in connection with peace and disarmament issues; the issue of national sovereignty with respect to the NATO and EEC threats and the FRG monopolies; and the economic and social struggle. One sign of the positive results of this campaign has been the continuous growth in the party membership.

EXPLOSION AT USSR CONSULATE, BOMB FOUND AT AEROFLOT OFFICE

Consulate in West Berlin

LD071332 Hamburg DPA in German 1149 GMT 7 Mar 80 LD

[Text] Berlin--The Soviet Consulate-General in West Berlin has apparently been the target of an attack. According to a police spokesman, an explosion took place at the consulate building in Zehlendorf Borough. The police have not yet been able to give precise details of the incident. The consulate's telephone switchboard merely stated: "We have nothing to say."

Afghans Claim Responsibility

[Text] Berlin--Afghan rebels may have been responsible for a bombing attack on the Soviet Consulate-General in West Berlin today which caused considerable damage. According to the police, nobody was injured. DPA's Frankfurt office received a telephone call in which the Afghan rebel organization "Mujahedin" claimed responsibility for the attack. The Berlin police confirmed that the call was made immediately after the explosion of the bomb.

Device Discovered at Aeroflot

LD072116 Hamburg DPA in German 2054 GMT 7 Mar 80 LD

[Excerpt] Frankfurt--A plastic bag containing an explosive device was discovered tonight in the Aeroflot office in the center of Frankfurt. Unknown persons had hidden the device under bananas and eggs inside the bag. Police said that the device was deactivated by experts of the Hesse Criminal Investigation Department. A connection with the bomb attack on the Soviet Consulate in West Berlin earlier today has not been ruled out by the authorities.

Protection of Missions Increased

LD081304 Hamburg DPA in German 1130 GMT 8 Mar 80 LD

[Summary] Hamburg--Police protection of Soviet diplomatic missions and other Soviet institutions in the Federal Republic has been stepped up following the bomb attack on the Soviet Consulate-General in West Berlin and the discovery of an explosive device in the Aeroflot office in Frankfurt yesterday. The Hamburg Consulate-General and Aeroflot office are now being watched round the clock. The Rhineland-Palatinate police have been instructed to exercise "increased vigilance" to protect the Soviet Embassy in Rolandseck, near Bonn. The Federal Interior Ministry said that the police had undertaken measures "appropriate to the situation" in order to protect Soviet offices in Bonn. In Frankfurt, Baden-Wuerttemberg and Bavaria, stepped up police patrols have been ordered. Police investigations in Berlin and Frankfurt have so far found no trace of the culprits.

SCHMIDT WINDS UP U.S. VISIT, COMMENTS ON RESULTS

Talks With Waldheim

LD081508 Hamburg DPA in German 1214 GMT 8 Mar 80 LD

[Excerpt] Bonn--At their meeting in New York Chancellor Schmidt and UN Secretary General Waldheim have not made any arrangements for a summit meeting for the solution of the North-South conflict on the model of last year's Jamaica conference.

This was pointed out by informed quarters in Bonn today.

The two politicians have, however, talked at length about the problems of the Third World, and Waldheim spoke in very positive terms about the report of the North-South Commission chaired by SPD Chairman Willy Brandt.

On Olympic Boycott, U.S. Relations

LD091012 Hamburg DPA in German 0013 GMT 9 Mar 80 LD

[Text] Hamburg/Bonn--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt has indicated his concern that a Western boycott of the Moscow Olympic games could have an adverse effect on talks between the two blocs on restoration of the international military balance.

Speaking to journalists yesterday evening on the flight back from his 4-day visit to the United States, Schmidt said that a return to a military balance is the prime objective in the present crisis. This balance has been impaired to the disadvantage of the West by the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan and the Soviet Union's nuclear armament. According to the chancellor, who arrived in Hamburg late yesterday evening, an Olympic boycott could hamper the dialog between East and West.

Asked about his attitude to a policy of "punishment" for the Soviet Union, Schmidt said he does not want to use this term and does not find the reasoning behind it convincing. The important thing is to induce the Soviet Union to withdraw from Afghanistan. The Olympic question plays far too great a role in public opinion. That will be over next summer, but not the Western reply to the Soviet action.

Schmidt said that, in the course of his talks with U.S. President Jimmy Carter and other government representatives in Washington, further progress was made in developing the overall political plan for a long-term Western response to the "continuing expansionist-orientated Soviet influence in the world." The many existing elements of this plan have been similarly assessed in Washington and Bonn. The chancellor described the atmosphere of his talks as "very good to excellent." His personal relationship with Carter is good and has always been good. This has been shown again in Washington. Schmidt said that the positions of the two governments on important topics are drawing closer together.

Carter and his government have far greater understanding for both European and German needs than the American press. The U.S. Government can today see much more clearly than a few weeks or months ago the special nature of Europe and the special position of the Germans as a divided nation, with the sensitive spot of Berlin, close to the Soviet Union. On the necessary division of labor within the alliance, there are no differences of opinion with the United States, nor are any to be expected in the future. Further progress must be made by putting the overall plan into concrete terms.

Schmidt was reticent to discuss the question of whether new elements have been added to the crisis plan during his Washington discussion. He merely mentioned the aim of strengthening the independent role of the Third World. Schmidt expressly emphasized that the West should be willing to respect the nonaligned nature of the Third World, but not to guarantee it. He also said he had been given the impression from a series of talks--some of them with private individuals and journalists--that a reival of the willingness to play a world role and not to allow itself to be pushed up against the wall in certain parts of the world is discernible in the United States.

On the other hand, people he had talked to who are not economic experts had expressed grave concern at increased inflation and interest rates in the United States. The possibility that this development could lead to financial collapse was rejected by Schmidt as unfounded. In his opinion, these internal and social problems will play an increasing role in the U.S. domestic policy, and also in Europe, if the hostages in Tehran are actually released.

On Detente, Strauss

DW100951 Hamburg BILD in German 10 Mar 80 pp 1-2 DW

[Reporter Oxel Brower-Radinowitsch interview with Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt on the flight from New York to Hamburg: "Schmidt: What I Discussed With President Carter"]

[Text] Bonn, 10 March--BILD: You have returned from America--is President Carter your friend now?

Schmidt: He was my friend before. A very personal relationship exists between the two of us. That was confirmed once again at the meeting with the President.

BILD: Carter and you say that the policy of detente is supposed to continue. Is that still the same detente policy as prior to the invasion by the Russians of Afghanistan?

Schmidt: Yes. But we were and we are in agreement that detente policy is possible only if we have a stable balance of forces. That balance has undoubtedly been upset by the invasion of the Soviets in Afghanistan.

BILD: How can that be changed?

Schmidt: Through intensified defense efforts and NATO's long-term defense program. By the way, the Soviet Union has been urgently invited to withdraw its armed forces from Afghanistan.

BILD: Did Carter advise you against visiting Brezhnev and Honecker?

Schmidt: No. There was no such advice.

BILD: Are you prepared to mediate between Carter and Brezhnev?

Schmidt: The two do not need my help if they want to talk to each other. Contacts between the United States and the Soviet Union have not been disrupted. U.S. Secretary of State Vance speaks constantly with the Soviet ambassador to Washington, and Gromyko also speaks with the U.S. ambassador to Moscow.

BILD: You do not think much of economic sanctions by the Federal Republic against the USSR. Do we already depend that much economically on the Soviets?

Schmidt: No, we do not--and also not on any other state. Yet our foreign trade is an important part of our economy. If we were to lose an important customer country tomorrow, it would have considerable negative repercussions on our labor market. Halting supplies vis-a-vis the Soviet Union would be a two-edged sword, one which would not merely hurt the Soviets.

BILD: We will have to spend more money on Turkey, Pakistan and defense. Will the promised tax reductions be cut?

Schmidt: The discussion on the tax package will last for some time in the Bundestag, the Bundesrat and probably thereafter in the mediation committee. Up to that time it can happen that our financial economic development might have changed. That can also have repercussions on the tax package. Today, however, I see no reason to cut tax alleviations beforehand, so to speak.

BILD: Do you see dangers for the security of Berlin in view of the world situation?

Schmidt: Berlin is not in danger; we agree on that. In every meeting with Carter I also discussed Berlin, reporting to him about the good economic development of the city. He will soon receive Berlin Mayor Stobbe.

BILD: What do you say about the fact that Strauss has followed close on your heels to America, so to speak?

Schmidt: He is doing this for the second time now after Paris. I do not consider it particularly tasteful in his own interest. But that is Mr Strauss' business.

BILD: There is much talk of sameness in matters of foreign policy between you and Strauss and the CDU/CSU....

Schmidt: I note that the CSU chairman really adheres to many points of my foreign policy. He tries, however, to cover it up with his polemical language. It is different with regard to CDU Chairman Kohl. He obviously does not quite trust that adherence to Mr Strauss.

BILD: What causes more concern on your part than Afghanistan?

Schmidt: I consider many problems simultaneously--oil supply, the Tehran hostages, and economic problems. But, believe me, I am not pessimistic at all. We can master these problems.

Arrival in Hamburg

[Excerpt] Hamburg--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt returned to Germany on Saturday evening following his 4-day visit to the United States. His plane landed at Hamburg airport. Subsequently, the chancellor drove to his home in Hamburg-Langenhorn.

Rejects European Neutralization

[Text] Bonn--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt has emphatically rejected the fears of CDU-CSU Chancellor-Candidate Franz Josef Strauss that a neutralization of West Europe could be envisaged as a solution in the development of the United States and the Soviet Union as superpowers. Speaking on the second German television program "Bonn Outlook" the day after his return from the United States, Schmidt said this evening: "We would not even dream of it." The Federal Republic needs the Western alliance, the European Community, the alliance with America, and cooperation with France for its own political and security interests. "We simply do not have the choice of pushing this aside."

Immediately (?before) the start of his talks in the United States, Strauss expressed the view on the same program that a neutralization of Europe would lead to dependence on the Soviet Union within a decade at most. The Americans could make themselves self-sufficient since they are not dependent in the long run on oil from the Middle East. (?This) is one of West Europe's lifelines, however, and anyone who has control over West Europe's raw material supplies holds it in his hand. "And, in that case, I should prefer the Americans to have that role and guarantee it, rather than big brother in Moscow."

Politicians' Reactions to Trip

LD081816 Hamburg DPA in German 1647 GMT 8 Mar 80 LD

[Text] Hamburg--U.S. President Jimmy Carter's understanding for the Federal Republic's special position in the currrent East-West crisis has been called by SPD Federal Manager Egon Bahr an important result of the U.S. trip by Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt. In an interview with LUEBECKER NACHRICHTEN (Sunday edition), Bahr emphasized that he could not see any basic change in East-West relations. The policy of detente in Europe has proven itself.

In contrast, the foreign policy spokesman of the CDU Presidium, Walter Leisler Kiep, criticized the results of Federal Chancellor Schmidt's U.S. trip. In an interview with WELT AM SONNTAG, Kiep referred to the alliance with the United States as "the Federal Republic's second basic law," which, in its unrenouncability, had been incorporated into the Washington communique. Nevertheless, questions concerning the necessary establishment of a global political and military balance of power following the Soviet incursion into Afghanistan have remained open and unsatisfactory. "Because of the common interest, all trade supplies from the Federal Republic to the USSR, which would facilitate the latter's military efforts, would have to be looked into," the CDU politician demanded.

Werner Marx, foreign policy spokesman of the CDU/CSU Bundestag group, fears the withdrawal of the "most important part of the U.S. troops from Europe." Marx said on Saarland radio that senators as well as congressmen were increasingly advocating this to force the Federal Republic with such a measure to substantially increase the Bundeswehr and to fill the gaps accordingly.

GENSCHER RETURNS FROM SOUTHEAST ASIA TOUR

[Text] Bonn--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher returned to Bonn tonight after a 5-day visit to Southeast Asia. In Kuala Lumpur he attended a joint conference of the EC foreign ministers and ASEAN group of states, and made a brief visit of only a few hours in Cairo, during which he met President Anwar as-Sadat.

Urges Soviet Afghan Withdrawal

[Text] Bonn--Federal Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher has called on the Soviet Union to be more specific about its ideas on a withdrawal from Afghanistan. In a statement circulated by the Foreign Ministry today following his return from Kuala Lumpur, Genscher noted that the European Community's plan for a political solution to the Afghanistan crisis is gaining increasing support in the Third World.

Genscher emphatically rejected as inappropriate the Soviet attacks on Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt following his visit to Washington. The sooner the Soviet Union realizes that it cannot drive a wedge between the Federal Republic and the United States the better it will be for security and detente. The Federal Republic of Germany also wants cooperation with the Soviet Union and its allies. It wants armament burdens to be reduced and greater help to be given to the Third World as a result.

Genscher described increased attention to the aims of the nonalined states and to the worries and problems of the developing countries as the command of the hour. The Soviet policy of supremacy and ideological neocolonialism ismeeting with ever greater resistance. This also explains the worldwide rejection of the occupation of Afghanistan.

Hits 'Repair-Job Communique'

LD071556 Hamburg DPA in German 1515 GMT 7 Mar 80 LD

[Excerpt] Stuttgart--In the opinion of Franz Josef Strauss, CDU-CSU chancellor candidate, relations between the Federal Republic and the United States remain clouded even after Chancellor Schmidt's and President Carter's joint statement. In Stuttgart today Strauss called the statement of the two politicians a "repair-job communique." In view of the impending elections in the United States and the Federal Republic, it was in Schmidt's and Carter's interests to play down in public the existing discrepancies on foreign policy.

[Excerpt] Frankfurt--Franz Josef Strauss, CDU/CSU chancellor candidate, left Frankfurt for the United States of America today for a week of political talks. He will have meetings in Washington with President Carter, members of his administration and with representatives of the Senate. The talks are expected to concentrate on the international situation following events in Afghanistan, East-West relations, problems of the Western alliance and German-U.S. relations.

FINANCE MINISTER RENEWS AID PLEDGE TO TURKEY

LD081635 Hamburg DPA in German 1254 GMT 8 Mar 80 LD

[Text] Bonn--According to Federal Finance Minister Hans Matthoefer, the amount of German financial aid to Turkey depends on the extent of U.S. aid to that country. In an interview on Saarland radio today, Matthoefer reiterated the promise made during the visit to Washington that the Federal Republic will do precisely as much as the Americans on this issue. For their part, the Americans promised to increase economic and military aid which was originally to have amounted to $200 million and $250 million respectively. Only then can the size of German aid be finally determined.

GISCARD VIEWS AIMS OF GULF TOUR, RELATIONS WITH MIDEAST

JN061710 Manama GULF NEWS AGENCY in Arabic 1520 GMT 6 Mar 80 JN

[Text] Paris, 6 March--French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing has asserted that the responsibility for the security of the Gulf area rests with its people, because they are the only ones who can defend it, determine whether or not their area is threatened and decide on how to achieve its security. In a statement in French television broadcast today, the French president said that he felt during his talks with the Gulf leaders that there is concern about what might result from the current international tension. However, there is no direct threat to the area at present, he added.

The French president, who is visiting the UAE in the course of his current Gulf tour, expressed satisfaction with the results of his talks with the Gulf leaders and stressed that these talks have achieved the desire of both sides to expand and deepen the cooperation between the Gulf states and France. He said that he personally saw tangible progress in the technical, economic and industrial cooperation between the Gulf states and France. French technicians are playing a major role in that area, he added. The French president spoke about France's role in developing that area and also about the contribution of the Gulf states in financing some of the industries. He said that France has a good reputation in those states and enjoys their respect.

Asked if he spoke for France or Europe during the tour, the French president said that he spoke for France, but that the talks also covered the area's relations with Europe, whose countries have ties of cooperation with the Gulf states. The French president referred to the subject of the tripartite dialog among Europe, the Arab world and Africa which was raised during the French-Gulf talks and said that initiatives will be made in the future to properly arrange such a dialog.

The French president emphasized the close cooperation between France and the Gulf states which he said is based on mutual respect. He said: Our viewpoints on world problems are similar. I would not say that they were identical on all subjects, because we each have our own different personality. However, our viewpoints are aimed at the same goal--peace, respect for sovereignty and recognition of peoples' rights.

STIRN HOLDS TALKS IN POLAND ON TRADE RELATIONS, AFGHANISTAN

[Bernard Grigouleix dispatch: "Relations Between French and Eastern Bloc Countries Should Not Suffer on Account of International Tension"]

[Text] Warsaw--During [French Secretary of State to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs] Olivier Stirn's official visit to Krakow and Warsaw Sunday through Tuesday, 2-4 March, Franco-Polish relations were described several times as showing exemplary cooperation which must not be affected by recent international upheavals, especially the Afghan crisis. The French secretary of state and Polish Foreign Minister Wojtaszek both stressed this point.

Mr Giscard d'Estaing and Mr Gierek have already met several times officially or on a private basis, and the French president is due to visit Warsaw again next September. Ministerial-level contacts are frequent and will remain particularly frequent in 1980. Moreover, the "1975 charter" gave this cooperation a definite framework by making provision for regular talks between the foreign ministers. The next talks are due to be held during Mr Wojtaszek's visit to Paris on 2 and 3 July. The "grand commission" for Franco-Polish cooperation is due to meet in Warsaw in May.

In the economic sphere, on the other hand, relations between the two states had deteriorated somewhat since the record year of 1976. Last year saw the start of a degree of revival, at least regarding French exports to Poland: They totaled Fr2,575,000,000 (an increase of 13 percent) as against 2,355,000,000 for imports (a drop of 4 percent). However, the level of trade is still some Fr1 billion lower than it was 4 years ago. Mr Stirn's Polish interlocutors nonetheless assured him that trade relations between the two countries will improve, although Poland is currently trying to reduce its large debt to the West. Some major engineering projects, in which France could play a vital role, are now being studied, such as the rechanneling of the Vistula and the construction of a north-south superhighway network.

Cultural relations, which are traditionally good, could also receive a slight boost after Mr Stirn's visit to Warsaw.

A desire to verify the soundness of Franco-Polish relations was, however, far from being the main object of the secretary of state's visit to Warsaw--a visit which the Polish side was anxious to insure would take place despite events in Kabul. Mr Stirn seized the opportunity to show his hosts that France's open approach to the East in diplomacy was not subject to the hazards of relations between the two blocs. However, he also pointed out to the Polish foreign minister that France is still firmly attached to the withdrawal of Soviet occupation troops from Afghanistan and that it regards this as one of the conditions for an effective Madrid conference (officially planned for November) or even as a precondition for this conference being held.

As far as Poland is concerned, its government's stance remains modeled on that of Moscow. The Polish Government sticks to the explanation that the Red Army was forced to intervene by a change in the domestic political situation in Afghanistan and by Pakistani and American interference, and it denies that the Kremlin could entertain any expansionist ambitions in that part of the world, especially in the direction of the Persian Gulf. However, transending these official statements, it seemed possible to notice among members of the Polish delegation to the talks a certain embarrassment when it came to supporting Moscow (an embarrassment which was, in any case, apparent at the recent Polish United Workers Party Congress) and a hope that the Soviet troops could withdraw before the Madrid conference starts, at least on a significant scale, if circumstances enabled the Kremlin to do this without either losing face or appearing to yield to international pressure.

Regarding the conference on disarmament in Europe which Warsaw hopes to organize in the near future, Mr Stirn confirmed to the Polish Government Paris' agreement in principle. However, certain divergencies between the two attitudes have appeared. These divergences relate to the sphere to which any disarmament is to be applied (in Warsaw's view, the Soviet Union cannot be included in this plan, nor can it negotiate in this instance with anyone except the United States), the monitoring of the plan's implementation--France is much more exacting than Poland with respect to necessary controls--and its scope. Unlike Warsaw, Paris does not intend to include nuclear arms in it, taking the view that any discussion on their limitation falls into the sphere of precincts other than those of a strictly European conference.

Mr Stirn's visit to Warsaw was the first paid by any member of the French Government to a socialist country since the events in Afghanistan. Obviously the Poles wanted to make sure that the line of conduct adopted by Mr Giscard d'Estaing immediately after the Soviet invasion has not changed and, undoubtedly, also suggest to the French representative that the two countries could, more easily than others, jointly consider ways to alleviate the crisis.

BOMB EXPLOSIONS IN CORSICA REPORTED

ESPIONAGE COUNTERMEASURES, TARGETS DETAILED

LD100937 [Editorial Report LD] Referring to recent espionage cases involving two Soviet officials attached to the USSR Consulate in Marseille--Travkov, apparently a main intelligence directorate agent, and Vyacheslav Frolov, said to be a KGB agent--Paris LE FIGARO in French 6 March 1980 carries on page 5 a 600-word Pierre Darcourt report on the protection of French defense secrets.

The measures adopted to safeguard these secrets, Darcourt writes, are "extremely strict" but their effectiveness varies depending on circumstances. All prospective employees of the Atomic Energy Commissariat are screened, Darcourt states, and "very sophisticated security measures" are used in nuclear power plants. Military installations, Darcourt continues, are protected by the police, electronic detection systems and other methods, while the Defense Ministry pays special attention to departments responsible for work on lasers and radar, since "Eastern countries" are especially interested in information relating to this kind of work.

The same paper also carries on page 5 a 350-word unattributed report on obvious targets for Soviet spies in the Marseille region. They include, the report states, apart from Marseille itself, the Albion Plateau where "French missiles targeted on the USSR are deployed," the Toulon naval base, the Istres, Marignane and Orange air bases and some major "energy complexes."

L'EXPRESS CHARGES MARCHAIS COLLABORATION; PCF REACTION

[Text] The issue of L'EXPRESS due out tomorrow bears a color portrait of Georges Marchais and the headline "Marchais in Germany: 1942-44" and the subtitle "The Proof of the Lie." Inside, there is a long article by L'EXPRESS Director Jean-Francois Revel.

He asserts that Georges Marchais worked as a volunteer in Germany during the last war and gives as proof a photocopy of a document found in Germany in a special register recording volunteer workers. If one believes this photocopy, Georges Marchais was still in Germany on 10 May, 1944, whereas at a trial 3 years ago, the secretary general of the Communist Party said that he returned to France in May, 1943--1 year earlier.

Jean-Francois Revel concludes that Georges Marchais has only one way to prove his good faith, namely to agree to the appointment of a committee of inquiry made up of former Resistance fighters belonging to all the political parties or groupings.

Revel believes that in the end the Communist leader could be barred from standing as a candidate in the election for the presidency of the republic, to the extent that he had committed perjury.

Faced by these very grave accusations, the Communist Party has reacted quickly. Here is Pierre Juquin, a member of the Politburo:

[Begin Juquin recording] Resorting to the use of gross lies, L'EXPRESS and its director are once again making themselves the instruments of an ignoble peice of politicking against the secretary general of the French Communist Party, Georges Marchais. The party Politburo expresses its indignation and its contempt at such repugnant behavior. It assures Georges Marchais of its solidarity and affection.

It is on the assumption that a question about Georges Marchais' candidature for the presidency of the republic could be raised that the director of L'EXPRESS unveils the direct aim of the operation. It is a question of getting at--and by any means--the man who is considered possibly to be the candidate of the French Communist Party to the presidential elections of 1981.

Needless to say, it is the party itself which is the target, through Georges Marchais. The objective more than ever--the one relentlessly pursued by the bourgeoisie since the accession of Giscard d'Estaing to the presidency of the republic--is to weaken the party which constitutes the decisive obstacle to the policies of capitalism. The bourgeoisie deploys its attacks with all the more violence and frenzy since it has not been able to attain this objective and even fears the progress that the Communist Party can make thanks to its policy, to the activities of its members, and the way its secretary general is heeded.

The Politburo is therefore convinced that this act of aggression against the party will encourage all Communists to redouble their initiative and efforts so as to make the actions taken against them rebound against those who inspire them and against all those who hope to draw some profit from such actions.

The Politburo is determined to intensify in all spheres its fight against Giscard d'Estaing, against his rule and against all the forces of capitalism, and in favor of justice, democracy, progress and national independence.

It intends to do all it can to oppose the outrageous methods, the scandalous degradation of political life in France, which is the characteristic of the Giscardian system. [end recording]

TANZANIA'S NYERERE ARRIVES ON OFFICIAL VISIT

[Text] Julius Nyerere, president of the Republic of Tanzania, has been received by President Pertini at the Quirinale. Nyerere also held meetings with Ministers Marcora, Stammati, Scotti, Lambardini and Bisaglia. Tomorrow, he will meet Cossiga. On Monday, Nyerere will be received by the pope.

Talks With Pertini

AU081620 Rome ANSA in English 1610 GMT 8 Mar 80 AU

[Text] Rome, March 8 (ANSA)--Italian head of state Sandro Pertini has assured Tanzanian President Julius Nyerere that Italy's readiness to cooperate with the developing nations in no way masks any attempt at political penetration. Nyerere arrived here yesterday for an official visit. He and Pertini had a conversation today that lasted over an hour and a half. The African leader was then received by Premier Francesco Cossiga.

With Pertini, Nyerere reviewed the chief international problems of the moment and especially the African people's struggle against racism and apartheid and in favor of decolonization. The visitor expressed approval of Pertini's impassioned hostility towards colonialism, neocolonialism, fascism and racism. The Tanzanian president dwelled on the dangers of neocolonialism and indicated that the criticism launched against the Soviet Union for its military intervention in Afghanistan was justified. However, he noted that there was the "silence of the tomb" over European support of anti-democratic regimes such as those of Amin in Uganda and Bokassa in the Central African Empire. Nyerere called on Italy and the European Community to lend support to the African people's struggle for freedom which was not just nominal but real.

For his part Pertini stressed that Italy's economic and technical cooperation with the developing countries based on absolute equality and noninterference. Africa is a friend to Italy and a continent where many Italians work and where such activity hides no political designs, he said. Pertini also noted the humanitarian nature of many of Italy's ventures in the Third World.

Visit With Pope Planned

TUNISIAN VESSEL ATTACKS FISHING BOAT IN SICILIAN CHANNEL

LD081924 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 1800 GMT 8 Mar 80 LD

[Text] A fishing boat from Mazzara del Vallo was machinegunned this morning by a Tunisian patrol craft in the Sicilian Channel. This fishing boat involved is the Eschilo, with a 12-man crew, which was fishing approximately 20 miles south of the islet of Lampione. The captain of the fishing vessel radioed an Italian Navy frigate for help. The latter sent out a helicopter, and when it appeared the Tunisian patrol craft departed. None of the crew was injured.

PARTIES START NEGOTIATIONS IN WAKE OF DC CONGRESS

Craxi Meets Berlinguer, Spadolini

LD072116 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 1800 GMT 7 Mar 80 LD

[Text] The secretary of the Socialist Party [PSI], Craxi, has begun the announced round of bilateral consultations with the secretaries of other parties within the constitutional range. He held a meeting this morning with Enrico Berlinguer and this afternoon he met with the Republican leader Spadolini. Roberto Piraino reports:

Craxi started his round of informative talks with other parties in connection with the meeting of the Socialist Party Central Committee, which is planned for the second half of this month. In the critical situation which has now begun, according to the Socialists the secretary of the PSI intends to resume the initiative since everything has changed following the decisions of the Christian Democratic National Council, including the quality and timing of the government crisis. Craxi made it known that he would also consider the timing.

Regarding the outcome of his first two meetings, it does not seem that progress has been made with the Communists, and both sides have essentially stuck to their initial positions. The Communists do not seem to be willing to support a government outside the framework of national solidarity and without their participation, even though it may be headed by a Socialist. The Communists also made it clear that joint action by the Communist Party and the PSI to speed up the crisis of Cossiga's government was unlikely.

The meeting with Spadolini was held in a different climate. There were several common points, Spadolini said, including the assessment of the present political situation and the attitude of the Communists. The series of Craxi's meetings do not yet mean confrontation, the Republican secretary said, but questions linked to it are already being discussed. As for the results, they are linked with the points of convergence which are realistically possible and which also depend on other parties. Craxi and Spadolini said that they would remain in touch during this phase.

Piccoli To Start Talks

LD082236 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 1800 GMT 8 Mar 80 LD

[Excerpt] Flaminio Piccoli, newly elected secretary of the Christian Democratic Party [DC], is to hold a series of meetings with the democratic parties in the next few days so as to examine the problem of the governability of the country, now that the Socialist Party [PSI] and the Republican Party [PRI] have declared their truce at an end and the PSI has withdrawn its indirect support of the Cossiga government.

PSI Secretary Bettino Craxi had talks yesterday with Berlinguer and Spadolini. According to the PSI deputies' floorleader, Vincenzo Balzamo, the principal objective of the PSI is to save the legislature in the only was possible, that is to say, by giving the country a stable, authoritative government.

Leftwing Socialist Fabrizio Cicchitto considers that it is necessary to exclude the Social Democrats and Liberals from the government in exchange for some form of support from the Socialists so as to counterbalance the rightward shift of the DC's internal political line.

The thawing of the relations between the Socialists and the Republicans and their substantial convergence in favor of a post-Cossiga government solution which would keep open the prospect of the emergence of solidarity have been confirmed in two statements, one made by Socialist Nevil Querci and the other by Republican Oscar Mammi.

Querci, who is close to De Martino's position, stressed that, from the position adopted by the new DC secretary, it is plain that his objective is to arrive at the local government elections with the present government still in power; but this does not correspond with the interest of the country. The PSI, continued Querci, must take an attitude of parliamentary initiatives so that, when the government crisis occurs, it may lay the bases for a political clarification.

Regarding prospects, he said, they involve the need for a revival of national solidarity, a need which has been felt for a very long time now not only by the PSI and the Communist Party [PCI], but is also felt very keenly by the Republicans.

Querci concluded by stressing that, in the present state of affairs, it is necessary to ascertain the real possibilities of the formation of a transitional government that would keep open the prospects for a national (?government).

The Republican deputies' floorleader, Oscar Mammi, speaking at the national congress of his party's women's movement, considered that the responsibility of a proposal for the post-Cossiga era which would save the legislature and permit a resumption of the program and political dialog between all constitutional forces lies with the DC.

The Socialists and the Republicans, observed Mammi, remain at the present time the only intermediate political forces capable of avoiding a further widening of the split between the major parties and a direct clash between them. A close understanding is therefore necessary, he concluded, between the PSI and the PRI which would permit initiatives capable of preventing the situation from precipitating.

In the Communist camp, Giorgio Napolitano, member of the PCI Directorate, in an article to be published in L'UNITA tomorrow, has relaunched the strategy of an agreement on the left.

It is essential that the PCI and the PSI move through the difficult passages of the next government crisis in such a way that, beyond their respective parliamentary positions, their cooperation not be damaged and the objective of a government of democratic unity not be jeopardized.

According to Italian Social Movement member Pierantonio Tremaglia, the rumor now in circulation about a three-party DC-PSI-PRI government is the result of the profound uncertainty about the DC which has emerged from the extremely long congress which did not clearly solve the problem of the governability of the country in the eighties. A three-party government of this type, concluded Tremaglia, would in fact be clearly unbalanced toward the left.

EANES ASKS PREMIER TO INVESTIGATE TAKEOVER RUMORS

LD081640 Lisbon in Portuguese to Angola, Mozambique and Sao Tome and Principe 1200 GMT 8 Mar 80 LD

[Text] President of the Republic General Ramalho Eanes yesterday formally asked Prime Minister Sa Carneiro to order a judicial inquiry aimed at ascertaining the facts which gave rise to reports about a takeover by the military in Portugal.

A note issued by the Presidency of the Republic, following the routine weekly meeting between Ramalho Eanes and Sa Carneiro, states that the president formally asked the prime minister to instruct the judiciary police to carry out the necessary investigations into the affair in order to enable its full clarification and the ascertainment of judicial liability of the people responsible for such reports.

The report in question was published last Tuesday by the rightwing morning daily O DIA and unleashed a wave of denials on the part of the people and organs of sovereignty involved--the Presidency of the Republic and the Council of the Revolution.

MINISTERS SAY DEBATE 'STRENGTHENED' GOVERNMENT

LD082158 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1930 GMT 8 Mar 80 LD

[Text] After a session yesterday, the Council of Ministers said in a communique that the government has emerged politically strengthened from the parliamentary debate called by the Communist and Socialist parties.

The communique says that the debate has enabled the government to make a clear and accurate exposition of its overall strategy in the economic and financial spheres.

Next month the government is expected to submit the general state budget for this year to parliament. But before then the government will also be proposing draft legislation revising the electoral law. That revision has already come under fire from the opposition. The revised electoral law would increase from 4 to 10 the number of parliamentary seats representing the Portuguese emigrants, who constitute one-third of the country's population.

BASQUE NATIONALIST PARTY GAINS 25 SEATS IN ELECTIONS

LD100824 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 0800 GMT 10 Mar 80 LD

[Summary] Provisional results in the elections to the Basque Parliament announced by the Ministry of the Interior show a clear majority for the Basque Nationalist Party with a total of 25 seats. The remaining seats were distributed among the parties as follows:

Herri Batasuna	11
Socialist Party of Euskadi (PSE-PSOE)	9
Union of the Democratic Center (UCD)	6
Euskadiko Ezkerra	6
Alianza Popular	2
Communist Party of Euskadi (PCE)	1

There was a large rate of abstention in yesterday's elections with more than 41 percent of voters failing to cast their votes. The victory for the Basque Nationalist Party could result in a government of the majority party headed by Carlos Garaicoechea.

The Socialist Party of Andalusia, the Spanish Socialist Workers' Party and the Communist Party of Andalusia intend to contest the elections in Almeria.

BRIEFS

EQUATORIAL GUINEA FISHING TREATY--The fishing treaty between Spain and Equatorial Guinea comes into effect after the signing of two contracts with Spanish firms to install a number of diesel oil tanks and a network of industrial cold storage facilities in Guinea. Both projects should be completed and in operation by the fall of this year. One of the objectives of these installations is to help set up a future fleet which will fish permanently in the waters of the Gulf of Guinea. 'OFFICIAL LEVEL' TALKS HELD IN LONDON, MOSCOW ON AFGHANISTAN

LD071444 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1351 GMT 7 Mar 80 LD

[By Andy Webb, PA political staff]

[Text] Further talks between Britain and Russia took place yesterday over Lord Carrington's plan for a neutral Afghanistan, it was disclosed today.

The meetings. at official level in both Moscow and London, followed contact earlier this week in the two capitals when Britain presented an outline of its proposals to the Soviets.

The plan for a neutral Afghanistan as a solution to the crisis following the Russian invasion was devised by Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington, and the details are now being hammered out with our EEC partners. It is stressed in Whitehall that talks with the Russians are at an early stage, and more contacts are expected to help develop the British proposals.

CARRINGTON TO VISIT ROMANIA TO DISCUSS NEUTRALITY PLAN

LD072031 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1833 GMT 7 Mar 80 LD

[By Andrew Webb, PA political staff]

[Text] Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington leaves next week for a three-day visit to Romania, where the major topic for discussion will be Britain's plans for a neutral and non-aligned Afghanistan. Romania, under President Ceausescu, has taken an independent line on foreign affairs within the Soviet bloc, and the British Government hopes they might act as a go-between with the Russians on Lord Carrington's neutrality proposals.

The visit will also be a clear demonstration by Britain that it is keeping the channels of communication open with an East European country, which has expressed considerable disquiet over the Russian invasion of Afghanistan. President Ceausescu referred to the Soviet intervention as "creating the most dangerous situation since the Second World War."

The original invitation to the foreign secretary was sent in July, when Lord Carrington was in the middle of the Rhodesian negotiations. It was to mark the 100th anniversary of diplomatic relations between Britain and Romania.

The significance of the visit is that the invitation was repeated after a critical trip to the Romanian capital by Soviet Foreign Minister Andrey Gromyko shortly after the Russian invasion. Romania will see Lord Carrington's visit as bolstering the independent lines President Ceausescu is taking in foreign affairs, which has led to tense relations between Romania and Russia.

There are lines of communication between Bucharest and Moscow which Britain would like to exploit over the Afghanistan crisis. The government would like to enlist Romanian support for the neutrality plan, and hear their views on how it could be developed to win Soviet approval. It is also thought that the Romanians have considerable influence in the non-aligned world.

Lord Carrington leaves for Bucharest next Wednesday and will return on Friday. His trip also keeps up the momentum of the British initiative--official talks were held in both Moscow and London on Thursday over the neutrality plan.

KHARAVYI REPORTS U.S. 'SPY PLANES' AT AKROTIRI

NC080705 Nicosia KHARAVYI in Greek 8 Mar 80 p 1 NC

[Text] Every day there are increasing indications coming from various sources that the British bases in Cyprus are being converted into U.S.-NATO bases to serve the West's broader strategic interests in this region--a conversion that is being gradually and systematically carried out despite British denials and in violation of the agreement on the status of these bases.

It is already well known that U.S. U-2 spy planes continue to be stationed at Akrotiri although the original reason for their presence--to supervise the cease-fire in Sinai--vanished a long time ago. It is obvious that their spying activities are focused on the Soviet Union and the Arab countries in the area. This is supported by the fact that the latest type of U.S. spy planes have recently arrived at the British bases. According to authoritative reports, supersonic SR-71's equipped with high technology electronic radar are now at Akrotiri. Thus, Cyprus is becoming a spy base of U.S. imperialism against its will.

MIKHAILIDHIS PLEDGES SUPPORT FOR WALDHEIM INITIATIVE

NC091209 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1000 GMT 9 Mar 80 NC

[Text] Cyprus House of Representatives President Mikhailidhis has stressed that we will continue our efforts and we will contribute to the success of the initiative by the UN secretary general for the resumption of the dialog. He added: Nevertheless, during these efforts we must preserve the procedure of the dialog, and above all the substance of the question, which is to insure the necessary elements for a fair and viable solution. Speaking today at Argaka during a memorial service for Dhimitrakis Papamiltiadhis, the House president also said that we are worried because the delay in resuming the negotiations tends to ruin the very procedure itself and stressed that for this reason it is imperative that the talks be resumed as soon as possible on the basis of the 19 May agreement. The House president reiterated that we have not put nor are we inclined to accept conditions for resumption of the dialog. He said: We are ready to sit at the negotiating table with good will and with a desire to negotiate for a solution based on a biregional federation that will insure true independence, territorial integrity, the unity of the state and the people and the inalienable rights of all the citizens.

TFSC MINISTER SCORES BRITISH STAND ON FLIGHTS TO NORTH

TA071241 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1215 GMT 7 Mar 80 TA

[Text] The minister of communications and works, Mr Gurcag, has said that it was difficult to understand the British Government's stand in support of the Greek Cypriots, who have adopted the policy of killing Turkish Cypriots in their aim of uniting Cyprus with Greece. Mr Gurcag was commenting on a reply in the British House of Commons by the Under Secretary of State Mr (Tebbit) to a question on the resumption of direct air services between Britain and northern Cyprus. Mr (Tebbit) has said that the British Government did not recognize Ercan State Airport as an approved airport. Mr Gurcag protested against the statement and said that Britian was one of the countries which should know better than most the true situation in the island. He recalled that the Greek Cypriots through their armed attacks and through economic and political embargos against the Turkish Cypriot community had for years prevented the community from benefitting from their most basic rights of freedom and communications. He stressed that frequent British statements in support of the Greek Cypriots were helping the intransigent Greek Cypriot attitude to prevent peace in the island. Mr Gurcag repeated that neither the Greek Cypriot intransigence and propaganda based on lies nor statements in their support would deter the Turkish Cypriot community from its aim in processing in its just cause without making any concessions.

EXORMISI ALLEGES U.S. PRESSURE OVER TERRITORIAL LIMIT ISSUE

AT091635 Athens EXORMISI in Greek 9 Mar 80 p 12 AT

[Text] "The Greek Government does not have the right, even for reasons of internal consumption, to refer to the possibility of extending Greek territorial waters to 12 miles, since the United States has officially taken a stand against such measures in the area of the Aegean." The State Department takes this occasion to recommend that the Greek Government deal "realistically with the serious Aegean problems and manifest good will in its dialog with Turkey." This was the content of the talks between U.S. Amb Robert McCloskey and Deputy Foreign Minister A. Zaimis during their last meeting, according to reports by a foreign diplomatic source in Athens. The same source added that the meeting between McCloskey and Zaimis, although in an atmosphere of normal cordiality, nevertheless had unpleasant aspects in connection with U.S. positions on the issue of the extension of Greek territorial waters to 12 miles.

Specifically, it has been learned that McCloskey reminded Zaimis that even the mere mention, for various internal reasons, of the extension of Greek territorial waters in the Aegean causes great uneasiness to the U.S. Government, which has expressed its opposition to this measure. Of course, this means that the United States not only will not recognize such a Greek decision, if someday it is implemented, but that it will exercise manifold pressure on the government to foil every effort in such a direction. In order to make himself clearer, the same sources add, McCloskey reminded Zaimis that the U.S. Navy and Air Force have already been instructed by the White House to dispute "in practice" the decisions of other states to extend their territorial waters to more than 6 miles, that is, the limit respected by the United States.

As has been observed, however, it seems that these threatening overtures are aimed only toward Greece, because no other state has so far taken into consideration the U.S. threats, especially the Soviet Union which, together with other countries, maintains territorial waters 12 miles wide. According to McCloskey's warning, U.S. ships and planes will from now on enter the sea and airspace of those countries with territorial waters wider than 6 miles.

However, it has not been learned what position the government will maintain toward the new U.S. provocation which, according to the opinion of foreign political observers in Athens, falls within the context of unbearable pressure the U.S. side is exercising on Greece, especially in the last 2 years. Since 1936 Greece has defined its territorial waters as 6 miles and these rights, in conjunction with its position in the Aegean, were never questioned even by the Axis forces in the prewar period when they had vital interests in the Mediterranean. Also, Turkey since 1914 has maintained territorial waters in the Aegean at 6 miles and at 12 miles in the Black Sea and its southern coasts.

In any case this new "advice" by the State Department to the good "friends" in Athens has caused surprise to Greek and foreign observers because it clearly shows the extent to which Greek affairs are controlled by the Americans and the allies of the Atlantic alliance, including Turkey.

Within the framework always of their "good" intentions toward Greece, Ambassador McCloskey did not forget to warn Zaimis that the Turkish General Staff also opposes the possible extension of Greek territorial waters in the Aegean and that such an "unreasonable" act will be confronted decisively with countermeasures by Ankara. Furthermore, McCloskey asked the government to maintain a realistic spirit for the sake of NATO's broader interests.

Meanwhile, various comments have been expressed by Greek and foreign political observers concerning the "tepid" and "lifeless" replies of the government spokesman to the recent provocative statements of Turkish officials, especially Foreign Minister Erkmen who has hinted, among other things, at inalienable Turkish rights in the Aegean which, in addition to the security aspects, is of economic interest to the Turkish state. The strange thing in this entire affair is that, under the cloak of responsible circles, Greek Government spokesmen reply to the lengthy statements of Turkish officials with mild language and with a few words clearly hinting that for the sake of allied unity the government will always keep the door of Greek-Turkish dialog open.

I KATHIMERINI REPORTS ECONOMIC COOPERATION WITH USSR

AT0b1515 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 8 Mar 80 p 1 AT

[Text] Greek-Soviet economic relations are being smoothed out and the agreements concluded last October in Moscow during the prime minister's visit are being activated. This encouraging news emerged from yesterday's meeting between Novakovskiy, chief of the USSR trade delegation in Greece and Coordination Minister Konstandinos Mitsotakis. As Mitsotakis told the press after the meeting, the Soviet official was extremely warm and announced that the Soviet Union wil adhere completely to the agreement signed with the Greek prime minister last October in Moscow. Specifically, Novakovskiy informed Mitsotakis that:

1--On Monday Novakovskiy will meet Trade Minister Yeoryios Panayiotopoulos in order to announce that the USSR will supply this year the 800,000 tons of oil (out of the 1,200,000 already contracted for) and will complete the quantity of 2 million tons of crude oil agreed upon in Moscow.

2--The Soviet Union will supply us with the quantities of electric energy agreed upon. DEI, Public Power Corporation, Director Simeon is due to go to Moscow on 17 March in order to discuss and solve technical problems related to the connection of the various networks for the supply of electric power. The Soviet power will be supplied to our own network through the Yugoslavian and Romanian networks. Novakovskiy recommended that we contact the authorities of these two countries.

3--The Soviet Union is also prepared to start discussions for the supply of natural gas within the framework of the plan, which starts in 1981.

The New Agreement

Then Novakovskiy raised the question of signing the economic and technical agreement between Greece and the USSR that will regulate trade and more generally economic relations between the two countries from 1981 when Greece accedes to the EEC. According to our reports the Soviet request will be accepted and the agreement will be ready in September. The Soviet minister for foreign trade will then come to Athens in order to sign it together with Mitsotakis.

The Neorion of Siros

In Moscow yesterday representatives of Neorion [shipbuilding and repair yards] of Siros and Soviet officials signed the agreement on the number and type of ships to be repaired during the current year at the Siros repair yards. The agreement covers eight ships, five of which are cargo ships and the other three are naval auxiliary ships. It is expected that a large sum in foreign exchange will enter the country as a result of the repairs because the operation entails large-scale repair work.

PRIME MINISTER CONGRATULATES MUGABE ON ELECTION VICTORY

TA081737 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1630 GMT 8 Mar 80 TA

[Text] Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel has sent a congratulatory message to Robert Mugabe, the new Zimbabwe prime minister, on his new post. In his message Demirel expressed his conviction that, under the leadership of Robert Mugabe, Zimbabwe would take its deserved place in the international community. Demirel also expressed his hope that cooperation between the two countries would be further developed.

TURGUT OZAL LEAVES FOR BONN, LONDON TO DISCUSS AID

[Text] The under secretary of the prime minister and the assistant under secretary of the State Planning Organization, Turgut Ozal, has left for the FRG to hold official talks. In a statement at Istanbul's Yesilkoy Airport before his departure today, Ozal said that his trip is aimed at reviewing the latest situation concerning the aid to be extended to Turkey before the meeting to be held on this subject in Paris on 26 March. Ozal said that he will also hold the necessary contacts regarding Turkey's debts to OECD countries, which have to be paid this year and next year and that he will conduct talks concerning the plan to postpone debts.

Ozal added: The first leg of my tour will be the FRG. I will review the latest situation with West German officials in Bonn. I will receive information about the German officials' contacts with the World Bank, the IMF and U.S. officials. Ozal said that, after the FRG, he will go to London and then to Brussels and will hold talks with British and Belgian government officials. Noting that he will also meet with EEC officials in Brussels, Ozal stated that the last leg of his tour will be France.

FINANCE MINISTER LEAVES FOR JIDDAH ISLAMIC BANK MEETING

TA091704 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 9 Mar 80 TA

[Text] Finance Minister Ismet Sezgin left for Saudi Arabia by air today to participate in the fourth session of the Islamic Development Bank's General Council meeting to be held in Jiddah. In a statement at Istanbul's Yesilkoy Airport Sezgin said that the future of the bank as well as the bank's program for 1980 would be discussed in the meeting. Pointing out that the amount of aid and loans for 1980 to be extended to Turkey by the bank would also be taken up at the meeting, Sezgin said that this loan would reach about $80 million. Recalling that from 1977 to 1979 the bank extended a loan of $129 million to Turkey, Sezgin said: Part of the $80 million loan will be sued for oil purchases while another part will be invested in electronics factory projects. Some projects connected with the production of cement and the Mazi Dai phosphate works will also benefit from this loan.

Sezgin said that during his visit he would hold bilateral talks with the finance ministers of Islamic countries participating in the meeting. He continued: My objective in these talks will be to insure the promotion of financial and commercial relations and the strengthening of existing cooperation.

DEMIREL EXPLAINS GOVERNMENT PERFORMANCE IN NEWS CONFERENCES

First News Conference

TA081542 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1500 GMT 8 Mar 80 TA

[Text] Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel said that, during its first 100 days in office, his government has dealt with all the domestic and foreign problems of the country according to their priority.

Demirel made this statement in the first of a series of news conferences he is holding to explain to the public the performance of his government during its first 100 days in power. The news conference took place at the Prime Minister's Office in Ankara today.

Referring to economic issues, Demirel mentioned the efforts made to end shortages and foreign aid to Turkey. Recalling that the government has taken a number of measures to overcome economic difficulties and that it is actually implementing them, Demirel said that the results of these measures would be felt at the end of a certain period.

On the issue of foreign aid to Turkey, Demirel said that $1 billion in aid, urgently needed to implement the government's economic stability program, had already been provided. He added that $700 million of this aid was already in Turkey's coffers and was being used to meet Turkey's needs while $300 million was expected to arrive soon. Demirel said that the shortage of basic commodities would soon end.

Demirel said that he considered the people a part of the government and added that he was convinced that the government had correctly determined the country's interests and that it had safeguarded them adequately. Demirel continued: As the government we have made no concessions where the interests of the state and the country and Turkey's unity and integrity are concerned. We have refused to follow any course that could undermine democracy.

Failure of Ecevit Government Cited

[Excerpts] Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel said that, during its first 100 days in office, his government has dealt with all the domestic and foreign problems according to their priority.

Noting that the Ecevit government had not been able to govern the country, thus causing the people to suffer, Demirel said that the Ecevit government had not been able to fulfill any of its primises. Demirel said that, with the resignation of the Ecevit government as a result of the 14 October elections, a new government was sought for Turkey. Recalling that during the formation of his government he had been promised support in parliament, Demirel said that he had not been afraid to shoulder responsibility despite the country's difficult situation. The political parties that promised to support us have fulfilled their promises, Demirel said and added: I would like to express my gratitude to them.

Demirel continued: If the government preceding ours had governed the country well, why did it not continue to do so? Even this fact is enough to illustrate under what circumstances we assumed power.

Recalling that during his news conference on 8 December, he had stated what his government planned to do during its first 100 days in power, Demirel said that he had asked public opinion to take note of his promises. Demirel added: We had the courage to undergo such supervision. Demirel added that on November 1979 he had felt the obligation to reveal the truth to the public and had offered his remedy to heal the situation.

Pointing out that dealing with the country's problems during the first 100 days of the government should not be taken as meaning that all the problems of the country could be solved in this period, Demirel said: If we had such an intention then, we would not have had to list what we wanted to accomplish during that period of time. Demirel added: We shall not look for excuses for what we have not been able to accomplish. Let us first remember that our government has been formed to carry out a task during a particular situation. Everyone should know that we shall not defend our failures, our objective is success and this success will be that of the state and the nation rather than the government.

Demirel noted that in November 1979 Turkey presented the picture of a country infested with bloody incidents, a country with a paralyzed economy in which there was no production, no imports or exports. The democratic authority of the state was damaged and many state institutions were not able to fulfill their functions. Demirel said: It was impossible to portray such a situation as good.

It was also impossible for such a situation to continue, saying that they had started work in a bid to repair what had been damaged. Demirel said that it was not fair for his government to be held responsible for that situation in November 1979 instead of those who had brought the country to that point. Demirel said: The people should not forget those who had everything to do with that stage and should not permit these same people to come before the public with new slanders and lies. Demirel said that the country and the people would suffer from those who want things to grow worse, afraid that, if the country overcomes its difficulties, then all the credit will go to his government. No one should be worried about the government's success and begin slandering it just because Turkey has secured the loans it needs and has begun to end shortages. Demirel pointed out that his government had been able to lift suspicions existing abroad about Turkey and that they had taken a stand vis-a-vis various problems compatible with the state's honor. We have tried to create abroad an image of a country that is struggling to solve its problems and difficulties instead of a country that has surrendered to its fate.

Recalling that they are the government of the whole country, Demirel expressed his government's commitment to the state, the people, the unity of the country, to the republic as well as to material and spiritual values. He added that they believed that his government had correctly determined the country's interests and safeguarded them adequately.

Referring to the efforts made to end the shortage of basic commodities, Demirel said that 2,300,000 tons of crude oil, 300,000 tons of fuel oil and 100,000 tons of diesel oil were imported during January, February and the first week of March. Demirel said that 440,000 tons of fuel oil, 350,000 tons of diesel oil and 800,000 tons of crude oil were ordered, and that $1,170,000,000 had been paid to this end. Demirel added that all four refineries in Turkey were operating at full capacity.

Discusses Economic Issues

TA081633 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1555 GMT 8 Mar 80 TA

[Excerpts] Ankara 8 Mar (AA)--Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel told a Saturday press conference that his government had taken important steps in overcoming certain shortages, which had become so acute during the reign of the past administration. He noted that there was no shortage of light bulbs and there would be no shortage of sugar. Turkey has placed orders with foreign suppliers of the delivery of 500,000 tons of sugar.

On the problem of power shortages and power failures, Demirel said: "Most of the power cuts can be attributed to the delays in the completion of the Afsin-Elbistan project, and the reason why Turkey suffered a shortage of coal this winter can be explained by the failures of the past government.

We need 3,168,000,000 dollars, apart from our own sources, in order to meet the requirements of our economy, to pay our debts, to keep our Central Bank in business and to make Turkey financially functioning. This money has been found. This amount will be met by international agencies, by the rescheduling of debts, and by the aid that the OECD countries will extend to Turkey.

The reason why the various friendly countries and allies are giving a helping hand to Turkey is their belief that Turkey is not gambling, that Turkey is not in an economic adventure and that Turkey is on the right track.

In this respect, I extend my thanks to President Carter of the United States, Chancellor Schmidt of West Germany, and the authorities of the British, French and Italian governments, and to all officials of other friendly countries, including the OECD.

The country was in need of certain measures to curb the developments which left us face to face with the picture in November 1979. In order to put on course everything that has been disturbed, it was out of the question to just stand and watch with idleness this bleak economic picture.

Behind all these measures, which were necessitated by an extremely bad management, a concept should be seen which aims to re-establish and apply resolutely the discipline and balances which will definitely bring about the stability.

Thus, besides curbing the deterioration in the economy, re-routing, reforming and the rationalising of the economy is being made possible. These measures which have been taken in accordance with the rules of the economy will definitely show that the calculations will open the way to strengthening and welfare. Deviating from the right path as a result of demagoguery and falsities will lead the country to more costliness, more shortages and more unemployment.

Comments on Armed Forces

TA081735 Ankara ANATOLIA in French 1717 GMT 8 Mar 80 TA

[Excerpt] In the first of a series of news conferences he is holding to explain his government's performance in the first 100 days since it assumed power, Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel said that the global needs of the Turkish Armed Forces are about $800 million annually and that efforts were made to secure this amount from Turkey's allies.

In order to bridge the budgetary deficit, which appears to be unavoidable, Demirel said, parliament has passed the bill enabling Turkish workers employed abroad to pay a certain amount of money in foreign currency to be exempted from military service at home.

Second News Conference

TA091105 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 9 Mar 80 TA

[Text] Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel has said that, when his party assumed power, the great and difficult problems of the country awaited measures and solutions and that his government took the necessary measures to solve these problems.

Demirel held the second of a series of news conferences to explain his government's performance in the first 100 days at the prime minister's office today. In today's news conference, Demirel dealt with the country's major investments and the situation of the investing organizations.

Demirel explained that Turkey is a large country, it is developing rapidly, its total needs will double by 1984 and that new measures are necessary to meet these demands. Pointing out that all the investments initiated during his term of government were abandoned by the ecevit administration, Demirel noted that, as soon as he assumed power, the necessary instructions were given to the directors of investing organizations--primarily to those that will immediately contribute to production--to complete quickly all investment projects. Explaining that the public economic enterprises were transformed from resource-consuming organizations into resource-producing organizations, Demirel stated that economic and political stability is essential for Turkey to overcome its present impasse. Demirel said: There is a great difference between handling these serious issues ourselves and others handling them for us. If we handle them, things will improve. However, our people have already observed that, if others handle them, the situation will deteriorate.

Reviews State Investment Projects

TA091648 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1630 GMT 9 Mar 80 TA

[Text] Ankara, 9 Mar (AA)--Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel briefed the nation Sunday on Turkey's most immediate investment projects. In a sense, he gave a progress report on each specific project of crucial importance for Turkey. He also explained his government's support policies, credit policies and farm policies. Demirel later tried to state what was achieved in his first 100 days in office.

He said his government would never allow the mistreatment of civil servants who loyally serve the state and the republic within the framework of law. Demirel said low and middle income earners were relieved by a budgetary decision to raise the salary coefficient from 16 to 25. He said:

In addition to this, by the exemption of the minimum income from taxation, the minimum amount not subjected to taxation has been raised from 6,500 to 65,000 Turkish lira, thus the state again is making a sacrifice of 98 billion Turkish lira. All this amounts to an annual aid of 188 billion Turkish lira to the people on limited incomes.

This matter naturally is a matter of legislation. As I said yesterday, the draft law has been approved by the Council of Ministers on December 23, 1979 and has been presented to the parliament. In addition to these, in order to save the people on limited incomes from the pressure of inflation the "echelle mobile" [system linking automatic increase in salaries and pensions to increases in cost of living index] system will be introduced.

Views Economic Development

TA091838 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 9 Mar 80 TA

[Excerpt] Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel has said that Turkey had taken significant steps to create new balances for a healthy economic development in a bid to check the increasingly high cost of living. The prime minister added: I am aware that these measures will at first have a painful effect; however, let everyone realize that the finger has been cut with the hope of saving the arm. Demirel was speaking in Ankara today at the second of a series of news conferences he is holding to explain the performance of his government during its first 100 days in power. Demirel said:

[Begin Demirel recording] Preoccupied with the present difficulties it is facing, Turkey has reached a stage in which it cannot give a thought to its future. Daily occurrences are preventing Turkey from planning its future. Such a stand will only cause more trouble in the future. The problem of development has been almost forgotten in Turkey; not only has all development halted, but there is no interest in it. No wonder people say in Turkey there are daily worries about personal safety, problems concerning the high cost of living and uncertainty about its fate as a nation, and Turkey is in no condition to think about its future. I find such a stand very dangerous. The moment we begin to think along these lines, Turkey will not be able to overcome its problems, it will not be able to see its path and will not be able to eliminate the obstacles and mines lying in its path. Such a stand is defeatism [last word in English], it is surrender.

If we do not bring economic development back to a place on our agendas and do not fulfill the requirements for it, then difficulties much greater than the present ones will be waiting for us in the near future. Turkey should not lose its control because of its circumstances. On the contrary, it should be able to overcome them. My objective today is to point out the importance of, on the one hand, struggling with present problems while, on the other, thinking and caring for our future beyond these daily preoccupations.

The state-owned factories should be fully operational--economic institutions which do not depend on the [subsidies from the] state. The directors of these enterprises have already been given the necessary directives to operate without being a burden on the Treasury. The officials will be held responsible for the proper functioning of the units they are heading and will work hard to transform their enterprises into properly functioning units. Public economic enterprises will be transformed from resource-consuming organizations into resource-producing units. [end recording]

OPPOSITION LEADER ECEVIT REPLIES TO DEMIREL STATEMENTS

TA081638 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1605 GMT 8 Mar 80 TA

[Text] Izmir 8 Mar (AA)--At the end of its first 100 days in office the Demirel government has gone bankrupt with all its policies, chief opposition leader Bulent Ecevit told a press conference Saturday in Izmir. He charged that neither the new economic policies nor the devaluation brought about the expected results.

Ecevit noted that the government was 102 days old today, and in the period since it received a vote of confidence from parliament it has failed in every respect.

"Demirel is now trying to make a fool of the people. This government, which vowed to bring inflation under control has given such a push to prices that the rate of inflation has exceeded 100 percent for the first time in Turkish history," Ecevit said.

The chairman of the Republican People's Party said the government pledged to eliminate the shortages and the long queues. "On the contrary, the number of items in short supply has since increased. Everything is being sold in the black market at twice the official price," Ecevit said.

He asserted that the devaluation had also failed to produce any substantial results. There was no increase in the flow of workers' remittances, and there was no foreign exchange build-up. "This government has gone bankrupt with all its policies in its first 100 days," Ecevit said.

Further Details

[Excerpts] RPP leader Bulent Ecevit has said that no progress on any issue was noticed after the 100-day period the government has been in power. Ecevit added that the condition of the country was progressively and quickly declining in all respects. In a news conference held in Izmir today, Ecevit said that when the present government was formed it gave the impression that it could work miracles at the end of 100 days in power and now Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel appeared to be in difficulties under the pressure of this impression which he tried to create.

Referring to violent incidents during his news conference, Ecevit said that during the last 100 days these incidents had grown in proportion and had become worse. Ecevit said that individual clashes had given way to clashes among large groups. This situation is causing great concern. The worst example of such a clash has occurred in Izmir. Ecevit said that he did not approve of the methods used by the Demirel government to struggle against violent incidents.

On developments in foreign policy, Ecevit said that the government tended to make concessions in this field. Ecevit said that this stand worried him. Ecevit added that NOTAM 714 was lifted without giving much thought to its consequences. World opinion, Ecevit said, saw this move as a sign that Turkey had given up its national rights in the Aegean airspace. Ecevit said that the lifting of the NOTAM has endangered the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus as well as flights from there. Ecevit said these criticisms were not the result of his desire to strain Turkey's relations with Greece and added that his party would not think of exploiting this subject for domestic policies.

In reply to a question on early elections, Ecevit said that the necessary time, which would bring about a change in the political picture, had not yet elapsed. He added that any efforts to delay holding general elections would not succeed.

NSP'S ERBAKAN ACCUSES DEMIREL, RPP OF CREATING CRISES

TA091750 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 9 Mar 80 TA

[Text] National Salvation Party leader Necmettin Erbakan has said that the RPP and Justice Party administrations had brought about anarchy and economic crises in the country. In an opening speech of his party's expanded provincial administrative council meeting in Istanbul today, Erbakan said that the RPP and the Justice Party represented the same view, which is committed to the West. Recalling Demirel's statements such as "the problems will end when the government steps down" or "everthing will be in order in 5 months," Erbakan said that in spite of such statements, the economic crisis and the disaster of anarchy had reached greater proportions. Noting that 753 persons were killed in violent incidents and that 6,732 persons were wounded, Erbakan said that nowhere else in the world does such anarchy reign.

Erbakan added that the latest devaluation of the Turkish lira and the economic measures taken had brought millions of persons to famine and starvation. He said that as a result of these measures the cost of living index rose by 11.7 percent in February, saying that this was one of the highest figures in the world.

In the last part of his address Erbakan said: How can Demirel address the people from television for 3 consecutive days at a time when the people are facing these bitter realities and millions of people are suffering from anarchic incidents, shortages and a high cost of living?

'RESERVATION' ABOUT ALTERNATIVE OLYMPICS PROPOSAL EXPRESSED

LD101454 Hamburg DPA in German 1442 GMT 10 Mar 80 LD

[Text] Bonn--The Federal Government today has indicated its reservation concerning the proposal made by the Americans of staging "alternative Olympics" to the Olympic summer games in Moscow threatened by a Western boycott.

Government Spokesman Klaus Boelling said in reply to questions concerning Bonn's attitude to that proposal that it has not been considered by the Federal Government. Bonn's reservation concerning this subject was, it is believed, also indicated to the American Government during Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's visit to Washington.

SCHMIDT INTERVIEWS IN NEW YORK ON U.S. RELATIONS CITED

On FRG Sacrifices, Detente

DW101240 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 1810 GMT 9 Mar 80 DW

[Hans-Joachim Reiche interview with Chancellor Helmut Schmidt in Washington--date not given; recorded]

[Text] [Question] During the past several days, Mr Chancellor, you have mustered a great deal of time for the U.S. press. We might nearly have the impression that you believe that the relationship between yourself and President Carter, between the Federal Government and the U.S. administration, is easier to handle than that between the people and the way they are informed. Does this, in your opinion, constitute a danger to German-American relations?

[Schmidt] Not a danger; yet it is true in any event, Mr Reiche, that you are right in saying that the relationship between the President and myself or between the two governments is better than as is reflected in part of the publicized opinion in Europe and in the publicized opinion in the United States. And since I am here in the United States, I used this opportunity to talk personally with those people who exert some influence in the media on public opinion in the United States.

[Question] You have said several times--not here but in our country--that we would be prepared to make sacrifices if it were necessary in such a critical situation. Could you describe the limit when you would consider such sacrifices necessary?

[Answer] We crossed that limit long ago. We are about to make very considerable financial sacrifices to the advantage of our alliance partner Turkey. Compared with the efficiency, the financial economic efficiency of Germany, these will be greater sacrifices than anybody else has made.

We did it as early as last year. We are about to do it again. We are about to prompt other states of the whole world to participate--Finance Minister Matthoefer is traveling from one capital to another.

The financial sacrifices we will make for the benefit of Pakistan are also considerable. In both cases we do not forget the fact that there are also neighbors who must not feel neglected. In other words, we are doing something additional for Greece; we are doing very much for India. This leads to the fact that we will have to submit a supplementary budget to the Bundestag this spring in order to obtain the money. The supplementary budget will have to make it clear that this will not be additional debts, but that this will be at the expense of other envisaged domestic purposes.

These will be real sacrifices we will make; in other words, we long ago reached the point of making sacrifices, and I believe that the money will be invested very sensibly in Turkey as well as in Pakistan, also with a view to the overall balance of the North Atlantic alliance.

[Question] Mr Federal Chancellor, could developments lead to where Bonn will have to face the problem of either continuing its detente policy vis-a-vis the East or maintaining solidarity with the Americans? Could this alternative come up?

[Answer] Certainly not. The U.S. President repeated to me what he had said in public. It was nothing new. We have not surprised each other at all. We have intensified and enlarged the existing analyses we exchanged long ago. The U.S. President said long ago that he does not want to return to the cold war situation and that he wants to maintain detente.

Both of us have said that we want to continue the arms control policy together. He said that he wants to follow the SALT II Treaty, even if it has not yet been ratified. Both of us have said that we want to continue together the Vienna MBFR talks, as regards conventional troops and their mutual reduction in Europe. Both of us have said that we want to promote together the so-called CSCE process--negotiations on security and cooperation in all of Europe, which began 5 years ago in Helsinki, which was continued in Belgrade and which will result in a new meeting in Madrid.

No, there is no problem, but whenever there is talk of detente, I would add that detente is possible only when one can be sure that the other side will not push one into the corner. In other words, military balance is an important prerequisite for detente. The U.S. Government and the German Federal Government agree on that also.

[Question] Could the development of mutual relations between the superpowers produce for us, a divided country in a particularly difficult geographic situation, tendencies toward looking for a solution through neutralization?

[Answer] Certainly not. That pertains not only to divided Germany, it pertains also to other European countries--such as France, for example--which have a considerable interest in a continuation of the policy of detente. We are part of the Western camp, of individual freedom, of democracy--I am repeating what I have said several times, also in the Bundestag. We are part of the Western alliance. We need that alliance; we need the European Community; we need the alliance with the United States; we need cooperation with France for the sake of our political and security policy interests. We do not have the choice of ignoring it. We do not even dream of doing so.

On 'Agreement' in U.S. Talks

DW101314 Hamburg ARD Television Network in German 2130 GMT 7 Mar 80 DW

[Reporter Gerd H. Pelletier interview with Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt in New York--date not given; recorded]

[Text] [Question] In the past there have always been differences of opinion shortly after the confession of full agreement between us and the United States. Was that why you put down what was achieved in a very detailed, 10-page press release this time?

[Answer] I want to answer the question with a clear yes. Both of us considered it important to let the public media know how far our agreement really goes. But, with regard to the introduction of your question, I would like to say that it is normal for allied states--it need not involve America and Germany, it could equally well involve relations between France and England--it is normal for public media to always play up a bit the difficulties that have arisen; it always exaggerates a little so that the basic agreement is thus overshadowed a bit. That should not really worry you.

[Question] It has been said for a long time that since Afghanistan the Americans have been pursuing a punish-the-Soviets philosophy and that the Europeans have been pursuing a repair-the-detente idea. Have the Americans become more flexible now, or do the Europeans want to assume a bit of the punishment component?

[Answer] I consider both formulations very misleading. I would not use either one of them. The American President and I fully agree that the policy of detente, as President Carter calls it, ought to be continued, but only on a basis of a preserved military balance. They belong together, and full agreement exists in this respect. The joint press statement mentions both: the defense efforts as well as a continued arms limitation policy--an arms control policy. That is the balance. And then there is talk of maintaining the present framework of East-West relations. This is what you just have called detente, as the Americans say.

[Question] You have always been in favor of direct talks. You said here in New York that the hot line is not there for the exchange of Christmas greetings. Are there any signs indicating that President Carter is again seeking direct contacts with Leonid Brezhnev?

[Answer] I would go even farther and say that the many talks that have recently taken place, for example, between the U.S. secretary of state and the Soviet ambassador to Washington, are far more than a sign. It is indeed so that the two superpowers have talks, and I welcome that.

[Question] Did the fact that it is an election year in our country and here in the United States bring any influence to bear on the formulation of the final documents?

[Answer] Certainly not on our side, and I have seen no indications that it has brought influence to bear on the American side with regard to the joint press statement. The problems that have arisen since Afghanistan and Tehran are much too serious to be subjected to election campaign considerations. I believe that also in an election year the best policy to be pursued by a President or a federal chancellor--also vis-a-vis their own electorates--will be a policy that is reasonably oriented by the necessities and interests our people and states must pursue.

SCHMIDT VISIT MAY NARROW U.S.-EUROPEAN 'COMMUNICATION GAP'

DW100953 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 8 Mar 80 p 3 DW

[Werner Holzer editorial: "Europe's Responsibility"]

[Text] By many indications the irritation of the Americans, their uninhibited ire about what they think is as expansive a Soviet policy as it is aggressive goes very deep and is not at all merely explicable by the fact that presidential elections are due to be held in the United States this year.

Anyone observing not only the reaction of the U.S. media but also that of the public of the leading Western power on the whole cannot but note the fact that President Carter's firmness is even more moderate than the demands of the man in the street. All sorts of states, say the humble people, have criticized us long enough, trampled on us, and ridiculed us. Now we will show the world for a change that we are the greatest after all.

For a President who for years had to live with the accusation of being undecisive, it would be political suicide in this situation if he failed to lead the marching column of these irritated people at least temporarily. Taking this for granted, it is necessary for the Europeans to become aware of their own situation, their relationship with the leading Western power, and of the role of Europe in the world today and tomorrow.

This sounds simpler than it is. As long as no clouds of crisis are looming on the horizon it is easy, for example, to reassure each other time and again that the Western defense alliance is an alliance of free and independent states in which great and small states have equal rights. Yet, since the taking of the hostages in Tehran and even more so since the Soviet military action in Afghanistan, the American public and also many an American politician are inclined to consider the European allies junior partners at best.

Meanwhile, people beyond the Atlantic occasionally forget that this Western alliance would lose its foundations if the Europeans seriously realized that they were being pushed into the role of mere satellites. Surely this is not the intention of U.S. policy, yet some of its modes of deportment at least could arouse that impression.

Chancellor Schmidt, who this week had many talks with U.S. politicians, above all with U.S. President Carter, meanwhile has successfully wound up his probably most difficult foreign policy mission. He seems to have managed to have at least unleashed new thinking in the United States about the problem that, notwithstanding all common basic convictions in the alliance, there naturally are different preconditions and interests which are attributable to geographical, economic and, last but not least, psychological causes.

In this particular instance Helmut Schmidt spoke not only on behalf of the Federal Republic but on behalf of Europe as a whole. After all, Europe's role has become more important as a result of the change in the world political climate--whether the Europeans believe it or not. Considering the obvious hardening and rigidity of the policy of the two world powers, Europe alone can make it clear to the two great powers that icy inflexibility can easily entail life-endangering crises unless they persistently try to seek opportunities for keeping at least some channels clear of ice.

In this connection, the Soviet Union and its government in Moscow must not get the feeling that it might be possible in this context to drive Europe and the United States apart. In Washington, in turn, the partners must be convinced of the fact that emulating the implementation of U.S. decisions must not necessarily be the ultima ratio.

During the chancellor's visit to the United States it became clear once and for all that this is not only a matter of better contacts and consultations on government level but that it is at least as much a matter of lack of communication between Europe and the United States.

What some reasonable observers on both sides of the Atlantic have long been considering an alarming fact has become quite obvious in these weeks: The American public, the people in this country which is the size of a continent, know desperately little about European realities. For too long it had remained the domain of its cynics to joke about the little interest of too many Americans in geography or foreign languages. It turns out, meanwhile, that many of our American friends can only understand European modes of deportment and ways of thinking with difficulty because they have been given too little basic data on their European allies. A world power, however, cannot afford disinterest in international issues if it wants to play its leading role convincingly.

CORRECTION TO PRESS COMMENTARY ON CARTER-SCHMIDT TALKS

Page J 6, paragraph two, line four should read "strategically important action was therefore based on principles. Hints by the Bonn delegation of the unpredictability of some Washington reactions should not be ignored. Sometimes it is inflation, another time an opinion poll..."

EDITORIAL: WEST HAS LOST TIME ON AFGHANISTAN ISSUE

DW0\0940 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 7 Mar 80 p 1 DW

[Editorial signed R.H.: "Slanted Triangle"]

[Text] The Bonn-Paris-Washington triangle occasionally discussed as a reality showed itself the other day in a strange light. Because Giscard d'Estaing's propaganda campaign on the Persian Gulf--for France and also for Europe--makes us ask: Has he, in so doing, exploited the current weakness of the U.S. position in this region and helped to fan anti-American ire, or has he helpfully jumped--with some fuss about the feelings of the Arabs (and the voters at home)--into the gap where the Americans cannot accomplish anything at the moment anyway? Making his continuation of Gaullist policy on Arabia palatable to the Americans along these lines probably will not succeed very well. Besides, he is profiting, with his carefully formulated statement on the self-determination of the Palestinians ("not as refugees but as a people"), from the amateurish diplomatic mishap which happened to the U.S. President the other day with regard to that subject.

On the other hand, it is necessary for the Europeans to establish relations in this region. For years the Economic Community devoted more attention to countries much more remote, on whose benevolence it was less dependent. Besides, the forefront of Islam which rejects Soviet influence needs to be carefully enhanced. In a way it must also be honored and paid for. In remote Washington, meanwhile, Helmut Schmidt compared with President Carter the levels of political concepts on this side and beyond the Atlantic and tried to assimilate them.

Viewing the trangle as a whole: Its actions of statesmanship this week have been attempts to cope with bad conditions. Thus, the term "neutralization of Afghanistan" in practice means a recognition of the hegemony of the Soviet Union in that region--a formula for both sides to save face so that they may embark on the road toward Madrid and Vienna and toward other congresses on detente. Deceived by the Soviets, the West has lost time. Now it must gain time. This makes it necessary to play roles which never have lead any statesman to great glory. The three heads of government have this feeling, too. The masses are not celebrating; the dismay is silent.

STRAUSS STATES VIEWS ON POLICY TOWARD USSR

DW101316 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 1810 GMT 9 Mar 80 DW

[Horst Keller interview in Bonn with Franz Josef Strauss, Bavarian minister president, CSU chairman and chancellor candidate of the CDU/CSU, just prior to his 9 March departure for the United States--recorded]

[Text] [Question] Mr Strauss, the CDU/CSU has lately criticized the alliance policy of the Federal Government time and again. Has this criticism not become superfluous now as a result of the talks in Washington which really were very harmonious and in consensus?

[Strauss] This criticism is not superfluous, just as vigilance toward the mode of behavior of the Federal Government is not superfluous. Especially because Helmut Schmidt is in agreement with nearly everybody and because he dodges any commitment, the harmony of the communique must be assesed for what it in reality is: namely, a high degree of verbal conformity with the continued existence of considerable differences on the issues involved.

[Question] But are you, as an opposition politician, not bound to be satisfied with the result?

[Answer] I am satisfied to the extent that this communique is backed by seriousness. To the extent that it is the mere cloaking of a development to the contrary, we shall keep pestering the government.

[Question] Do you believe that all misunderstandings between Bonn and Washington have been eliminated after this visit?

[Answer] Certainly not.

[Question] You yourself are scheduled to open talks Monday. When this interview is broadcast you will already be in Washington. What room for maneuver do you as an opposition politician have in these talks? Will you merely carry out probing talks or will you have concrete proposals to advance, specific demands to raise?

[Answer] To begin with, I plan to obtain firsthand information, just as I have done during many earlier trips to the United States during the past 2 and 1/2 decades. Secondly, I will quite clearly outline our position--that of the CDU/CSU--especially in the present world crisis and with a view to the requirements of the next several years; I will stipulate in no uncertain terms the policy which a CDU/CSU government--a CDU/CSU government which I would be heading--will pursue in and with the alliance.

[Question] Everybody wants a detente policy which at the moment is being referred to as "realistic detente policy." A new term has been forthcoming from Washington, namely, "economic detente policy," which means the continuation of our trade with the East. Is this a sacred cow? Is there no bypassing this?

[Answer] To begin with, detente policy is an arrangement of words in a sequence, or a sequence of syllables and letters filled with an entirely differently conceived content. The detente policy as promulgated in nearly romantic ecstasy and theological exaggeration from 1969 onward has come to an end and cannot be revived; it has gone up in smoke. What is so peculiar about the Social Democrats is that they run after every balloon as long as it is painted red.

[Question] Do you believe that we will become more independent through trade with the East or that we will be plunged into greater dependency?

[Answer] This question cannot be answered with either yes or no. I am against trade with the East with advance financing. I am for normal trade with the East, just as with other partners.

But probably we in the West will have to define anew the COCOM [NATO Coordinating Committee] list of strategic commodities, and abide by it too. And we must define anew the terms of trade with the East. In no case will it do for us to abet with our economic potential and with the savings of our citizens a policy which pursues an expansive strategy in the world, threatens our oil and raw material supply routes, which cannot compete with us even in the great areas of friction of the planned economy at home, and which then spends an unreasonably great portion on armaments for purposes of aggressive actions to boot. This will not continue in the same way.

[Question] What we are seeing at the moment is but part of a strategic, large-scale policy. Do you believe that the relationship between America--the United States--and Europe will ever again be what it was, or do you believe that we will shift more toward neutrality?

[Answer] You are hinting in your question at what we fear as a potential development, namely, a detachment of the Europeans from the Americans, a drifting apart--that is to say, a neutralization of Western Europe. Yet this would mean that we could not stay neutral. I do not think much of this neutrality in our situation anyway, for definitely within a few years, not more than a decade, we would end up being dependent on the Soviet Union. The Americans might make themselves independent. In the long run they are not dependent on oil from the Middle East. For us this is a vital line by which our economy would be bound to suffer the most severe setbacks with all consequences of social decline, political destabilization and so forth. What I mean to say is that whoever controls our raw material supply lines has us at his mercy. I prefer this to be the Americans and the Americans guaranteeing these things rather than the big brother in Moscow.

FINANCE MINISTER MEETS WITH TURKISH OFFICIAL

LD101238 Hamburg DPA in German 1222 GMT 10 Mar 80 LD

[Excerpt] Bonn--Federal Finance Minister Hans Matthoefer in Bonn on Monday met Turgut Ozal, secretary of state for finance and representative of the Turkish prime minister. The ministry said that Matthoefer, who is organizing the new international aid for Turkey, informed Ozal on the efforts being made and the latest results of his negotiations in Washington.

Also discussed were the first effects of the economic stabilization program started by the Turkish Government in January, and the need for an early funding scheme in favor of Turkey.

At the end of this week Matthoefer will leave for negotiations in Japan, which will be asked to take part again in the support program for Turkey.

KPD SECRET CONGRESS DECIDES TO DISBAND PARTY

LD101850 Hamburg DPA in German 1742 GMT 10 Mar 80 LD

[Text] Bonn--The Communist Party of Germany (KPD), founded in 1970 with Christian Semler as its chairman, has been disbanded. The organization announced today in Bonn that the decision to disband was reached by a two-thirds majority after a 3-day secret congress.

With many other former KPD members Semler intends to continue to work for "the worldwide struggle against imperialism and hegemonism, particularly against the aggressive and expansionist Soviet Union."

According to Semler, the party had 1,000 members before disbanding. Among other things it published the ROTE FAHNE which will now be closed.

GISCARD COMMENTS ON PALESTINIAN ISSUE, CRITICIZED BY ISRAEL

LD102044 Paris Domestic Service in French 1800 GMT 10 Mar 80 LD

[Excerpts] President Giscard d'Estaing is expected to return to Paris late this evening following his 10-day trip to the Middle East. The final stage was Riyadh in Saudi Arabia this morning: a courtesy visit which allowed the French head of state to talk for 30 minutes with King Khalid and lunch with Crown Prince Fahd.

One word sums up the dominant factor in the head of state's trip: Palestine. Mr Giscard d'Estaing explained exclusively for France INTER's Alain Chalvron why he supports the Palestine cause so firmly:

[Begin Giscard recording] We have, in fact, adopted a stance in favor of justice and peace. The first idea is that any peaceful solution must be based on the people's will, and notably on this universal right which is that of the people to choose their destiny and their organization themselves--and it is this right which is called the right of self-determination which France has proclaimed in different circumstances and naturally in the present ones. In order to reach a peace settlement it is naturally necessary for all the interested parties to take part and particularly those who are most directly interested, I mean the Palestinians themselves and thus the PLO. [end recording]

These remarks have been welcomed in the Arab world but very badly received in Israel. For example, this is what Israeli Interior Minister Yosef Burg told our Jerusalem correspondent Georges Levy:

[Begin Burg recording] Anyone who speaks today about the Palestinians' right to determination is virtually giving a coup de grace to the negotiations on autonomy and peace and the peace treaty which we concluded with Egypt. I believe that it is not fair [last word in English], that it is not just for him by this declaration to interrupt the peace process which we have begun. I believe that anyone who says today that it is not necessary to have negotiations on autonomy is guilty, I would say, of perhaps causing great harm and prejudicing the cause of peace. [end recording]

SPANISH WORKERS OCCUPY ROOM AT EMBASSY IN PARIS

LD101500 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1400 GMT 10 Mar 80 LD

[Text] A group of Spanish workers from the Vigo-based firm of CENSA [Inter-Nation Trade, Inc.], Duro Felguerra, have occupied the visitors room of the Spanish Embassy in Paris today. The Spanish workers entered the embassy's visitors room on the pretext of having lost their passports. Once inside they said they were going to occupy the embassy.

This action was designed by the workers of Duro Felguerra to publicize their struggle against the bankruptcy of the CENSA firm in Vigo which belongs to the Duro Felguerra group. The workers are demanding that all of the CENSA workforce be incorporated in other firms of the group so that none shall be dismissed.

Spanish Ambassador Miguel Solano Aza told the EFE news agency today that only the visitor's room was occupied and not the embassy and added he will try to reach a solution with the workers. If this fails the ambassador said he will call for the police to evacuate the workers.

Protesters Removed by Police

LD101736 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1700 GMT 10 Mar 80 LD

[Summary] The Duro Felguerra workers who occupied the visitor's room of the Spanish Embassy in Paris this morning have been removed by French police. Some workers tried to resist but they were carried out by police.

PONIATOWSKI: U.S. 'WEAKNESS' LED TO AFGHANISTAN OCCUPATION

LD111056 Hamburg DPA in German 0923 GMT 11 Mar 80 LD

[Text] Hamburg--Former French Interior Minister Michel Poniatowski, who is regarded as President Giscard d'Estaing's advisor and close confident, believes that the Soviet occupation of Afghanistan is a result of "America's weakness." In an interview for the Hamburg magazine STERN, prereleased to DPA today, Poniatowski says: "Washington gave up resisting the Soviet expansionist jive; it also accepted the 1978 communist coup in Afghanistan, and thus almost invited the Russians to push on further."

Poniatowski says that President Carter had practised "political baptistry," had let "everything drop everywhere" and had always yielded. Poniatowski, who is going to Washington next week for talks at the State Department, says that if the United States really wants to impose sanctions against the USSR it should stop all exports to the Soviet Union. "It is not enough to say that we are not going to play ball with Moscow and at the same time supply the Russians with everything as usual." The grain embargo, too, he says "is going merrily on by roundabout ways." [as received]

Poniatowski sees Europe's task in the power game between the two superpowers as that of playing an active mediator role. Above all, however, the Soviet Union must be prevented from waging a conflict on the territory of Central Europe, thus making the Europeans "hostages in a nuclear war." He says that "Europe must...possess a sufficiently deterrent nuclear armament for the dispute to be sought out somewhere else and not on our territory." Poniatowski spoke indirectly in favor of the European states quitting NATO: "If they (the Europeans) want to be independent of the two great powers they can no longer belong to an alliance which would automatically draw them into a conflict."

FRG CERTIFIED WAR DOCUMENT ON MARCHAIS AUTHENTIC

BOMBS EXPLODE OUTSIDE TURKISH AIRLINES OFFICE IN ROME

LD101846 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 1824 GMT 10 Mar 80 LD

[Text] There was a bloody attack a short while ago in Piazza della Repubblica in Rome. According to initial reports, two bombs exploded in front of the entrance of the Turkish Airlines agency. The explosion reportedly caused the death of one person and injured several passers-by. A policeman reportedly saw three youths running away and fired several pistol shots at them. According to initial hypotheses, the authors of the attack could be Armenian terrorist groups, responsible for other airline attacks.

Casualties Reported

AU101955 Rome ANSA in English 1952 GMT 10 Mar 80 AU

[Text] Rome, March 10 (ANSA)--A bomb went off in front of a Turkish Airlines office here this evening, leaving five persons injured, according to first reports. Later reports hiked the toll to one dead and nine injured and said that the two bombs were involved. They went off in crowded Piazza della Repubblica not far from Rome's main station. The bombs exploded one after the other, damaging a passing police car. The dead man was identified as a 64-year-old Venetian, Dante Sena. Eyewitness reports said that two youths were seen leaving the scene of the attack shortly before the explosions aboard a green motor-scooter. No organization has yet claimed responsibility for the bombs.

Armenians Claim Responsibility

[Text] One man dead and 12 people injured, including one in very serious condition. This is the outcome of tonight's bomb outrage in Rome's Piazza della Repubblica aimed at a Turkish Airlines agency where two bombs exploded a short distance apart. Responsibility for the attack was claimed in a phone call to AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE by an unknown man who spoke on behalf of the Armenian Secret Army. This organization is not new on the map of international terrorism. The dead man is a 64-year-old Venetian named Dante Sena.

Meanwhile, since 1915, there have been numerous attacks of a political nature in the Monte Sacro District against homes of extreme right and leftwing militants. Incendiary devices and inflammable liquids were used against entrances to various houses. Little damage has been reported. This morning there were some more serious episodes: Two students belonging to opposing political factions were attacked and injured in different districts.

Dead Identified

AU110840 Rome ANSA in English 0800 GMT 11 Mar 80 AU

[Excerpt] ANSA-Rome, March 11--A self-styled "Armenian Secret Army" last evening claimed responsibility for the two bomb blasts which rocked Rome's Piazza della Repubblica, crowded with rush-hour traffic at the time, killing two passers-by and injuring eleven others. The two bombs, timed to explode within minutes of each other, were planted in front of the Turkish Airlines and tourism offices located in the piazza.

A short time after the blasts, an anonymous telephone caller, speaking to a Rome news agency in English, said that the bombing was "a warning for Turkish fascism and Italian imperialism which ignore the Armenian cause".

Police reported that the first bomb caused only property damage and that the second had been the one which caused the deaths and injuries among curious passers-by who had approached the scene.

The dead men were identified as 64-year-old Dante Sena, who was born in New York, lived in Buenos Aires and was most recently a resident of Venice, and 67-year-old Domenico Porcellonato of Rome. Among the injured were three policemen on patrol in the piazza at the time of the second explosion.

Three other terrorist acts in Rome, employing the technique of two bombs set to go off with a short interval after the first explosion, have been claimed by Armenian groups. These bombs caused injuries and property damage in downtown Rome. The targets picked for the two attacks in December and the one staged in February were airline offices. The bombings, including yesterday's, were all claimed by the "Armenian Secret Army" whose anonymous spokesmen affirmed that the purpose of the acts was to draw public opinion to the struggle for the liberation of Armenian territories seized by Turkey in 1915.

One of the first moves of police investigators in Rome yesterday was to track down Armenians who either reside in the capital or come here frequently. An undisclosed number of these persons were brought to police headquarters and are now being questioned.

LEFTIST GROUPS ALLEGED TO BOMB ROME PRINTING SHOP

[Text] Rome, March 8--Six printing-workers were injured, one of them gravely, when a bomb went off Friday evening in a downtown printing-shop whose contracts include the daily run of the neofascist party (MSI) daily, IL SECOLO D'ITALIA. A telephone call to the ANSA news agency later claimed the attack on behalf of an extreme left group, the Territorial Anti-Fascist Patrols. A women's voice said the explosion was in revenge for the rightwing killing of an extreme leftwing youth, Valerio Verbano, in his home a fortnight ago. Verbano was a member of the Worker's Autonomy Movement. But a subsequent call to the Rome daily, IL MESSAGGERO, said the attack was the work of the Armed Organized Proletarian Groups. These have recently claimed responsibility for explosions at neofascist party chapters and an electrical substation which blacked out part of the neighbourhood where the recent Christian Democrat Party Congress was being held.

Last night's explosion damaged the typography's wall, knocked down a number of internal walls, half-destroyed linotype machines, and also damaged a recently acquired computer. The typography is run by a workers' cooperative whose administrator said the entrance was unguarded because of the plant's "apolitical nature". He added that the shop had just finished printing an anti-militarist periodical, L'ASINO (The Donkey), and had also helped out leftwing publications such as IL MANIFESTO and LOTTA CONTINUA by printing their newspapers. In the evening, Rome's Communist Mayor Luigi Petroselli visited the injured workers in hospital.

TANZANIA'S NYERERE SEES POPE, DEPARTS

[Excerpt] Rome, March 10 (ANSA)--Tanzania President Julius Nyerere left Rome today after travelling to the Vatican for a private audience with Pope John Paul II. The African president, who had been in Italy since Friday for a two-day official visit, was seen off at the airport by the minister for relations with the Parliament, Clelio Darida.

PCI'S BERLINGUER RECEIVES NICARAGUAN GOVERNMENT DELEGATION

LD111023 Milan L'UNITA in Italian 7 Mar 80 p 15 LD

[Unattributed report: "PCI Receives Managua Government Delegation"]

[Text] Rome--Violeta Barrios de Chamorro, member of the Nicaraguan Government junta (the collegial presidency of the republic), and Daniel Ortega, formerly commander-in-chief of the army, member of the Sandinista Liberation Front Directorate and member of the Nicaraguan Government junta, have visited PCI Directorate headquarters, accompanied by Deputy Foreign Minister Jacinto Suarez Espinosa and Ambassador to Italy Alejandro Serrano Caldera. They were received by PCI Secretary General Enrico Berlinguer, PCI Directorate member and International Affairs Department chief Gian Carlo Pajetta and PCI foreign section aide Renato Sandri.

At the meeting, which was inspired by the most vigorous and cordial friendship, confirmation was expressed of the bonds which unite the two countries' democratic forces and the hope was reasserted that relations between Italy and Nicaragua can be intensified.

Enrico Berlinguer confirmed the Italian Communists' commitment to work in all forums to insure that the Nicaraguan people can secure the necessary international cooperation for their great effort to build--within independence and nonalinement--a just, pluralist and economically developed society whose foundations have been laid by their struggle and victory.

PCI LEADERS SCORE EVANGELISTI SCANDAL

LD111011 [Editorial Report LD] Milan L'UNITA in Italian 5 March 1980 frontpages six separate items connected with the resignation of Merchant Marine Minister Evangelisti and the indictment of 49 prominent industrialists and others following investigations into irregular financial activities. The items include two 700-word commentaries by PCI Directorate members Alfredo Reichlin and Emanuele Macaluso. The former points out that it is not enough for "justice to be done," since "we are dealing here with the heart of power, where all the following factors merge: political decisions, economic trends, the management of public affairs, the hierarchy of interests and the organizational chart of leaders and groups of the state and the state-aided sector." "We consider absolutely squalid," he adds, "the illusion that this situation can be resolved simply by a change of personnel and with the reintroduction of worn-out parliamentary formulas."

Reichlin asserts that "Italy will fall apart unless the ruling classes are renewed at last," and that the confirmed ban on Communist participation in government that emerged from the recent Christian Democratic Party Congress "was issued against the need for a new social and political solution capable of creating not only a regenerated leadership for public affairs but a whole new system of interests, values, methods and objectives."

Emanuele Macaluso confirms that "the latest sensational events reveal once again--and in the most disturbing manners--the evil and corrupt nature of the system of power. It is," he adds, "the defects, but also the conflicts and ruptures of this system of power which are coming to light." He exclaims: "We really do not know whether to feel indignant or to laugh when we hear those responsible for or benefiting from this system of power disputing our "democratic trustworthiness."

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF 'TAKEOVER' REPORTS DENIED

LD101352 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 1300 GMT 10 Mar 80 LD

[Excerpts] This morning the Prime Minister's Office released a note stating that the government does not intend to instruct the police to investigate the circumstances surrounding last week's publication of newspaper reports on alleged plans for a military takeover.

The note adds that the government is one of the organs of sovereignty, invested by the electorate with the mandate and responsibility for conducting Portugal's foreign and internal policies and for overseeing the civilian public administration of the country until the next elections. The government acts on its own initiative, at its own responsibility and in accordance with its will and judgement and cannot [words indistinct] to the initiatives and responsibilities of other organs of sovereignty.

So far there has been no comment from the Presidency on this note from the prime minister's office, but such comment is to be expected in view of the importance of the matter to relations between the two organs of sovereignty.

GOVERNMENT RELEASES NOTE ON SITUATION IN ALENTEJO

LD102242 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 1930 GMT 10 Mar 80 LD

[Text] Here is the text of a note we have just received from the Prime Minister's Office:

1. The prime minister and the ministers of internal administration, justice and agriculture and fisheries met this afternoon to assess the social and political situation in Alentejo.

2. In the first place, it was felt that the agriculture and fisheries minister should go ahead with his policy of strictly complying with the basic provisions of the agrarian reform law and distribution of state land to independent farmers.

3. It was later found that there was certain evidence of the commission of a number of offenses mentioned in article 164 of the Penal Code, namely, the incitement to political struggle through violence.

4. By the decision of the prime minister, the ministers of internal administration, justice, and agriculture and fisheries have been jointly charged with: A) Insuring the necessary conditions for implementation of the Agriculture and Fisheries Ministry's policy; B) Mobilizing the necessary manpower of the security forces to insure public order and the observance of the law in the agrarian reform area; C) Taking, through the competent authorities, namely, the Judiciary Police steps necessary for the investigation into and punishment of the offenses mentioned in article 164 of the Penal Code: for offenses against persons and property committed against the farmers who legitimately took possession of their respective tracts of returned land; for offenses against the free movement of persons and goods as well as for any other politically-inspired offense committed in the agrarian reform area.

5. The prime minister and the government reaffirm their willingness to respect and make respected the law throughout the national territory, in keeping with the clear mandate received from the electorate, and express their hope that no Portuguese citizen will take upon himself the grave responsibility of breaching or inciting the breaching of democratic law.

6. The ministers of internal administration, justice, and agriculture and fisheries will be visiting the districts of Seubal and Beja on Wednesday, 12 March.

SUAREZ CONGRATULATES PNV PRESIDENT ON ELECTION

LD101756 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1700 GMT 10 Mar 80 LD

[Text] Prime Minister Adolfo Suarez has sent a congratulatory telegram to Carlos Garaicoechea, president of the PNV [Basque Nationalist Party] congratulating him on the results of the Basque elections and offering cooperation between the Basque institutions, the government and the Spanish parliament for the development of the system of self-government as provided by the Constitution and the autonomy statutes.

BASQUE LEADER GARAICOECHEA HOLDS PRESS CONFERENCE

LD101144 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 0700 GMT 10 Mar 80 LD

[Text] San Sebastian--Carlos Garaicoechea, who is still president of the Basque General Council, arrived at the Foral Council at 0205 this morning and at 0300 began a press conference which was attended by our colleague Alberto Martinez who reports:

Around 0300 this morning, Garaicoechea gave a press conference for the many national and foreign journalists accredited to the Foral Council of Guipuzcoa. Carlos Garaicoechea, who is virtually president of the Basque Government, reaffirmed his profound respect for all the political parties who contested the elections, whatever result they achieved. Later he referred to the situation in our country in the following words:

[Begin Garaicoechea recording] I think that our country is passing through a difficult period with problems which need to be tackled with great decisiveness and energy, and this is how we are going to tackle them. However, we will always remain true to the sense of respect we have for all the political forces whatever results they obtained. We will be completely open to dialog and ready to listen to all opinion around us. As far as possible, we will generate a force for cooperation which Euzkadi needs--particularly at this moment in its history. [end recording]

During the press conference Garaicoechea was asked about the possible composition of the future Basque Government--whether it would be a single party government, or transitional government or a government of popular unity. He replied:

[Begin Garaicoechea recording] Tomorrow the Basque Nationalist Party will convene its Euskadi Buru Batzar, its executive body, which will analyze the election results in depth and with a deep sense of responsibility, because apart from taking into consideration our own results we have to look at the showing of every political sector at this time. The only thing I would allow myself to anticipate is that we are sincerely convinced that circumstances will occur to make single party government possible. But, I stress this must be subject to a great deal of consideration. [end recording]

In response to a question on why, on this occasion Euzkadi voted for the Nationalists, Garaicoechea said:

[Begin Garaicoechea recording] Well, I think Euzkadi voted Nationalist more than before because Euzkadi is becoming more nationalist every day, and I think every day its national consciousness is becoming stronger.

Second, I think the results were influenced by certain contradictions which we have seen manifested over the last few months and which we have had to denounce--contradictions regarding questions which affect the [Basque] country directly. These include the contradiction between our own agreements as embodied in the statute of autonomy and the organic laws; the inexplicable meanness in transferring power to Basque institutions because--and I have said this many times--in this country there are obviously two political points of view: that view held by those of us who think the Basque people's aspiration for self-government can be fulfilled through political, institutional and peaceful means, and the point of view of those who are skeptical of these political means and who consequently have little trust in institutional channels. To a greater or lesser degree they have morally or materially supported the strategy of violence. Consequently, we have denounced the inconsistency which is emptying the Basque institutions of their content and the refusal to speed up the transfer of power to the Basque General Council itself which has given priority to political and peaceful channels.

Finally, I think this will lead anyone who has made a political analysis to the conclusion that the governing party has not carried out a correct policy with regard to the Basque country. At least, this is how I see it and I think that any political observer's analysis would have to reach these conclusions. [end recording]

HERRI BATASUNA COMMENTS ON ELECTION RESULTS

LD102120 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1900 GMT 10 Mar 80 LD

[Text] Herri Batasuna is the first Basque political force to give a press conference since the elections. This evening in a Bilbao Hotel the separatist coalition raised several considerations arising from the results of these elections to the parliament. For the moment Herri Batasuna maintains its stance of not attending the Basque Parliament although it will reconsider this if the parties which comprise the coalition and the support committees consider it opportune.

On the fragmented Patriotic Front [frente abertzale] Herri Batasuna says that for its party it will not attempt anything in this direction, unless the other two Basque forces--the Basque Nationalist Party and Euskadiko Ezkerra--adopt the minimum point of the socialist Basque Patriotic Coordinating Committee alternative. As a result of the elections Herri Batasuna has become the main leftwing force in Euskadi, and it stresses that it has not existed for long but has made great strides. It severely criticizes the election treatment pointed out to Herri Batasuna by the media and stated the obvious: the decline of the nonnationalist forces.

OLESEN SPEAKS ON AFGHANISTAN IN FOLKETING DEBATE

LD060925 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 29 Feb 80 p 5 LD

["G.A." report: "Folketing Condemns Invasion of Afghanistan"]

[Excerpts] The Folketing has condemned the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan and confirmed Denmark's affiliation with NATO and with the organization's dual aim of achieving security and detente.

A similarly worded proposal presented by Lasse Buotz on behalf of the Social Democratic Party, the Liberals, the Conservative People's Party, the Progress Party, the Center Democrats and the Christian People's Party was adopted in the Folketing yesterday with 129 votes for, 18 votes against (from the Socialist People's Party and the Left Socialists) and 15 abstentions (from the Single-Tax Party).

During the debate Foreign Minister Kjeld Olesen bluntly expressed the government's view that the Soviet move into Afghanistan was a clear violation of another country's sovereignty. Kjeld Olesen did not believe it possible to state clearly whether the action in Afghanistan could have consequences elsewhere in the world. But a solution to the crisis, that is, a withdrawal of Soviet forces, must be sought by all peaceful means. If this were to fail there would be incalculable consequences for all the countries in the region, eventually including the Soviet Union itself, as recent developments have shown.

"Where talks and negotiations can give concrete results, in disarmament for example, we must if possible make an even greater contribution than before. However, we will be alert to proposals without substance and to expressions of friendship and good relations which actually are no more than empty phrases. We must recognize the significance of the Afghan situation as an extremely serious blow to the detente process, which has taken much work to develop."

Kjeld Olesen concluded by saying that the Soviet invasion has not directly affected Danish defense plans but it serves to underline the importance of constant vigilance and a credible defense within the alliance. He confirmed that Denmark's NATO membership still unreservedly constitutes the basis for the country's security policy.

FOREIGN MINISTER VIEWS RELATIONS WITH USSR

LD110923 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 29 Feb 80 p 4 LD

[Morten Fyhn interview with Norwegian Foreign Minister Frydenlund--date, place not given: "Norway Wants Clarification in the North"]

[Text] "Norway goes to the demarcation line talks with the Soviet Union with the wish to see the Barents Sea border issue resolved," Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund told AFTENPOSTEN after the Russians made their unexpected initiative. [paragraph continues]

He emphasized that Norway regards these talks as an important part of the work to clarify the northern borders, which is again crucially significant for calm and stability in the region.

[Question] How is it possible to account for Soviet policy toward Norway when the country's official press directs violent attacks against Norwegian plans for contingency stockpiling of military equipment and then unexpectedly submits an official invitation for talks? Is there any connection here?

[Answer] It is the same as our own attitude. We strongly condemn the Soviet Union for the intervention in Afghanistan, but at the same time we are interested in entering talks with the Soviet Union to resolve outstanding border issues. The government has declared, including in the foreign policy report to the Storting, that the deterioration in the international situation should not be allowed to affect the situation in northern regions. The Soviet initiative indicates that they share this attitude. There is much speculation as to the possible motives behind the Soviet initiative. The simplest explanation could be that, like us, they need clarification of the outstanding border issue in the Barents Sea.

[Question] What about the Soviet press campaign against Norway?

[Answer] We view the attacks in the Soviet press as opinions, not as expressions of official policy by the Soviet authorities. But I believe that the Soviet authorities are underestimating the impact of the feeling which these attacks are arousing in Norwegian public opinion in the same way as they cannot have imagined the disquiet aroused in people in other countries by the intervention in Afghanistan.

Regarding the specific attacks on plans for the contingency stockpiling of allied military equipment in Norway, this can cause uncertainty because of the many incorrect press reports. Here I am thinking partly of the impression which has arisen that the question of contingency stockpiling is a result of the march into Afghanistan, that parts are stored for tactical nuclear installations and so forth. But, in fact, these plans were published long ago in official documents which were submitted and discussed in the Storting. They are nothing new. We have sought to clarify this to the Soviet authorities. We will see whether these clarification attempts from our side have the desired effect.

[Question] Could the aim of the press attacks be to change Norwegian policy so that the contingency stockpiling plans are shelved?

[Answer] I think that they are more to prevent a wider development. At the same time the Russians want to show that they are closely following what is happening. The Russians main wish is probably to be clear over what the contingency stockpiling entails and to receive Norwegian assurances that this is not the beginning of a change in Norwegian base policy.

[Question] Could the offer of talks be the bait in an attempt to achieve with kindness what cannot be achieved with threats?

[Answer] I am not willing to speculate here on motives. We are going to the talks with the wish to see the demarcation line issue resolved.

[Question] It is already known that the Russians are interested in a package solution to the problems in the north. Could Norway agree to link the demarcation line issue with other outstanding questions?

[Answer] Our task is to discuss the demarcation line issue facing us. As regards other outstanding issues such as the Svalbard fishery-protection zone, they are being discussed in other forums.

[Question] Is it not a contradiction that Norwegian negotiators should be in Moscow in April, when many visits are canceled or postponed following Norwegian reaction to the march into Afghanistan?

[Answer] We have always assumed that existing contacts at official level should not be affected. The visits which have been postponed are of a political and military nature.

[Question] But can Norway conduct negotiations in Moscow if we continue to be singled out by PRAVDA for our defense policy?

[Answer] There are several aspects to this. We have our own views on what happened in Afghanistan and we express them, even if we do hold talks on the demarcation line. But, clearly, continued attacks on elements of Norwegian defense policy do not improve the atmosphere for the negotiations.

Frydenlund admitted that the cool climate between East and West is affecting talks between Norway and the Soviet Union. However, he emphasized that both Norway and other Western countries want talks with the Soviet Union on disarmament as well as in following up the Helsinki Final Act. Frydenlund also recalled that it is a declared Norwegian aim to work for continued East-West rapprochement.

[Question] Is the offer of talks part of a Soviet attempt to split the Western countries?

[Answer] If it is possible, via negotiations, to clarify the border in the northern regions. I do not see why that should go against common Western interests. Another point is that the NATO countries can have dissimilar views on what policy to have toward the Soviet Union, since the detente policy has different effects on individual member countries. However, the desire and need for unity will prove to have the necessary force.

[Question] Does being outside the EC at a time when the foreign policy cooperation of member countries is increasingly expanding create problems for Norway?

[Answer] The development of foreign policy cooperation within the EC has proceeded more rapidly and is more comprehensive than could have been imagined a few years ago. It introduces a new dimension into international politics. Norway is outside of this. The way to try and neutralize these disadvantages is by strengthening our bilateral contacts with the EC countries. These contacts are good, but what is good can always be better.

[Question] Today, with the different views between our West European allies and the United States on how far one should go in reacting to the Soviet march into Afghanistan, where does Norway fit in?

[Answer] Since the EC referendum there has been no doubt that in its foreign policy Norway has moved closer than before to the United States. On the other hand, Norway's interests and problems with regard to the Soviet Union are similar to those of some West European states.

FRYDENLUND HAS 'SHOWDOWN' WITH SOVIET JOURNALISTS

LD101701 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 3 Mar 80 p 9 LD

[Ulf Andenaes report: "Frydenlund Tells Soviet Press: You Are Building on Falsehoods!"]

[Text] There was a tough showdown between Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund and a group of Soviet journalists when the foreign minister, together with Commerce Minister Reiulf Steen and Under Secretary Per Vassbotn, held a press conference with foreign journalists over the weekend. "The allegations about us are not true, and I would urge you to pay greater attention to the facts of the case the next time you report controversial issues," a pugnacious Frydenlund told the Russians present.

The questions from the Russian journalists resembled an echo of the recent attacks against Norway in the Soviet press. Rusakov from PRAVDA wanted to know if it was a coincidence that the decision on contingency storage of military equipment in Norway, the decison on the deployment of new nuclear weapons in Europe and President Jimmy Carter's attempt to "revive the cold war" occurred at the same time.

"What the question is implying is simply not true," Frydenlund replied. He pointed out that the decisions on contingency storage and nuclear modernization had a totally different cause than Carter's reaction to the incursion in Afghanistan. Both issues had a long history, and it must be obvious to anyone who studied their implementation that they could not be linked with the Afghanistan crisis. "Next time you concern yourselves with this, be so kind as to refer to the Soviet Embassy in Oslo, which will most certainly provide you with the text of the official documents," the foreign minister admonished them.

Previously PRAVDA had expressed concern over the changes in Norwegian base policy. Frydenlund replied that the base policy has not changed. "Ever since NATO's inception our principle has been that in a situation of impending war Norway must receive aid from our allies. The new factor which has arisen in recent years is that the Soviet Union has so greatly expanded its navy in the north that we can no longer guarantee such support by sea. Thus we must have the heavier equipment stored in the country so that we can have the necessary reinforcements brought in by air."

Asked by IZVESTIYA whether Norway is interested in [Finnish] President Kekkonen's proposal for Scandinavia to be a nuclear-free zone, Frydenlund said: "Scandinavia is already nuclear free. We will consider Kekkonen's proposal if the nuclear-free zone is extended geographically to those areas in the north where there are known to be nuclear weapons."

The foreign minister subsequently returned to what he believed were unfounded attacks against Norway. After stating the facts of the case, he said that he hoped that the misunderstandings had been cleared up. "May I thus hope that there will be an end to these attacks on us?" He asked directly. The question met with silence from the Russian guests.

The situation was rather delicate when Reiulf Steen with Per Vassbotn by his side was asked to explain the background to Tor Aspengren's [chairman of the Norwegian Federation of Trade Unions] clash with the Labor Party leadership. Steen kept his head and extricated himself with a fine report on the party's life and development.

The Israeli journalists did not miss the opportunity to ask if their country might expect to receive oil from Norway. The reply was evasive: If Israel were to be denied necessary oil supplies it would be an international problem which would have to be resolved by the international community, Knut Frydenlund asserted.

THATCHER INTERVIEWED ON EEC, DOMESTIC ISSUES

LD102016 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1937 GMT 10 Mar 80 LD

[Text] Mrs Thatcher tonight ruled out either a British withdrawal from the EEC or a boycott of Community business by ministers if she fails to win the row over the UK's 1.3 billion pounds sterling payments to Common Market funds. She also insisted there was no question of scaling-down Britain's status to associate member of the Community.

The prime minister did not spell out what retaliatory action the government would take if the issue is still deadlocked after the Brussels summit later this month. But she hinted that Britain would be prepared to disrupt Common Market work.

There had to be a compromise sooner or later because the position was "totally and utterly unfair", she said in a 20-minute interview for French television. "I am afraid that unless we get justice fairly soon then it will be difficult to make progress with other things," she said.

On the possibility of Britain quitting the EEC, she said: "How could you have an effective Community without one of the major European countries not being in it? It would be very damaging to the Community and to each and every country within it, and the only people who would rejoice if Britain left would be our potential enemies."

Britain would not be prepared to be an associate member either. "We are a full member and we will continue to be a full member and Europe would be very much the weaker if we were not," she said. Mrs Thatcher also ruled out the empty chair policy once adopted by General de Gaulle. "We are entitled as any other partner is to justice. We shall stay in the chair. We shall go on fighting our corner in each and every aspect that comes up in the Community", she said.

On the domestic front, Mrs Thatcher insisted that her "new and vital policies" would take time to work. "Democracy consists of people taking responsibility for their own actions and gradually I believe we are winning through", she said. "It is gradually going to come right and we are absolutely on the right lines."

CARRINGTON TO DISCUSS OIL, MIDDLE EAST WITH CEAUSESCU

LD101521 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 9 Mar 80 p 2 LD

[Norman Kirkham report: "Romanians Want To Buy British Oil"]

[Text] President Ceausescu of Romania, who is to hold talks with Lord Carrington, the foreign secretary, in Bucharest this week, is considering an approach to buy North Sea oil from Britain.

The supplies would be the first sent by Britain to a communist country, but a request for the oil could expect a favourable reception in Whitehall. Mr Ceausescu pursues policies stubbornly independent from Moscow, and Britain is looking to him for important support in urging the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan.

I understand that Romanian officials have made discreet, tentative enquiries already about the oil purchases. Diplomatic sources in Bucharest confirmed yesterday that the government was interested in obtaining North Sea oil on the "right terms."

Romania, whose own oil fields were heavily depleted by the German occupation in two world wars, is now importing 10,000 million barrels a year or 50 per cent of her requirements, relying on Middle East sources like Iran. The need to buy in supplies is expected to increase by five to 10 per cent over the next few years. President Ceausescu's advisers concerned by the continuing instability of Iran are urging that alternative and more diverse sources must be found.

Drawbacks to negotiations with Britain at present, however, might be in the high price of British oil at $34 dollars (about 15 pounds) a barrel and commitments to sell to Western Europe. Britain is producing 1,600,000 barrels a day, about 900,000 of which are being exported to Common Market partners America and Scandinavia. Some of this oil would be available for other buyers soon.

Apart from the oil supplies, Romania is interested in British assistance in exploiting off-shore fields in the Black Sea, while other trade between the two countries is flourishing. Assembly and production of BAC 1-11 airliners in Romania under a licensing deal will earn Britain about pounds 300 million. A British concern is tendering to supply turbo-generators in a contract worth several hundred millions more. British exports to Romania in 1978 totalled pounds 74,900,000 against pounds 51,700,000 worth of imports.

Mr Ceausescu, who has long sought friendly relations with Britain, became the first communist leader to stay at Buckingham Palace during a state visit in June, 1978. The invitation for Lord Carrington to visit him has been long-standing and he has invited Mrs Thatcher to follow the foreign secretary to Bucharest when her engagements will allow.

Among the major topics for discussion during Lord Carrington's two-day visit this week will be increasing diplomatic support for Yugoslavia in view of President Tito's grave illness and also cooperation in urging a comprehensive Middle East settlement. On Afghanistan, Mr Ceausescu is taking the line that neither East nor West should interfere in policies which must be decided by the government in Kabul alone.

DENKTAS MEETS LORD CARRINGTON; MAKES STATEMENT TO BBC

TA101757 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1730 GMT 10 Mar 80 TA

[Text] President Denktas, who is on a private visit to London, met the British foreign secretary, Lord Carrington, this morning. In a statement to the BBC afterward, Mr Denktas said that they had discussed the latest developments on the Cyprus problem. The president added: I briefed Lord Carrington on the assessment of the Turkish Cypriot side on these developments. For the Turkish Cypriot side it is dangerous to resume the intercommunal talks under the shadow of the latest UN resolution. Mr Kiprianou must remove this negative obstacle he deliberately and wantonly placed in the way of the talks. This resolution is not of the series envisaged by the decisions adopted at the summit meeting of May last year. It is a meaningless and harmful resolution. Mr Denktas also had a meeting with the Labor Party shadow foreign minister, Mr Peter Shaw, this morning, and later had a working luncheon with Mr Salim (Azzam), the secretary general of the Islamic Council of Europe.

TURKISH CHIEF OF STAFF GEN EVREN MEETS WITH PRESS

[Text] Chief of the General Staff Gen Kenan Evren said that instead of asking for military aid from abroad, Turkey should establish and develop its own armaments industry.

General Evren made this statement while replying to questions by journalists during an official visit to London as the guest of the chief of the British Defence Staff Adm Terence Lewin. Replying to a question, General Evren said that the time was now ripe for Turkey to establish its own military industry. Answering another question, the chief of staff said that legislation about the duties and authority of Turkish police and gendarme forces was inadequate and that new legislation was needed. General Evren will leave London for Oslo tomorrow as the official guest of the Norwegian chief of staff.

DAILY TELEGRAPH VIEWS RESULTS OF EEC-ASEAN CONFERENCE

[Editorial: "A World-wide Threat"]

[Text] Lord Carrington and the other foreign ministers of the European Community got something of a surprise on their little-publicised team visit to Kuala Lumpur to meet their counterparts of the Association of South-East Asian Nations. The purpose was to sign an EEC-ASEAN economic co-operation agreement and to get the backing of the five countries--Malaysia, Thailand, Singapore, Indonesia and the Philippines--for the "Carrington plan" for Russia's withdrawal from Afghanistan and that country's neutralisation. What surprised them was the vehemence with which the ASEAN ministers argued that to get the Vietnamese invaders out of Cambodia was every bit as important as to get the Russians out of Afghanistan. Cambodia and the Russian-backed Vietnamese armies, they pointed out, are on their doorstep.

Only after two days of argument could the Europeans be persuaded to agree to a communique "strongly deploring" both "armed interventions" ("condemnation" and "aggression" would surely have been more appropriate terms). Clearly the Europeans were desperately anxious to put just the right dosage of pressure on Russia by getting ASEAN to back the Carrington plan, but not to cause unnecessary pain to Moscow by calling a spade a spade. The European effort to keep Cambodia out of the communique was presumably intended to avoid any hurtful suggestion that Russia was using Vietnam as a willing tool in a systematic campaign for world domination. In addition, it would prejudice some European hopes of weaning Vietnam away from Russia with aid and understanding.

The ASEAN countries try as they might, can have no such illusions--although they are just as much exposed to the military threat from Vietnam and Russia as Germany and the rest of Europe are to the Warsaw Pact. They see the Vietnamese armies massing along the frontier of Thailand, the next domino designate, which is already under intense political and economic strain, largely as a result of the huge influx of Cambodian refugees and of the many pressures from the growing Vietnamese threat. ASEAN knows that it has as little to expect from declarations and appeals as Afghanistan. Hope lies rather in China's huge but out-dated armies, in increased American support, in Vietnam's desperate economic plight and in the increasing burden on Russia of keeping it, unaided, above water.

KIPRIANOU SAYS GREEK CYPRIOTS READY FOR 'SUBSTANTIVE TALKS'

NC101911 Nicosia Domestic Television Service in Greek 1830 GMT 10 Mar 80 NC

[Text] President Kiprianou has sent a message to UN Secretary General Waldheim in which the Cyprus Government and the Greek Cypriot side express their views on resuming the inter-Cypriot talks.

An official announcement says that the message responds positively to the UN secretary general's efforts for resuming the dialog and expresses the readiness of the Cyprus Government and the Greek Cypriot side for substantive talks as soon as possible.

The announcement adds: The Greek Cypriot side will display its views on substantive as well as other questions under dispute at the negotiating table. It now depends on the other side, the announcement concludes, to show the adequate spirit to make possible the beginning of a substantive and constructive dialog.

KLIRIDHIS SCORES GOVERNMENT STAND ON CYPRUS SOLUTION

NC110940 Nicosia O FILELEVTHEROS in Greek 11 Mar 80 p 10 NC

[Text] Democratic Rally leader Gl. Kliridhis last night repeated his attacks on President Kiprianou's government and called on it to resign immediately "for the good of Cyprus and its people," as he put it.

Reiterating that we should have accepted the U.S. plan-framework for a Cyprus solution, Kliridhis accused the government of being "incapable and powerless" to resolve the Cyprus problem.

Kliridhis was addressing a gathering of Famagusta personalities at a hotel in Limassol. He said that he has clear assurances from official representatives of both Britain and the United States that the Western framework--which, as he put it, "we have criminally rejected"--has not yet been withdrawn. He added: "It is still with the two parties and it is up to them to restore it."

Kliridhis also said that DS [Democratic Rally] is considering the formation of a "shadow cabinet" that would deal with the numerous and huge domestic problems.

Answering questions, Kliridhis said that:

--The Greek Government had repeatedly advised the Cyprus Government--and Mr Rallis had made five telephone calls to Mr Rolandhis--not to reject the Western framework.

He does not maintain that we should confine ourselves exclusively to the West, "but at present it is only the West that can exert pressure on Turkey to make concessions in the Cyprus issue." However, there are also possibilities for some Eastern bloc countries to exert pressure in this direction.

Kliridhis went on that "the Western plan does not move us out of the UN framework," and added that he is in possession of a Waldheim document giving the assurance that there is no intention of moving the Cyprus issue out of the UN framework in case the Western plan is discussed.

He said: "Had we accepted the Western framework, we would already have been at the negotiating table, something that we are begging for now, and the inhabitants of Famagusta would have been in Famagusta under UN supervision."

ATHENS RADIO REPORTS DIFFICULTIES IN SOVIET TRADE TALKS

[Text] Minister of Commerce Panayiotopoulos today received the head of the Soviet commercial delegation in Athens, Novakovskiy, and discussed with him in detail the developments in commercial transactions between Greece and the Soviet Union which took place in 1979, as well as prospects for 1980.

As has been learned, Panayiotopoulos expressed uneasiness because, according to Greek statistics, a serious drop has occurred in Greek exports in 1979, compared to 1978. This has happened despite assurances by the Soviet side that purchases planned for 1980 will be 30 to 35 percent higher than those of last year. Panayiotopoulos asked that special efforts be made to implement Soviet promises and for substantial increases in traditional products like tobacco, citrus fruits, raisins and so forth. More specifically, the issue of the purchase of significant quantities of Greek wines was discussed, but differences of opinion emerged on the question of prices. Relevant contacts and negotiations will continue on this issue.

GOVERNMENT DENIES POSSIBLE KARAMANLIS-ROGERS MEETING

AT081307 Athens NEWS in English 8 Mar 80 p 4 AT

[Text] The Greek Government and the American Embassy in Athens denied categorically that competent American services in Athens had suggested to Washington that a direct meeting between General Rogers and Prime Minister Karamanlis should take place, in order to clarify definitively the possibilities of Greece's reentering the military wing of NATO.

This, as well as the rumor that a "political solution" of the problem might be accepted by Greece, was denied by a competent government source, which stated: "The announcement is absolutely inaccurate. No such meeting will take place."

Also the American press attache at the American Embassy in Athens, Mr John Svenson, stated the following: "We have no knowledge of any such initiative for a meeting between Karamanlis and Rogers. And we have not taken any relative steps."

PAPANDREOU INTERVIEWED ON PASOK'S ROLE, POSITIONS

[Text] In an interview of exceptional significance, PASOK Chairman A. Papandreou refers to PASOK's historic role in the international arena, analyzes the movement's positions and, at the same time, replies to attacks by the right and outlines PASOK's course to power through popular support and reliance. The full text of A. Papandreou's interview is as follows:

"The formation of PASOK is truly a great event in the country's political history. Seen from very many angles I believe that it is unique. I do not say this because I am linked with PASOK, I believe it absolutely.

"It is the first socialist movement or party to have become popular, to have grown roots which are not intended only for the class that is archetypally the object of exploitation by employers within the capitalist framework--the workers--but includes a broader alliance of the underprivileged, as the PASOK key phrase goes--workers employees, young people, intellectuals and so forth.

"It is an effort to formulate a program of radical change that will correspond to the struggles, the wishes, the anticipations of a very broad part of the Greek people.

"It is also unique because it has dynamics like no other socialist party. If one were to compare it with European socialist parties one would ascertain that while those parties steadfastly represent one part of the electorate--strangely, they represent it very steadfastly--PASOK progresses with impressive dynamism.

"A very interesting thing about this movement is that currently it is the only leftist movement in Western Europe with a chance to reach power. Truly this makes it a unique experiment in the European arena. As a movement aiming at power within a democratic framework--strictly within a democratic framework--PASOK is something impressive and unique.

"Something which is impressive--it even impresses me--is that the PASOK positions, which we candidly presented to the Greek people from the very beginning without any evasion, are positions which indeed constitute a radical structural change. This is significant because the movement that is taking place from the right or the center toward PASOK is not taking place around slogans that are demagogic or reformist. The entire structure of society as we envision it and as we present it is passed on to the people.

"Of course, there are still certain misunderstandings at the popular base--that we shall take land from the farmers or apartments from the petty bourgeois, that we shall nationalize everything--all these things are deliberate misunderstandings by PASOK opponents, which of course constitute an inhibiting factor in PASOK's course. In any case, I want to stress that PASOK speaks clearly about the course it has charted and it will not take other positions or undermine its slogans on the altar of its efforts to climb to power.

"It is the fact that for the first time the people have immediate prospects for another course which the right does not like. It is another course which springs from within the people with which the right should compromise if the majority of the people lead PASOK to power, unless the eternal right holds a 'joker'. It is interesting that it is the right which speaks of excesses when we take positions, for instance that we shall not vote for a president. In fact, it is the right which brandishes anomaly. We always remain strictly within the democratic framework.

"At this stage, it is a fact that PASOK is very closely linked with the name of Andreas Papandreou. Indeed, this is how it is. However, our entire course is such that even this will be surpassed at some other stage and PASOK will become a movement that will be less identified with a specific personality. This happens in my case because I am the man who created the movement. However, if one were to talk about the country's distant future, our effort and hope is that the movement should rely on our people's own forces so that we may have prospects in the country's long development, which of course cannot be counted in 4-year terms or even in decades.

"What are the sources of PASOK? Basically, I think there are three.

"PASOK has its roots in the predictatorial center-left, in the left--the generation that was represented by 'Lambrakis'--and EDIN [Greek Democratic Youth] of the predictatorial period.

"In any case it represents the generation of the Polytechnic and at the same time, to an extent it represents the resistance forces of the occupation. Truly, if one were to study EAM [National Liberation Front], if one were to read Glinos' book 'What Is EAM and What Does It Want', one would see that our differences are not great. Of course, we are not dealing with a conqueror with whom we are fighting. This situation does not exist. The word 'national-liberation' currently used by PASOK does not have the meaning the national liberation struggle had at the time because, of course, we are not under the physical occupation of the Americans or of NATO, we are merely satellites."

MILLIYET REVIEWS AIMS OF SOVIET MEDIA CAMPAIGN

NC100922 Istanbul MILLIYET in Turkish 6 Mar 80 p 2 NC

["Looking at the World" column by Sami Kohen: "Behaving Calmly Despite Unfriendliness"]

[Text] As detente between the Eastern and Western blocs is gradually being replaced by "a war of nerves", Turkey is facing the danger of finding itself inside "the arena of tension" because of its strategic position. The criticisms and warnings showered on Turkey by the Soviet news media can be considered an indication of this.

PRAVDA and Radio Moscow repeatedly refer to Turkey's foreign policy and, in particular, to the Turkish-American defense agreement soon to be signed, strongly criticizing Ankara's attitude. While PRAVDA threatened that Turkey could be turned "into a nuclear cemetery," Radio Moscow maintained that the Turkish people "will not consent" to the signing of an agreement allowing U.S. bases. We feel the need to elaborate on the reasons and the significance of the timing of these "cold winds" blowing from Moscow.

In recent years, Turkish-Soviet relations could register important improvements within the general atmosphere of detente. It is truly astonishing, therefore, that the Soviet Union should resort to such unexpected outbursts at a time when mutual confidence was about to be established.

This is all the more astonishing, because the Turkish-American defense agreement contains neither elements to indicate a change in policy toward the Soviet Union nor elements that could threaten or provoke the USSR. The agreement, which has been drafted and initialed, envisages the reactivation of installations that were operational before the United States embargo and that had closed down because of this.

Consequently, there are no newly established bases in Turkey. Negotiations for this agreement were started by the previous Turkish government and completed by the present one. Moreover, this agreement is part of the joint defense system. In other words, its aim is purely "defensive". Turkey never misses a chance to stress that this agreement is purely within NATO obligations. Is it possible that Moscow is unaware of Turkey's sensitivity in this respects?

Had Turkey not suspended the operation of these bases 5 years ago following the U.S. embargo, would Russia pour out such threats now without any provocation? During the years when these bases were in operation, the Soviet Union did not see disturbed.

Willingly or unwillingly, these questions provoke other questions as well as doubts as to aims and the significance of the timing of this campaign launched by the Soviet news media. They appear to have become active particularly after the Afghanistan incident. Tension is concentrated on the area in which Turkey is situated. The timing of Moscow's campaign could have the following aims:

1. To influence Turkish public opinion and create the impression--and anxiety--that Moscow views the Turkish-American defense agreement as hostile, and to produce a trend against the Turkish government's policy.

2. To intimidate Turkey with terms such as "nuclear cemetery" and to prevent Turkey from cooperating with the United States or the West for defensive purposes.

3. To make it known to the United States and the West that Russia will not remain uninterested in developments in Turkey. As said above, it is hard to believe that Moscow views the Turkish-American defense agreement--which does not introduce any new element--as a source of provocation or danger to the Soviet Union. This being so, it is impossible not to sense that this new campaign against Turkey has other intentions within the framework of Moscow's regional or global policies.

One could wonder what Moscow stands to gain from these threats. If Radio Moscow fears that Turkish-Soviet friendship may be "damaged", is this not their own doing?

Turkish-Soviet detente cannot be preserved by harsh words and threats; the disturbance of East-West detente, affected by the Afghanistan events, is an example. Moscow does not have to go too far back in history; remembering the experiences of the fifties and sixties would be very useful.

We should not lose sight of the fact that the ever-increasing tension in our region and throughout the world also engulfs our country. Turkey's national interests demand that detente be protected and if it is "waning," it should be revived. With this objective in mind, Turkish diplomacy should try to stay out of the skirmishes between the superpowers and develop multilateral relations.

Turkey would be wise to counter the "cold wind" recently blowing from the north with cool-headedness....

OUR RADIO SCORES AID BY IMF, PRAISES SOVIET AID

TA071107 (Clandestine) Our Radio in Turkish to Turkey 0900 GMT 7 Mar 80 TA

[Unattributed commentary]

[Text] The IMF delegation left Turkey expressing its satisfaction over its visit. There is no reason why the delegation should not be pleased. The Demirel government and the prime minister's main economic advisor Ozal--a monopolist (?boss)--have delivered the country's economy into the hands of the IMF. This has been done in such a way that Turkey will report to the IMF every 3 months. The IMF, which has secured such a control over the country's economy, will come up with new political and military requests at every occasion, and will say: You better do this and that; if not you will have no loans. The $1 billion loan which is said to have been received from various imperialist financial institutions after the requests ff the IMF were fulfilled, has in fact been kept in abeyance for almost 3 years. It is only after the country's economy was surrendered into the hands of the IMF that this loan has been received. For whom is this loan? Is it for Turkey? Is it being extended for Turkey's national interests? The main objective of such aid and loans is a means to realize the U.S., NATO and imperialist plans for Turkey.

Daily, large circulation U.S. newspapers and magazines are talking about aid to Turkey pointing to the importance of this aid for their own interests. Carter is talking about U.S. national interests on Turkish soil. The U.S. generals are claiming that Turkey is their first line of defense. The U.S. bases are in fact arsenals of nuclear arms. U.S. imperialism is openly using our country as a tool for its own interests, dragging our country into the flames.

Another objective of the aid and loans being extended to Turkey--which is linked to the first one--is to impose the imperialist subjugation and servility on the people and the country and to (?support) the collaborationist and monopolist bosses.

The loans and aid being extended to Turkey are in fact benefitting a few monopolist bosses. An examination of the IMF conditions for extending aid is proof enough of the truth of this. In industry the IMF [words indistinct], the agricultural sector also has been handed over. The natural resources, which are the property of the people and the nation, as well as publicly owned companies are to be handed over to domestic and foreign holding companies. All these are the undeniable proofs of the fact that the incoming loans and aid are in fact taken over by a few monopolist bosses.

The domestic writers, who are professing a return to the cold war period by undermining detente, are confessing this fact. Civaoglu, one of the main supporters of the monopolist bosses and an editor of the Istanbul daily TERCUMAN, says the following in his article of 11 March 1978 referring to the delay by the IMF in extending aid to Turkey: IMF will not disengage itself from Turkey after it provides a $1 billion loan from various private banks. Turkey will have to present financial reports to the IMF. As it can be noticed, Civaoglu is in favor of Turkey's economy being surrendered into the hands of the IMF, and admits the fact that loans are received by the monopolist bosses as follows. [sentence as heard] It is true that the Soviet Union is ready to extend aid to Turkey. In the past it has done so and it has announced that it will continue to do so. But this loan is only for the public sector. As it can be noticed, the reactionary writers cannot deny the fact that the Soviet loan is extended to public enterprises for national interests. Undoubtedly, they do not approve of this. But that is why our people are in favor of cooperation and friendship with the Soviet Union based on mutual benefits and equality. That is why our people are opposing the military demands, bases and bilateral agreements linked to the so-called aid of the imperialists.

DEMIREL HOLDS THIRD NEWS CONFERENCE ON GOVERNMENT PERFORMANCE

[Text] Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel has said that, rather than surrender to treacherous enemies of the state and nation, the government has chosen to crush these traitors. In the third and last of a series of news conferences to explain the performance of the government during its first 100 days held at the prime minister's office today, Demirel talked about combating terror, anarchy, secessionism and destructiveness. He said: The right path has been chosen in combating anarchy, secessionism, destructiveness and terror. Determination and perseverance will yield results. The enemies of the state and nation will regret the day they were born. The anarchists will not be allowed to get away with their actions. Demirel added that no Turkish citizen is involved in anarchic incidents and that those who are involved are traitors.

Explaining the action taken against anarchy by the government during its 100-day term, Demirel said that the origins of terror, anarchy, secessionism and destructiveness have been discovered, that the militant leaders are being caught and that cases have been opened against organizations.

VOTCP COMMENTS ON DEMIREL NEWS CONFERENCES

TA110827 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 11 Mar 80 TA

[Unattributed commentary]

[Text] The first thought that sprung up in the minds of those who heard the three news conferences held by Prime Minister Demirel during the weekend was: What lies! He is a liar. Demirel in fact lied to the face of the people explaining the so-called performance of the government during its first 100 days in power.

What has Demirel said? Demirel claims that this government is trying to prevent the high cost of living within new balances. With such statements, Demirel is not only lying to hide the truth about chain price hikes which increased by more than 100 percent and the devaluation of the Turkish lira by some 50 percent, but he is making fun of the very toilers whose livelihood he has thus seriously destroyed.

Let us now consider what the spokesmen of the other bourgeois parties have to say on the subject of the high cost of living. Ecevit stresses the fact that the high cost of living increased by 11 percent during January and February 1980. National Salvation Party official Asilturk says that a world record was broken in price hikes during February. In rallies they are holding, the working people are protesting against the terrible price hikes and the high cost of living in the country at large.

In his news conferences, Demirel talked about some 10,000 investment projects amounting to 1 trillion Turkish lira. These projects are all lies since organizations, like the IMF into whose hands Demirel and his followers have delivered the Turkish economy, have imposed as prerequisites for aid the slowing down of investments and a reduction in the rate of economic development. Insisting on the fulfillment of these conditions, the IMF and other organizations have refused to extend aid to Turkey it has been requesting since 1977. However, as soon as the Demirel government conceded to all the conditions imposed by the IMF, forcing the toiling people to shoulder the consequences of the economic crisis and acknowledging the role of gendarme for U.S. imperialism, only then did the imperialist firms and banks start to open the tap of loans drop by drop.

In a report which appeared in the Istanbul daily MILLIYET on 4 February, Mehmed Ali Birand describes this fact as follows: Turkey needs $7 billion in foreign aid annually. However, the West does not seem to be willing to provide this aid. It is extending its loan at a minimum pace, giving the least possible. Birand quotes the Carter-Schmidt talks in an attempt to explain the objective of the so-called aid being extended to Turkey. Schmidt says that aid to Turkey is aimed at the benefit of the West and the United States and that they consider Turkey as a market and a military base.

In his news conferences, Demirel further claims that success has been achieved in the struggle against the anarchic incidents and terror, while Erbakan reveals that 753 citizens were killed and 6,732 others were wounded in political violence during the first 100 days of the present government. This is a sign that terror and anarchy are rapidly escalating. What is the explanation lying behind all this? Subjecting the people to the robbery and ruthless exploitation of a handful of bourgeois collaborationists and monopolists, Demirel and his followers have accepted the support of the fascist Nationalist Action Party--the main source of terror in Turkey.

The fact that the Demirel government has gone bankrupt during this period proves that no bourgeois government whatsoever is able to save Turkey from its deep economic and social crisis. The road to saving Turkey is linked with freeing the national economy from the hands of the IMF and the like, with ending the rule of the collaborationists and monopolist bosses based on ruthless exploitation and oppression, with tearing up the bilateral agreements, with dismantling the nuclear arsenals on our soil, and with the purging of fascist nests and fascist concentrations among the armed forces and the police. No bourgeois government can accomplish this. These can only be realized by the rule and the progressive democratic revolution of all the progressive and patriotic forces. That is what the Turkish Communist Party is struggling for.

ECEVIT CALLS FOR ABOLITION OF DEMIREL GOVERNMENT

[Excerpts] RPP leader Bulent Ecevit said that it would be an irresponsible stand to let the incumbent government continue to reign and to do what it wants in a bid to let the public better understand what the government is like. Ecevit was speaking at the RPP regional meeting held in Izmir today.

Recalling that his party did not have the necessary majority in the parliament, Ecevit said that it was imperative to abolish this government as soon as an opportunity arises for doing so without any obligations. Recalling that Turkey was going through one of the most difficult periods of the republic, Ecevit said that great tasks awaited the RPP at this point and that the RPP was conscious of its duties.

Pointing out that he would not permit the party to be dragged along by a small fraction, which considers itself very important, Ecevit said: The RPP's unity in the democratic line will be preserved for the good of the party and the country.

Referring to the news conference held by Prime Minister Demirel in Ankara yesterday, Ecevit recalled Demirel's statement that problems would not be solved by the government's stepping down and added:

[Begin Ecevit recording] As a result of mistakes and irresponsibilities committed and accumulated over long years in the past, Turkey has been transformed into a country whose total exports are not enough to meet its annual oil needs. Naturally, the problems of a country brought to such a point cannot be solved by a change of government or within a short period of time. [end recording]

Noting that Demirel's statements concerning inflation did not reflect the whole truth, Ecevit said that prices had been left free--lifting state subsidies from even fertilizers without arranging for its proper distribution--without bringing production to a satisfactory level and without increasing Turkey's export capabilities. Ecevit said that the new economic model would intensify worries in Turkey and would bring violent incidents to dangerous proportions. Ecevit added that policies pursued by the Justice Party governments had brought Turkey to this difficult period.

NAVAL 'SEA WOLF' EXERCISES BEGIN IN AEGEAN, MARMARA

TA101747 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 10 Mar 80 TA

[Text] The Sea Wolf exercises have begun in the Aegean and Marmara seas. The first of this year's exercises are being conducted under the command of Navy Commander Adm Nejat Tumer. According to information received from the Office of the Chief of Staff, ships, submarines, naval aircraft and helicopters are taking part in the maneuvers, which will end on 20 March.

Aircraft from the air force will also participate in the exercises in the Aegean. Naval and air training and firing exercises are being held. Also, various training exercises are being conducted involving naval warfare. The Sea Wolf exercises are organized by the Office of the Naval Commander every year.

MARTIAL LAW OPERATIONS--Martial law forces caught 73 persons--3 of them women--involved in various murders, woundings and bombings and belonging to clandestine leftist organizations during operations conducted in Gaziantep and Adiyaman since the beginning of February. The security forces also seized three persons of the extreme right in connection with the murder of a person in Gaziantep. Of the 73 persons, 10 belong to The Unity of Labor [Emegin Birligi], 19 belong to Turkish Revolutionary Communist Party Construction Organization [Turkiye Devrimci Kommunist Partisi Insa Orgutu] and another 43 belong to two organizations called Young Toilers Union [Genc Emekciler Birligi] and Turkish Peoples' Liberation Army Marxist-Leninist [Turkiye Halk Kurtulus Ordusu Marxist-Leninist]. SOUTH EUROPEAN SOCIALISTS LAUNCH JOINT APPEAL TO LEFT

LD111249 Paris LE MATIN in French 6 Mar 80 p 3 LD

[Alexis Libaert report: "South Europe's Socialist Parties Gamble on Detente"]

[Text] The leaders of South Europe's four socialist parties, Francois Mitterrand, Bettino Craxi, Felipe Gonzalez and Mario Soares, launched a joint appeal to "the people of the left" in Paris yesterday to strengthen their parties in each of their countries. In addition, at the end of their meeting they published a joint communique which evaluated their convergence of view, patricularly perceptible in the international policy sphere with their joint adherence to detente.

After the European-level debates--with the Luxembourg European Socialist Congress--now the regional meetings are being held. Tuesday evening and yesterday morning, the French, Italian, Spanish and Portuguese socialists presented their analyses. The outcome of this meeting was a joint communique in which they "launch an appeal to the people of the left and to all progressive forces of their country: to change things, to rejoin, and to help the socialists."

For the remainder of this document the four leaders at the Paris meeting (Francois Mitterrand, Bettino Craxi, Felipe Gonzalez and Mario Soares) listed their points of convergence. Clearly they all agreed on the assertion that: "Without strong socialist parties, the continuation of the right and conservative forces in power is assured."

But the most interesting convergences between the four parties appear in the international field. They all seem to share the same analysis which can be put into two sentences: "With the other Europe, the East, dialog is indispensable.... We must prepare for the Madrid conference on cooperation and security."

Condemning the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan in the name of the people's right to self-determination, they conclude with the assertion that "in this period of international tensions (they are) gambling on detente and peace."

Likewise, having asserted their solidarity with the Third World, they announce their intention to "consult each other regularly on policy," and "to act together for just solutions to the serious, gaping crises."

It will be noted that the issue of enlarging the European Economic Community to include Spain and Portugal seems to pose no problem to the four parties since the Spanish and Portuguese seem to concede the prerequisites for enlargement laid down by the French Socialist Party.

As for the, strictly speaking, strategic problems, the four parties see these as the object of a minimum of agreement. They agree "to condemn violence, the strategy of terrorism and all kinds of destablization, and impairment of democracy wherever they appear," and they reaffirm their adherence to "democratic methods of struggle." Nothing more than that.

On the nevertheless crucial problem of relations with communist parties, there is a single reference to "the vast left...weakened by the long division in the workers movement." For four parties all faced by powerful communist parties and which cannot but discuss their strategies on this problem, this is very little. And Francois Mitterrand's explanation that "these are tactical and strategic problems stemming strictly from each party's position according to its national circumstances" shows clearly that, on this point, the various positions remain at odds.

TANZANIA'S NYERERE ARRIVES: ITINERARY REPORTED

[Summary] In the early afternoon of 10 March, Tanzanian President Nyerere arrived in Austria, at Schwechat Airport, for an official visit, accompanied by four Cabinet members and numerous high-ranking officials. The guests were welcomed at the airport by Chancellor Bruno Kreisky and Foreign Minister Willibald Pahr. In the afternoon the first talks were held between Chancellor Kreisky and President Nyerere. In the evening, the chancellor gave a dinner for President Nyerere at the Chancellery.

Today, on the second day of his visit, Nyerere will inspect an enterprise, visit parliament, call on President Kirchschlaeger and attend a luncheon given in his honor by the Austrian president. In the afternoon he will deliver a lecture at the Society for Foreign Policy, and in the evening he will attend a dinner given for him by the chairman of the Austrian Nationalrat. On the last day of his visit he will inspect the "UN City" buildings and from there proceed directly to Schwechat Airport for his departure.

STARIBACHER REVIEWS NORTH AFRICAN TOUR, GDR VISIT

AU111617 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 11 Mar 80 p 7 AU

[Report on Austrian Trade Minister Staribacher's Vienna press conference on 10 March]

[Summary] From 29 February to 7 March, Austria Trade Minister Staribacher visited Egypt, Tunisia and Libya with an Austrian delegation. As the minister explained at a Vienna press conference on 10 March, the bilateral economic talks conducted in these countries led to an intensification of economic relations, and a number of important orders may result for the Austrian economy. Such projects under discussion include, among others, the supply of steel plants, the construction of a water conduit and a railroad project for Libya.

The Libyan Government displayed strong interest in exports from various sectors, and expressed the wish for more imports of consumer goods, and especially for increasing imports of Austrian cattle and lumber. According to Staribacher, Austrian cattle and lumber exports to Libya will double this year as opposed to 1979. Contrary to the past few years, Libya has approved the importation of 3,000 tons of Austrian beef. In negotiations with Libyan Oil Minister al-Zakar [title and name as published] Staribacher obtained the promise of an increase in the Libyan oil quota for Austria from 15,000 to 20,000 barrels annually.

While Libya has no difficulties in paying for its imports due to its oil revenues, Egypt's and Tunisia's import wishes could only be financed from development aid funds, Staribacher said. According to the minister, Egypt is interested in cooperation in the fields of telecommunications, the development of its building material industry, and in joint projects in the foodstuff and packaging sectors and in the infrastructure field. Despite a decline of Austrian exports to Egypt of 2.5 percent last year, which led to a 24 million schilling deficit in Austrian trade with Egypt, Cairo's wishes will be given careful consideration, Staribacher said.

In the talks with Tunisia it emerged that in 1980 this country will seek to reduce its trade deficit vis-a-vis Austria through increased deliveries of cellulose, phosphates, wine and specialties as well as textiles. The Tunisian side has asked Austria for practical and financial support regarding the revitalization of farms, the establishment of laboratories for the control of agricultural products, and regarding improvement of vegetable seeds.

Commenting on his visit to the Leipzig Fair, Staribacher said that he discussed very frankly with prominent GDR representatives, who visited the Austrian pavilion, various projects of the building industry and iron and steel industry sectors. These projects, that are worth between 7 and 8 billion schillings, have now entered the stage of concrete negotiations, Staribacher said in conclusion.

JOINT FINANCING COMPANY WITH KUWAIT PLANNED

[Summary] After his visit to Kuwait, Finance Minister and Vice Chancellor Hannes Androsch arrived in Jordan on 10 March for talks with Jordanian representatives on expanding economic cooperation between Austria and Jordan. During his stay in Kuwait, a skeleton agreement was concluded on establishing a joint Austrian-Kuwaiti finance holding company in Vienna. "The details, including the company's capital endowment, are to be fixed at another round of talks to be held in Vienna in April."

Petrodollars from Kuwait could also benefit Austria's export industry through this company. The idea of setting up a joint Kuwaiti-Austrian financing company was first raised last year during Kuwaiti bankers' visits to Austria, but it was Finance Minister Androsch's visit to Kuwait that has now led to the realization of the project. "In addition to financing Arab-Austrian trade, the planned finance institute also will assess and finance industrial projects in the Third World. The Kuwaiti side is taking a s rong interest in the project and has been urging its implementation."

USSR URANIUM FUEL RODS SOLD TO U.S. WITH SOVIET CONSENT

AU101131 Vienna VOLKSSTIMME in German 8 Mar 80 p 4 AU

[Unattributed report: "Austria Sells USSR Fuel Rods to United States--With USSR's Consent"]

[Text] Vienna--The enriched uranium fuel rods that had been purchased some time ago from the Soviet Union for the second planned nuclear powerplant in Austria [St. Pantaleon] have now been sold to the United States with the USSR's consent. Originally the Soviet side had asked $14 million indemnity for Austria's cancellation of the uranium delivery contract, but later on the USSR reduced this penalty to $5 million and, moreover, authorized Austria to sell the enriched uranium to third countries. The now-closed sale to the United States brings Austria such a high profit that the $5 million constitutes only an insignificant reduction of that profit.

With the United States, on the other hand, Austria has had bad experiences. First of all, the United States is not ready to take back the uranium fuel rods supplied for Zwentendorf and, secondly, it insists on its penalty demand in the amount of 200 million schillings as compensation for the expected profits from further deliveries to the Zwentendorf powerplant.

USSR's MOLOTOV INVITED FOR STATE TREATY ANNIVERSARY

AU101322 [Editorial Report AU] Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German on 9 March 1980 carries on page 3 a 600-word Hermann Wlczek commentary entitled "Sic Transit Gloria" on the occasion of former USSR Foreign Minister Vyacheslav Mikhailovich Molotov's 90th birthday. The author reviews Molotov's political career, noting particularly his role in the State Treaty negotiations and his last stay in Vienna in 1960-62 as delegate to the International Atomic Energy Agency. In this context, Wlczek writes that Molotov should come back to Vienna once more: "As one of the last surviving signatories he has been invited to attend the celebration of the 25th anniversary of the Austrian State Treaty in May."

DUTCH MILITARY MISSION, AID TO SURINAME TO CONTINUE

LD111411 Rotterdam NRC HANDELSBLAD in Dutch 5 Mar 80 p 2 LD

[Political correspondent's report: "Second Chamber Intends To Maintain Suriname Aid"]

[Text] The Hague, 5 March--Development aid to Suriname will be maintained in full for the time being. A large majority of the second chamber yesterday voted to continue the normal supply of development aid despite the presence of an illegal regime in Suriname.

With this decision the chamber backed the government's stance. Foreign Minister Van der Klaauw had already informed the chamber on Monday that development cooperation would be continued despite the present situation. In the debate he added that "there can now be no doubt" about the continuation of aid.

In the chamber the Labor Party [Pvda] group emphatically set a limit to development ties. Spokesman Pronk stated that, in view of "systematic violation" of human rights in Suriname, a decision to suspend aid in the short term must be discussed.

An overwhelming majority of the chamber condemned the military coup. Pronk predicted that the first coup "will undoubtedly be repeated." "When there is one coup in a young democracy, it is always followed by a second," the Pvda spokesman predicted.

Criticism

At the beginning of the debate Van der Klaauw was criticized for not having condemned the coup emphatically enough. The government stance which the minister described as "reserved" was described as "indifferent" toward Suriname by Christian Democratic Appeal Spokesman Van Zeil and seen as "extenuation" of the coup by Pvda Spokesman Pronk.

Van der Klaauw then rejected this suggestion. "It must be due to my presentation," he apologized. The minister stressed that the government condemns this coup like all other coups. "There is no doubt about that."

The minister welcomed a motion put forward by the People's Party for Freedom and Democracy which deplored the "disturbance of democratic relations" and expressed the hope that democracy will quickly be restored in Suriname, the constitution respected and elections quickly held.

Van der Klaauw rejected as unnecessary a Pvda motion calling for a determination of whether or not human rights are being violated in Suriname and to adjust the policy to the results of the investigation. He said that verification of human rights was an indissoluble part of the policy.

Military Mission

The chamber questioned the minister at length about the presence and role of the Netherlands military mission in Suriname. Van der Klaauw admitted that there had been contact between the military authorities and a member of the mission shortly after the coup, but stressed that this incidental contact should not be regarded as support for the authorities.

Political Party of Radicals Spokesman Waltmans submitted a motion calling for the military mission to be immediately and definitively recalled from Suriname. Van Zeil asked the minister to suspend the mission's work. Van der Klaauw announced that he had stopped all the mission's activities for the time being. He advised against Waltmans motion since it would violate the treaty with Suriname.

SCHMIDT RECEIVES REPLY TO LETTER SENT TO BREZHNEV

[Excerpt] Bonn--During the past few days, Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt received a reply from Soviet state and party leader Leonid Brezhnev to his personal message of 6 February on the international situation following the Soviet incursion into Afghanistan. This was confirmed by government circles in Bonn tonight. Details about Brezhnev's message have so far not been divulged. The chancellor will deal also with this topic at his press conference in Bonn tomorrow.

Schmidt's letter to General Secretary Brezhnev was handed on 6 February in Moscow to Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko by FRG Ambassador Hans-George Wieck. In the letter the chancellor had expressed his concern about the increased tension between East and West because of the Afghanistan crisis, and emphasized the necessity that, especially in times of tension, those responsible in East and West must be ready for talks.

It was learned further that, in the letter, Schmidt made his readiness clear in general terms for a meeting with Brezhnev in the Soviet Union which was originally planned for 1980. During recent weeks the Federal Government has been waiting for a "sign" from Moscow and has repeatedly stated that it is up to the Soviet leadership to submit a date for Schmidt's visit to the Soviet Union.

GENSCHER COMMENTS ON AFGHANISTAN-OLYMPICS ISSUE

LD112028 Hamburg DPA in German 1926 GMT 11 Mar 80 LD

[Text] Stuttgart--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher is now less sure that the FRG will participate in the Moscow summer Olympics.

He says in an interview in tomorrow's SCHWABISCHE ZEITUNG that he considers it "not very likely" that the Soviets will withdraw their troops from Afghanistan before the final acceptance date for the Olympics at the end of May in order to enable a Federal German team to attend the games.

However, should a troop withdrawal take place, "then naturally the preconditions will exist for participation." For this reason, all endeavors must be directed toward a Soviet withdrawal, but as far as the end of May deadline is concerned, Genscher says: "I am a realist and have no illusions."

Hans-Jurgen Wischnewski, deputy SPD chairman, and Norbert Blum, CDU Social Affairs Committee chairman, also dealt with this topic in interviews with the HEILBRONNER STIMME today. Wischnewski expressed the fear that a boycott of the games could harm the peoples in the Soviet Union, Poland and the GDR who want to emigrate to the Federal Republic.

The interviews were prereleased to DPA in edited form.

COMMENTATOR NOTES FRG VACILLATION ON OLYMPICS ISSUE

DW111353 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 11 Mar 80 p 1 DW

[Commentary signed Mr.: "Something Sinister From Semenev"]

[Text] For Western governments it is always difficult to uphold a decision against which there is growing resistance and the implementation of which can still be delayed for a while because of schedules involved. [paragraph continues]

What we mean is the boycott of the summer Olympic games in Moscow as a consequence of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. In early February Federal Defense Minister Apel called it "inconceivable that the German flag would march into the arena in Moscow when the American flag would not." The chancellor had not at all adopted this, yet he had confirmed it by saying that the Soviet Union still has time--until late May--to create the preconditions--through the withdrawal from Afghanistan--for the Moscow games to take place as planned. But since the chancellor's Washington visit, this has been sounding softer and weaker while only the reservations that a boycott of the games might have very harmful consequences are advanced more strongly and loudly: regarding inter-German travel, disarmament negotiations and whatever else is desirable.

The arguments against the boycott have formed a strange circle. In the beginning, the opponents said that it was useless because it would not get the Russians out of Afghanistan anyway. Subsequently they said that it was nonsensical because it would not impress the Soviet Union at all. And now they are saying that it is too dangerous because it makes the Soviet leadership see red. It is a fact that in Bonn, Soviet Ambassador Semenev is going around from door to door, dripping fear of terrible Soviet ire into willing ears in the event that the Federal Republic fails to contribute to the brilliance of the games in the capital of the communist world power.

The chancellor has not yet deviated from his declared view that, at the moment, the conditions are nonexistent for allowing the athletes of all countries to participate in the Moscow games. But it would be useful if he would repeat this from time to time until late May. Otherwise, a climate of opinion may emerge--and many forces are at work to create it--according to which the harm of the boycott would be so great in view of Soviet sensitivity that the Germans would be best advised to convince the Americans to desist from this boycott as well. If this happened, the Federal Government would be considered prone to blackmail by one great power and unreliable by the other. Nothing would be more expensive than a simultaneous loss of respect and confidence.

MINISTER APEL NOTES MAJOR GERMAN CONTRIBUTION TO NATO

DW100952 Saarbruecken Saarlaendischer Rundfunk Network in German 1020 GMT 7 Mar 80 DW

[Correspondent Keller interview with Federal Defense Minister Hans Apel in Bonn; date not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] Bonn and Washington have just praised increased defense efforts again, and division of labor in the alliance also in the military sphere. What does this mean in practice? The Germans are to relieve the Americans in the Federal Republic to the best of their ability, a relief which the Americans need for missions outside of Europe--for instance, in the Indian Ocean. May we conclude from this state of affairs that the Federal Republic must take over greater and new tasks for NATO's naval defense?

[Answer] No U.S. wishes of that nature have been voiced to date. But I cannot rule them out. They would then have to be debated in NATO. NATO is an alliance of 14 sovereign states. Therefore, it must be insured that wishes of this nature be debated in NATO. It just will not do that the United States and the Federal Republic settle problems of Western Europe and of the alliance all alone between them, as it were. This would be at odds with the self-interpretation of the alliance and may well arouse the impression among other NATO partners that they are not being called upon to do their part, if necessary.

[Question] We are prepared to increase our defense expenditures by a real 3 percent annually. All other NATO partners have undertaken the same. Are they really going through with it?

[Answer] This is a question that can be answered only when the year is over. We will be able to see by the end of the year whether the countries have reckoned with the proper price-increase rates. This is why it is not easy to answer this question in early March. But I do think that the NATO states are aware of the seriousness of the situation as we are, and that they will do what is necessary, what is imperative.

[Question] If I interpret you correctly, the principle of integrated defense in Central Europe must not be abandoned, if alone for reasons of political credibility.

[Answer] This is quite correct. After all, the deterrence by NATO in Europe, here in Central Europe where we are living, is not solely based on the fact that conventional defense is backed by the nuclear component of deterrence, but particularly on the fact that the NATO partners in general, and the United States in particular, are standing on our territory with their ground forces, and the Bundeswehr, or to be more specific the ground forces of the Bundeswehr, account for 50 percent of the defense tasks. Yet deterrence becomes secure by the fact that all share in it, and this principle cannot and must not be called into question.

[Question] Aid to Turkey, for which Bonn has taken over the managerial role, has been somewhat endangered by some ideas of aid reduction on the part of Washington. Does the entire Western containment strategy not threaten to fail in view of the compulsion to combat inflation?

[Answer] One thing we may say definitely, namely, that the problem of Turkey is an urgent economic and military problem, and one thing must not happen, namely, that this will turn into an action exclusively financed by the Federal Government coffers. All must help and make their contributions to this end. They must, in fact, share in this with deeds, not just with words.

ECONOMICS OFFICIAL SAYS COMMERCIAL LINKS WITH GDR TO CONTINUE

[Text] Bonn--In the Federal Government's view there is no reason to effect changes in inter-German commercial contacts. In an interview on Deutschlandfunk, Secretary of State Dieter von Wuerzen of the Economics Ministry said on Monday that the tension created by the Soviet Union does not affect relations between the two German states. The Federal Government is determined to continue on its present path and to strive for business deals with the GDR.

The secretary of state, who is to visit the Leipzig spring fair on Tuesday, recalled that talks are underway at present with the GDR on plant deals, including an iron foundry. In his view, trade turnover between the two German states this year will top DM10 billion. Similar expectations have already been aired by Erich Honecker, GDR state and party chief.

An edited version of the interview was made available by Deutschlandfunk.

GISCARD PROMISES TO START DRAFTING NEW MIDEAST INITIATIVE

LD121039 London ASH-SHARQ AL-AWSAT in Arabic 11 Mar 80 p 1 LD

[Muhammad ash-Shibani report: "Saudi Arabia Informs PLO of French Stand"]

[Excerpts] Riyadh--ASH-SHARQ AL-AWSAT learned yesterday that French President Giscard d'Estaing has officially promised Saudi leaders to begin, immediately on returning home, drafting an initiative to solve the Middle East crisis that would achieve a comprehensive and just peace and satisfy legitimate Arab demands.

It was also learned that the French president, who has returned to Paris, affirmed during his visit to the Saudi Arabian Kingdom that the West European countries support the broad lines of the initiative, some of whose points were declared during his Arab tour. These include recognizing the Palestinian people's legitimate rights and calling on the PLO to participate in any negotiations for peace in the Middle East.

On the other hand, Saudi Deputy Prime Minister and Crown Prince Fahd ibn 'Abd al-'Aziz welcomed the French stand and the European understanding of the Arab issues. He also explained the basis of a just peace on which all the Arabs agreed at the recent summit conferences.

Well-informed sources said that the next step to be taken will involve contacts with the PLO preparatory to inviting PLO Executive Committee Chairman Yasir 'Arafat to visit France.

A diplomatic source here said that the French president is seeking to win support for his move from the Gulf countries and Jordan in particular. He also believes that Saudi Arabia is the key to the problem. There is no doubt that Jordan's participation will determine the success or failure of these efforts, which are still at the stage of diplomatic contacts.

A French diplomat said that his country has not yet had any contacts with the PLO regarding d'Estaing's new initiative but, he added, Saudi Arabia could convey the French views to the Palestinian leaders.

KYODO REPORTS NEW FRENCH-SOVIET CREDIT AGREEMENT

OW121205 Tokyo KYODO in English 1157 GMT 12 Mar 80 OW

[Text] Tokyo March 12 KYODO--France has signed an agreement to provide credits to the Soviet Union with the annual interest rate set as high as 8.75 per cent, according to Foreign Ministry sources. The interest rate is 1 percentage point higher than the guideline interest rate of 7.75 per cent set by the Paris-based Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) for extension of medium-term credits to the Soviet Union by its 24 member nations, according to the sources.

The new French-Soviet credit agreement is thus extremely favorable for France, the sources said. The agreement, which replaced the old French-Soviet credit agreement at the end of February, will remain in force for the coming 18 months and allows the Soviet Union to induct an unlimited amount of loans from France, they said.

The ministry sources speculated that the Soviet Union has agreed to pay the high interest in borrowing money from France in an apparent bid to weaken Western unity in connection with the U.S. call for economic sanctions against Moscow. The sources pointed out in this context that France adamantly opposed the U.S.-proposed sanctions from the beginning.

CABINET DECIDES NO CONCESSIONS TO UK IN 'LAMB WAR'

LD112316 Paris Domestic Service in French 2100 GMT 11 Mar 80 LD

[Text] France will not make any concessions to Great Britain in the lamb war: This is the conclusion of the restricted Council of Ministers at the Elysee today devoted to the Common Agricultural Policy [CAP]. In Strasbourg the secretary of state for foreign affairs with responsibility for European problems, Pierre Bernard-Raymond, told our permanent correspondent Alain Menargue that France does not want a crisis but it does not fear one:

[Begin recording] [Bernard-Raymond] At the same time, we wish the mutton problem to be solved, and, consequently, that the revenue of the French sheep farmers be maintained. At the same time we should, in the name of the principle of solidarity, examine whether there is any possibility of helping Great Britain on the issue of the level of her budget contribution insofar as she is currently experiencing difficulties.

[Menargue] End the lamb war first and then deal with the budget?

[Answer] There cannot be any solution to Great Britain's budget contribution if, there is no solution at the same time to the mutton problem. The problems are connected and there cannot be a solution to one and not the other.

[Question] Do you think we are approaching a clash, a crisis?

[Answer] We do not wish for a crisis, neither do we fear one. On this occasion the solutions which are reached must respect the basic principles on which European construction is founded.

[Question] Are you hopeful?

[Answer] I want to hope that Europe will come out of these difficulties victorious. [end recording]

PCF'S JUQUIN CITES ARCHIVES DIRECTOR ON MARCHAIS DOCUMENT

LD112040 Paris Domestic Service in French 1800 GMT 11 Mar 80 LD

[Excerpts] The Marchais affair is becoming more confused and aggravated: The question is still the same--was Georges Marchais still in Germany in the spring of 1944 and did he go there voluntarily or was he compelled to go? This evening everyone in the PCF is backing Georges Marchais. Pierre Juquin, member of the PCF Political Bureau, presented what he thinks is a new element to Henri Pajeaud: It is a commentary in the German news agency DPA, a commentary which minimizes the significance of the document published by the L'EXPRESS:

[Begin Juquin recording] The documents of the war years which were saved in Augsburg supply no decisive proof against the statements made to date by PCF Secretary General Georges Marchais and do not establish that he was still in Germany in 1944. Such is the statement in which the director of the Municipal Archives on Monday disputed the validity of speculations which the latest issue of the French news magazine L'EXPRESS has occasioned. RUFFINI ON AFGHANISTAN, ASEAN MEETING, MIDDLE EAST

[Text] (ANSA)-Rome, March 12--Foreign Minister Attilio Ruffini has reiterated Italy's readiness to make peace moves for a settlement of the Afghan conflict on behalf of the European "Nine". Ruffini made the statement here yesterday while briefing the Senate Foreign Relations Comission on his recent swing through Bonn, Copenhagen, Dublin and The Hague as well as his meeting with the European Parliament's Foreign Affairs Commission in Brussels.

Italy's willingness to take steps for peace together with its eight European Economic Community (EEC) partners and any other countries striving for peace was expressed by Premier Francesco Cossiga at the end of last month. In that statement, Cossiga conceded that the "EEC"'s idea of backing a "neutral Afghanistan" had to be pursued with care although it also needed "tenacity" and "resolute determination" since there appeared to be no other alternative settlements to the crisis.

The Italian foreign minister assured the Senate commission yesterday that the government was keeping its diplomatic channels working steadily in order to keep tabs on all useful developments. He added that "EEC" diplomats were displaying the "Nine's" proposals for a "neutral Afghanistan" to nonalined governments and other capitals in the Third World, which together make up the biggest slice of the international community.

Ruffini also gave a rundown of the "EEC"'s meeting in Kuala Lumpur March 7 and 8 with the five member-satates of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN). The two organizations issued a joint statement last Friday calling for the neutralization of Afghanistan and Cambodia. According to Ruffini, the Kuala Lumpur meeting helped strengthen economic cooperation between the two regional groupings. But more important, the meeting was a stage for better political understanding. The dialogue, marked by mutual respect and equality, was cited by Ruffini as setting an example for the kind of dialogue that should take place in North-South relations, between industrialized powers and the Third World. He was particularly pleased by "ASEAN"'s endorsement of the "Nine"'s proposal for a neutral Afghanistan, a plan worked out by "EEC" foreign ministers at a meeting in Rome February 19.

The Italian diplomatic chief went on to reiterate the Rome government's stand that a Middle East peace settlement would require recognization of "internationally-sactioned principles" by all negotiating sides, including the Palestinian Liberation Organization (PLO). Ruffini added that the Palestinian people's right to a homeland and national identity was as important as Israel's right to be guaranteed peace and security within secure and recognized borders.

CRAXI TELLS DC TRUCE WITH COSSIGA'S GOVERNMENT OVER

[Excerpt] During today's meeting between Italian Socialist Party secretary Craxi and Christian Democratic Party [DC] Secretary Piccoli, Craxi confirmed that the Socialists considered the phase of truce with Cossiga's government to be at an end.

It is therefore necessary, according to Craxi, to rapidly consider the possible solutions of the crisis.

Piccoli announced that the Directorate of his party, to be convened Friday, 14 March, would launch an initiative for a comparison of views with all parties of the constitutional range [i.e., all except the Italian Social Movement]. A meeting between Piccoli and Spadolini [secretary of the Republican Party]--is due to be held tomorrow.

DC'S FANFANI OPPOSES PCI PARTICIPATION IN GOVERNMENT

AU112005 Rome ANSA in English 1930 GMT 11 Mar 80 AU

[Text] Rome, March 11 (ANSA)--Senate Speaker and Christian Democratic [DC] leader Amintore Fanfani, in an interview published today by LA REPUBBLICA, said that for him any Communist direct participation in the government of a border state like Italy would only be one more factor of turmoil, worsening the international situation.

For this reason, peace-loving forces should not today favor the entrance of the Italian Communist Party [PCI] into the government, he told the Rome daily. Any such Communist entry into the government would certainly not ease the way into any clear detente between the United States and the Soviet Union, he added.

The interviewer, REPUBBLICA's Editor-In-Chief Eugenio Scalfari, asked Fanfani if the Communists ought to be content with the role the Christian Democrats have assigned them: "on the opposition to promote peace". Fanfani said he believed that in their hearts the Communists were aware of the validity of the DC position, and voiced the hope that the PCI opposition would be constructive.

In the interview, Fanfani outlined what for him were the differences which emerged during the recent DC Congress between the group led by outgoing Secretary Benigno Zaccagnini and former Premier Giulio Andreotti (a line that received support from only a minority of the delegates) and the group gathered around the preamble of Carlo Donat-Cattin which was inspired by Fanfani himself.

According to Fanfani the difference was only one of method. In substance, both groups were against PCI entrance in the government, he claimed. "The 'Zac-And' group wanted to blame the PCI for the rupture. We instead believed that this responsibility should be shouldered by the DC", he said. He claimed that the "Zac-And" group demurred "whil we spoke out clearly and for this reason the delegates backed us," he said.

As to the immediate future, Fanfani said that in his view the Socialists should return to the government (which up to now they have backed with their crucial abstention support in the Parliament). The present government is a minority team of Christian Democrats, Social Democrats and Liberals led by Francesco Cossiga, a Christian Democrat.

What if the Socialists asked for the ouster of the PSDI [Italian Social Democratic Party] and the PLI [Italian Liberal Party], the interviewer asked, to which Fanfani replied that it made no sense to, a priori, decide to exclude democratic parties that have worked well for the country. Fanfani said he did not think the Socialists were about to pose the problem in this way.

As to a possible Socialist request for a non-DC premier, Fanfani said it was not a question to be resolved on the basis of a rotation system. In any case, he added, it must not be forgotten that the electorate gave a relative majority of votes to the DC and that created a factor in favor of a DC premier, he concluded.

'FEAR' SEEN AS BASIS OF DC ANTICOMMUNIST POSITION

[Unattributed commentary: "Christian Democratic Party (DC): A Split and a Grave Decision"]

[Text] The election of the DC secretary and chairman has clearly confirmed the split which emerged at the DC Congress. This is no disagreement concerning the distribution of posts (a frequent occurrence within the DC) but a political clash regarding a fundamental issue in national life--relations with the Communists, and the question of participation by the workers movement as a whole in the country's leadership. It is on this point that all attempts at mediation failed, leading to a split the like of which has not been seen in the DC for decades.

The rigid manner in which the DC rightwing imposed the law of numbers, thus driving 40 percent of the party into opposition--and its most vigorous section, moreover--constitutes an option of whose gravity the country must be aware.

The anticommunist stockade, the rejection of positive relations with the majority of the workers movement: Is this the answer which a heterogeneous alinement, discredited and lacking any reasonable government proposal, believes it can give to the country's expectations and needs? A country, this, which is asking itself really grave and troubling questions concerning its very future (tormented as it is by the crisis, the scandals and the obscure webs of terrorism); which is not prepared to see its great energies exhausted and which is demanding a sure leadership, a change and a regeneration. It seems almost incredible. The DC National Council's intended message to the Italian people is the negative one of disruption and arrogance. There really is cause to wonder about these people's degree of awareness of the national situation.

Why this decision? Obviously as all the problems became more acute, fear began to dominate within the conservative depths of the DC--the fear of a challenge to its own power system, the fear of the necessary innovative options. So there was recourse once again to the drug of monopolism, to the approach which sees coalitions as a system of satellites revolving around DC "centrality." This approach is fully reflected in the idea (confirmed yet again by the new secretary yesterday) of an alliance of the intermediary forces with the DC for a "united" camp in answer to the Communist issue. But this is no longer 1948. The idea of an anticommunist "Western" option no longer has any credibility. So behind all this, all one can see is the cynical plan to manipulate the country's great difficulties and its need for a government so as to achieve a moderate recovery and perhaps an electoral blackmail using all irrational and rightwing thrusts.

They are very well aware that along this path the problem of ungovernability is destined not only to remain unresolved but to be dangerously exacerbated. What political operations do they have in mind? What kind of government? In fact the option taken by the majority of the DC reveals such a mixture of irresponsibility and provocation that it justifies the suspicion that the aim in fact lies elsewhere--early elections, with a view to a head-on collision and a restoration of the old ways.

It is by no means certain that they will succeed. It must be quite obvious that we will not supply any alibis or execuses, any help to free the DC majority of the responsibility which it has taken entirely on itself for obstructing the dialog on the country's government, without preconceptions, which was the only possible method given the political conditions and the balance of forces which emerged from 3 June.

Obviously, we will not join the list which the DC has brandished and--let this be quite clear--not only because it would be allotting us an incredible and humiliating subordinate role, but because we consider the DC untrustworthy, for the purposes of the policy which the country needs, as reflected in the aims and leaders of its 58 percent majority. In his inauguration speech, Piccoli decided that he should urge us to "place ourselves consistently on the democratic bank." Let us not change the issue: What happened at the congress and subsequently what is happening at the moment in Italy, which moves every honest citizen to feel indignation and concern, tells everyone that the problem--the real problem--really facing us is that of a change of approach within the DC, its own democratic standing" on the bank of national and democratic responsibility.

Precisely because this is the case, the need that emerges is to promote, extend and strengthen the only alternative, which is the unity of all the democratic forces for the country's regeneration, by directly involving the masses and implementing this policy and this hope in real struggles and specific objectives, in a unitary dialog and effort for which vast forces are available or can be won over. The decision is up to the public, including the Catholic public, which rejects the lure of mistrust and regression and which believes in the possibility of a need for a political and moral change.

L'UNITA SCORES DC DEFENSE OF FINANCIAL 'KICKBACKS'

LD120853 Milan L'UNITA in Italian 10 Mar 80 p 1 LD

[Unattributed commentary: "Amazing Thesis From Christian Democratic Party (DC) Daily: Corrupt? Yes, But Out of Necessity"]

[Text] People are wondering: Did those Christian Democrats really pocket all that money? And the Christian Democrats, always attentive and sensitive to people's feelings, promptly reply with a fine IL POPOLO editorial: Of course we did, what do you think? We are responsible people, not adventurers. And if we had not concerned ourselves with lining our own pockets with Caltagirone's dirty money and by stealing legal and illegal savings from the financing institution of the Central Savings Bank, there would have been "a progressive closure of the channels of communication with the electorate," causing "the inexorable exhaustion of political pluralism."

Do you understand? This is how things stand. And now at last it is clear why they were so keen to submit the PCI to the famous examinations in "pluralism." The naive ones believed it was all to do with Lenin. Not at all, that was not the issue. Are you Communists thieves? No. There we are, we said so, and now we have the proof: You are sworn enemies of pluralism.

We are witnessing a truly dumbfounding exhibition of effrontery. There is little to joke about; this really is the line chosen by the DC to defend all its swindlers, its hidden financiers and financial beneficiaries, its corrupters and corrupted--without even an attempted coverup. In view of the wave of indignation prompted throughout the country by the reports of the scandals, the official DC paper writes precisely as follows: "The question...we believe, is primarily as follows: Was the amount of public financing sufficient to guarantee the parties' clear autonomy and safe survival?" Yes indeed, as far as the Christian Democrats are concerned, this is the real issue. And since that amount was insufficient, why be shocked if some people decided to steal to remedy the fault? It was a necessary decision, a kind of secret path to pluralism, so to speak.

Thus, quick as a flash, the roles are reversed. The DC is like the thief who robs only out of generosity and is therefore on the side of righteousness. On the other hand there is the PCI, the leader, IL POPOLO says, "of the baying moralizers." And above all, IL POPOLO asks, what reason is there to believe that the PCI's method of financing itself is any more moral than the system to which other parties have had to (had to, note; it was obligatory) resort?

In other words, who says that a subscription is any more respectable than a skillful extortion?

This subtle reasoning on the state of emergency ends with a final desperate and shameful attack on the PCI, which is accused of accepting bribes too. There is an absolutely raving argument about Bulgarian beef and Soviet methane gas. What difference is there, the Christian Democrats ask, between our [DC's] Western kickbacks and their [PCI's] Eastern-bloc ones? It is very simple: The former are real, documented and confessed, while the latter are not. The DC daily is only able to cite one example, that of a certain "scandal" in Emilia concerning the collapse of the OMSA firm. [DC Deputy Secretary] Donat-Cattin apparently has evidence that that collapse was a financial operation carried out by a Communist leader. But Donat-Cattin, an expert in preambles [reference to his eponymous opposition platform at recent DC Congress], does not read the papers: The trial of the OMSA bankruptcy case ended a few days ago with a very clear sentence. The PCI is not involved in any way, and the two jail sentences in fact went to two fly-by-night financiers of the same kind as Caltagirone, who pumped cash into Forze Nuove [DC faction].

CHEF KILLED BY TERRORISTS; MISTAKEN IDENTITY ALLEGED

[Text] Rome, March 11 (ANSA)--The chef of a well-known Rome restaurant was gunned down last night in what police think was a mistake in identity. Luigi Allegretti, 36, chef at the Augustea restaurant, was shot three times by two young killers around midnight as he was on his way home. The assailants drove up alongside Allegretti on a motorcycle and shot him in the head and chest.

Around an hour later ANSA received a phone call stating that a no-better-identified terrorist group called "the Organized Comrades" had committed the crime. "It was us who hit the fascists Rosci three times with a caliber 38 RPT 38", the caller said. Police ascertained that one Gianfranco Rosci, an extreme rightwinger, lives a short distance from Allegretti's home. Allegretti has never been involved in politics. Some days ago he notified police that a bomb had been placed in the front hall of his apartment building.

PADUA PUBLIC PROSECUTOR EXPLAINS ANTITERRORIST OPERATION

LD112342 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 2000 GMT 11 Mar 80 LD

[Text] Aldo Fais, Padua public prosecutor, has held a press conference to explain this morning's antiterrorist operation which ended in the arrest of 23 members of the Workers' Autonomy. They have been accused of constituting, organizing and participating in armed gangs, illegally carrying arms, robbery, and making and using explosive devices. According to unconfirmed reports, about 40 people have been detained. Fais stated that this represented a concrete reply by the magistrate to a series of attacks carried out in Padua and its province between 1975 and 1979 by groups under various names which all fit in with the matrix of the organized Workers' Autonomy.

LISBON DAILY: KGB PLANNED BORDER CROSSING BY SPANISH TERRORISTS

LD101544 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1400 GMT 10 Mar 80 LD

[Excerpts] The Lisbon conservative morning paper CORREIO DE MANHA says today that three leading members of the Spanish terrorist group GRAPO have taken refuge in Portugal's Alentejo District. They were assisted by three Soviet technicians.

According to the paper the Soviet technicians, (Mikhail Lomachiy), Igor (Ikoyeviy) and Vladimir (Chevenko) along with translator Mikhail (Troyanovskiy), arrived in Portugal after obtaining an appropriate visa in the Portuguese Embassy in Moscow in order to advise the peasants at collective units of production under communist control located in the agrarian reform region.

The paper says that Soviet KGB technicians spent some time preparing the escape in great detail. The prepartions culminated in the spectacular escape from Zamora Jail of Cerdan Calixto, Martin Luna and Hierro Chomon. The paper says the three GRAPO members are now on a collective farm near the town of Beja in Alentejo and are teaching Portuguese (?terrorists) to use arms. According to the CORREIO DA MANHA, the GRAPO members are shortly planning to extend their field of operations to Andalusia.

When our correspondent in Lisbon spoke to the Soviet Embassy in the Portuguese capital to ask for information about these reports, the embassy denied all the reports in CORREIO DA MANHA and said there will be no official denial.

DUTCH CP DELEGATION VISITS WITH PCP COUNTERPARTS

LD061541 Lisbon AVANTE: in Portuguese 28 Feb 80 p 2 LD

[Unattributed report: "Netherlands Communist Party (CPN) Chairman Visits Portugal"]

[Text] At the invitation of the Portuguese Communist Party [PCP] Central Committee, CPN Chairman Comrade Henk Hoekstra visited Portugal from 19 through 21 February; he was accompanied by CPN Central Committee member Comrade Jan de Boo.

The CPN delegation had conversations with a PCP delegation led by PCP Secretary General Comrade Alvaro Cunhal and composed of the following comrades: Political Commission and Secretariat member Sergio Vilarigues, Central Committee member and foreign section chief Albano Nunes and foreign section aide Antonio Angelo.

During the conversations there was an exchange of information on the political situation in both countries and both parties' activity, and also on topics of shared interest connected with the international situation.

The CPN delegation also had an opportunity for direct contact with Portuguese reality and the PCP's activity in the Lisbon and Setubal areas.

The CPN delegation invited a PCP delegation to visit the Netherlands, and this invitation was accepted.

This visit constituted another step toward strengthening the links of fraternal friendship which exist between the PCP and CPN.

SOVIET SHIP CARRYING CUBAN SOLDIERS STOPS IN CANARY ISLANDS

CARRILLO COMMENTS ON CATALONIAN PARLIAMENTARY ELECTION CAMPAIGN

LD111357 Madrid MUNDO OBRERO in Spanish 2 Mar 80 pp 1, 5 LD

[Unattributed report on PCE Secretary General Santiago Carrillo 1 March press conference in Madrid: "We Communists Will Govern in Catalonia"]

[Text] "In the Madrid government we have insufficient strength to assert our presence, but in the autonomous communities where we Communists can govern, we shall do so." This was said at a press conference in Barcelona yesterday by Santiago Carrillo, a few hours before leaving for Lerida on his first tour to support the Unified Socialist Party of Catalonia's [PSUC] Catalonian parliamentary election campaign.

Answering journalists' questions concerning the Catalan rightwing's campaign against the left, especially against the PSUC, Santiago Carrillo pointed out that "it is scandalous that employers who are so hard on the workers have spent so many millions on an election campaign. Part of this money, moreover, is paying for disguised pages of publicity in the press, which appear as the newspapers' own opinions and which are aimed directly against the PSUC."

The PCE secretary general stressed at the Barcelona press conference a topic which he raised at his rally in Cornella, namely, the present consolidation of a social power bloc opposed to democracy, due to the fact that "the government has been dominated by the Union of the Democratic Center [UCD] and the progressive forces were not there to dismantle the operation." In Carrillo's opinion, the only responsible way of dismantling this bloc has been the Moncloa pacts. "It must not be forgotten," he said, "that the first offensive against them was launched by Ferrer Salat." [chairman of the Federation of Spanish Employers Associations] With regard to the possibility of an attempt at regression, he said that "there is no immediate danger of a coup d'etat though this bloc is growing stronger--and it is much stronger than some people imagine--and could at some time serve as the basis for such a regression."

With regard to the central government's possible boycotting of a Catalonian government with a leftwing majority--just as is happening with democratic councils in which the UCD does not govern--Carrillo said that "it could not interfere, unless by means of scandalous illegalities. Though in view of the things to which this government has accustomed us...."

The PCE secretary general criticized the involvement of the Socialist Party of Andalusia's Rojas Marcos in the Catalonian parliamentary election campaign as "a grave error", and "an interference" in Catalan politics, which already has parties to defend the class interests of Catalan citizens in Catalonia--"especially the PSUC." "My friend Rojas Marcos," Carrillo said, "is committing an error which might perhaps deprive the left of some votes but which will quite definitely and certainly favor the right."

As to the return to cold war--which in Carrillo's opinion, has happened in Spain sooner than elsewhere--he said that "it makes the Eurocommunist policy more necessary than before." He defined as indispensable a policy of unity and cooperation among all the democratic forces wanting peace and world progress and said that "to retreat and resort to old slogans would mean converting the cold war into a hot war."

With regard to a possible debate in the Spanish parliament on a possible boycott of the Moscow games, Carrillo said that the PCE would oppose it. "It would be amusing to see those who defended and supported the world soccer championships in Videla's Argentina now call for a Moscow boycott. Apart from which this would be the worst possible way, if the aim of those who are advocating it is the USSR's withdrawal from Afghanistan."

Lastly, Carrillo issued a positive analysis of the first stage in the leftwing municipal councils' activity, which he described as "a milestone and a tackling of problems which were not unknown" and advocated a joint effort between Socialists and Communists to find real solutions. "There are still 3 years left to try and perform a task which will improve people's lives, proceeding from actual possibilities."

SANTIAGO CARRILLO VIEWS FUTURE OF EUROCOMMUNISM

DW111418 Hamburg ARD Television Network in German 2015 GMT 10 Mar 80 DW

[Excerpts from correspondent Hanke interview with Spanish Communist Party chief Santiago Carrillo, date, place not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] Has Eurocommunism, whose most important representative is Secretary General Santiago Carrillo, lost its attractiveness? Only 3 years ago Carrillo hoped, together with the French and Italian Eurocommunists, to be able to create in Madrid a strong communist bloc which would be independent of Moscow. Santiago Carrillo, are you the last Eurocommunist?

[Answer] The last of the Mohicans. I think that this assessment is wrong. I have said several times that Eurocommunism is a trend that has not yet fully developed and that it cannot and does not want to be monolithic. Eurocommunism is the opposite of monolithism.

The banner of Eurocommunism is indeed being held aloft at this moment mainly by two parties. But the Eurocommunist idea is gaining ground, not only among a few communist parties in Europe, but also in Asia and even in Latin America.

I have often met representatives of several Latin American parties who tell me that we ought to try not to involve European parties in our movement, but also parties of other continents. I believe that they are right because Eurocommunism is a trend which need not be limited to Europe. We will try to spread it.

I want to add that Eurocommunism cannot be a one-sided action by the communist parties. Rather, it includes the idea of cooperation with socialist, social democratic and other progressive forces. In the end Eurocommunism is the cooperation of all forces who are today for peace and a policy that will be independent of the United States and the Soviet Union, and who will fight for a transition of our countries to tomorrow's socialist democracy.

[Question] How strong the ties with Moscow still are for some is demonstrated by the Afghanistan resolution that was pushed through the Central Committee with quite some effort by Carrillo.

[Answer] We have condemned the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan and demanded the withdrawal of the Soviet troops. That corresponds with our basic rejection of interference and particularly of military intervention in the internal affairs of other countries. That is a basic position we also adopted with a view to Czechslovakia, a position we adopt also today.

But we also condemn other forms of interference that are not military, but that could be very effective. Take, for example, the American interference in the internal affairs of Italy with the veto against Communist participation in the government. Or take the pressure presently exerted by the United States and by NATO on Spain to bring about this country's NATO membership.

It is correct that there is a minority in our party that fails to understand this position. On the one hand, there are followers who identify the Soviet Union with the October Revolution and who react emotionally and sentimentally to it, without seeing the changes that have taken place since. On the other hand, however, there are also comrades who are embittered by the political and economic situations of Spain, and who feel disappointed by the developments in our country. But the vast majority of the party advocate the statement that has been decided on and published by the Central Committee.

GOVERNMENT REFUTES KLIRIDHIS' ALLEGATIONS ON AMERICAN P'AN

NC120745 Nicosia CYPRUS MAIL in English 12 Mar 80 p 1 NC

[Excerpts] The Cyprus Government and the opposition leader Mr Glavkos Kliridhis yesterday exchanged angry words about the handling of the Cyprus problem and, particularly, the approach to the American plan of November 1978 which linked the intercommunal talks with the eventual status of Varosha.

Mr Kliridhis claimed that the Greek Foreign Minister Mr Yeoryios Rallis had on five occasions telephoned the Cyprus Foreign Minister Mr Rolandhis urging acceptance of the American plan. But Mr Rolandhis described the allegation as inaccurate and said that Mr Rallis communicated with him only once by telephone regarding the plan. It was on November 10 a few hours after it was handed over and while he was still in New York. Mr Rallis recommended then that the plan should be studied and evaluated carefully before a reply was given.

Mr Rolandhis' statement about this was also confirmed by a statement from the Greek Embassy.

The government spokesman on the other hand said the claim that acceptance of the plan would have meant that the Greek Cypriot inhabitants would be back in their homes by now betrays "lack of respect for the drama of the Famagusta refugees".

The spokesman said the policy of the Turkish Cypriot leadership so far shows clearly that it never had a sincere intention, nor does it have today, to return Famagusta to its legitimate inhabitants and does not fail to link the return of Famagusta with demand for most serious political commitments that would prejudge in an entirely unacceptable manner the political future of the country and the fate, not only of the refugees, but of the entire Cypriot people.

The spokesman pointed out that Cyprus was a small and powerless country under the heel of a much stronger conqueror and accused Mr Kliridhis of "exploiting a problem whose solution becomes objectively difficult as a result of the might and intransigence of Turkey" instead of adding his voice and offering support to the people and the government who are trying to achieve an honourable solution.

"Cyprus is unfortunate because at critical times there are persons in the opposition practising demagogery and not honest politics", the spokesman said.

The statement brought a retort from Mr Kliridhis who insisted on his charge of "impotency" of the government, accused it of committing a "tragic historical error" by rejecting the American plan and repeated his call for the resignation of the government.

He reversed the spokesman's reference to Cyprus being "unfortunate" by saying that it was true Cyprus was unfortunate though not because of having persons in the opposition practising "demagogery" but because those in power are "indecisive, and politically anaemic".

The exchange ended with a brief statement from the government spokesman saying that Mr Kliridhis' attitude was not one of a "constructive opposition" but an attempt to undermine the government and its efforts and, in the last analysis, an undermining of the struggle of the people.

The spokesman refused to be drawn into a debate about the American plan saying that the government views--about its rejection as a basis for talks--were already known.

GOVERNMENT REFUTES CLAIMS ON SIZE OF TURKISH COMMUNITY

NC120855 Nicosia Domestic Service in English 0630 GMT 12 Mar 80 NC

[Text] The Cyprus Government has refuted claims by the Turkish Cypriot leadership that the size of the Turkish Cypriot community is now between 150,000 and 200,000. An announcement issued by the Public Information Office described the figure as imaginary. It added: It is obvious that the Turkish Cypriot leadership includes in the figure the postinvasion settlers from mainland Turkey, who are estimated at over 50,000.

HOUSE PRESIDENT DENIES STATEMENTS REPORTED BY HURRIYET

NC09630 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 9 Mar 80 p 1 NC

[Text] Yesterday House of Representatives President Alekos Mikhailidhis released the following statement in connection with a report carried by the Turkish mainland paper HURRIYET:

"The contents of the report carried by HURRIYET have absolutely no connection with the 20-minute meeting that I had with a correspondent of this paper. On the other hand, the allegations carried by this paper are unfounded."

AKEL SUBMITS MEMORANDUM ON NATIONAL AFFAIRS TO PRESIDENT

NC120911 Nicosia KHARAVYI in Greek 12 Mar 80 p 1 NC

[Text] AKEL has submitted to the president of the republic a long memorandum approved by its political bureau. The memorandum outlines party views on the Cyprus issue, the domestic front and other basic problems facing the people.

According to an AKEL statement, a party delegation--comprising Secretary General E. Papaioannou, Assistant Secretary General A. Fandis, Central Organizing Secretary Dinos Konstandinou and Central Secretariat member Y. Katsouridhis--had a meeting with President Kiprianou last Monday afternoon to discuss the contents of the memorandum.

The AKEL statement adds: "The president of the republic briefed the AKEL delegation on the efforts of the government and the Greek Cypriot side toward the resumption of the intercommunal dialog. There was also an exchange of views on how best to handle the whole issue.

"The AKEL delegation stressed the need for both the government and the Greek Cypriot side to contribute decisively toward the resumption of a constructive intercommunal dialog, a fact that would put the intransigent Turkish Cypriot leaders in a difficult position."

TFSC'S ATAKOL SCORES KIPRIANOU, UK ON BASES NEGOTIATIONS

TA101328 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1215 GMT 10 Mar 80 TA

[Text] The minister of foreign affairs and defense, Mr Atakol, has said that no one had the authority to express an opinion in the absence of the Turkish Cypriot community on matters which concerned it. He repeated that the Turkish Cypriot community was a co-founder of the Republic of Cyprus and a defender of its independence.

Mr Atakol was commenting on press reports that the leader of the Greek Cypriot administration, Mr Kiprianou, in his latest meeting with the British prime minister, Mrs Thatcher, had asked for 300 million Cyprus pounds for the British bases in Cyprus. He said that Mr Kiprianou, who was the leader of an illegal administration since 1963, had neither the authority nor the right to enter into such negotiations. Mr Atakol said that this was an unfortunate move on the part of the British Government and was a clear indication of the one-sided stand of the British Government.

ATAKOL SAYS GREEK CYPRIOTS UNDERMINING TALKS EFFORT

[Text] The minister of foreign affairs, defense and tourism, Kenan Atakol, has said that the misleading steps of the Greek Cypriots are undermining the efforts for the resumption of the intercommunal talks. He added that the views of the two sides were being listened to, within the framework of the good offices of the UN secretary general, in order to have the intercommunal talks resumed. He stressed that there was no question of accepting or rejecting anything at this stage.

Atakol was speaking to reporters this morning. Asked to comment on press reports that the Greek Cypriots had replied positively to Waldheim's call for the resumption of the intercommunal talks, Atakol pointed out that the Greek Cypriots were exploiting Waldheim's exchange of views for the resumption of the talks. Atakol stressed that, as always, the Greek Cypriots were getting ready to blame the Turkish Cypriots. He added that there was nothing to accept or reject, but that an exchange of views was being held.

TFSC READY TO NEGOTIATE ON CYPRIOT CURRENCY

TA120611 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 0415 GMT 12 Mar 80 TA

[Text] Prime Minister Mustafa Cagatay said that the Turkish Cypriot authorities are ready to negotiate with the Greek Cypriot administration on the use of Cypriot currency as the monetary unit of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus. Cagatay was replying to questions of a local newspaper. He said that the condition for such negotiations was that the Greek Cypriot administration should recognize the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus as an administration and sit at the negotiating table at that level. The prime minister pointed out that once these conditions were fulfilled the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus would discuss the monetary unit immediately.

Pointing out the danger of the superpowers on the island of Cyprus, Cagatay called on the Greek Cypriot side to sit sincerely at the negotiating table.

CAGATAY RAPS GREEK CYPRIOT PRESS RESTRICTION LAW

TA101327 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1215 GMT 10 Mar 80 TA

[Text] The prime minister, Mr Cagatay, has stressed that approval by the Greek Cypriot House of Representatives of a law restricting press freedom in south Cyprus would adversely affect the efforts for a peaceful and lasting solution of the Cyprus problem.

In a press statement today, the prime minister described the Greek Cypriot action as outdated, antidemocratic and a deliberate error. He said that the law included rigid censorship regulations applied only in countries where there was an antidemocratic order. Recalling that the Cyprus problem was still unsolved, and that there was a chronic distrust between the two Cypriot communities, Mr Cagatay said that the press and freedom of thought occupied a special place in reaching a positive stage in efforts for a Cyprus settlement. Under these circumstances, there was no doubt that attempts would be made to keep the press separated from efforts for a peaceful settlement. Therefore, he added, we regard the restrictions on the freedom of the press and thought as a great loss for peace and democracy.

The prime minister finally drew the attention of the civilized world to this antidemocratic move in the Greek zone of Cyprus.

SPOKESMAN DENIES U.S. PRESSURE ON TERRITORIAL LIMIT ISSUE

AT111435 Athens APOYEVMATINI in Greek 11 Mar 80 p 14 AT

[Text] In connection with a report that during the meeting between Deputy Foreign Minister Zaimis and the U.S. ambassador the extension of Greece's territorial waters to 12 miles was discussed and that the United States opposed this, a competent government source stated that nothing of the kind was discussed. Characteristically, the government source said that "the object of the meeting between Zaimis and McCloskey was to discuss bilateral issues within the deputy minister's authority."

REPORTS ON SHIP REPAIR TALKS WITH SOVIETS CLARIFIED

AT091700 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 9 Mar 80 p 2 AT

[Text] In reply to a question in connection with reports that an agreement had been signed for the repair of eight Soviet vessels at Neorion Siros, a government source stated:

"The report does not correspond to truth. At this moment, the truth is that negotiations are going on for the repair of a Soviet commercial vessel."

KARAMANLIS UNABLE TO ATTEND EUROPEAN AWARD CEREMONY

AT111229 Athens Domestic Television Service in Greek 1700 GMT 10 Mar 80 AT

[Text] A government spokesman has stated that Prime Minister Karamanlis announced to the mayor of Metz, France that he will not attend the ceremony during which he is to be awarded the Robert Schumann gold medal. This is because, on the one hand, between 16 and 19 March the president of the republic will be absent from Greece, and on the other, because the prime minister's schedule is expected to be particularly heavy during this period. The prime minister expressed his thanks to the awards committee. After consultations on the subject, it was decided that National Defense Minister Averof will represent the prime minister. The Robert Schumann prize has been awarded every year since 1966 to persons who have contributed to the promotion of European unity.

PAPANDREOU RETURNS TO ATHENS FROM IRAQ VISIT

[Text] Shortly before noon, PASOK Chairman A. Papandreou returned to Athens from Iraq where he had paid a 3-day official visit. During his stay in Baghdad the PASOK chairman had talks on bilateral and international issues with Iraqi President Husayn, deputy prime Minister and member of the Revolution Command Council of the ruling Ba'th Party 'Aziz, and the party's secretary general, Aflaq.

PRESS REPORTS NATO SEEKING POLITICAL SOLUTION TO REINTEGRATION

TO VIMA

AT071447 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 7 Mar 80 p 1 AT

[Text] The Atlantic alliance is now apparently seeking a political "solution" to Greece's reintegration into NATO's military wing. It is characteristic that U.S. services are already recommending a direct meeting between General Rogers and Prime Minister Karamanlis. It is also expected that there will soon be a meeting between the Greek and Turkish foreign ministers in Brussels.

With such preparations, which it is not yet known whether the Greek side will be prepared to accept, NATO basically admits failure of the negotiations at the technical-military level and that only a political "solution" to the issue is now considered probable.

Appropriate U.S. services in Athens have already recommended to their superiors in Washington that the U.S. should secure a direct meeting between General Rogers and the Greek prime minister in order to "finally clarify the margins for Greece's reintegration" into NATO's military wing.

U.S. services recommend "utilization in this direction" of the forthcoming Karamanlis visit to Europe (the prime minister will be in France from 15 to 17 March) and they also express optimism over resolving the "surface" problems--as they insist in describing them--which still exist on the question of Greece's reintegration into NATO's military wing.

These views, apparently, have already been passed on by the State Department to NATO headquarters in Brussels as well as to NATO Secretary General Luns. It is not yet known in Brussels whether the U.S. administration in Washington has already sounded out the Greek prime minister or authoritative members of the Greek Government.

It was, however, stressed at NATO headquarters that the present status of Greek-Turkish relations, after the opening of Aegean air corridors, is "the best that could be expected." It was further stressed, in reference to this, that the Turkish "conciliatory spirit" is primarily due to the military and not to the political leadership of the country in view of the fact that the Turkish General Staff wants to extort the greatest possible amount of military aid from the United States and West Germany.

In the meantime, PASOK officially made a request yesterday for a clear-cut briefing by the Chamber of Deputies on the contents of the Davos-Haig agreement with the interpellation presented by Deputies L. Verivakis and Mrs Amalia Fleming, directed at the ministers of foreign affairs and national defense.

The interpellation, which first stresses the recent feverish activity accompanied by actions, statements, contacts, proposals and "developments" by Greek and foreign officials who handle the foreign and military affairs of the country, accuses the government of making efforts to cover up the issue and to divert the attention of public opinion from what is taking place.

TA NEA

[Excerpt] After the refusal of the Greek prime minister to meet with General Rogers, Greek-NATO contact at the political level is being planned. It should not be ruled out that a meeting may be proposed between the alliance's secretary general, Luns, and Foreign Minister G. Rallis at the end of the month or early in April, given the fact that both Washington and the Western alliance are in a hurry to "finalize" the issue as soon as possible.

On the other hand, the Greek side appears to be in no hurry to resolve the issue if its demand to return to the NATO military wing under the status that existed prior to July 1974 is not accepted.

Other reports mention that, in the event Greece's differences with NATO are not resolved by the middle of April, the government will unilaterally proceed to undertake initiatives to settle its relations with the alliance and the United States.

Our diplomatic contributor John Carr reports: "The good soldier knows the meaning of a military retreat." Diplomatic observers in Athens unofficially express this opinion in connection with the position of Bernard Rogers, about whom they say that "now it would be diplomatically improper" for him to persist in seeking a direct meeting with Prime Minister Karamanlis.

Greek Government sources stress the official rejection of such a meeting, observing that NATO's supreme commander would not gain much were he to try to meet Karamanlis.

After the failure--for the time being--of its effort to convince Greece to return to the NATO military wing, Washington currently wishes to avoid giving the impression that it is exerting pressure on Athens.

Official circles believe that any such pressure, especially by a military official such as Rogers, would give rise for comments by the opposition.

As these lines are being published there has not yet been any official reaction by Turkish Embassy in Athens on prospects for a meeting between Karamanlis and Rogers.

ELEVTHEROTIPIA REPORTS GOVERNMENT ULTIMATUM TO NATO

AT111500 Athens ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 11 Mar 80 pp 1, 15 AT

[By ELEVTHEROTIPIA contributor Spiros Karatzaferis]

[Text] The Greek Government has warned NATO: Either our conditions are accepted before 30 April or we withdraw finally from the NATO military wing and settle the issue of the U.S. bases in Greece as we see fit (essentially the bases will be Hellenized and only the presence of U.S. experts in them will be allowed).

Both NATO and America have been advised that this Greek position will be retained by K. Karamanlis' successor (should he move to the presidency or abandon politics), according to a report by an authoritative government source.

According to government reports, the warning refers to Greece's reply to the recent Rogers plan, which also stresses: It should be precluded that Greece will make the slightest concession. NATO must exert pressure on Turkey to give up its absurd demands; we shall accept the continuation of the current status, but if Turkey creates problems we shall adopt France's position.

More specifically, the ELEVTHEROTIPIA reports in connection with relations with NATO, which are based on government and military sources, are as follows: At this moment the Greek Government does not know whether or not there will be a development in relations with NATO, but it has categorically assured NATO that it should be precluded that we shall proceed toward any solution in which all our conditions will not be accepted. Even mere discussion on the basis of the Rogers plan should be ruled out. We do not object to continuing our relationship with NATO as at present, provided the Turks do not create any problems. If the alliance cannot guarantee the current situation then, after the end of April, we shall definitively adopt France's position. Should we be led to a solution of the French type then automatically the issue will arise of settling U.S. bases in Greece. The resolution will be effected through their essential Hellenization. NATO has been verbally briefed that in the event we adopt a solution of the French type we shall not accept the "early warning"; [last two words in English using Greek characters] that is, France's radar network which is linked with the NATO network while ours is not. Under the current status we are "outside NATO" with regard to information.

Following the recent rejection of the Rogers plan, on personal orders from K. Karamanlis the Greek Government has toughened its stance toward NATO.

We have surpassed even the original Davos-Haig plan, which we had accepted and which the Turks had vetoed.

Essentially, the Davos plan meant return to the 1974 status with some changes. Now we demand that we return to the alliance according to the model of the Danish and Norwegian link with the alliance (only a few forces under NATO command).

When a Greek personality was asked what the Greek side hopes finally will happen, he replied: It should not be precluded that in the meantime Turkey will make concessions. This will be so because its economy is in a shambles. It is bankrupt. Therefore, it may be asked to give up its absurd demands so it can be helped economically. However, we do not rely on Turkey's improbable concessions. We are determined to remain outside the NATO military wing and our programs are being prepared on the basis of this decision.

AVEROF, PAPANDREOU TRADE CHARGES ON ELECTIONS

AT101442 Athens TA NEA in Greek 10 Mar 80 p 1 AT

[Text] PASOK Chairman A. Papandreou has described National Defense Minister E. Averof as "a bad copy of past dangermongers" and stressed in reply to the defense minister's interview that in the next parliamentary elections the people "will demobilize" E. Averof.

In his interview with a friendly morning newspaper, Averof has claimed that "PASOK is not a party dedicated to parliamentary democracy" and that A. Papandreou creates the danger of a dictatorship.

This is the third or fourth time in past months that with articles and interviews (preferably in the same newspaper and on Sundays) Averof has tried to project himself as the only capable man inside New Democracy who can "theoretically" confront PASOK and A. Papandreou and thereby raise his stock in the "fight for succession" where "being against PASOK" is in the front line. (Characteristically, two of the most dominant "deputy dauphins"--Boutos and Stefanopoulos--systemtically assail PAKOK in the Chamber.

The text of PASOK Chairman A. Papandreou's reply is as follows: "Averof is again disrespectful of the Greek people. After the bitter experience of the 7-year dictatorship and the Cyprus treason, the people know very well who tried to create an atmosphere of anomaly to keep the people from their course toward the great change.

"Averof is a bad copy of past dangermongers. In the next elections the Greek people will 'demobilize' Averof."

Late at night Averof issued the following rebuttal: "To the clear conclusions I drew from specific political acts and official PASOK texts, A. Papandreou hastens, from beyond the seas [Papandreou returned from a visit to Iraq on 10 March] to reply with vaguenesses and personal attacks. I understand his nervousness. In accordance with the expression dear to him, 'he talks about anything but subtance'.

"As regards the question of who will be 'demobilized' in the next elections, this will not be decided either by Marx and Engels or by Aris Veloukhiotis [a communist leader during the postwar civil war in Greece] or by A. Papandreou. It will be decided by the proud and orderly Greek people who know us better every day."

OUR RADIO WARNS OF 'PENTAGON PLAN' FOR COUNTRY

TA110931 (Clandestine) Our Radio in Turkish to Turkey 0700 GMT 11 Mar 80 TA

[Unattributed commentary]

[Text] The main aim of a Pentagon plan to be submitted to the NATO meeting to be held in Brussels in March, is the establishment of special aggressive units in the Persian Gulf and the Indian Ocean--which the United States considers its vital interest region--for use against any country. Iran and Afghanistan are among the countries which the Pentagon plan envisages for aggression.

Washington has established a big military force in the Near and Middle East--which it considers a volatile region--ready to attack the moment it believes that its interests are being threatened. The United States does not want to be the only one to shoulder the responsibility of implementing these dangerous plans. It is continuously exerting pressure on the other NATO countries to share in this responsibility. It is thus that the plan for the establishment of European aggressive units has arisen. The reactionary Thatcher government in Britain has already told Washington that it would actively participate in this Pentagon plan. The Bonn government, on the other hand, has declared that it would shoulder part of the military tasks in a bid to safeguard the West's economic and oil interests in the Middle East.

As pointed out by Mrs (Weinstein), who was for years a senior official at NATO headquarters in Brussels before she defected to the GDR, these developments have proven once again that NATO is a strategic and political tool of aggression in the hands of the Washington administration. Intensive pressures are being exerted on Turkey, a NATO member, to participate in the European aggressive units. U.S. and NATO circles, which consider Turkey their only reliable agent in the Middle East, are making great efforts to drag our country along the path of their adventurous policies of increasing tensions and safeguarding the imperialist interests that they pursue in our region.

The new slavery agreement imposed on Turkey by the United States, and efforts exerted for the establishment of new nuclear bases on our soil are all an extension of this general plan. Plans to use the Turkish Armed Forces--equipped with outdated Western weapons--as a strike force against our neighboring countries for the sake of imperialist interests in our region are no less dangerous than other plans that might turn our country into a nuclear cemetery. The source of this danger lies in the policies of dependence on imperialism and membership in NATO. Our people are against the Pentagon plans to involve our country in the plans of establishing European aggressive units. Our people are asking our government to oppose such dangerous plans in the NATO meeting.

GOVERNMENT RECOGNIZES OFFICIAL PLO REPRESENTATIVE

NC122004 Paris AFP in English 2000 GMT 12 Mar 80 NC

[Text] Vienna, March 11, (AFP)--Austria has recognized an official representative in Vienna from the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO), Foreign Minister Willibald Pahr said in interview published today. Mr Pahr told the newspaper ARBEITER-ZEITUNG that the representation was effective immediately.

The Socialist Party newspaper said that Ghazi Husayn has been designated as the PLO emissary and has been acknowledged as such by Austrian authorities. Mr Husayn has previously represented the PLO with international organizations in Vienna.

Further Details

LD122100 Hamburg DPA in German 2000 GMT 12 Mar 80 LD

[Text] Vienna--The representative of the PLO with the international organizations in Vienna has now been accredited to the Austrian Government. According to ARBEITER-ZEITUNG, the paper of the ruling Austrian Socialist Party, Foreign Minister Willibald Pahr has informed all federal and regional authorites accordingly.

In its Thursday edition, the paper says that PLO chief Yasir 'Arafat has informed Chancellor Kreisky in a letter that "the representative of the PLO with the international organizations in Vienna, Ghazi Husayn, is the PLO's representative in Austria and with the Austrian Government." Foreign Minister Pahr had stated in reply to an inquiry: "We have taken note of this and informed all authorities of the central government and the laender that in questions concerning the Palestinian people or the PLO, dealings will in future lie with Herr Husayn, who official represents the PLO in Austria."

According to ARBEITER-ZEITUNG, Husayn appealed to the other European countries to follow Austria's example and recognize the UN decisions concerning the Palestinians.

TANZANIA'S NYERERE ON DEVELOPMENT AID, TROOPS IN UGANDA

AU121211 Vienna KURIER in German 12 Mar 80 p 3 AU

[Text] "I welcome Chancellor Kreisky's proposal to set up a Marshall Plan for the underdeveloped countries of the Third World, but I deplore the fact that this plan has met with very little support either internationally or in his own country." Such was the praise for his host which Julius Nyerere, president of Tanzania, expressed on Tuesday afternoon in a talk on present and future economic problems.

On the second day of his state visit to Austria, which was mostly filled with protocol visits, the Tanzanian president directed an urgent appeal to the industrialized countries to cooperate in bridging the gap to the underdeveloped countries of the Third World. He did this with good reason: Despite great efforts, the home country of Nyerere, one of the politicians of black Africa who gets the most attention, is still counted among the poorest countries of the world.

In an ensuing press conference, the Tanzanian president, who is the spokesman of the "Frontline States" against the apartheid policy of South Africa and the former Rhodesia of Ian Smith, also spoke out on the presence of Tanzanian troops in the neighboring state of Uganda, where 2000 Tanzanian soldiers are still stationed. [paragraph continues]

"We will withdraw half of our troops from Uganda in the near future," Nyerere told the assembled press. The remainder, however, will only be withdrawn when Uganda's "internal security" is safeguarded. The Tanzanian president called on South Africa to follow the example of the devolution of power to the black majority in Zimbabwe-Rhodesia.

MIRAGE INTERCEPTORS FROM FRANCE CHOSEN

AU121224 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 12 Mar 80 p 1 AU

[Text] Austria will most probably buy 24 interceptors of the "Mirage 50" type. This was announced by Defense Minister Roesch after the Council of Ministers meeting [on Tuesday, 11 March]. According to Roesch, this type of plane is entirely new. The defense minister vehemently denied reports that Austria would buy the "old" intercepters whose purchase had been denied Israel by France after the so-called Six-Day War.

Roesch affirmed that the agreement would be concluded before summer. The two dozen "Mirage" planes would then be delivered 24 months after the conclusion of the agreement, that is to say in the summer of 1982. The decision in favor of the French jet plane was taken in agreement with the Finance Ministry. Roesch did not want to give exact data on Tuesday on the cost of the intercepters; the purchase is expected to total about 3 billion Austrian schillings.

The supersonic combat planes will be financed by extensive trade transactions. Roesch in this context mentioned the shipment of Austrian aluminium from Ranshoefen as only a "small part of the overall package." The defense minister justified the decision in favor of the "Mirage 50" by stating the need to build up an "air police." Recently, Commander of the Army Spanocchi, in an interview with DIE PRESSE, had urgently called for the purchase of interceptors.

After extensive tests, the American Northrop F-5 Tiger, the Swedish Saab-Viggen and Israel's Mirage-version Kfir had been in competition. While the latter plane would not be bought for political reasons, the Viggen would be too expensive. Also, the American "Tiger is not an intercepter but is a ground-combat plane," Roesch emphasized on Tuesday. The shipment of the 24 interceptors will approximately coincide with the completion of the "golden bonnet" airspace monitoring exercise.

[Text] Vienna--The general meeting of the Tullnerfelo Nuclear Power Plant Corporation (GKT) yesterday [7 March] unanimously decided to continue the 'mothballing" of the Zwentendorf nuclear power plant until the end of 1984 "for the purpose of insuring its optimal utilization."

According to Director General Fremuth of the Austrian Federal Power Company, this decision also includes the stored uranium fuel rods.

SCHMIDT PRESS CONFERENCE EMPHASIZES WORLD SITUATION

LD121424 Hamburg DPA in German 1358 GMT 13 Mar 80 LD

[Excerpts] Bonn--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt is to continue his international meetings aimed at overcoming the present international political crisis on Sunday in Hamburg with a meeting with the French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing. This was stated by Schmidt today at the press conference in Bonn. Giscard's conclusions concerning his latest Near East trip and the Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher's impressions about his latest trip to Asia will be discussed.

Schmidt stressed that the result of his U.S. trip is that "agreement was reached on all key questions." "German-American relations are sound," he said. There are no remaining differences of opinion on crucial questions. U.S. President Jimmy Carter also emphasized that "there is no disunity" with Bonn.

According to Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, the cause of the deterioration in the international situation can only be removed by the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan. At the same time he stressed the importance of the nonalined countries' independence as a considerable factor of world peace and stability.

Referring to the hostage drama at the American Embassy in Tehran, he renewed his appeal for release of the hostages. He said: "The suffering of these people and their families must be stopped." Personally he felt deep sympathy for the hostages and the entire American nation as well as admiration for the American Government's "skillful and circumspect behavior."

The chancellor also expressed his opinion about the situation in the Near East and Africa. He said: "The search for a balance in the Near East makes the solution to the Near East problems ever more urgent." He also welcomed developments in southern Africa, paying tribute to the achievement of the Zimbabwe people and the British Government in carrying out free elections in that country.

Schmidt said: "The Federal Republic has great interest in peace in Africa." To Robert Mugabe, the newly elected prime minister of Zimbabwe, he offered cooperation as partners with the Federal Government. He thought there was also a chance for peaceful settlement in Namibia.

Schmidt confirmed he had received a reply, dated 4 March, from Soviet party leader Leonid Brezhnev to his letter handed over at the beginning of February in Moscow. The reply, directed personally to Schmidt, was a summary of the Soviet evaluation of the present world situation. It contained "no indication of any deterioration in German-Soviet relations" but neither did it contain any indication of improvement in the international situation.

"The tone of the letter is moderate. It is characterized by propaganda for the Soviet cause," said Schmidt. Brezhnev's "essentially firm" reply was largely directed against U.S. policy.

Regarding relations with the United States, the chancellor said in his introductory statement there were nuances in their views on the role of an independent policy by the Third World states. In addition, Bonn had a "somewhat greater understanding" for the Arab states.

In answer to questions, the chancellor stressed there were no doubts about the GDR and FRG's interest in "further cementing" mutual relations. He had no reason to believe the present world political situation had adversely affected relations between the two German states.

Once again Schmidt emphatically rejected German mediation between the superpowers. In reply to a question on this he said: "I am gradually finding the insistence on Germany's role as mediator to be a nuisance." Furthermore, the world powers are talking again, "thank God." He added that this was "definitely" not the last exchange of letters he would have with Brezhnev.

Asked about the Olympic boycott, Schmidt said he thought that "this was not really a key question." The key problem--the imbalances in the world and the occupation of Afghanistan--would probably not be changed by the West's attitude to the Olympics. Nevertheless, he felt understanding for the American position.

He said: "It is my hope and wish to bring about a unanimous position by all European states on the question of the Olympics." But there is no doubt that on the Olympic question Bonn will act in solidarity if the Soviet leadership "does not create the necessary conditions enabling athletes to take part in the games" by the time the deadline arrives for the decision on participation.

Asked about a possible "counter-Olympics", he underlined that the Federal Government's view on this was "very restrained". This was the business of the sports organizations.

Schmidt said that Bonn's most important advice was to make the maintenance of the military equilibrium between East and West--or where it had been upset, its restoration--the focal point of the West's long-term concept of crisis management. This aim could be achieved both by "counterarming" and negotiation.

In the chancellor's view, the "greatest danger" is the conceivable triggering of an arms race between East and West. He therefore welcomed the avowed readiness of the two world powers to continue the CSCE process and to work toward a successful Madrid followup conference. According to the chancellor, Brezhnev confirmed in his letter that the USSR was ready to negotiate on the European medium-range missiles if NATO suspended its decision of last December.

Of course, NATO could not do that, Schmidt stressed, and Brezhnev knows this. The Soviet position was "an attitude not corresponding to the parity concept in Europe." He believed that unless international developments took a turn for the worse, negotiations on Eurostrategic weapons would take place.

BREZHNEV LETTER DOES NOT CONFIRM INVITATION

LD121306 Hamburg DPA in German 1249 GMT 12 Mar 80 LD

[Text] Bonn--In his reply to Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, Soviet state and party leader Leonid Brezhnev suggested no date for the Bonn head of government's visit to Moscow which was originally scheduled to take place this year. It was learned from Bonn government circles today that Brezhnev did not specifically mention the existing invitation to the chancellor in his letter. However, he did make it clear that he, too, desired a continuation of the discussion contacts between himself and Schmidt and praised previous meetings between the two politicians as positive.

Brezhnev's letter, which was in reply to a personal message from Schmidt on 6 February, is about four pages long and is dated 4 March. According to government circles, the letter reached the chancellor shortly before his trip to Washington where he briefed U.S. President Jimmy Carter on the letter.

According to Bonn circles on the subject of the chancellor's plans, Schmidt's trip to Moscow can only be useful if the Soviet leadership makes it clear--beyond its behavior following the invasion of Afghanistan--that it wants to make a contribution toward re-establishing the military balance between East and West.

During the past few days the chancellor has repeatedly described the reestablishment of this balance as the prime aim in solving the Afghanistan crisis. According to the information of the government circles, a visit by Schmidt to the Soviet Union in the near future is not to be expected.

Speculations in the press today that Schmidt will visit the Soviet Union at Brezhnev's request before 24 May--the deadline for registering for the Olympic games in Moscow--and will meet SED [GDR Socialist Unity Party] chief Erich Honecker, were described as "totally unrealistic."

According to information in Bonn, Brezhnev's letter to Schmidt explained the situation and development in the Afghanistan crisis from the Soviet leadership's point of view and strongly reproaches the policy of the United States in the crisis. The tone of Brezhnev's letter was described on the whole as open and businesslike.

The letter apparently contains no criticism of the Federal Government in the strong terms as used by Soviet publications in the past few days. The main accusation in this criticism following the chancellor's trip to the United States is that Schmidt is increasingly bowing to pressure from Washington.

SCHMIDT SUMS UP CONTENTS OF BREZHNEV LETTER

DW122038 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 1800 GMT 12 Mar 80 DW

[Excerpts from Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's statement on Leonid Brezhnev's letter at press conference in Bonn on 12 Mar 1980--recorded]

[Text] The Soviet general secretary's letter contains a summary--addressed to me personally--dealing with the Soviet stance and Soviet assessments on a number of international problems which at present are bringing influence to bear on the situation in the world. It contains no reference to any deterioration of German-Soviet relations and it likewise contains no allusions with respect to an improvement of the international situation. I may be allowed to say that the note struck in the letter is a moderate one. It is coined by the wooing for the Soviet view on the international situation. It is tough in its content regarding the representation of the Soviet view, and in this it is above all directed against the policy of the United States.

GENSCHER, CARRINGTON DISCUSS AFGHANISTAN, MIDEAST

[Text] Bonn--Afghanistan and the Middle East were the main topics of a telephone conversation yesterday between Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington.

The Foreign Ministry here stated today that they discussed the further handling of the Afghanistan initiative--that is, the return of the country to a nonalined status--and some aspects of Middle East policies against the background of Genscher's recent meeting with Egyptian President as-Sadat. These topics will also be dealt with on Tuesday during the meeting of the nine EC foreign ministers in Brussels.

GENSCHER VIEWS MIDEAST POLICY, PALESTINIAN ISSUE

DW121325 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0618 GMT 12 Mar 80 DW

[Reporter Heribert Schwan Interview with Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, place not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] French State President Giscard d'Estaing has ended his tour of several Gulf states. Already at the beginning Giscard d'Estaing commented on the Palestinian problem. For the first time there was talk of the Palestinians' right to self-determination. For the first time it was mentioned in an official French communique. Does the Federal Republic of Germany fully back Giscard d'Estaing's formulation?

[Answer] Actually, the question ought to be asked the other way around because the Federal Republic of Germany has been backing the Palestinian people's right to self-determination for years. We believe that on the one hand the prerequisites for a lasting, just and far-reaching peace settlement in the Middle East must involve respect for the rights of Israel to live in secure and respected borders, and, on the other hand, the implementation of the Palestinian people's right to self-determination.

We have pointed that out to the United Nations since 1974 as well as on many other occasions. In the meantime it has turned out that more and more states share that correct and constructive approach.

While I was in Cairo, I noted--noted again--how much President as-Sadat, who is using the weight of his entire personality and his political influence to try to achieve a just peace agreement, considers the implementation of the Palestinian people's right to self-determination to be indispensable for a peace settlement.

[Question] You said that in Cairo and you agreed with Giscard d'Estaing. It has been registered in the European Community, everywhere in the world and also particularly in Israel. But when former Israeli Foreign Minister Dayan visited Bonn, you stated that the implementation of the Palestinians' right to self-determination requires the agreement of all involved, including the Israelis, and that this would necessarily mean the establishment of an independent Palestinian state. Hasn't a change taken place here?

[Answer] First of all, we have said that the Palestinian people have a right to self-determination. That is incontestable; nobody can take that from them. The matter is whether it can implement this. Within the framework of a peace settlement both things must be achieved: recognition of Israel's right to exist and the implementation of the Palestinian people's right to self-determination. Nobody can prescribe to the Palestinian people how they must implement their right to self-determination. It must be implemented within the framework of a peace settlement.

President Giscard d'Estaing did not make the question of an independent Palestinian state the only possible solution. I believe that it is not up to the countries outside of that area to make suggestions in this direction; that must be done by the people and the states who are directly involved in the conflict.

The most important thing is that the principle--recognition of Israel in secure borders, on the one hand, and the right to self-determination of the Palestinian people on the other--must be recognized more and more because these are the two fundamental prerequisites for a peace settlement which are supposed to be achieved through negotiations.

Everybody should certainly give some thought to the fact that the demand we have voiced officially since 1974 [passage indistinct] finds that broad support. Most of all it is supported by a man such as President as-Sadat, who everybody in the world knows is trying to find a just peace settlement. In other words, not a peace settlement against somebody or at the expense of Israel, but a peace settlement in such a way that it will be acceptable to all people in the Middle East.

[Question] Are you convinced that Europe, that the European Community, will support this French suggestion which you share?

[Answer] It is so that we can make a contribution in different ways. First of all, the present negotiations between Israel and Egypt have reached a decisive phase. The process of negotiations must be followed most carefully so as not to upset or curtail it.

Second, it is important that the European states on their own give a new impetus to a political upgrading or vitalization of the European-Arab dialog, an institution that has existed for years but one which has been a bit lethargic in past years.

When I was president of the European Community, I very strongly supported the dialog of European states with Arab states. It is now time to use this important instrument again for achieving stabilization in that region. It is necessary for the European states to prepare a statement on the Middle East problem because nobody can predict the success of the current autonomy talks between Egypt and Israel.

In any case, we want to avoid a circumstance in which a critical situation could arise because the aims set have not been achieved. The Europeans could take up some helpful positions in this respect. We are doing it and we are prepared to do it in agreement with the United States. I believe that those directly involved will also consider this to be helpful support.

[Question] It means in other words: If the Israelis and the Egyptians do not agree by 26 May on the term "Palestinian autonomy," according to the Camp David agreement--so far no significant progress has been achieved--a new European initiative could take place?

[Answer] I have never thought much of fixed dates or even ultimatums, but I think a lot of such countries as the states of the European Community, which form a neighboring region to the Middle East, exploiting their opportunities for making their contribution to a peaceful solution in the Middle East. That is important for peace in the Middle East. This peace is also our peace.

I ask you to consider that the solution of the Mideast problem is also of great significance for the inner cohesion of the Arab countries, for the reestablishment of the unity of the Arab camp. Again, that is of considerable importance for the great international discussion that is taking place at present regarding a solution to the Afghanistan problem. A solution to the Afghanistan problem is possible only in cooperation with the Arab countries.

This demonstrates how much the individual complexes of that difficult region hang together. But I believe that the most important thing is to make a contribution to peace. And I say it again:

The key elements here are, on the one hand, Israel's right to exist--Israel must be recognized within secure borders by all involved--and, on the other hand, the right of the Palestinian people to carry out their right to self-determination, a right they are as entitled to as any other people.

[Question] France did not deem it necessary to point out in the communique that has been mentioned that secure borders must be guaranteed to Israel by its neighbors. You have just repeated it once again. Israel is now deeply shocked and irritated. Protests to the Federal Republic of Germany have taken place, to Great Britain and France. How do the Germans handle that? How does German foreign policy handle it? There are special German-Israeli relations.

[Answer] First, I would like to say that the French statement on the matter probably has not been fully studied because the French statement refers to earlier statements that have been made in which Israel's right to exist has been mentioned, so that no difference of opinion exists with regard to the substance.

Our common stance is based unchanged on a common statement by the European Community, particularly on the known London statement of the European Council. Particularly in the Mideast problem it has turned out that a European stance has been worked out that reflects more and more agreement. This is the reason why Europe can most certainly make a constructive contribution to peace; I repeat: a contribution to peace in a neighboring region that has direct relations with us, but also a contribution to unity in the Arab camp. This will be a contribution to the fact that the Arab countries will be able to make their contribution to a solution of the Afghanistan crisis.

Nobody can ignore that at the Islamic conference in Islamabad not just one decision was made but several. One of them deals with the Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan, with the demand that the Soviet troops must be withdrawn. The other decision has raised demands with regard to the Middle East problem. This is considered an important problem there. Therefore, I believe, that it is important that the Europeans, in agreement with the United States and not against it, use their opportunities to bring about a constructive solution.

Palestinians' Rights Reemphasized

[Text] Bonn--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher underlined again today the Palestinian people's right to self-determination. In an interview for Deutschlandfunk, Genscher stated that this right to self-determination and recognition of Israel's right to exist are the two fundamental prerequisites for a lasting, just and comprehensive peace settlement in the Middle East. One cannot dictate to the Palestinian people how they should implement their right to self-determination. On the contrary, it should be worked out within a peace settlement. The French president, Valery Giscard d'Estaing did not suggest either that the question of an independent Palestinian state is the sole possible solution.

In Genscher's view, the states of the European Community should "accompany" the present process of negotiation between Israel and Egypt, which has entered a decisive phase, with great caution so as not to upset or jeopardize it. The EEC countries, however, should on their own initiative provide a new stimulus for a revaluation and revival of the European-Arab dialog, which during past years has "become somewhat dormant." "Now is the time to use this important instrument again to stabilize the region," stressed the federal foreign minister. The European states must also prepare a statement on the Middle East issue because no one can predict the success of the current talks on autonomy between Egypt and Israel.

With regard to the lack of an express mention of Israel's right to exist in the official French communique published during Giscard's trip to several Arab Gulf states, Genscher stated that the communique referred to earlier statements in which Israel's right to exist had been mentioned.

GENSCHER CONGRATULATES MUGABE, CALLS FOR COOPERATION

LD121227 Hamburg DPA in German 1137 GMT 12 Mar 80 LD

[Text] Bonn--Bonn has now begun a political dialog with the future government of Zimbabwe-Rhodesia. According to Foreign Office spokesman Juergen Sudhoff, Prime Minister Robert Mugabe received today the head of the German liaison office in Salisbury for an exchange of views. On behalf of Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, he assured Mugabe of the Federal Government's readiness to cooperate as partners with independent Zimbabwe and to help develop the new state. Mugabe stressed that he also desired close cooperation with the Federal Republic.

The head of the German liaison office conveyed a message of congratulations from Genscher to the future Zimbabwe government on its "very impressive election victory." It stated that with this great display of confidence, the people of Zimbabwe have given the necessary backing to the future government to overcome the difficult tasks it faces in the areas of national reconciliation and the development of the state. "May your government succeed," Genscher stated in the text, which was published today, "in securing a complete and lasting internal peace for your country after the long years of bitter struggle and thus making an important contribution to peaceful development in southern Africa."

In the opinion of SPD foreign policy expert Peter Corterier, the composition of the Zimbabwe government reflects Mugabe's desire not to defend solely on his party's absolute majority, but, after years of bloody war, to work earnestly for reconciliation with all groups in the country, including the white minority. Corterier expressed this view today to the SPD's press service.

MINISTER FRANKE ON RELEASE OF GDR PRISONERS FOR CASH

LD071506 Hamburg DPA in German 1338 GMT 7 Mar 80 LD

[Excerpt] Berlin--Federal minister for intra-German relations, Egon Franke, SPD, declared in Berlin today his opposition to public controversies about the pros and cons of securing the release of prisoners from the GDR for payment. Speaking at the end of a meeting of the Bundestag intra-German committee, he said in the Reichstag building that even giving publicity to the fate of individual prisoners in the GDR is not helpful. In a number of recent cases the GDR has refused to release prisoners for money because their names were mentioned by the media in the Federal Republic.

Franke emphatically rejected reports that East Berlin has stopped the release-for-cash operation. There is no break in this respect, the minister said. All arrangements are being handled by the GDR as agreed. In the past about 1,500 prisoners came to the Federal Republic every year, and he assumed that the same figure would be reached this year.

Franke stressed that the Federal Government included in its operation only prisoners who have been sentenced for political reasons. Allegations that there are criminal and antisocial elements among the freed prisoners slander all concerned. He also emphasized that at the moment he sees no negative consequences of the international tension for the relations between the German states.

DIE WELT CRITICIZES SCHMIDT'S TACTICS IN U.S. TALKS

DW121400 Bonn DIE WELT in German 12 Mar 80 p 6 DW

[W. Hertz-Eichenrode article: "Special Case Schmidt"]

[Text] On his flight back from the United States the chancellor's telegenic "quite close together" show with President Carter had already gone up in smoke. Schmidt himself essentially contributed to this end with his differentiating remarks concerning the Olympic boycott. Meanwhile, the Olympic boycott is only serving as a surface argument standing for something more profound and deep. Obviously the possibilities of conflict between Bonn and Washington have not been eliminated. Where is the conflict matter to be found?

Notwithstanding all the chancellor's contradictions in what in broad English he refers to as "crisis management," there is one constant indeed. Schmidt stands by a definition of detente policy as a balance of forces, especially a military balance. That means that as far as he is concerned, external security in divided Germany and Europe is the existential realm of all Bonn policy. This even applies when he wants to insure military balance, not only through a closure of the arms gap (missile decision by NATO) but also through contractual arms limitation.

From this emerge for Bonn policy some advance priorities which, however, are hardly discussed, strangely enough! The guarantee of our external security in the Atlantic alliance is essentially based on the strategic weapons of the United States. Intercontinental strategic weapons are a global category. Logically, crises in remote regions of the world have repercussions on the security of the Europeans as well. This was so in the Korean crises, the Quemoy crisis, the Cuban crisis, the Middle East crisis, and it is so now in the Afghanistan crisis. Security guaranteed by strategic weapons is of a bipolar character--at least still in this decade. It is based on the arms balance between the United States and the Soviet Union.

In the bipolar security system the armed forces and nuclear weapons of the United States stationed in West Germany have a stabilizing (deterring) effect for other parts of the world as well, just as, conversely, the military presence of the United States in other regions is of great significance for the credibility of deterrence in Europe. In this sense we may speak of a security community of the West.

Schmidt personally acknowledges these interconnections--unlike many others in his party. To this extent he is a reliable partner of the United States. To this extent he also attracts the uninhibited ire of the Soviets.

Yet there is another basic world political truism, and that is where the contradictions of the chancellor begin. Since the strategic weapons of the United States are balanced by those of the Soviet Union, and vice versa, they are strongly neutralized in political conflicts below the threshold of a threat of nuclear war. To the same degree powers smaller than the United States and the Soviet Union have gained regional room for movement, which is being used, too.

Examples of this are France's special role since De Gaulle, and also the initial phase of Willy Brandt's ostpolitik (until Washington gained control of Bonn's ostpolitik again with the lever of the Berlin agreement) as well as the political development of the nonalined states which cause the North-South dimension to prevail in addition to the East-West dimension.

It is just on the second level below the great tension between the two superpowers that Schmidt starts out when he wants to make a special case for Germany that plausible to the Americans which justifies the special interests of the Germans. At the time of Adenauer and Dulles the question of divided Germany was embedded in the containment policy. With the Eastern treaties Brandt "relaxed" ther German problem by recognizing the existence of two states in Germany and renouncing the all-German representation claim. The cost for this can be seen in Henry Kissinger's depressing verdict: "The Federal Republic has crossed its rubicon, it has recognized Germany's partition and has sealed the status quo in Central Europe" ("Memoirs", page 569). According to Kissinger, Bonn waived national claims and in its place bought an improvement in climate and facilitation of inter-German contacts.

Obviously the chancellor does not want to hazard now this dearly purchased improvement in climate and the facilitation of human contacts. Yet his argument only conditionally holds water, especially vis-a-vis the Americans. If the security of Berlin and Hamburg were seriously involved, our protective power, the United States, would also be provoked with the full risk of a nuclear strike against its own cities having a population of millions. What would happen to us if the U.S. President were then to recall the chancellor's argument and begin thinking about a special case for the United States?

Schmidt ignores the fact that the East-West tension between the United States and the Soviet Union has remained the fundamental fact for Europe. Bonn's treaty policy has changed just a little in this since what has been accomplished in the relative normalization of life side by side. He is ignoring the fact that in a world political East-West crisis the Federal Republic of Germany is the last that could afford to recognize this dominant fact only half-heartedly.

For the sake of his regard for friend Giscard d'Estaing, he ignores the fact that France can play less of a special role the more serious the crisis between the United States and the Soviet Union is. He ignores the fact that Bonn policy is carrying its dialectics to extremes if it proposes to persuade Moscow, as it did Washington, to tolerate tacitly a special case for Germany in Europe while, on the other hand, counteracting Soviet influence with the massive aid to Turkey and Pakistan and with the mobilization on the nonaligned states.

Schmidt is not only hesitating and temporizing, as Strauss accuses him of doing, he is playing an extremely hazardous game at high stakes. "Security for Germany?"

MILITARY EXPERT VIEWS 'SAD' STATE OF U.S. ARMED FORCES

DW121312 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 12 Mar 80 p 12 DW

[Commentary signed Ein.: "Sad Balance Sheet"]

[Text] The United States does not have enough soldiers. In the event of mobilization it would not have enough reservists to fill up the infantry units. Nearly half of the planned slots in the combat units would have to remain unfilled. A mere three-fourths of the artillery guns could be manned. There would not be any crews for one-fourth of the tanks. The balance sheet is a sad one. The world power has a gigantic potential in nuclear strategic armament, to be sure. Its air force is effective. But the navy alone would have to "defend three global oceans with a fleet which can protect only 1 1/2 global oceans" and the army is understaffed. This will remain the case for as long as there is no general conscription. The U.S. Government is aware of this. It also does not dodge the finding that the weakness of the traditional troops is bound to have a negative political effect. In the hostage affair in Tehran, for example, the United States is condemned to impotence last but not least because it cannot even credibly threaten military action. And yet, for the time being, conscription will not be reintroduced. The United States is going through an election year. Can this democracy learn to pursue a balanced military policy only in a catastrophe?

PRESS COMMENTS ON STRAUSS U.S. VISIT

DW121420 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany
0605 GMT 12 Mar 80 DW

[Press review on the U.S. visit by Franz Josef Strauss, Bavarian minister president, CSU chairman, and chancellor candidate of the CDU/CSU]

[Text] The Mainz ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG writes: Election campaigner Strauss will be meeting with election campaigner Carter tomorrow. Yet from the very first hour after his arrival the CDU/CSU chancellor candidate has had to struggle with the shadow of the chancellor of the social-liberal coalition who will be the best race horse in the stable of the SPD and the FDP.

Meanwhile, Strauss seems to be constantly exposed to the temptation to criticize Schmidt where the Bonn chancellor is not in congruent harmony with the White House, namely in the consequences of the Afghanistan crisis for Western detente policy. It is in a more differentiated way than the politician of the opposition that the head of government must view the special position of the Federal Republic with its direct border between NATO and the Warsaw Pact. Schmidt did recall that his hometown Hamburg is but 30 miles away from the troops of the East bloc.

BERLINER MORGENPOST notes: It is no secret that even after the chancellor's visit, which had been turned to harmony, differences of opinion continue to exist with respect to the course with which the West should react to the world situation changed by the invasion of Afghanistan by Moscow.

Granted, the chancellor candidate cannot and must not counteract the chancellor and pursue a sort of oppositional foreign policy. Yet he may set accents wherever he deems it necessary.

Essen's NEUE RUHR-ZEITUNG discusses the following point: At the very beginning of his appearance Strauss took action as an election campaigner by generally criticizing the chancellor and his party in every respect. Schmidt indeed knew better what fairness means when he at the time protected Strauss in Moscow toward Brezhnev.

Strauss is also making it hard for the American hosts, for they surely do not want to be dragged into the German election campaign. Any impression that Washington is intruding, that it even favors one party, would be fatal. The Strauss charge voiced in New York that the chancellor lacks the support of the SPD for the full solidarity with the United States, however, seems to be aimed at just that.

The Leutkirch SCHWAEBISCHE ZEITUNG states: What remains is that the chancellor candidate not only advocates an Olympic boycott, but beyond that even trade sanctions against Moscow and a further increase in the German defense contribution. In any event, he is manifesting much more readiness to share the burdens as a consequence of the Afghanistan crisis and to run risks in doing so. Thus in the United States Strauss is offering a clearer contrast program than he did during the latest Bundestag debate. In many American ears this blunt analysis may sound more convincing than the less clear utterance of the chancellor about the character and the consequences of Soviet policy.

'YOUNG DEMOCRATS' SUPPORT POLICY OF DETENTE

AU121326 East Berlin NEUES DEUTSCHLAND in German 11 Mar 80 p 2 AU

[ADN dispatch from Bonn on "German Young Democrats" National Congress in Gruenberg Hesse]

[Text] The continuation of the policy of peace and detente and the halting of the intensified arms race were demanded by the FRG "Young Democrats" (DJD) at their national congress in Gruenberg (FRG land Hesse) last weekend.

Against sharp resistance from FDP leading circles, the Young Democrats called for giving up the revanchist position of not recognizing GDR citizenship. "In the course of continuing a peace-securing policy of detente, the DJD demands the recognition of GDR citizenship," states a resolution that was adopted by a great majority. Moreover, it is stressed that this would be a logical step toward "further developing the policy of detente." The Young Democrats declare: "The nonrecognition of GDR citizenship constitutes a permanent interference in the GDR's sovereignty, and thus interference by a NATO state in the affairs of a Warsaw Pact state."

The FRG Government is asked not to permit the deployment of any new American nuclear medium-range missiles and to insist upon the withdrawal of the already existing 7,000 U.S. nuclear warheads. In the interest of continuing the policy of detente, the NATO decision on the deployment of modern American nuclear missiles in West Europe must be revoked.

The FRG Government must not allow itself to be incorporated in the exaggerated reactions of the United States. "Neither the establishment of task forces nor the boycott of the Olympic games in Moscow, let alone the hectic expansion of the arms budget, is a suitable means for securing peace."

The National Congress of the Young Democrats sharply condemned the employment ban practices in the FRG as well as their exacerbation in the postal service and in the railroad system.

BALANCE OF PAYMENTS EXPECTED TO DETERIORATE FURTHER

LD111452 Hamburg DPA in German 1205 GMT 11 Mar 80 LD

[Excerpt] Munich--The Institute for Economic Research [IFO] in Munich indicated today that the Federal Republic's balance of payments, which went into deficit last year for the first time since 1965, will increase significantly in 1980.

The IFO estimates that this year's balance of payments deficit could amount to DM20 to 25 billion. It also says that in view of this deterioration the question must now be posed of whether the deutschmark's tendency to appreciate in value has now come to an end.

The institute feels, however, that for the time being at least this need not be the case. The balance of payments of most other industrialized countries against whose currencies the deutschmark is gauged on the international money markets have also worsened.

GISCARD BRIEFS CABINET ON MIDEAST TOUR

NC121403 Paris AFP in English 1353 GMT 12 Mar 80 NC

[Text] Paris, March 12 (AFP)--President Valery Giscard d'Estaing today reiterated Israel's right to live peacefully in "safe, recognised and guaranteed borders", when briefing a regular cabinet meeting on his Middle East tour last week.

A communique released after the meeting quoted the president as saying: "Each state in the region, especially Israel, which is legitimately concerned, must be able to live within safe, recognised and guaranteed borders. This involves Israel withdrawing from Arab territory occupied since 1967".

The president said the two basic conditions of peace in the Middle East were the "right to security and the right to self-determination", adding that "all sides" should take part in negotiations on this basis, "notably the Palestinian people, which implies the Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO)".

Mr Giscard d'Estaing asked that France's partners in the European Community be informed of the results of his tour, saying he was sending a personal envoy to Italy, currently chairing the European Council of Ministers.

Saying his Gulf tour had contributed to strengthening Arab-European ties, the French president expressed his satisfaction with the talks, noting they showed the significance of the visit was "understood and appreciated".

PAPERS VIEWS GISCARD GULF TRIP, MIDEAST INITIATIVE

LE MONDE Editorial

LD121623 Paris LE MONDE in French 11 Mar 80 p 1 LD

[Editorial: "A Different Path"]

[Text] If, as Racine said, art consists in creating something from nothing, Mr Giscard d'Estaing executed a work of art, in a sphere which, it is true, is well-suited to it, during his visit to the Middle East. None of what he said in Kuwait about self-determination for the Palestinians and in Amman about PLO participation in peace negotiations was new either on the lips of a French leader or those of a West European leader. The president's only art consisted in giving his stances new brilliance by expressing them at the right time.

After an operation to seduce the Arabs at the beginning of the trip, his tactics were to bring them round to his own positions, in other words acceptance of Arab-Israeli coexistence. From the Amman communique it would appear that this is already an established fact from King Husayn.

The president of the republic has therefore driven both the Israelis (which is nothing new) and the Palestinians into a corner: No peace for Israel without a Palestinian homeland, he is saying to the former; no Palestinian homeland without peace with Israel, he is saying to the latter.

What will happen now? Probably nothing until 26 May--the deadline set by the Camp David agreement for organizing autonomy for the West Bank. Nor will anything happen if this deadline is extended in light of possible progress. [paragraph continues]

In his speech on Saturday, Mr Giscard d'Estaing paid indirect tribute to the Camp David agreement: Israel recognizes that peace depends on withdrawal from the Arab territories, he stressed, since it can only normalize its relations with Egypt by withdrawing from Sinai. The president of the republic can probably be criticized for hampering the Camp David process by predicting its failure. This is Cairo's view. However, he can also be regarded as stimulating the protagonists of this process by showing them that there is a different path.

The president of the republic and, with a fair degree of explicitness, King Husayn are working on the hypothesis, which they regard as probable, that this process will not solve the Palestinian problem. King Husayn has asked the French president to prompt a European "initiative," should that be the case. It is true that the Nine are now apparently sufficiently in agreement to take an initiative...on paper. However, everybody is aware that only the United States can persuade Israel to come to terms with the Palestinians. Hence Mr Giscard d'Estaing's reminder on Saturday that, while any solution depends on an Israeli-Arab agreement, it also depends on the Security Council where the United States, like the USSR, has the right of veto.

In that eventuality, it would be necessary to have the Security Council alter Resolution 242--the basis of all peace negotiations since 1967--to include the Palestinians' rights as a people and not just as refugees. It is on this point that a European intervention could be useful.

Such a move was attempted without success last August, but a new event has occurred since then: the rapprochement between the Islamic world and the United States started by events in Afghanistan. What seemed impossible before might be possible in the future, once the U.S. elections are over, of course.

After that, as Mr 'Arafat pointed out in his statements to LE MONDE, only the crucial implementation stage would remain.

FRANCE-SOIR Criticism

LD121135 Paris FRANCE-SOIR in French 11 Mar 80 pp 1, 6 LD

[Benoit Rayski editorial: "Giscard's Silence"]

[Text] Valery Giscard d'Estaing's Middle East trip has thus ended on an exceptional note: the Amman speech which, in the president's mind, undoubtedly contains the conditions he considers necessary to bring about Israeli-Arab peace at last, and (for those who do not subscribe to this dream) to open new possibilities for development for all the peoples of the region "when they accept coexistence within frontiers no longer bristling with danger...."

In French the word condition is politically and emotionally loaded, depending on whether one uses it to mean a near ultimatum or, on the other hand, as the expression of a simple statement. A close reading of Valery Giscard d'Estaing's speech hardly permits this second explanation. In fact, the conditions laid down for Middle East peace are all down to a single party, a single state: Israel.

Valery Giscard d'Estaing repeats that the Palestinian people must exercise their right to self-determination. In a sentence which emphasizes an unquestionable sharpening of the French attitude in the Palestinian affair, Valery Giscard d'Estaing announces that the Palestine Liberation Organization [PLO] should be brought into the peace negotiations. Israel, Valery Giscard d'Estaing states, must vacate the territories occupied in 1967.

Why?

This is clear and contrasts oddly with the president's ponderous silences concerning the conditions that the Arab states and organizations should fulfill in order to establish a genuine dialog. Valery Giscard d'Estaing does not say that this PLO, which he is installing right now at the negotiating table, must, before all else, renounce its exorbitant claim (expounded throughout its charter) to build a Palestine on the ruins of Israel: Why?

Valery Giscard d'Estaing does not say where or how the Palestinians' right to self-determination should be exercized without offending or denying the Israeli people's right to self-determination: Why?

Valery Giscard d'Estaing does not say--and this seems elementary--that the Arab world should forsake its household demons which cause it ceaselessly to deny Israel's existence, by use of arms if necessary, as four wars have already shown: Why?

Destructive Tendencies

Finally, Valery Giscard d'Estaing does not tell the Arab states which he has visited, and all the others listening to him, that one example could be followed on the path of peace--namely that of negotiation between Egypt, which has recognized Israel, and the Israeli State which, as it happened, in exchange vacated the Egyptian territories seized in 1967: Why?

It would seem to us hard for French policy to stop there, not just because it affords a too obvious bonus to the destructive tendencies stirring the Arab world. Nor simply because it is unjust and unilateral and places little value in the concessions granted by the Israelis and Egyptians to reach an agreement which is simply a first stage toward a broader peace, an agreement which, after all, the French stance does not favor. And not, finally, because it is too easily satisfied with the Arab states' applause which, contrary to certain current ideas, does not materialize in the form of oil favors--which we know well from the prices at the gasoline pumps. But above all because this policy strikes us as ultimately ineffective.

In fact, the best way to convince the Israelis that they must make further concessions is surely not by driving them to despair while flattering their most relentless adversaries: You can persuade men or states to be more flexible but, when their survival is at stake, you cannot force them to submit.

The president, who said in Amman that he acknowledged "Israel's justifiable concern" for its right to security, should doubtless reflect on this, having already proved in other circumstances that the mind and the heart can be well wedded. Otherwise, his dream of a Middle East where everyone would live and cooperate fraternally would be another of those mirages in which this region is so rich...

L'UNITE Commentary

LD12033 Paris L'UNITE in French 7-13 Mar 80 pp 1,2 LD

[Claude Estier commentary: "Giscard, the Palestinians and Oil"]

[Text] A diplomatic bombshell? At all events, the little phrase in the Franco-Kuwaiti statement on the Palestinian people's right to self-determination has caused a lot of ink to flow. Most commentators have seen it as a turning point in French Middle East policy. This is both true and false.

True, if one is referring to the great declarations of solidarity with Israel made by Valery Giscard d'Estaing and his closest friends during every election campaign. For example, we await with interest the reaction of a man like Roger Chinaud, president of the Union for French Democracy parliamentary group, who in 1978 spent his time on the stump in the 18th Arrondissement of Paris attacking the Palestinians and those whom he called their agents.

False, as a real turning point, if one considers that the French Government is still cautious toward Egypt-Israel settlement procedures begun 2 years ago at Camp David, and has constantly sought the means for a parallel initiative. Now, if the Camp David accords really permitted great bilateral progress between Cairo and Jerusalem, their weakness, as we immediately emphasized, was to ingore the problem of the Palestinian people's future, thereby preventing a global settlement in the region.

For 2 years the PLO leaders have been making ground in winning official recognition from the great Western nations. The French Government remained one of the most cautious in this sphere. Having been content to follow the tide, Giscard d'Estaing has suddenly decided to lead it.

In 1980 it is no shock to say or write that "the Palestinian problem is not one of refugees but of a people who must exercise their right to self-determination, within the framework of a just and lasting peace." The most elementary realism forces one to that conclusion, and one might wonder whether the present Israeli Government would not have served its country's interests better by developing an overt if not bold policy toward the Palestinians instead of increasingly provoking them by, for example, the establishment of Israeli colonies in the occupied territories--a policy severely condemned since then throughout the world, even in the United States.

Basically, Giscard d'Estaing is now admitting what the Socialist Party has been asserting for a long time, namely, that there will be no lasting Middle East peace without somehow taking into account the Palestinians' right to a homeland. But at the same time, the president is making two grave mistakes which are a fresh confirmation of the lack of seriousness with which he conducts French international policy.

The first is to talk of the Palestinians' right to self-determination without even mentioning the right of all the countries in the region, including Israel therefore, to live in peace and security. Just as France makes a move toward the PLO leaders which they cannot fail to appreciate, should France not grasp the opportunity to make them renounce that part of their charter which still aims at the destruction of the Israeli State?

Giscard d'Estaing's second error consists in the strongly commercial nature of his pro-Palestinian stance. It is clear that the statement signed in Kuwait--where Palestinians hold high office in the administration and the economy--is directly linked among other things to the favors granted to the two big French oil companies. On his return, the president will not fail to exploit the fact that the one will overcome the other. There is no law against having a higher conception of what France's role could be for a "just and lasting peace" in the Middle East.

COUNCIL OF MINISTERS ISSUES ULTIMATUM TO EC

LD121334 Paris Domestic Service in French 1300 GMT 12 Mar 80 LD

[Text] The French Government has issued an ultimatum to the European Council which meets at the end of the month: The disagreement between France and Great Britain is escalating.

During the Council of Ministers [meeting] the French leaders noted that the commission of the European Communities, which was supposed to formulate proposals on the problem of Britain's contribution to the European budget, has not done this. France considers that if these proposals are not put forward in the shortest possible time they will not be able to be studied, any more than any other proposal which may be formulated, during the debates at the end of the month.

ANGOLA ENVOY ON SOUTH AFRICA AID, CUBAN 'DETERRENT FORCE'

LD121311 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 7 Mar 80 p 9 LD

[Unattributed report: "South Africa Is Planning Aggression"]

[Text] The tension in southern Africa is very grave, again because of South Africa. Luis de Almeida, Angolan ambassador in Paris, stated during a press conference Thursday morning that several thousand South African soldiers were massing on the Angola-Namibia border. "We have been warned that an airborne operation is being planned against us," he explained.

"Angola will use all means to oppose any South African attack," Luis de Almeida said, before adding: "We have one of Africa's strongest armies, to which must be added the paramilitary organizations and the Cuban deterrent [dissuasion] force." The ambassador did not assess the latter's importance but said "there are not as many Cubans as has been claimed."

Giscard Compromises Possible Cooperation

The Angolan ambassador next called to mind his country's relations with France. He particularly emphasized the French Government's "equivocation." The latter is supplying arms to South Africa. "The weapons we have seized are French, as are the Mirage planes and the helicopters which take part in the attacks on Angola," the ambassador said.

In addition, the Giscard government is sheltering Angolans who are openly plotting against their country. "The presence of Holden Roberto (former head of the National Front for the Liberation of Angola), surrounded by 'secret agents' and living a few hundred meters from my residence, shames France," he remarked.

Relations between France and Angola had improved in recent months. The young republic has great plans for development. But it is clear that the establishment of cooperation agreements depends primarily on the French Government, which cannot hope both to aid the South African racists to attack Angola and to expect equipment orders from that country at the same time.

CHAMBER ADOPTS RESOLUTION ON EC AFGHANISTAN PROPOSAL

[Excerpt] European action in favor of detente and for the solution of the crisis in Central Asia continues despite grave difficulties. In Rome, the Chamber of Deputies approved a document reiterating that Afghanistan should urgently regain full independence and sovereignty in accordance with the proposal made by the European Community. The resolution was approved by 317 votes in favor, including the votes cast by the Communists and Socialists, and 96 votes against.

TERRORIST ATTACKS KILL RIGHTWING EXTREMISTS IN ROME, BARI

[Text] Rome, March 22 (ANSA)--A 27-year-old rightwing extremist Angelo Mancia was shot dead by two youths here this morning in an attack later claimed by an organization describing itself as comrades organized in red flying squads. Mancia was a messenger-boy at the neofascist daily, IL SECOLO D'ITALIA. He was killed shortly after leaving his home. Mancia was well-known to the police. His file contains an attack some time ago against the daughter of former house speaker, Pietro Ingrao, one of the most prestigious members of the Italian Communist Party.

The organization which claimed responsibility for this morning's slaying was also responsible for an explosion a few days ago at the plant where IL SECOLO D'ITALIA is printed. Another action by the same group was against the Neofascist Youth Front's headquarters. In this case, however, the charge of eight kilos of TNT stuffed into a pressure-cooker was found before it went off.

Meanwhile, in Bari, southeast Italy, an extreme left organization calling itself Proletarian Patrols claimed last night's slaying of 19-year-old extreme rightist Martino Traversa with a telephone call to ANSA's Bari bureau. Traversa was shot at a local, privately owned radio station. He died shortly after arriving in hospital. Nearby, a second rightist, 18-year-old Nicola De Caro, was shot and wounded slightly. According to the telephone call, the slaying of Traversa was in revenge for the death of Benedetto Petrone, a young Communist killed by rightists in Bari a couple of years ago.

OIL AGREEMENT WITH IVORY COAST--Rome March 11 (ANSA)--The Italian oil company, AGIP, a subsidiary of the state-run fuels group, ENI, has signed a new agreement for the prospection and production of hydrocarbons in the Ivory Coast, according to an AGIP communique here today. The operation will be carried out jointly with two American companies, the Philips Petroleum Co. and SEDCO, and the Ivory Coast's national oil company, PETROCI. The area involved is about 1,100 square kilometers of offshore waters with a maximum depth of less than 200 meters. The same consortium of companies has been seeking oil in the African state since 1975. The new agreement is a "production sharing" accord under which the oil companies assume all risks connected with prospection and share eventual production according to agreed percentages. AGIP has a distribution company in the Ivory Coast as well, AGIP (Cote d'Ivoire) S.A. [Text] [Rome ANSA in English 1940 GMT 11 Mar 80 AU]

EANES STRESSES FOREIGN POLICY, ARMY'S ROLE IN SOCIETY

[Text] Portugal's foreign policy, and particularly our relations with Africa, provided the keynote of a speech given this evening by the president of the republic at a dinner for Silvino da Luz, commander in chief of the armed forces of Cape Verde. Gen Ramalho Eanes hosted the dinner in his capacity of chief of the Armed Forces' General Staff. Luis Barreto reports:

Ramalho Eanes recalled Portugal's colonialist past, stating that not everything done in the past was positive and not everything that could be done in the present has been achieved. But it can be stated that essentials have been safeguarded and there is no reason why the future should not bring full attainment of [word indistinct] harmony and cooperation between the peoples of Portugal, Guinea-Bissau and Cape Verde.

Our country's stand regarding Africa and its Portuguese-speaking countries was defended by the president of the republic as follows: Portugal's stand after decolonialization--and, on sounder foundations, after the institutionalization of democracy in 1976--is not dependent on accidents of circumstance or accidents of history. Rather, it stems logically from a realistic assessment of the international context of which Portugal is part, and very accurately reflects Europe's natural standing in the world which can never be deflected from its open and fraternal relationship with Africa. For this reason Portugal's foreign policy must have as an ever-present trait the permanent search for forms of cooperation adequate to the specific circumstances of the African peoples to whom history has linked us. It is, therefore, not surprising that Portugal's foreign policy under successive governments has reflected this ever-present concern regardless of the different political or ideological commitments of those in charge. And there will never be any lasting deflection from this basic line of Portuguese foreign policy because such a deflection would be counter to the national interests.

Ramalho Eanes added that cooperation between the Portuguese and African peoples is much too important to be used as a bargaining factor in political negotiations of any kind. He said this cooperation must be established on crystal clear foundations which must never conceal the varied political regimes, international commitments and alliances that differentiate us from the concepts and models chosen by the African peoples for their own organization and political course.

While foreign policy and relations with other Portuguese-speaking countries were the keynote of his dinner speech, Ramalho Eanes' earlier address at the infantry training center in Mafra was rather different in character. Eanes was welcoming Silvino da Luz and took the opportunity to address the soldiers present.

The armed forces have an important role to play in Portuguese democracy, he said. In an obvious allusion to the latest developments, especially to reports of alleged plans for a military takeover, Eanes stated that the only course open to the armed forces in a democratic country is respect for the hierarchy, respect and concern for the unity of the nation and unceasing observance of a clearly and consciously accepted discipline.

Ramalho Eanes said that information in the military must flow both upwards and downwards in the hierarchical scale, and stressed that no soldier should be afraid to ask questions in order to keep himself well-informed and in a position to play his part in the unity of action that must characterize the armed forces.

CDS: PRESIDENT MUST HAVE 'DEMOCRATIC ALLIANCE' SUPPORT

LD121529 Lisbon DIARIO DE NOTICIAS in Portuguese 10 Mar 80 p 2 LD

[Unattributed report: "Social Democratic Center Party (CDS) Advocates Military President"]

[Text] "The CDS envisages the possibility that the new president of the republic may be a military figure of prominent national status capable of generating broad popular consensus in harmony with Portuguese society's most deeply-rooted cultural and social forces." This is stated in the communique issued at the end of Saturday's CDS National Council meeting.

The document lent special emphasis to the issue of the presidential candidate. "With a view to preparing adequately for an examiniation of the issue with the other forces belonging to the Democratic Alliance," it states: "The CDS has decided to promote a broad internal debate on the subject. Thus, the decisions to be taken by the party leadership will be able to reflect, without scope for misunderstandings, the feelings of the party grassroots and intermediate bodies. Nevertheless, there is already sufficient basis for the assertion that the candidate which the CDS will support must be someone having the Democratic Alliance's internal consensus, irrespective of any negotiations on the subject with political parties outside the alliance, and specifically the Socialist Party."

The communique adds that "there can be, and certainly will be, only one road to victory for the Democratic Alliance in the parliamentary and presidential election campaigns."

Another decision taken by the CDS was total support for the sixth government, since the present executive "has managed to preserve a high degree of national dignity and a lofty sense of effectiveness in its activity, demonstrating a determined political desire to build and modernize the democratic state and to extend social justice."

"The blueprint for change which the Democratic Alliance proposes demands firm solidarity among its component forces, and this has been particularly evident at government level. The CDS will continue to seek jointly with the Social Democratic Party and the Popular Monarchist Party the definition of a national plan drafted and developed on the basis of the freedom and creativity of the majority of the Portuguese people and identified with Portugal's most enduring values and most pressing interests," the document states.

"In this task of coordination," the communique continues, "the CDS will not lose sight of the fact that the Democratic Alliance's blueprint is the one which can form the most lasting alternative to and eliminate an economic, social and cultural structure and mentality of which the Portuguese Communist Party [PCP] is still the chief hegemonic driving force. Encouraged, moreover, by the Socialist Party's evident crisis of autonomy, self-assertion and identity. The PCP is undoubtedly pursuing in its political activity and action a strategy which is objectively part of a blueprint for confrontation with the democratic institutions, objectively in an alliance with certain politico-military figures."

CDS Will Continue To Work in Favor of Democratic Alliance

Therefore, the CDS will continue "to work in favor of the Democratic Alliance at all levels for the introduction of the necessary thorough reforms which will grant all Portuguese people, especially the underprivileged or deprived, the benefits of freedom and social justice. The CDS is convinced that the Democratic Alliance demonstrates and will continue to demonstrate the capacity for the political, economic, social and cultural democratization essential for realizing this twofold objective of freedom and social justice between 1980 and 1984."

After confirming its confidence in the Democratic Alliance's future--"the best alternative for the best democratic economic, social and political development in Portugal"--the CDS National Council, presided over by Francisco Oliveira Dias, appealed "to all members, supporters and voters to cooperate actively in the political reinvigoration and extension of the Democratic Alliance, since its adversaries are unsuccessfully doubling their attacks on it all all levels. It is easier to advance the Democratic Alliance then to make it halt or retreat. Advancing the Democratic Alliance means expansion, organization and careful analysis--never radicalization or extremism, despite the provocations of the parliamentary of extraparliamentary opposition."

This renders "desirable and possible a coordinated strategy among the political forces belonging to the Democratic Alliance, developing the steps already taken in the direction of a joint government, parliamentary and presidential objective. The CDS is confident in and will work for the Democratic Alliance's total internal cohesion and total national cohesion, without detriment to the individual identity and autonomy of its members parties. The unity and expansion of the Democratic Alliance is still the first priority among and the chief basis for the party's remaining political tasks.

CAPE VERDE PARTY DECLINES PSD INVITATION FOR TALKS

LD112306 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1930 GMT 11 Mar 80 LD

[Text] The African Independence Party of Guinea-Bissau and Cape Verde [PAIGC] has declined a Social Democratic Party [PSD] suggestion for bilateral talks between the two parties in Bissau or the Cape Verde capital, Praia.

But the PAIGC has just announced that it had invited an official delegation for the Portuguese Communist Party to pay an official visit to Bissau and Praia. A spokesman for the PAIGC, who confirmed this information, said that it was by sheer coincidence that the two announcements had been made more or less at the same time.

The PSD suggestion for interparty talks was conveyed to the Guinea-Bissau ambassador in Lisbon when two PSD leaders called on him to express their party's interest in a rapprochement with the PAIGC. Included in the suggestion was a visit to Bissau or Praia by a PSD delegation.

The PAIGC leadership's reaction to the PSD initiative was that while the PAIGC welcomed the PSD suggestion for bilateral talks, it could not agree to a PSD delegation being invited to go to Bissau or Praia for that purpose.

NORWAY

GENERAL SAYS ARMY MUST BE STRENGTHENED

LD121239 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 6 Mar 80 p 9 LD

[Knut Falchenberg report on interview with Army Inspector General Rolv Eios: "Allied Forces Must Not Become Surrogate for Armed Forces"]

[Text] It must not be believed that allied forces alone can resolve Norway's defense problems. Foreign reinforcements are important, but they must never become a surrogate so that we ourselves do not reinforce our own defenses, Maj Gen Rolv Eios, inspector general of the army, told AFTENPOSTEN. If future allocations for defense are less than envisaged, competition could arise between our own forces' needs and costly projects to enhance the capability for receiving reinforcements.

Despite the growing importance which the armed forces attach to NATO reinforcements for Norway, the Norwegian soldier will be the linchpin in ground defense. The reinforcements which Norway is prepared to receive in the initial stage of a conflict would be numerically far smaller than the forces which the army and the Home Guard themselves constitute. From what AFTENPOSTEN understands, our mobilization army together with the Home Guard of nearly 230,000 men will be nearly 10 times greater than the allied forces which might be expected to reach Norway in the first month of a conflict.

The annual budget for the armed forces will always appear small in relation to their duties. Therefore, one question is how much ought to be devoted directly to our defense might and how much to measures to enhance capability for receiving NATO reinforcements.

Reinforcements To Be Given Priority

The armed forces political and military leadership must be given high priority. One important measure is procuring Roland II missile defenses for air bases, so that these can be kept open for allied troop transport aircraft. But while air base defense greatly needs more effective missile defenses, the army is also experiencing an almost desperate need to reinforce its own air defense.

If both services cannot have their requirements met at the same time, a dilemma could arise: Should we concentrate on air defenses for Norwegian soldiers sent into combat, or should the air force's need to keep the air bases open for allied troop transports be given priority?

The inspector general replies that it is a theoretical question. If it were ever raised, however, he believes that it would be wrong to concentrate on air base defense at the expense of the army.

"I would think twice and even three times before I said that air base defenses must come before the army's air defenses. Personally, I would give top priority to the army's needs and rather group the army's air defense sections around the air bases when the need there is at its greatest," Eios said.

The army has already procured a small number of RB-70 missile systems which can shoot down aircraft up to 5 km away. This is considered short range. Effective air defense at longer ranges will thus depend on the effort from the new F-16 aircraft, as long as they have bases from which to operate.

"Allied Reinforcements No Surrogate"

Eios stressed that it must not be believed that the allies can "do the job" for our own Norwegian forces. "Planned allied reinforcements are important, not least when they have a deterrent effect on a potential aggressor.

"Such reinforcements must thus be seen as a necessary supplement to Norqay's national forces--a supplement which must not compete for defense allocations. We must never allow planned reinforcements to become a surrogate which prevents the best possible modernization of our own army."

Eios does not rule out that a decision to request allied help could take time. If such help from abroad is requested, the countries involved could also take time to reach their decisions.

"Therefore, we must always plan so that we can offer powerful resistance on our own to an aggressor."

Air force and naval officers have recently attacked sections of the Defense Commission's report. The navy opposes a reduction in the number of ships, and air force circles have opposed plans to abolish the Nike batteries.

The Defense Commission has compared these wishes, and the conclusion is clear: It is the army which yields the highest return on each krone spent on the armed forces, General Eios says.

"Now it is the ground defenses' turn. Only when the ground forces have been modernized will spending on other services have any meaning," Eios says.

At the moment it is modern missile air defenses which top the army's shopping list, followed by the desire for larger stocks of ammunition.

[Question] Will these wishes clash with the desire to reinforce the apparatus for receiving foreign reinforcements?

"If the politicians follow up the Defense Commission's intentions this will not happen. If, on the other hand, we were to have a situation in which the Commission's intentions were not observed, an undesirable rivalry for the distribution of funds could arise," Rolv Eios said.

GOVERNMENT OFFERS TO HOST DISARMAMENT CONFERENCE

LD121140 Stockholm International Service in English 1100 GMT 12 Mar 80 LD

[Text] The Swedish Government's foreign policy declaration given in parliament Wednesday morning by Foreign Minister Ola Ullsten stated that the Swedish Government is prepared to host a European disarmament conference and would discuss such a conference with representatives of other countries.

Ullsten branded the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan as a crime against the principles of the United Nations Charter and a blow to the rights of nonalined nations, but he characterized the founding of a free Zimbabwe as one of the few bright points in foreign relations. On the Middle East issue the foreign minister emphasized Israel's rights to security within recognized boundaries and the rights of the Palestinian people to a state of their own, and he characterized the settlements on the West Bank as a growing threat to the international reputation of the Israeli Government. Ullsten also said that one main line in Swedish foreign policy is the maintenance of stability in the Nordic area.

LORD CARRINGTON LEAVES FOR OFFICIAL VISIT TO ROMANIA

LD121630 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1454 GMT 12 Mar 80 LD

[Text] Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington left London today for a two-day official visit to Romania.

He flew from Heathrow Airport with Lady Carrington in a specially chartered British Airways BAC 111.

His visit is the first political exchange between the countries since Sir Harold Wilson went to Bucharest in 1975. The last foreign secretary to go was Michael Stewart in 1968.

NO TEAMS OF SERVICEMEN ALLOWED TO COMPETE IN OLYMPICS

LD122034 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1835 GMT 12 Mar 80 LD

[By David Healy, PA political staff]

[Text] No teams of servicemen will be allowed to compete in the Moscow Olympics, the Ministry of Defence said today. In addition, no special help or encouragement will be given to individual servicemen wanting to take part in the games. There will be no ban on servicemen who want to compete by taking their normal leave. But they need special permission to go behind the Iron Curtain.

The Civil Service Department says that civil servants cannot expect special leave to compete in the Olympics. Any requests to go to Moscow during normal leave should be looked at in the light of office manning levels.

An MOD [Ministry of Defense] spokesman said today: "We consider it would be inconsistent with government policy to give any assistance or encouragement to service personnel who wish to go to Moscow."

HAUGHEY TO ASK FRENCH SUPPORT ON ULSTER PROBLEM

LD121111 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 12 Mar 80 p 1 LD

[Dublin correspondent: "Eire Seeks French Support"]

[Text] The Eire prime minister, Mr Haughey, is formally to ask France tomorrow to put pressure on Britain to find a solution to the Ulster problem.

He told political correspondents in Dublin last night that he would outline his views on Ulster during day-long talks in Paris with President Giscard d'Estaing and Prime Minister Raymond Barre.

He said he would try and persuade "our friends" to use their influence and goodwill to convince the British Government that the time had come to secure an early settlement to the Northern problem.

"Attempts to find a solution should be made sooner, rather than later," he said.

Mr Haughey is going to Paris at the invitation of the French prime minister. It is his first official visit abroad since his election last December.

TFSC'S DENKTAS INTERVIEWED ON CYPRUS SITUATION

LD121619 London ASH-SHARQ AL-AWSAT in Arabic 11 Mar 80 p 4 LD

[Report on interview granted by Rauf Denktas, leader of the Turkish Cypriot community, to Robert Little in London--date not given]

[Excerpts] Rauf Denktas, leader of the Turkish Cypriots, sat under the picture of Mustafa Kemal Ataturk, founder of modern Turkey, at the headquarters of his diplomatic mission near Trafalgar Square in London. He spoke at length about the fears and hopes of the Federated State of Cyrpus.

I asked him his opinion of the great efforts which the Greek Cypriot administration has made in recent months to win the Arab countries' political support following President Spiros Kiprianou's visit to Syria and the foreign minister's tour of the Gulf emirates.

Replying to his question, Denktas said: Our friends in the Arab world cannot be deceived by such exposed maneuvers. They realize that as long as the Greek Byzantine Church has a finger in Greek Cypriot policy and in the affairs of the Kiprianou government their interests will remain opposed to ours. By our interests I mean the world Islamic states.

Continuing, Denktas said: Some of our Arab friends know that the Greek Cypriot president's aim is to isolate the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus from the rest of the world. The Greek Cypriots' interest in the Islamic Arab world is tactical in order to achieve this end. They are aspiring to win the Arab countries' support in the hope of destroying the Turkish community in Cyprus.

He added: If you want to know where their real interests lie all you have to do is look at their UN representative's voting record on the question of Afghanistan and last week's vote on the resolution condemning Israeli occupation and colonization in the West Bank territories. The Cypriots' voting on this subject in particular is clear evidence of their ill intentions toward the just cause of the Palestinian people. Turkish Cypriots cannot fail to condemn this evil stand by the Greek Cypriots. [Denktas ends]

There is no doubt as to the extent of the Turkish Cypriot leaders' suspicions toward President Kiprianou. After I said that he and President Kiprianou visited London at the same time and that they attended a dinner party in Parliament the same evening, I asked him whether they met and if their presence in London was merely a coincidence.

Denktas said that no meeting took place between him and President Kiprianou and that the British Parliament is a very large place. He told me that he came to London on a private visit, but said: I have agreed to answer any questions that need answering out of the desire to explain all the points under consideration.

I asked Rauf Denktas whether there was any significance in President Kiprianou's unusual decision to cancel his press conference 2 days before his arrival in London. I also asked whether it is true that British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington asked the two Cypriot leaders politely to try to avoid the limelight during their presence in London.

Replying, Dentas said: I can assure you that I have received no such request. With regard to Kiprianou , I think that as soon as he knew that I was going to be in London and that I would correct any distortion of facts he decided that it would be safer to cancel his meeting with the press. [paragraph continues]

We know from our previous experience that the Greek Cypriots prefer not to talk unless they are sure that their statements will not be refuted. Otherwise, they remain quite silent.

I asked whether the Denktas government's proposals to draft a new federal constitution was merely another name for partition. He replied: "The world press, most unfortunately, is influenced by Greek propaganda. Participation does not mean partition. Our proposals envisage that we would be equal partners. We will not allow the Turkish community in Cyprus to be used as cheap labor as it used to be in the past. Cyprus independence means independence for us just as for the Greeks."

It was evident from the Turkish Cypriot leader's remarks that although his government is still hoping for a settlement eventually, it is in no hurry for a settlement on a basis other than equality in power and political rights.

Concluding, he said: We know that our friends in the Arab world will continue to support our cause in order to reach a just and honorable solution for the Cyprus problem and that their continued support is a guarantee for our success, and until that time comes we are prepared to wait and to work continuously.

TURKISH DIPLOMAT IN LONDON FOR OECD LOAN TALKS

TA112035 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1900 GMT 11 Mar 80 TA

[Text] The under secretary of the prime minister's office and the assistant under secretary of the State Planning Organization, Turgut Ozal, has announced that a $500 million [word indistinct] loan available for immediate use has been secured for Turkey and that the United States has decided to increase its aid to Turkey from $200 million to $300 million.

Ozal held a news conference today in London, which is the second leg of his European tour in connection with the urgent aid to be extended to Turkey this year and Turkey's debts, which are coming due.

In his news conference, Ozal said that the $500 million loan will arrive in Turkey in cash next week. Ozal noted that this loan will be used until the loans to be confirmed by OECD countries at their 26 March meeting in Paris take effect.

According to TRT London correspondent Oguz Tezisler, Ozal in his news conference also stated that the meeting, which was scheduled to be held in Paris on 17 March to discuss the postponement of previous debts, has been deferred until the beginning of May upon the request of the countries concerned.

GOVERNMENT REJECTS 'CAMP DAVID' PROCEDURE FOR RESOLUTION

NC121230 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 12 Mar 80 NC

[Text] The government spokesman stressed today that the Cyprus Government's policy is for the Cyprus issue to remain within the UN framework and any other initiative should also be within this framework. The spokesman made this statement in answer to a question on a U.S. congressional study released yesterday, and particularly in answer to the remark that the "Camp David" method could be considered as a model for a Cyprus solution. The government spokesman stressed: A procedure similar to the one followed at Camp David concerning the Egyptian-Israeli relations is not acceptable by the Cyprus Government.

KLIRIDHIS WARNS OF IMMINENT PARTITION OF ISLAND

NC130820 Nicosia I SIMERINI in Greek 13 Mar 80 NC

[Text] Limassol, 12 March--Mr Glavkos Kliridhis, president of the Democratic Rally Party, has warned that "it is considered certain that in 1980 the Turks will colonize Famagusta and declare an independent state."

Speaking at the crowded "Ikho 75" [Echo 75] club tonight, Mr Kliridhis also said that "we are heading toward partition with mathematic precision."

At the same time, Mr Kliridhis pointed out that "sloganeering is one of the Cyprus problem's enemies" and stressed that "he disagrees with the policy of long-term struggle."

Referring to the U.S. plan, Mr Kliridhis said that "we have relieved Turkey of the responsibility to reject or accept the plan because we rejected it" and added: "The four Makarios-Denktas guidelines were included in the U.S. plan, the rejection of which has been a fatal mistake by the Cyprus Government."

In answer to relevant questions, the Democratic Rally president:
--Reiterated that he will form a shadow cabinet.
--Declared that the 1955-59 struggle was magnificent and aimed at enosis; he also stressed that struggle for national survival and restoration are not confined to time limits.
--Observed that the Cyprus problem cannot be solved with a collection of UN General Assembly resolutions.

FORMER BRITISH GOVERNOR ARRIVES, HOLDS CONTACTS IN TFSC

TA121319 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1030 GMT 12 Mar 80 TA

[Text] Lord Carradon, a former governor of Cyprus, arrived in the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus today and held several contacts. He met acting President Oguz Korhan, Turkish Ambassador Inal Batu and the Turkish Cypriot negotiator at the intercommunal talks, Umit Onan. Minister of Foreign Affairs, Defense and Tourism Kenan Atakol was also present at the meeting between Lord Carradon and acting President Korhan. In a statement after the meeting Korhan said that more favorable results could be achieved if the British Government listened to the Turkish Cypriot views and then reached a conclusion about the Cyprus problem.

In a statement after the meeting, Kenan Atakol said that they related the present situation in Cyprus to Lord Carradon. He added that at the meeting he [Atakol] had stressed that the West and especially Britain had done nothing so far to induce the Greek Cypriot administration to lift its economic embargo against the Turkish Cypriot community. The foreign minister said: We stressed that Britain was continuing to make the mistake it made when the 1963-64 incidents began in Cyprus.

Atakol pointed out that they explained to Lord Carradon that unless the foreign countries extended equal aid to the Turkish and Greek Cypriot communities, the economic imbalance between the two sides would be further aggravated and the line separating the two communities on the island would become more concrete.

Lord Carradon then called on the Turkish Cypriot negotiator, Umit Onan. In a statement after the 1 hour-long meeting, Lord Carradon said: We are trying to solve the problem of this beautiful island. The things I heard from the two sides have encouraged me.

Lord Carradon noted that he had met certain ministers and other officials in the Greek Cypriot sector. He added that he had met President Denktas and Greek Cypriot leader Kiprianou in London last week. He said: I hope that my country will help to achieve a final settlement. Replying to a question, Lord Carradon said that he was more hopeful now than he was before.

Lord Carradon called on the Turkish ambassador to Lefkosa [Nicosia], Inal Batu at 1200. In a statement after the meeting, which lasted half an hour, Ambassador Batu said that they held a beneficial discussion on the latest developments regarding the Cyprus problem. Lord Carradon said that he would convey his contacts in Cyprus to the British Government.

WORLD ISLAMIC CONGRESS TO MEET IN NORTHERN NICOSIA

NC130715 Istanbul GUNAYDIN in Turkish 9 Mar 80 p 3 NC

[By Resat Akar]

[Text] Nicosia--It has been reported that the World Islamic Congress has decided to hold its 8th session in the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus [TFSC] and that the funds necessary for this purpose have been transferred to Cyprus. The congress is to be held in Nicosia from 23 to 27 March and will be attended by the foreign ministers and spiritual leaders of many nations. It has been learned that Turkey will be represented by Foreign Minister Hayrettin Erkmen, former State Minister Lutfi Dogan, Director of Religious Affairs Tayyar Altikulac and National Salvation Party leader Necmettin Erbakan.

The TFSC authorities have stated that efforts are being organized to make the World Islamic Congress successful. They have also stated that holding the Islamic Congress for the first time in the Turkish sector of Cyprus is of paramount importance both politically and culturally.

It has also been learned that as soon as the Greek Cypriot administration found out that the World Islamic Congress was going to be held in the Turkish Cypriot sector of the island and that some foreign ministers would participate, they unsuccessfully tried to obstruct it. However, it is reported that the ministers invited will begin arriving to the island via Istanbul as of 20 March.

I VRADHINI: USSR RENEGES ON OIL AGREEMENT

AT121448 Athens I VRADHINI in Greek 12 Mar 80 pp 1, 12 AT

[Text] In the end the Soviet Union has reneged on the decision [as published] which was given to Prime Minister Karamanlis for the sale of 800,000 tons of crude oil to Greece during 1980. Instead of Russian oil it now offers Libyan oil and at an increased price because it also counts the Soviet commission for the sale. The chief of the Soviet trade delegation in Athens, Navakovskiy, informed Trade Minister Panayiotopoulos that:

--His country is unable to fulfill its promises in toto.

--The Soviet Union specifically is prepared to sell only 700,000 tons of oil and of this amount only 150,000 tons will be Soviet crude oil. An additional 150,000 tons will be Russian gas oil and the remaining 400,000 tons will be Libyan oil. The Libyan oil, however, is being offered at a high price--$35.11 per barrel--with an additional charge of the percentage of the Soviet commission.

The Soviet proposal as announced by Novakovskiy was accompanied by the proposal that Greek exports to the USSR should be decreased by 39 percent. The trade minister reportedly has rejected the Soviet proposal and has requested that what was agreed upon in Moscow should be adhered to and that at the same time Greek exports to the USSR be increased.

ATHENS NEWS SCORES U.S. DIPLOMAT YOST'S VISIT TO COUNTRY

[Editorial: "An Offensive Reunion"]

[Text] Mr. Charles W. Yost, who served as charge d'affaires in the United States Embassy in Athens from 1959 to 1954 [as published], left Greece the day before yesterday after a private visit, during which he was the house guest of Mr. Spiros Markezinis, the current leader of the Progressive Party. At one time, Mr. Yost held the rank of United States Ambassador to the United Nations. In his position as charge d'affaires at the embassy in Athens, he often deputized for the ambassador on important occasions.

Mr. Markezinis, who was prime minister during the military dictatorship, left his mark on thepublic mind as the man who supported the army's decision to send the tanks to the Athens Polytechnic in 1973 and who, after the violent confrontation with the unarmed students, heartily applauded their slaughter.

It can easily be argued that Mr. Yost has the right, as a private individual, to talk to and visit whosoever he pleases, whenever he chooses to return to this country. However, there is an obligation on the part of men like Mr. Yost and on the part of the U.S. State Department to be cognizant of the fact that when officials who have served in high positions return to "private" life, they often remain very much in the "public" awareness. Because of this, Mr. Yost should have been advised against accepting the invitation of a person who served the junta as prime minister.

The memories of the events of 1973 still evoke a great deal of pain to a majority of the Greek public and their respect for the former senior American diplomat lessens when they see him renewing social contacts with a person so closely associated with that pain. The reunion between these two men during the past few days has made all the more offensive to Greeks when a newspaper photograph yesterday showed the former representative of a world power, which leads the fight for human rights, next to the man who extolled the murder of Greek students, who were deprived of such rights.

CHIEF OF STAFF EVREN RETURNS FROM EUROPEAN VISIT

TA121814 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 12 Mar 80 TA

[Text] Turkish Chief of Staff Gen Kenan Evren returned home today after completing his official visits to Britain and Norway. In a statement at Istanbul's Yesilkoy Airport, General Evren said that Britain had promised to aid the Turkish naval forces. He added that his contacts in Norway had also been very constructive. Noting that aid to Turkey was discussed during his talks in Britain, General Evren said that Norway had expressed its readiness to cooperate in the sphere of mutual military industries. I hope, General Evren said, that these contacts will be developed further.

Replying to a question, General Evren noted that, as was the case in many countries, private institutions in Turkey had to take care of their own security, and added: In order to implement this security service they have to hire security elements who have the same authorization as the police. It would be senseless to have unarmed and unauthorized security personnel on guard at entrances. That is why I believe that the necessary legislation should be enacted as soon as possible, relieving the police, the gendarme forces and even the armed forces from such duties, because these [incidents] cannot be prevented by posting soldiers, gendarmes, or policemen at the entrances of all private institutions and banks. Forces spread out to cover these places are losing their effect. In fact, these forces should be used effectively, that is why I am personally in favor of enacting this law.

General Evren was met at Yesilkoy Airport by First Army commander, Gen Necdet Urug, and War Academies commander, Gen Bedrettin Demirel, as well as senior officers of the armed forces.

BULGARIAN TRANSPORT MINISTER ARRIVES IN ANKARA FOR TALKS

TA121547 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1445 GMT 12 Mar 80 TA

[Text] Ankara, 12 Mar (AA)--A Bulgarian delegation headed by Transport Minister Vasil Tsanov arrived in Ankara today for talks with Turkish officials on maritime and road transport. Tsanov was met at Ankara's Esenboga Airport by his Turkish counterpart Huseyin Ozalp, who stressed Turkey's desire to develop her relations with her neighbors. Turkey and Bulgaria constitute a bridge between Asia and Europe, Ozalp said, adding that the Ankara talks would be quite important since they involved elimination of a number of difficulties hampering transport between the two countries to their benefit.

Tsanov said, in his turn, that they were prepared to solve the problems involved in a climate of mutual understanding. Talks between Turkey and Bulgaria have always proved successful, he said, adding that they would determine ways of cooperation in the field of transport.

Three-day official talks began this afternoon. The two sides are expected to wind up their talks by signing an accord envisaging cooperation in the field of maritime and road transport.

ANKARA RADIO SCORES GREEK CYPRIOT AIRSPACE INITIATIVES

TA121655 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 12 Mar 80 TA

[Text] It has been announced that the Greek Cypriots have tried to take advantage of the good will and constructive stand expressed by Turkey in lifting NOTAM 714 dealing with Aegean airspace and that the latest initiatives by the Greek Cypriots on this matter have seriously endangered air traffic over the island. In 1975, the Greek Cypriot administration declared that it could not handle the air traffic over northern Cyprus.

In 1977, the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus [TFSC] announced that Ercan recommended the airspace over northern Cyprus, and air traffic control was then taken over by the Ercan State Airport. In a new NOTAM issued on 25 February 1980, the Greek Cypriot administration announced that two air corridors, which cross the Ercan-recommended airspace, were opened to air traffic. This NOTAM contained some changes in the orientation of these air corridors to their own benefit. As a result, the TFSC issued NOTAM 13 on 28 February stating that, due to their lack of communications, the Greek Cypriots would not be able to control air traffic over northern Cyprus or implement search and rescue activities. The Turkish Federated State announced to all countries that, for their own safety, all airlines should use the Ercan recommended airspace.

In an announcement to all countries, Turkey also pointed out that in the interest of air safety in the region, traffic should be controlled by the Ercan Airport control center and asked for compliance with NOTAM 13 as a necessary condition for air safety.

Replying to questions by journalists, Turkish officials in Ankara said that the latest initiatives by the Greek Cypriots could be described as a fait accompli. They added: All air routes to be used in international air traffic are laid out in the regional plans of the International Civil Aviation Association. Changes to these air routes cannot be made unilaterally and arbitrarily as the Greek Cypriots have done. That is why Turkey announced that it refuses to accept this change. Officials in Ankara added that there is air traffic between Turkey and Ercan State Airport and that the necessary traffic control to ensure flight security in the region was carried out through the link between Ankara and Ercan. Noting that the Greek Cypriots, who have offered to provide air traffic control did not have the necessary technical links to provide air traffic safety, officials said that, as a result Greek Cypriot initiatives to this effect endangered regional air traffic.

POLICE STOP SYRIAN ARMS SMUGGLERS AT BORDER

TA121838 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 12 Mar 80 TA

[Text] Some 7,300 rounds of ammunition were seized after a clash between Turkish gendarmes and smugglers, who were trying to cross the border into Turkey. One of the smugglers was wounded and captured by the gendarmes, according to information from Urfa Governor Yasar Tok. The incident occurred at the Mufitpinar quarter in the Suruc District. The 10 smugglers, who were trying to cross into Turkey, clashed with the gendarme forces. One of the smugglers, who was wounded in the shootout, was captured, while the other nine smugglers fled back to Syria leaving some 7,300 rounds of ammunition behind.

POLITIKA EDITOR ARRESTED BY MILITARY COURT

[Text] Aydin Engin, writer and publisher of POLITIKA, gave himself up today at the Istanbul martial law military prosecutor's office. Engin was arrested by the Third Military Court. An arrest order in absentia was issued for Engin in connection with his article which appeared in the POLITIKA of 19 January 1980. In his article Engin is accused of having violated article 142 of the Turkish penal law, for incitment to subversion.

BRIEFS

SECURITY OPERATIONS--During operations conducted in various provinces in the past week, security forces caught 1,684 suspects and seized 315 weapons. Of the persons caught, 88 were arrested, and investigations in connection with the other suspects are continuing. [Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 9 Mar 80 TA]

ECONOMICS MINISTER LAUDS CARTER'S ANTI-INFLATION MEASURES

LD150003 Hamburg DPA in German 2339 GMT 14 Mar 80 LD

[Text] [no dateline]--Federal Economics Minister Otto Graf Lambsdorff for the Federal Government has welcomed the measures announced by President Carter to combat inflation. The minister emphasized the American Government's early notification, which is a clear sign of the close cooperation between the American and the German governments. The measures appear suited to combat successfully inflationary dangers in the United States and are a further step in American efforts to check energy consumption in the United States. Both coincide fully with the Federal Government's ideas on a joint Western strategy in economic and energy policy.

GISCARD D'ESTAING ARRIVES FOR TALKS WITH SCHMIDT

[Text] Hamburg--French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing arrived in Hamburg this afternoon. In Hamburg, he will probably particularly discuss with Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt further action by the West in the Afghanistan crisis. In the federal chancellor's house, Giscard and Schmidt intend to discuss Middle East problems and the forthcoming EC summit in Brussels. Also planned are, inter alia, a report by the federal chancellor on his talks with U.S. President Jimmy Carter, and a report by Giscard on the outcome of his recent trip to several Arab states.

At the welcome at Huhlsbuettel Airport, the two heads of government referred to the importance of their second meeting within a few weeks. Federal Chancellor Schmidt attached great importance to the "more private talk" in Hamburg regarding the continuation of German-French consultations and agreement among the European countries.

It was also necessary to talk with one another outside the formal consultations. Regarding the talks with the U.S. President, on which Schmidt intends to report to his French opposite number, Schmidt said that they had been concluded with an outcome encouraging for him and for the West. Giscard stressed the importance of the planned exchange of information for European cooperation.

BONN WILL NOT PARTICIPATE IN TALKS ON ALTERNATIVE GAMES

LD141627 Hamburg DPA in German 1553 GMT 14 Mar 80 LD

[Excerpt] Geneva/Bonn--Neither Bonn government representatives nor the German Olympic committee will take part in the conference by Western countries starting in the British Embassy in Geneva on Monday to discuss alternatives to the Olympic games in Moscow. Government Spokesman Klaus Boelling recalled on Wednesday [as heard] the chancellor's statement made on Wednesday which expressly emphasized that it is the responsibility of the Federal Republic's sports organizations to decide on participation in the Moscow games. It was still not clear today which countries have been invited to this conference and which have promised to attend.

OLYMPIC COMMITTEE CHAIRMAN ON GAMES PARTICIPATION

[Text] Bonn--In the opinion of National Olympic Committee Chairman Willi Daume, the committee will probably declare itself against German athletes taking part in the Moscow Olympic games if the Federal Government recommends such a step.

In an interview for the radio station Sender Freies Berlin Daume also expressed the hope, however, that political developments will make U.S. participation possible and that all other boycott problems will thereby be resolved. Daume said: "Everything possible is underway and there are still 2 months until a final decision has to be made." He also reaffirmed the International Olympic Committee's view that the Soviet Union must make some signal concerning the future of Afghanistan and the presence of Soviet troops in that country. It is still the wish of athletics that the Moscow Olympic games should take place with the participation of the whole world.

Daume, who is being considered as the successor of International Olympic Committee Chairman Lord Killanin, came out against a so-called "alternative Olympics," such as U.S. President Jimmy Carter has suggested. "The Olympic games are not the property of the American President; they belong neither to Moscow nor to Washington, but to the International Olympic Committee."

Daume also opposed the postponement of the Olympic games for 1 year and the appearance in Moscow of athletes from those countries which have decided on a boycott in a "personal capacity."

GENSCHER COMMENTS ON AFGHANISTAN, YUGOSLAVIA, NATO

LD151358 Hamburg DPA in German 1201 GMT 15 Mar 80 LD

[Text] Saarbruecken--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher has again appealed to the Soviet Union "finally to comply with the call by 104 member states of the United Nations and to withdraw its troops from Afghanistan." Speaking at a party meeting in Saarbruecken today Genscher also indirectly called on the Soviet Government to act with restraint toward Yugoslavia. His actual words were: "The concern of the Yugoslavs about the life of their President Tito should prompt all states to act with restraint." One is "bound to suspect that those who lead Yugoslavia tomorrow are already to be put under pressure" and this gives "cause for deep concern." The recent attacks by the Soviet Union on Yugoslavia have given rise to "grave concern."

In Genscher's opinion, there are three central tasks necessary to safeguard international peace: the resolution of the Afghanistan crisis; the restoration and safeguarding of equilibrium; and recognition of the aims of the nonalined movement by respecting the independence of Third World states.

On the Federal Republic's relations with NATO, Genscher said: "We stand firmly within the Western defence alliance in the European Community." He was applauded when he noted, however: "We have had enough once and for all of German soldiers being deployed outside the frontiers of our country." The Federal Republic also wants detente and accommodation with the Soviet Union.

Radio Interview

DW170926 Baden-Baden Suedwestfunk Network in German 1140 GMT 14 Mar 80 DW

[Correspondent Lotze interview with Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher; date, place of interview not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] The opposition's chancellor candidate has maintained in Washington that differences of opinion between the United States and the Federal Government continue to exist. He said the U.S. President signed the joint German-U.S. communique only because of the imminent election campaign in the United States. He said beggars cannot be choosers. Do you share the view that differences still exist between Bonn and Washington?

[Answer] Let me say, to begin with, that as a matter of form I never say anything about events at home when I am away and vice versa--I do not state my attitude when at home to what German politicians state abroad.

[Question] This is a matter of style. But what do you have to say about the issue at stake?

[Answer] As for this matter, I must say that we have to be very careful to avoid allowing disputes in the Western camp to gloss over the actual, the crucial issue, the question notably of what is necessary to counteract the challenge to the West at large. This is because the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan is part of a far-flung Soviet strategy and is not just a provocation by the United States or Europe but rather one against the entire Western world and the Third World, which is eagerly pursuing independence.

If you take a look at the Soviet criticism of the meeting between the European foreign ministers and the foreign ministers of the ASEAN states, you will see how strongly the Soviet Union is at odds with the efforts of the states of the Third World toward their independence. For this reason it is highly important for the West to make every effort toward insuring and enhancing its own capability for action on the one hand and to credibly continue its strategy of strengthening the independence of the states of the Third World on the other.

[Question] Still, word has come from the U.S. President's security adviser in Washington that he expects more tangible solidarity from the allies of the United States on the Afghanistan issue. So the relations with the United States do not seem to be so good after all. He demands concrete action. Do you feel that you are meant by such demands?

[Answer] As early as in December, when the alliance made the important decisions, the Federal Republic of Germany adopted a clear position. The contribution of the Bundeswehr toward the common security, our help for Turkey, our extra effort in the defense sector, go to show that we are willing to live up to our commitments. I hold that all European states will see it this way too. In any event, I would like to warn anybody in Europe against believing that they might be able to play a special role and nobly keep aloof from things, or even against pretending that this is solely a problem between the Soviet Union and the United States.

What is involved here really are common interests of the Europeans and the Americans. And the Federal Republic of Germany will act accordingly. I consider it my mandate as the foreign minister to draw the attention of the German public to the need for the urgency of our participation in the common Western concept, and to point out as well that it may well spell considerable material burdens which we might have to bear in the interest of the common security.

[Question] But it seems as though you were afraid that the basic lines of the Federal Government, which you also represent, are not supported by the SPD local groups up to the top echelons. Am I right with my assessment?

[Answer] This assessment is wrong. I am in full harmony with the view of the chancellor. After all, for the foreign minister it is decisive that no differences prevail in the assessment of the situation within the government at large, but in particular between himself and the chancellor and the defense minister.

For example, I share the view of the chancellor that it is necessary to make every effort toward restoring the balance which the Soviet Union has violated by its intervention in Afghanistan, but by its enormous overarmament as well. After all, we find ourselves in the difficult situation where the Soviet Union is about to force an arms race on the world through considerable arms efforts.

For this reason I call on the Soviet Union to stop this course, not to proceed on this road any further but instead to declare its readiness to negotiate with the West realistically on disarmament and arms control. The states of the Third World are waiting for a development where we can grant them additional aid for their social and economic development. This makes it necessary to prevent an arms race. But I can only repeat once again that the Soviet Union is embarking on a dangerous course just now. Hence my urgent appeal not to continue on this road but instead to become receptive to our disarmament proposals, which are meant seriously and which are motivated by our concern for peace in the world.

[Question] Are there any tangible diplomatic activities beyond these public appeals?

[Answer] We are exploiting all conceivable options to convince the Soviet Union of the necessity, the urgent necessity, for disarmament steps and to induce the Soviet Union to discontinue its expansive policy by which not only the West feels threatened but also the states of the Third World, which are jealous of their independence. This explains the vote in the United Nations. This also explains the highly unequivocal statement by the Islamic states at their conference in Islamabad.

UPCOMING VISIT BY INDIAN FOREIGN MINISTER SEEN AS SIGNIFICANT

[Text] Bonn--The Federal Government attaches great importance to the visit of Indian Foreign Minister P.V. Narachimba Rao, who will arrive in the capital on Monday. Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Deitrich Genscher on Sunday paid tribute to the traditionally friendly German-Indian relations, which are characterized by great mutual understanding. Genscher said "India and the Federal Republic are at one in wanting to contribute towards safeguarding peace in the world and in maintaining the autonomy and independence of all countries." Genscher sees the visit by his Indian colleague as an opportunity for a wide-ranging exchange of views on international questions. The Afghanistan crisis as well as the future development of the nonalined movement will be discussed. Genscher underscored once more the Federal Government's view that the establishment of spheres of influence should be rejected.

The Indian foreign minister, who is considered a close confidant of Prime Minister Indira Gandhi, is to remain in Bonn until Tuesday and will have meetings with Federal President Karl Carstens and Chancellor Helmut Schmidt.

GOVERNMENT REFUSES OFFICIAL RECOGNITION TO PLO

LD141644 Hamburg DPA in German 1621 GMT 14 Mar 80 LD

[Text] Bonn--The Federal Government will continue to refuse recognition of the PLO. This emerged from remarks made by government spokesman Klaus Boelling. The decision by the Austrian Government will not be a "model", he told journalists today in reply to questions. "The Austrian decision does not affect us." The PLO representative in Bonn, 'Abdallah al-Ifranji, has had no diplomatic status since beginning his mission in the FRG.

LEADERS CONGRATULATE NEW ZIMBABWE GOVERNMENT

Schmidt Message to Mugabe

LD141619 Hamburg DPA in German 1549 GMT 14 Mar 80 LD

[Text] Bonn--On Friday Chancellor Helmut Schmidt conveyed cordial congratulations to Robert Mugabe, the new prime minister of Zimbabwe, on his appointment.

The population of Zimbabwe has given him and his party, in free and fair elections, a clear political mandate on undertaking on government reponsibility, Schmidt wrote. The federal chancellor assured Mugabe of the Federal Government's willingness to work closely with independent Zimbabwe and its new government "in the spirit of partnership and in the interest and for the benefit" of the two peoples and states. At the same time he expressed his firm conviction that "lasting impulses" will emanate from a peaceful development in Zimbabwe in order to overcome the unresolved problems in southern Africa.

Genscher Praises Foreign Minister

ID161028 Hamburg DPA in German 0935 GMT 16 Mar 80 ID

[Text] Bonn--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher has sent a telegram of congratulations to Simon Muzenda, foreign minister of the future Zimbabwean Government, on his appointment and affirmed once again the Federal Government's willingness "to cooperate with independent Zimbabwe and its new government in the spirit of true partnership." Genscher also pointed out on Sunday that Muzenda, during past years, had been personally and decisively involved in devising occupational training programs for German institutions for young people from Zimbabwe. This has laid foundations for future cooperation and has contributed toward the understanding and friendship between the two countries.

STRAUSS MEETS WITH WALDHEIM, CARTER IN U.S.

U.N. Visit

DW131115 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0548 GMT 12 Mar 80 DW

[Excerpts from correspondent Schuetz interview with Franz Josef Strauss, Bavarian minister president, CSU chairman and chancellor candidate of the CDU/CSU, in New York--recorded]

[Text] [Question] One of your interlocutors was UN Secretary General Kurt Waldheim. This dialog was interrupted for a quarter of an hour by a telephone conversation between Waldheim and the Iranian foreign minister. Recalling your talk with Waldheim and his telephone conversation, do you see the solution of the hostage affairs to be immeasurably far away now? How would you act if you were in a responsible position, say, if you were in the shoes of the secretary general or of President Carter?

[Answer] The commission has embarked on its return flight. In short, the conditions, as far as the commission is concerned and probably also the United States, require careful consideration, because, after all, the Americans must insure their position as a world power and therefore must not submit to any humiliating conditions. But this is none of my business. I am merely voicing my opinion.

[Question] But you would not have any patent medicine either?

[Answer] There is no such thing as a patent medicine. In the case of groups acting irrationally you just cannot indulge in rational considerations. Besides, I am too inadquately informed to come out here with any haughty statements.

[Question] If we take a look at the outward circumstances of your journey, it is striking that you have arrived in the United States directly after the chancellor, that you follow the same itinerary, that you will be meeting with nearly the same politicians as Chancellor Schmidt did, and that you cultivate contacts with the same journalists. The chancellor, and I am now quoting Schmidt verbatim, does not deem it particularly good taste.

Are these parallels perhaps intended to indicate that you want to present yourself as a sort of counter-chancellor, or that you already feel like the future German Government chief?

[Answer] I heard that statement by Helmut Schmidt. It either demonstrates a serious lack of information, or a serious lack of good manners. What he has said here is close to rudeness. I did not follow his visit. He inserted his American trip prior to mine, which had been planned much earlier. The program of my visit was planned as early as last summer and last fall. It took final form in December, long before the Russian invasion of Afghanistan. Schmidt's visit was planned and arranged on very short notice. The schedule of my visit was carefully arranged for this week, because otherwise the respective schedules could not have been coordinated. For Mr Schmidt to say now that I should have canceled my visit because he had inserted his is impudent in the full sense of the word.

[Question] You have attacked the federal chancellor in the course of your visit, particularly during a New York press conference if I am correctly informed. You charged that he did not commit himself publicly with regard to the boycott problem, and you said that he is undecided and hesitant. You said that his visit to the United States was a failure which was wrapped up in cotton. Why do you voice that criticism in the United States? Do you think you have to enlighten your American discussion partners to make them see things your way?

[Answer] Whether there is an election or not is not at issue. But when I am asked whether there is a difference between the position of Helmut Schmidt and the position of the CDU/CSU, I must point out that difference.

[Question] Will you in talks with your political discussion partners--maybe you have done it already--point out equally clearly these differences with regard to political positions in the Federal Republic?

[Answer] I always point out my position clearly!

[Question] A number of important talks are still on the agenda. What results do you expect from these talks, as far as that can be predicted?

[Answer] I am not here to negotiate but to inform myself and to spell out our position. I promise myself I will do that.

Talks With Carter

DW141443 Hamburg ARD Television Network in German 2130 GMT 13 Mar 80 DW

[Reporter Lothar Loewe interview with Franz Josef Strauss, Bavarian minister president, CSU chairman and CDU/CSU candidate for chancellor; place not given--recorded]

[Text] [Strauss] I was impressed by the almost unbroken agreement [in talks with President Carter] and by the following, if I may be specific: First, the Americans welcome an approach to a boycott of the Olympic games without conditions or delay. A hint at a fact that is known to the president: The CDU/CSU stated in parliament at the time through Helmut Kohl that a boycott must be declared now and that one should not wait until 24 May. Had this approach been taken by the government, it would have been considered very helpful. The opposition's standpoint is considered here by the U.S. administration as being very helpful and is being judged positively in every respect.

The second point involves the economic side. I state in this connection, and you can assume that this means agreement with the policy of the administration, that a carefully worked out and extended COCOM [NATO Coordinating Committee] list. [sentence as heard] The goods named in that list would not be the subject of trade. If economic sanctions were agreed upon, one would consider it very helpful if trade with the Soviet Union, not with the allies of the Soviet Union, they will not automatically be involved. [sentence as heard]

The third is an intensification of our military efforts in certain fields which I have pointed out individually several times. It is a matter of changing over to modern tanks--Leopard [as heard]. Strengthening our navy for antisubmarine defense if other armed forces were sent to the Persian Gulf is also involved. And thirdly it is a matter of improving our infrastructure to accomodate American ground and air forces. Fourth, a leading role for Germany with regard to economic and military aid for Turkey.

[Question] Do you have the impression that the President has no understanding of the Federal Government's approach to the Olympic problem?

[Answer] My personal impression is that the stance of the opposition is closer to the President's in this problem than that of the government. But this is my personal impression. We avoided making German domestic policy or election campaign policy in this talk, and avoided criticizing Helmut Schmidt.

[Question] Do you have the impression that despite the German-American communique after the visit of the chancellor, American reservations still exist vis-a-vis the Federal Government?

[Answer] I would not say vis-a-vis the Federal Government--this emphasis could lead to wrong impresions or wrong conclusions; it is much rather disappointment with the allies--more with France than the others--but also with regard to the Federal Republic one believes that more could be done than has happened so far, if I may express it specifically.

STRAUSS RETURNS FROM WEEK VISIT TO U.S.

LD160953 Hamburg DPA in German 0842 GMT 16 Mar 80 LD

[Excerpt] Frankfurt--Franz Josef Strauss, the Union parties' candidate for chancellor and Bavarian prime minister, returned to the Federal Republic on Sunday morning from his 1-week visit to the United States. Strauss said on arrival in Frankfurt that his meet[illegible]s in America had been impressive in terms of information and represented an important basis for the further development of German politics. The result will play an essential role in next week's foreign policy debate.

Views Trip

[Text] Munich--at the end of his visit to the United States CDU/CSU chancellor candidate and Bavarian Prime Minister Franz Josef Strauss has formed the impression that Washington is disappointed with the Federal Government in certain respects. Speaking on Bavarian radio today, Strauss said that as far as the major questions of the future are concerned, the Federal Republic is in the same boat as the United States and there should therefore be less talk about differences. The Federal Republic should also not step out of line concerning the joint Western measures taken against the USSR over the Afghanistan crisis.

Asked whether Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's course is not more or less CDU policy, the CSU chairman said that this is only true where he is doing the right thing. If the leftwing of the SPD gains more ground a psychological gulf will come into being, which could lead one day to a split with the United States. Summing up what his U.S. trip means for him personally, Strauss said that it was not until he had direct discussions that the full implication of certain international events became clear to him.

Excerpts of the interview were prereleased to DPA.

Strauss is convinced that problems between the Federal Government and the U.S. Government still exist after the chancellor's trip to America. In an interview with WELT AM SONNTAG, the chancellor candidate also expressed the view that the government of U.S. President Carter (?was happier) with the position of the Bonn opposition than with Schmidt's. According to the paper, Strauss said that he "had no doubt that the Americans were much happier with the clearness and decisiveness with which I have assessed the situation and my determination to draw lessons from it, than with the performance given by Helmut Schmidt."

An editorial version of the interview was prereleased to DPA.

Detects U.S. 'Reservations'

LD162158 Hamburg Domestic Service in German 1800 GMT 16 Mar 80 LD

[Excerpt] During his talks in the United States, Bavarian Premier Strauss detected reservations about Federal Chancellor Schmidt and disappointment over the German attitude within NATO. On his return from the United States, Strauss today told journalists in Munich that in connection with Afghanistan the Americans were, all in all, disappointed by their European allies. Although the Federal Republic's attitude had not been talked about in particular, the U.S. was not pleased with it, Strauss said.

In an article for tomorrow's BILD-ZEITUNG, the Union parties' candidate for chancellor demands, among other things, that the Federal Republic must now clearly state that it will not attend the Olympic games in Moscow as long as the Red Army is in Afghanistan. Strauss said that the defense contribution must be increased to such an extent that the Germans can replace American or other allied units transferred to the Middle East. Strauss finally demands that, together with the allies, deliveries of strategically important goods to the Soviet Union must be stopped.

PAPER VIEWS SCHMIDT PRESS CONFERENCE

[Commentary signed R.H.: "Our Embarrassment"]

[Text] The news magazine NEWSWEEK describes the political weight of the Federal Republic, which is growing in the crisis, with bombastic expressions. This definitely does not suit the chancellor, who prefers more realpolitik and less prominence. The lower level of prominence has been derived from military terminology under which a tank must not be too obvious but rather remain inconspicuous. What might be meant by this in the present situation is that the head should not be raised too high: We still do not want to be a leading European power. Yet we are being addressed as such. Besides, the Soviets in their latest letter are aiming at the realpolitik element in the style of the chancellor. They are probably speculating on the option of contrasting this against the true or allegedly erratic irrational element in Carter's way of governing.

But as far as the Soviets are concerned, in their present situation and due to their military power, the conquest of Afghanistan is also but a modest bit of realpolitik. The West will need years to correct this perspective, because they will not be dissuaded from it by the Olympic boycott. Meanwhile, the refusal would be good enough to remind not only the Soviets but also the West of a few things whose preservation cannot be managed with a smooth calcuation alone. Sometimes the seemingly absurd is also of help.

Deeming this possible will not pass the chancellor's lips. On the whole his communicativeness Wednesday was visibly limited. Merely a new nuance was the repudiation of the expression "neutralization" of Afghanistan and the shift to that of "nonalinment." On the whole, such a tour d'horizon of world politics merely reflects the embarrassment in which we find ourselves: that on the one hand the actual intentions of the Kremlin are disquietingly unknown and that, on the other hand, the leading power of the West has not yet taken over its role again so clearly that all can act accordingly and adapt to it. What we should do is insure that we will not be an unknown quantity in the equation to others, either to the one side or to the other. Geographically we are located between the two great powers; politically it is clear, however, where we belong. This is why we are not called to mediate, as the chancellor also told some of his party associates.

BREZHNEV LETTER SHOWS 'NATO MUST STAY VIGILANT'

DW141234 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 14 Mar 80 p 12 DW

[Commentary signed Ein.: "Stay Vigilant"]

[Text] In his letter to the chancellor, Brezhnev has recalled a strategic complex which had receded into the background of political interest since Afghanistan: The Kremlin boss drew attention to the significance for the Soviet Union of the decision on the closure of the arms gap which the Atlantic states adopted in Brussels in December. The outrage of the Europeans over the Soviet attack on Afghanistan has dangerously pushed this decision out of our awareness. Reality, however, continues to hold in store the direct threat to Western Europe of the SS-20 missiles. An Atlantic balance must be established by means of Pershing missiles. Brezhnev not only reminded us of our own worries. His message also makes it plain that the Kremlin does not intend to discontinue the campaign against the Atlantic arms gap closure. A search into the motives is less important now. What should cause us to think is the fact that the Soviet Union persistently "sticks to the enemy." In assessing the situation we need not go as far as has the former foreign minister of De Gaulle, Maurice Couve de Murville. He is afraid that the arms gap closure might jeopardize "Russian-American peace." He considers the debate on the arms project in Europe "more dangerous than Afghanistan." Couve de Murville might have too gloomy an approach. Yet, Brezhnev's hint to Schmidt should not be taken lightly. NATO must stay vigilant.

CORRESPONDENT VIEWS FRAGILE BERLIN AGREEMENT

DW141250 Munich SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG in German 14 Mar 80 p 4 DW

[Article signed RL: "Hinting at the Berlin Agreement"]

[Text] The Quadripartite Agreement on Berlin has fulfilled its function almost completely so far. Its function is to consolidate the status of the city, despite all principle differences of opinion, and to deactivate the former hotbed of crisis. Certainly there has always been differences between Moscow and East Berlin, on the one hand, and Bonn, on the other, as to what strict adherence and full application means. But the agreement itself has never become a subject of quarrel among the four signatory powers.

If in the present situation of all things the Soviet Union takes the recent attempt to bomb its West Berlin consulate general as an opportunity to complain to the United States (the power responsible for the sector of the city in question) and to criticize this act in London and Paris as a violation of the Quadripartite Agreement and threatens to take countermeasures, then special attention must be attributed to such a step.

Actually the West could welcome having the Soviet Union cite the Berlin agreement as often as possible, thus stressing its significance over and over again. But if untrue accusations are made and if one operates with threats, one must seriously ask whether the agreement will be practiced or strained instead. Actually the Quadripartite Agreement was supposed to isolate Berlin from other zones of crises. Just hinging at the agreement now creates problematic connections.

Already on earlier occasions the Western side abstained from using the mechanism of consultations which was supposed to be used in cases of conflict. Such meetings would serve the curtailment rather than the development of the agreement. That also hold true this time. He who wants to consider the Soviet protest as some sort of routine event, should have the delicate point made clear to him.

ECONOMICS MINISTER TO ARRIVE IN POLAND 16 MAR

LD152314 Hamburg DPA in German 2200 GMT 15 Mar 80 LD

[Text] Bonn/Warsaw--Otto Graf Lambsdorff, the FRG economics minister, is expected for a 24-hour visit in Poland (arrival around 1830 today, 16 March). This trip makes up for the Warsaw trip that was temporarily postponed at the end of January.

He will meet with Edward Babiuch, chairman of the Polish Council of Ministers; Tadeusz Wrzaszczyk, chairman of the Planning Commission; and Ryszard Karski, foreign trade minister.

In January the Poles expressed a strong desire to further intensify economic cooperation with the German side in connection with the new 5-year plan. Poland is the Federal Republic's second largest Eastern bloc trade partner.

SPD'S WEHNER LAUDS POLISH DISARMAMENT CONFERENCE OFFER

LD142100 Hamburg DPA in German 1933 GMT 14 Mar 80 LD

[Text] Saarbruecken--The Polish Government's offer of a Warsaw conference on disarmament and detente in Europe, represents an "obligation" in the opinion of lower house SPD group chairman Herbert Wehner.

At the start of a German-Polish week in the Saarland, Wehner said tonight in Saarbruecken that "everything humanly possible must be done in order to insure that this offer is not tossed to the winds during these critical weeks." The objective of establishing military equilibrium at a lower level than hitherto will have to be seriously pursued. "Crisis lamentations" are uncalled for. Instead, the establishment and safeguarding of peace should become a question of conscience for everyone.

Wehner emphasized that the tenth anniversary of the signing of the German-Polish treaty will be celebrated on 7 December this year. In this connection he referred to it as a "memorable event." The SPD politician thinks it depressing "that the Federal states have hardly made any progress concerning German-Polish schoolbook recommendations."

MATTHOEFER VIEWS UPCOMING VISIT TO JAPAN, AID FOR TURKEY

DW170928 Cologne Westduetscher Rundfunk Network in German 0743 GMT 15 Mar 80 DW

[Excerpts from reporter Pianka interview with Federal Finance Minister Hans Matthoefer, place not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] You will be going to Tokyo to discuss aid for Turkey, trying to make some funds available in Tokyo. Is there any chance at all to be successful? Turkey is even farther away from Tokyo than it is from Bonn.

[Answer] That is correct! Talks about Turkey are just one point of my negotiations in Tokyo. There are problems in bilateral monetary cooperation. We want to talk about problems related to the World Bank, to the International Monetary Fund. You may know that in late April the so-called Interim Committee of the International Monetary Fund will meet in Hamburg. The greater industrial countries always prepare their meetings there and coordinate their action, so that help for Turkey will be one of several points I want to discuss in Tokyo.

[Question] Did the Japanese already indicate that they want to take part in Western aid for Turkey?

[Answer] Correct. Last year such common efforts were made within the framework of countries that have merged in the OECD. At that time the Japanese contributed 70 million dollars. The help was given in the form of project aid. The monies were conditioned. In other words, one had to buy in Japan, so that so far not much money has flowed out. But that will have to discussed, namely, a change in conditions with regard to the 70 million dollars that were promised last year and on problems whether the Japanese will take part this time also, which is likely.

[Question] The main part of the money supposed to flow to Ankara will come from the federal budget, from the German side. Will you as the finance minister who must keep his hand on the cash box, so to speak, get in trouble?

[Answer] O well, my God, we should not exaggerate the German share. We will try to get a total of 3 billion dollars together this year. The United States and the Federal Republic of Germany will contribute 10 percent each. That is about 300 million dollars. The remaining 80 percent ought to come from the other OECD countries through a shift of debts through the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund, the European Community and so on.

[Question] If one takes into consideration that you said yesterday that the federal budget will have an estimated shortfall of planned reveneues of about DM1.5 billion, will that not get you a bit into hot water in connection with the promised tax reductions?

[Answer] I believe that the tax reductions have nothing to do with that. We must find that the burden carried by workers and employees in the form of taxes and payments have increased very much. Since we have a progressive tax system, taxes would increase next year even more than the national gross product. That is quite intolerable. Next year's tax reduction is a matter of justice with regard to taxes. If we need money for international tasks--whether it is development aid, aid for Turkey or European defense--if we all believe that the Federal Government has taken on new tasks that cost money, one must not increase the burden for the taxpayer, but must distribute taxes differently between the Federal Government and the lender. For example, opportunities exist there with regard to the turnover tax negotiations. Relations must have been established differently by 1 January 1981.

[Question] Does that mean that you expect to obtain money from the laender?

[Answer] Yes: You see, I would say it is wrong if for a need of DM100 for defense purposes, for example, for Turkey or Europe, I would have to--since my share of the income tax amounts to only 42.5 percent--burden the taxpayer with an additional DM235. Then the Federal Government would get DM100 and the laender and communities DM135. That does not make sense. Our Constitution says that the level of the overall state, if it must cope with new tasks, ought to be given additional means from the revenue. This must not be taken as a pretext for demanding even more taxes from the workers. I find that overall taxation of and payments by the workers is high enough. That must not increase any more.

[Question] The fact that such means will not flow to Turkey, or that planned tax revenues will not increase, does all this mean that federal citizens will have to expect additional burdens?

[Answer] No! We will make a supplementary budget, which is necessary. One part of the means already is put down in the budget of the federal minister for economic cooperation, but we must make a supplementary budget. Depending on the results of negotiations on wages and salaries for public service employees, on increased fuel costs of the Bundeswehr, additional costs for help for Turkey and other things that have accumulated, we will have to make a supplementary budget. We are firmly determined to take care of all additional costs through cuts to be made in the existing budget. We do not want to increase the burden carried by the taxpayer.

CABINET COMMUNIQUE ISSUED ON GISCARD'S GULF TRIP

[Unattributed report: "Official Cabinet Communique"]

[Excerpt] The cabinet met at the Elysee Palace Wednesday, 12 March 1980, under the chairmanship of Mr Giscard d'Estaing. The following communique was published after the meeting:

Middle East--The president of the republic informed the cabinet of the official visit he made to the Gulf emirates and Jordan from 1 through 9 March and the talks he had in Saudi Arabia 10 March.

He recalled the objectives of his visit:

--To boost the French presence in countries where this presence is recent and to increase our cooperation with them in a spirit of respect and mutual interest;

--To extend political dialog with the leaders of these countries which hold an increasingly important place in international relations at a time when these relations are showing serious tension likely to threaten the peace and stability of their region;

--To renew France's message of peace, justice and fraternity in the Middle East by inviting all parties concerned to recognize that an all-embracing and lasting settlement should be based on the two universal and complementary principles of each state's right to security and each people's right to self-determination:

"Each state in the region, particularly the State of Israel whose concern in this sphere is legitimate, should be able to live in peace within secure, recognized and guaranteed borders, which presupposes Israel's withdrawal from the Arab territories occupied since 1967.

"The Palestinian people who aspire to exist and organize themselves as a people should be allowed to exercise their right to self-determination within the framework of a peace settlement."

These are the two conditions for peace in the Middle East. Their implementation requires the acceptance and cooperation of all parties concerned. Therefore all sides must--on these bases--be involved in negotiations, especially the Palestinian people, which implies the PLO's participation.

The quality of the welcome in each country and the confidence which characterized the talks showed that this visit fulfilled an expectation and that its significance was understood and appreciated.

The president stressed the contribution which his visit made to strengthening the ties between Europe and the Arab world, whose solidarity it highlighted. The extension of dialog between these two entities constitutes a positive element in international relations.

He also indicated that he had invited the heads of state in the countries visited to make official visits to France and that he had readily accepted the invitation which King Khalid of Saudi Arabia made to him.

The president of the republic asked that France's EC partners be informed of the results of the trip, especially the Italian Government, at present filling the presidency of the Council of Ministers, to which the president of the republic will send a personal envoy.

MARCHAIS CALLS ON GISCARD TO INVITE 'ARAFAT TO PARIS

LD151318 Paris Domestic Service in French 1200 GMT 15 Mar 80 LD

[Text] Mr Marchais has asked the president of the republic to invite Mr 'Arafat to Paris. He has sent a letter to Valery Giscard d'Estaing. Georges Marchais says: Coming more than 5 years after the United Nations General Assembly's recognition of the inalienable national rights of the Palestinian people, including their right to self-determination, and the representativeness of the PLO, your statements have made no mention of the right of these people to set up their own state. Now, self-determination and the right to set up an independent state are two closely allied concepts. Under these conditions, adds Georges Marchais, I think it would be advisable to harmonize the government's words with its actions. You are able to do it by recognizing officially the PLO and by inviting Yasir 'Arafat, chairman of the PLO Executive Committee, to Paris.

INDIAN FOREIGN MINISTER ARRIVES FOR BILATERAL TALKS

BK171001 Delhi ISI Diplomatic Information Service in English 0838 GMT 17 Mar 80 BK

[Text] External Affairs Minister P.V. Narasimha Rado arrived in Paris on March 16 from New York for talks with his French counterpart M. Jean Francois-Poncet, reports PRESS TRUST OF INDIA. Their discussions were expected to cover bilateral matters and the international situation with particular emphasis on the Afghanistan crisis. Both India and France have taken an identical position about the events in Afghanistan giving more importance to diplomatic initiatives to defuse the crisis than to a condemnatory posture of the Soviet action.

Talking to newsmen at Charles de Gaulle Airport, Rao who had presided over the Group of 77 meeting at the United Nations said the group was anxious to take a unified stand at the global North-South negotiation to be launched at a UN special session later this year.

LE MONDE: CARTER ADMINISTRATION ON PATH OF 'RADICAL REFORMS'

LD171035 Paris LE MONDE in French 16-17 March 80 p 1 LD

[Editorial: "Cosmetic Surgery?"]

[Text] An attempt at cosmetic surgery--that is the initial reaction from U.S. business circles to the new anti-inflation measures announced by Mr Carter.

It is true that, with only 7 months to go before the presidential elections, Mr Carter gave the impression of trying to please everybody: those who, influenced by Senator Kennedy's speeches, see inflation as an evil capable of destroying U.S. prosperity and those who, fearing a recssion, are hostile to excessively drastic measures which should have their effects precisely when economic activity is already waning.

Although Mr Carter's style does not have the consistency--not to say brutality--of Mrs Thatcher's, it would nonetheless be wrong to underestimate what is happening in the United States. Beyond the pious recommendations on wage rises (no more than 8.5 percent), beyond the show of controlling the prices of the big corporations, the administration has started--slowly but surely, it seems--on the path of radical reforms.

The first and most important relates to energy. People have sneered a great deal about the administration's inability to curb U.S. oil consumption ($90 billion per year) which, despite its enormously high levels, doubled in 1979 compared with 1978. All that has been said on this subject, all the criticisms of the incredible U.S. egoism, are well founded. We know that Mr Carter is introducing an essential reform which, if it is carried through, will radically alter the situation: It is, of course, the decision to lift controls on the price of oil extracted in the United States.

In addition to that, a tax has now been imposed on energy imports. In 1982 gasoline will probably cost as much in the United States as in Europe. This is a minor revolution in this country which, since the 19th century, has built most of its prosperity on cheap energy.

The second radical reform relates to public spending. Mr Carter has announced that the next federal budget will balance. This is a major innovation since, at present, public finances show a deficit of some $20 billion. This stabilization of domestic accounts has been made possible by the introduction of a tax on imported oil which alone would cover half of the current deficit. In addition Mr Carter has announced budget savings amounting to $14 billion without specifying which areas of spending will be cut. However, it is likely that, in addition to cutting 20,000 jobs, the Carter administration will follow a stringent budget policy to reduce the share of federal spending in the national product to some 20 percent.

What effect will this reduction in the state's role in the economy have? Will welfare spending be reduced and, with it, the subsidies paid to local councils for their social programs? This would mean moving away from a policy of growing transfers which has, moreover, raised a great deal of criticism. Or will Mr Carter finally decide to change a taxation system which he himself described as "a disgrace to mankind," especially with all its privileges?

MARCHAIS, KKE'S FLORAKIS SEE 'SOLID FRIENDSHIP', COOPERATION

LD141037 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 8 Mar 80 p 6 LD

[Unattributed report: "Against the Atlantic Alinement and the Enlargement of the EC"]

[Text] Kharilaos Florakis, secretary general of the Greek Communist Party [KKE], had talks with PCF Secretary General Georges Marchais in Paris on 4 March.

Also at the meeting were PCF Central Committee Secretary Maxime Gremetz and Central Committee member G. Streiff and, for the KKE, Central Committee official Alvanos.

Georges Marchais and Kharilaos Florakis reaffirmed the importance of the joint communique signed by the two parties on 20 January 1979, at the end of an important PCF delegation's visit to Greece, and expressed their satisfaction with the joint initiatives resulting from that visit.

The two parties have a common understanding of the development of the international situation. The present period is marked by an appreciable advance of the world's progressive forces. Imperialism is striving desperately to hold on to its positions and, indeed, to regain lost ground. It is accelerating a frenzied arms race and is relaunching its bloc policy.

This is clear in Europe, with the revitalization of NATO and the attempts to enlarge its zone of influence along with plans for enlarging the Common Market.

The two parties call to mind their determination to oppose any new escalation in the arms race. They are struggling for the suspension of the NATO decision to deploy nuclear missiles in Europe and for the opening of negotiations on arms reduction. To this end they declared themselves prepared for any joint initiative by the communist parties and forces forpeace in Europe. They intend to work to hasten SALT II ratification. The Madrid conference must facilitate a new consolidation of detente and peaceful relations between states in Europe and the Mediterranean.

It is essential for the defense of peace in the eastern Mediterranean to settle the differences between Greece and Turkey on the basis of the Helsinki Final Act and on international law and custom, in addition to settling the Cyprus problem on the basis of the UN resolutions.

The two parties resolutely resist the Atlantic alinement policy of the Athens and Paris ruling circles and the insistent pressure to reintegrate these two countries in NATO. Far from resolving the problems posed by the crisis, imperialist integration merely contributes to greater economic and social decline and ensnares these countries still more in the crises. Thus they denounce the plan to enlarge the EC in the monopolies' interests. They intend to reject this harmful action against their people. They support a solid Franco-Greek cooperation which scrupulously respects each country's sovereignty and is conducted solely according to the two peoples' interests.

The two parties establish the strengthening of the working class and democratic struggles against the crisis and austerity policies of big capital in France and Greece and on the more general European capitalist scale.

It would be appropriate to move toward an exchange of views and experiences between the communist parties in this region of the world, which are faced by similar concerns among the working people.

In both countries monopoly power freely resorts to authoritarian practices, attacks democratic rights and freedoms and gives itself over to a bitter anticommunist campaign, all of which makes struggle for democracy increasingly necessary. In this regard, and for the respect of human rights, the PCF has renewed its demand that the Greek political refugees still in exile should have their legitimate claim met for immediate and unconditional repatriation.

The KKE is anxious to express its warm gratitude to the French Communists for their initial moves of solidarity in this direction.

Both parties express their desire to develop further their ties of solid friendship and active cooperation.

The talks related to extending cooperation between the two parties in the sphere of peace and disarmament. PZPR international section deputy chief Piatkowski also took part in the talks.

MARCHAIS ACCUSED OF BEING COMINTERN AGENT IN 1930'S

LD161017 Paris Domestic Service in French 0700 GMT 16 Mar 80 LD

[Text] On the occasion of a national gathering of the Communist Party at Nanterre yesterday Georges Marchais spoke again about his past during the occupation.

Today LE NOUVEL OBSERVATEUR accuses the Communist leader of having been an agent of the Communist International since the end of the thirties.

In L'HUMANITE Roland Leroy replies that Marchais went to the USSR for the first time at the end of January 1959. I was with him, the director of L'HUMANITE writes; we attended the 21st Congress of the CPSU.

This is another accusation that forces Georges Marchais to defend himself step by step against the attacks launched against him. So last night in Nanterre, the Communist leader explained that for the Communists the essential thing today is to demonstrate the cohesion of their party in the fight.

[Begin Marchais recording] It is only by helping, by strengthening considerably the Communist Party that it will be possible to beat the right, to promote change, to progress through democracy to socialism.

Monsieur Giscard d'Estaing knows this well and it is because he knows that this party is the decisive trump card in the hands of the workers and people's movement of our country that he concentrates all his blows on it, including the most degrading ones. It is not my concern to talk about this question, but there is one thing I can tell you. They can use every means, they can have recourse to the bases means, the [word indistinct] ones, they will not make our party give way and--as far as I am concerned--they will not make the secretary general of the party yield one inch. [applause] [end recording]

MARCHAIS INTERVIEWED ON WAR CHARGES, HUMAN RIGHTS

NC160817 Paris AFP in English 0810 GMT 16 Mar 80 NC

[Text] Paris, March 16, (AFP)--The French Communist Party's beleaguered leader Georges Marchais today produced files stashed with documents supporting his denials of having lied over his wartime past in Nazi Germany. During an exclusive interview with AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE he brought out dossiers weighing more than 5 kilos (11 lbs) to show the sheer weight of his defence. He said the files contained fresh evidence to back his denial of a report in the French news weekly L'EXPRESS that he stayed in Nazi Germany working in a warplane factory one year longer than he has admitted.

Mr Marchais, a possible candidate in next year's presidential elections, said the new documents would be published "when it suits me" to prove once and for all his claim that he was sent to Germany as forced labour during the war years, escaping back to France in May 1943. "As far as I am concerned, my conscience is clear," he said. "I have always told the truth."

Turning to his party's decision to create a committee for the defence of human rights and freedoms, Mr Marchais said it was aimed partly at countering a major imperialist campaign. "Imperialism is today waging an enormous campaign on the theme of human rights to cast a veil over its own oppressive, even criminally aggressive nature, and to magnify the persistent faults of certain socialist countries in democracy," he said. "We could not stand idly by in the face of such an attempt at mystification." Another reason was that most of those who called for the defence of human rights had a narrow and "mutilated" concept of the true definition.

On his abortive bid last week to get an emergency debate in the European Parliament on his claims of human rights violations in European Economic Community (EEC) countries, the Communist Party leader said he had evidence backing his accusations in the case of West Germany, Britain and France. He said that:

--In West Germany, 4,000 people were excluded from public service for the sole reason that they were Communists or progressives, and two million were being investigated by police for the same reason. Under the present regime the right to strike was limited in the private sector and forbidden in the public sector.

--In Britain's case, the British Army in Northern Ireland was stepping up arbitrary arrests and imprisonments without trial, carrying out tortures and opening camps.

--In France, the Giscardian regime was openly "the gendarme of Africa" with the support of all political forces in the country except the Communists. "The French bourgeoisie is playing a role, on the international level as well as the interior level, in total contradiction with the noble traditions of our people," he said.

He also attacked Europen institutions, saying that while the European Assembly president acted against detente by supporting the Olympics boycott call, EEC commissioners were using the "food weapon" to wield economic and political pressures on Third-World countries.

POPE REPORTEDLY TO BEGIN AFRICA VISIT 6 MAY

AU151615 Rome ANSA in English 1550 GMT 15 Mar 80 AU

[Text] Vatican City, March 15 (ANSA)--Pope John Paul II will most probably start his announced visit to Africa on May 6, according to Vatican sources. The Polish-born leader of the Roman Catholic Church is expected to include Kenya, Uganda, Zaire and maybe the Ivory Coast on his African itinerary, the same sources indicated. Speculation that the Ivory Coast would be one of the stops on the pope's travels stemmed from the fact that President Felix Houphouet-Boigny is the doyen of African chiefs-of-state. The Ivory Coast ambassador to the Holy See, Joseph Amichia, has spent long years in Rome and was formerly a member of the Curia's Council of Laymen. He is currently doyen of the diplomatic corps accredited to the Holy See.

COSSIGA CONGRATULATES MUGABE, OFFERS COOPERATION

AU17085 Rome ANSA in English 0840 GMT 17 Mar 80 AU

[Text] Rome, March 17 (ANSA)-- Premier Francesco Cossiga got off a telegram to Zimbabwe Prime Minister Robert Mugabe congratulating him, on behalf of the Italian Government, for the nomination to head the new government following the victory at the polls brought in by his party during general elections earlier this month. Cossiga expressed the hope that, at the end of the period of great sacrifice for the people of Zimbabwe, the new Salisbury governament will contribute to the preparations for full independence, slated for April 18, in a spirit of national reconciliation. The Italian premier also mentioned, in the text of his message, Zimbabwe's imminent entry into the international community where it can hold down a role for peace and progress. For this purpose, the telegram concluded, the Italian Government is ready to offer its cooperation, promoted with full respect for the principles of equality and sovereignty, for productive contacts and concrete ties with the new African state.

TERRORISTS KILL STATE'S ATTORNEY IN SALERNO

[Text] Salerno, March 17 (ANSA)--State Attorney Nicola Giacumbi was shot to death in this southern Italian port city Sunday in a terrorist killing claimed by an "Armed Squad of the Marxist-Leninist Community Party". The 52-year-old victim was opening the door of his apartment building when three masked gunmen approached him from behind and fired at least ten shots into his back. The public officials' wife, who witnessed the shooting, screamed for help then fainted. The casings of shells fired from a 7.65 caliber pistol were found at the site of the slaying. Later in the evening, an anonymous telephone caller speaking to the Salerno bureau of a Naples newspaper claimed paternity of the killing for the "Armed Squad". A female caller told the ANSA agency in Rome that, "we executed a servant in Salerno" and claimed the act for an "armed party". Nicola Giacumbi took no active part i. political affairs and had not been involved in any cases of a political nature. Upon learning of the latest terrorist slaying, Justice Minister Tommaso Morlino departed for Salerno. Late in to the night, police had failed to come up with any leads as to the identity of the killers despite the road-blocks immediately set up in the city. The "Armed Squad" was the name used one month ago by a telephone caller claiming responsibility for the destruction of seven new automobilies set afire in a dealer's showroom in Salerno.

PRESIDENT DISMISSES MILITARY TAKEOVER RUMORS

[Text] One can say that the alleged plans for a military takeover, which have been the subject of much talk, comment and speculation, are nothing but unfounded reports. That is the conclusion arrived at by the president of the republic, who conveyed it to Prime Minister Sa Carneiro at a meeting held in Belem Palace last night.

In a communique issued last night, the presidency of the republic lists the reasons which led President Ramalho Eanes to come to that conclusion. First, the communique states, the conclusion has been reached that the government has neither evidence nor facts justifying and enabling the initiation of investigations into the affair by the Judiciary Police. Such investigations, the communique adds, would be aimed at clarifying hypothetical attempts against the internal security of the state, allegedly connected with reported preparatory meetings envisaging [word indistinct] actions, in connection with which names of members of the Council of the Revolution have been publicly mentioned. Secondly, the communique issued by the presidency of the republic immediately makes it clear that the reports or rumors published by some news media be unfounded.

From these two reasons one can therefore conclude that the reports published on the subject cannot in any way be confirmed. The communique adds that the whole affair is a case of dissemination, through the press, of false or tendentious reports likely to affect the prestige of the authority of the state and of its institutions, and to create an atmosphere of public uneasiness in the country. The communique concludes by stating that the dissemination of such reports is a public crime, and that initiative to take the relevant legal action does not have to emanate from the presidency of the republic.

The communique explains, on the other hand, that the investigations which came to be mentioned at one stage would fall under the jurisdiction of the Judiciary Police and not of the Military Judiciary Police according to the new code of military justice.

Approached by us, the chief editor of the morning paper O DIA, one of the papers which published the report about the alleged military takeover, told us that his newspaper would not comment on the communique issued by the presidency of the republic or on the grave accusations leveled against it.

SA CARNEIRO VIEWS DOMESTIC, FOREIGN ISSUES

Opposition to Government

LD162348 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2100 GMT 16 Mar 80 LD

[Text] Prime Minister Sa Carneiro's interview on RTP-1 television is in progress right now. It is being conducted by journalists Jose Eduardo Moniz and Antonio Mega Ferreira. Foreign policy, industrial relations and agrarian reform are among the topics covered. But the first question put to Sa Carneiro concerns an accusation leveled against the government that it is governing on the basis of confrontation. Sa Carneiro agreed, but explained why:

[Begin Sa Carneiro recording] The government's life has not been easy. It has been made difficult by others who have forced confrontation upon it. This is why it is a government of confrontation, not because confrontation is the government's desire.

Rather, it is the initiative of members of the Council of the Revolution, of members of the opposition, an opposition that I have described as parliamentary and extraparliamentary, of trade union forces. There has indeed been a state of permanent confrontation forced upon the government. And the government goes on governing patiently, as is its duty, and firmly, without departing from the course it has mapped out and for which it stands answerable before the electorate. And thus it will continue. [end recording]

Even before the interview was aired, the Information and Propaganda Department of the Portuguese Communist Party sent a letter to RTP, pointing out that its constant attempts to air the views of members of the government are not matched by similar initiatives involving the opposition parties.

Polarization of Society

LD162350 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2200 GMT 16 Mar 80 LD

[Excerpt] Interviewed this evening on RTP-1 television, Prime Minister Sa Carneiro expressed the government's confidence in State Secretary for Agrarian Structuring Joao Goulao, defined the main guidelines of Portugal's foreign policy and expressed the government's wish to observe the 25 April anniversary of the 1974 coup with the announcement of measures of a positive nature. Sa Carneiro spoke on agrarian reform and relations among the government, the president of the republic and the Council of the Revolution.

Regarding the president of the republic, Sa Carneiro voiced the opinion that he stands for a political blueprint different from the Democratic Alliance's. Replying to a question, Sa Carneiro said that the opposition to the government is led by the Portuguese Communist Party, with the support of the Socialist Party and some members of the Council of the Revolution. In this regard, Sa Carneiro believes that there has been a political bipolarization in Portuguese society, with the Democratic Alliance and the Communist Party constituting two opposite poles.

[Begin recording] [Sa Carneiro] Political society, and Portuguese society in general, are becoming increasingly polarized. On the one hand we have the Democratic Alliance with its political blueprint and its majority; on the other hand we have the political blueprint by the Communist Party, the parliamentary and the extraparliamentary opposition led by the Communist Party.

[Question] Mr Prime Minister, if I may be allowed to interrupt, according to the context you have just portrayed, there are in fact three political blueprints, not two: the Democratic Alliance's; the president of the republic's, with his preference for a government coalition of Socialist and Social Democratic parties; and the Communist Party's blueprint. How do you view the interplay and relationship of these three blueprints?

[Answer] The fact is that in this context, and as was the case before, in my opinion the political blueprint advocated by the president of the republic is not a viable one. And that is why I do not take it into account. [sentence indistinct] hence, the fact that, in my opinion, Portuguese society is bipolarized between the pole represented by the Democratic Alliance and that represented by the Communist Party, have gathered other forces that are manipulated by the Communist Party.

[Question] Including the president of the republic?

[Answer] No. His excellency the president of the republic is, by himself, a one-man organ of sovereignty. He may have his own political views. [sentence indistinct] He may--he clearly should, indeed--opt for a political line if and when he decides to stand for another term of office. He should then clearly state what it is that he wants. But at this stage I think that he should adopt, and has indeed adopted, a reserved stance, should keep a certain distance, because for the first time we have a government enjoying majority support in parliament, and even if this government's blueprint differs from that advocated by the president of the republic, but precisely because it represents the choice of the electorate, the president of the republic respects it. [end recording]

Foreign Policy

LD170204 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2300 GMT 16 Mar 80 LD

[Excerpts] Prime Minister Sa Carneiro was interviewed this evening on the Portuguese television's channel one.

Speaking of foreign policy, Sa Carneiro cited his recent meetings with the ambassadors of the Portuguese-speaking African countries as examples of the implementation of the foreign policy contained in the government's program. He further stated:

[Begin Sa Carneiro recording] In our opinion, foreign policy cannot be defended and developed on ideological grounds, on the basis of political prejudices or of subservience to or participation in other powers' spheres of interest. Unlike certain other forces, we do not see Portugal's foreign policy as a kind of extension of some internationalism--be it Soviet internationalism, Third World internationalism or of any other variety.

Our foreign policy must express the defense of our own interests, must be the reflection of our policy at home, for one obviously cannot claim to be consistent while saying one thing over here and the opposite abroad, especially when one is speaking on Portugal's behalf. [end recording]

With regard to economic policy, Sa Carneiro said that it is aimed at raising purchasing power. Transport fares will not be raised overall. He said that compensation payments may soon be made in treasury bonds as an incentive to investment. He also said that the government intends to declare a tax truce so that, on a low interest rate, the state may recover the 50 billion escudos owed by taxpayers in back taxes.

On the agrarian reform the prime minister said that 95 tracts of land have been handed over to former owners and that actually the incidents over these hand-overs were very minor.

CARVALHO URGES POPULAR OFFENSIVE AGAINST GOVERNMENT

LD161558 Lisbon in Portuguese to Angola Mozambique and Sao Tome and Principe 1200 GMT 16 Mar 80 LD

[Text] Speaking at a clarification meeting held by the Popular Unity Force--FUP--in Evora, Otelo Saraiva de Carvalho criticized the Democratic Alliance government and said at a certain stage that government's violence should and can be countered by violence on the part of the workers and the popular masses--we quote. He further said that the present Cabinet is seeking to reduce to nothing the UCPS [collective units of production] chances to survive, and to bring back the system of big land estates to the Alentejo.

The former commander of Copcon, who came out in favor of a massive march from the Alentejo to Lisbon as one of the possible measures to be adopted by the rural workers, concluded by saying that the workers today should rely on their own forces and think not of backing down, but rather of carrying out offensive actions--we quote.

EC AIDE HAS 'VERY POSITIVE' TALKS ON EEC ENTRY

[Unattributed report: "Natali Describes Outcome of Visit to Lisbon as 'Extremely Positive!'"]

[Text] The EC Commission vice president left Lisbon yesterday after a meeting with the president of the republic. At the airport, Lorenzo Natali described the outcome of his visit as "extremely positive," reaffirming that "the next few months could be decisive for accelerating the process of negotiations" on Portugal's entry into the EEC.

Lorenzo Natali met with the prime minister, the deputy premier and foreign minister and ministers responsible for the economic areas most directly connected with the problems of Portugal's entry. Meeting with the new government made it possible "to take stock of the state of the 'dossiers' under negotiation and clarified some specific points in order to be able," he said, "to have as soon as possible the overall view necessary to enable real negotiations to begin." "We have made considerable progress from this viewpoint," Natali added.

In addition, he also stated, this visit to Lisbon made it possible "to become acquainted with the overall picture of the actions which the Portuguese Government intends to galvanize in cooperation with the EC in order to prepare the economic structure with a view to entry into the EEC. Government and EC Commission experts will be able to work out the details of these plans over the next few days."

Natali also noted the "very cordial and highly cooperative atmosphere" which he found in Lisbon, where he was able "also to ascertain that the European option is espoused by the great majority of the political forces."

With respect to the meeting with the president of the republic yesterday morning, the EEC Commission vice president described it as "very positive," and stated that General Ramalho Eanes "is following with great interest everything connected with entry into the EC."

Secretary of state for European Intergration Almeida Mendes was at the airport to see Lorenzo Natali off.

Foreign Ministry Communique

In a final communique on the visit the Foreign Ministry has reaffirmed that European integration "constitutes Portuguese foreign policy's top priority," adding that the visit "made possible a fruitful exchange of views on the problems existing in the negotiations, contributing to the formulation of guidelines of a general nature with respect to future cooperation" between Portugal and the EEC, "specifically through joint actions which will supplement Portugal's efforts to achieve our country's full and rapid European integration."

As we reported yesterday, EC Commission President Roy Jenkins arrives in Lisbon for a 3-day official visit the day after tomorrow.

SUAREZ REPORTEDLY HOLDS TALKS WITH BASQUE PRESIDENT

LD141329 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1130 GMT 14 Mar 80 LD

[Text] The Basque paper DEIA, which is close to the PNV [Basque Nationalist Party], reports that Carlos Garaicoechea, president of the Basque General Council, and Prime Minister Suarez held a meeting lasting several hours early yesterday morning at a location somewhere between Aranda de Duero and Somosierra, halfway between Madrid and Bilbao. Full details of the meeting have not been confirmed, either by government sources or by the Basque General Council. DEIA, citing reliable sources, says that the initiative for the meeting came from Adolfo Suarez, who made an urgent call following the establishment of contacts at ministerial level with the Basque General Council president's office. At these preliminary contacts the venue for the meeting was fixed as the province of Burgos for the reason already given: it is halfway between the Basque Country and Madrid.

The same sources say that the reason for the urgency was Suarez's concern, as expressed to Garaicoechea, over the lack of a compromise over PNV terms for returning to parliament. It must be stressed that while sources in the PNV Executive agree with DEIA that a meeting was held, UCD sources knew nothing of the meeting. When we contacted the Secretariat of State for Information they told us they could make no reply to our questions as to whether the meeting was held.

Government Denial

[Text] The Secretariat of State for Information has denied that Prime Minister Adolfo Suarez and the president of the Basque General Council, Carlos Garaicoechea, held a meeting somewhere near Burgos early on Thursday morning. A report to this effect was published today by the Bilbao daily DEIA, which added that the meeting, held at the request of Prime Minister Suarez, was aimed primarily at obtaining the Basque Nationalist Party's vitae for the bill regulating statutes of educational establishments.

COMMERCE MINISTER, DELEGATION LEAVE FOR PRC

LD151130 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1000 GMT 15 Mar 80 LD

[Text] Hector Arenas reports from Madrid's Barajas Airport:

Some minutes ago, a large and important Spanish delegation left for China. It is led by Commerce and Tourism Minister Garcia Diez and is composed of businessmen, financiers and the directors of some state enterprises. This visit, the first to be paid by a Spanish minister after the Spanish monarchs' official visit to the PRC, hopes to increase Spanish opportunities in that large Asian market which, until now, has been reserved exclusively to the EEC countries, Japan and the United States.

Before boarding the plane taking him to Beijing, Commerce Minister Garcia Diez said that relations between Spain and China are now very good, but there is a good deal of ignorance on both sides, especially on economic affairs. During this visit, agreements will not be signed but there will be talks on increasing Spanish exports of iron and steel and later of transport, railway stock, shipbuilding and chemicals. Spain, which hopes to assure important coal sources, will suggest to China the joint development of new mines in that country.

CONSERVATIVE MPS THREATEN VOTE AGAINST OLYMPICS BAN

ID161302 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1233 GMT 16 Mar 80 ID

[By Arthur Williamson, PA political correspondent]

[Text] Backbench Conservative MPs are threatening a revolt against the governmental call for a Moscow Olympics boycott unless it is matched by trade sactions against Russia. They will insist in tomorrow's debate on the boycott that British athletes should not be saddled with the onus of operating it.

Mr. Terrence Higgins, Conservative MP for Worthing, and a former Olympic runner, said today that the athletes would be persuaded that the government was serious in its attitude only if they could see it was doing other things besides calling for a boycott of the games. "There will be many abstentions among my colleagues unless we are convinced that this is so," said Mr Higgins who is chairman of the Conservative parliamentary committee on sport.

He and other members of the committee have tabled an amendment to the government motion condemning the Russian invasion of Afghanistan and asking the House to support a British boycott of the Moscow games. The amendment calls for a ban on the export of good and materials which can help the Russian war effort, and an end to the sale of butter and other EEC surpluses to the Soviet Union and cancellation of trade credits.

"If the government consents to these moves then we shall support the boycott of the games and so will the athletes," said Mr Higgins. "But we are not going on supporting the export of machined tools and other goods to help the Russians fight the Afghans, and trade credits and the sale of the butter mountain to the Soviet Union if the athletes alone are going to be used for political purposes."

Already about 20 Conservative MPs, representing a cross-section of opinion on the government benches, are supporting the amendment. The sponsors, officers of the sports committee, believe many others will show their hands in the course of the debate if they find the government is insisting that the athletes alone make the sacrifice. There is a free vote for both Conservative and opposition MPs but many on the Labour side are not convinced either that a simple ban on going to the Olympics is of sufficient weight or importance. They may throw in their lot with the Conservative rebels and help to bring home to the government the need for something more tangible than just a "hit and miss" effort by individual athletes.

The debate will coincide with a meeting in Geneva, on the initiative of Australia, and attended by Mr Douglas Hurd, minister of state for the Foreign Office, which is to consider providing facilities for athletes to compete against each other as an alternative to going to Moscow. It is stressed in Whitehall that the conference will not be considering the arrangement of an alternative to the Moscow Olympics but simply how facilities could be provided in countries which have already declared that their athletes are not going. The government believes that there is considerable support for its move to stop athletes going to Moscow and that it will have a sizeable majority at the end of the debate tomorrow night. So far the possibility of defeat has not been considered.

DENKTAS RETURNS FROM LONDON, MAKES STATEMENT

TA152058 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1930 GMT 15 Mar 80 TA

[Excerpts] President Rauf Denktas has said that the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus [TFSC] is not opposed to Turkish Cypriot-Greek Cypriot partnership in the managing of the hotels in Maras [Varosha].

Denktas, who concluded his private visit to London, returned to Cyprus today and made a statement at Ercan State Airport.

Pointing out that the Greek Cypriot interference in the Ercan air corridor is unacceptable, Denktas said that UN Secretary General Kurt Waldheim should persuade the Greek Cypriots to abandon this attitude, which violates the sixth article of the agreement reached between himself and Kiprianou.

Noting that Greek Cypriot leader Kiprianou acted as the president of the whole of Cyprus during his visit to London and presented the Cyprus problem entirely from the Greek Cypriot viewpoint, Denktas said that during his stay in London, he replied to this false propaganda and exerted efforts to render it ineffective as much as possible.

Denktas said: Kiprianou wishes to come to the negotiating table as the government of Cyprus--which he obtained through the use of arms--and under [the influence of] a decision, which he secured as a result of international attacks, which is not based on facts and which merely reflects Greek Cypriot propaganda. I sincerely explained why this is not possible, and this was met with understanding.

Denktas said that, during his meeting with British Government officials, he explained that the British Government is faced with the responsibility of treating the two communities in Cyprus equally.

In reply to a remark that if the Cyprus problem was not created in 1963 and if the Greek Cypriots had not attempted to annex Cyprus to Greece by clutching onto the bases and hiding behind them then the bases would have been closed in the years 1967 and 1968, Denktas noted that Kiprianou attempted--without any rights--to negotiate the subject of the bases with the British as one of the five parties which signed the 1960 agreements. Denktas stated that Kiprianou was not encouraged on this issue and that the British Government cannot negotiate the bases with the Greek Cypriots at a meeting not attended by the TFSC. Pointing out that the subject of the bases has been dealt with in the agreement he reached with Kiprianou, Denktas said: This is a joint subject which should be handled within the framework of Cyprus' sovereignty, guarantees and disarmament.

Replying to a question whether a declaration of an independent state would arise in the face of the Greek Cypriots' international attacks and provocations, Denktas noted that we are independent despite the word federated in our name and said: With our soil, our soldiers, our constitution, our government and all the organs of our government, we are fully independent in every field and we are a state and a government equal to the Greek Cypriots. Denktas stated that the issue consists of recognition and requesting other states to recognize us. He said that this could be requested directly or it could come indirectly without requesting.

Denktas also added that he was pleased with his contacts in Britain. Denktas was received at Ercan State Airport by Legislative Assembly President Oguz Korhan, Turkish Ambassador to Lefkosa [Nicosia] Inal Batu, Turkish Cypriot Peace Forces Commander Lt Gen Kemal Yamak, Prime Minister Mustafa Cagatay, ministers, certain deputies and military and civilian officials.

ATAKOL DISCUSSES INTERCOMMUNAL TALKS WITH GALINDO-POHL

[Text] The minister of foreign affairs, defense and tourism, Kenan Atakol, has said that UN Secretary General Kurt Waldheim will take certain new steps regarding the resumption of the intercommunal talks. Atakol said that this news was delivered to him by the secretary general's special representative in Cyprus, Galindo-Pohl, whom he received for the first time today, and by Galindo-Pohl's assistant, Remy Gorge. Atakol noted that the secretary general wanted to hear the views of the concerned parties--through his representatives--in connection with the steps he would take. Atakol added that he had informed Galindo-Pohl of the views of the Turkish Cypriot Government. He pointed out that the representatives had expressed their views and New York's views in connection with the resumption of the intercommunal talks.

Asked to comment on the Greek Cypriot press allegations that the latest document produced by the Greek Cypriot administration meant the rejection of Waldheim's initiatives, Atakol said that it was not a question of rejecting or adopting Waldheim's proposals, because Waldheim was conducting an exercise to bring the two communities together. Galindo-Pohl and Gorge met the Greek Cypriot foreign minister, Rolandhis, this morning.

KIPRIANOU RECEIVES CREDENTIALS OF MONGOLIAN AMBASSADOR

NC141624 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1600 GMT 14 Mar 80 NC

[Text] President Kiprianou stressed that if the UN secretary general's efforts for the resumption of the intercommunal talks are to be successful there must be a change in the other side's attitude. Speaking today during the presentation ceremony of the credentials by the first ambassador to Cyprus of the Mongolian People's Republic, Mr Shagdarsuren, President Kiprianou stressed that the Greek Cypriot side has been as constructive as it could and it has done everything possible in order to contribute to the success of the UN secretary general's efforts. He added: I hope that the other side will also display a similar spirit and will abandon its intransigence.

In his address the Mongolian ambassador reaffirmed his government's support and that of the Mongolian people, for the Cypriot people's just struggle for a Cyprus solution based on full respect for the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Cyprus.

PAPANDREOU, RALLIS CLASH OVER U.S. AMBASSADOR'S VISIT

AT151844 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 14 Mar 80 pp 1, 3 AT [Excerpts] Severe exchanges were made yesterday between the government and PASOK as a result of a visit by U.S. Ambassador McCloskey to Greek Armed Forces installations at Larissa.

Referring to the visit by U.S. Ambassador McCloskey, PASOK Chairman A. Papandreou made the following statement:

"On 12 March the U.S. ambassador, 'accompanied by his wife and embassy personnel' visited the headquarters of the air force and conferred with Air Force Lieutenant General Protopapas and the chief of the First Army Corps, Lieutenant General Vorias.

"It is difficult for one to believe that the Greek Government allowed the ambassador of a foreign country to visit Greek military installations and to confer directly with leading personalities of our country's armed forces.

"Naturally the pro-U.S. position of both the prime minister as well as of the minister of national defense are well known. Yet we do not believe that Karamanlis' foreign policy of converting Greece into a satellite would have taken on such dimensions, which remind us of the period when a representative of the government in welcoming Van Fleet stated: 'General, here is your army.'"

Rallis' reply

Answering a question on the statements by the chairman of PASOK, Foreign Minister Yeoryios Rallis made the following statement:

"I fail to understand why Papandreou was irritated by the protocol visit of the U.S. ambassador to the chief of the First Army Corps and to General Protopapas. In any case these were not the only two visits by Mr McCloskey. He also visited other authorities such as the nomarch and the metropolitan bishop of Larissa. Such protocol visits, in any case, are customary by ambassadors during visits to large provincial centers.

"In the Republic of Greece the ambassadors of foreign countries do not have to ask for permission to leave the capital nor do they submit to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs a list of their travel movements.

"For 5 and 1/2 years Papandreou has continuously, on every given opportunity, accused the Greek Government of making concessions and of becoming a satellite. These accusations of his are continually being proved wrong by developments.

"Despite all this, however, his opposition mania does not permit him to understand that the Greek Government conducts an independent foreign policy, the main goal of which is to make Greece strong and ready to deal with any threat."

REPORTAGE ON U.S. TRANSPORT PLANE CRASH IN ADANA

ANATOLIA Report on Crash

LD141638 Ankara ANATOLIA in Turkish 1420 GMT 14 Mar 80 LD

[Text] Adana, 14 March, ANATOLIA--An American C-130 aircraft crashed in the vicinity of the Kuyumcu village about 20 km from Adana at about 1530 today. The location of the crash has been determined to be on a slope. [Words indistinct] helicopters have been unable to land due to the unsuitability of the terrain and a great deal of mud.

The first people to approach the aircraft, which crashed 16 km from the Karaisali highway, were local villagers. However, they could not get close to the aircraft due to the fact that it was burning.

It is believed that there were four persons in the crashed aircraft but it has not been determined yet whether there are any survivors. An American reconnaissance aircraft is keeping a watch on the site of the crash but is so far unable to land.

SOVIET TEAM OF EXPERTS EXPECTED IN SEYDISEHIR

TA161505 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1415 GMT 16 Mar 80 TA

[Text] Konya, 16 Mar (AA)--The Seydisehir aluminium works operated by the state enterprise "Etibank" will be enlarged with the contribution of the Soviet Union. A team of 15 technicians from the Soviet Union is expected to arrive in Seydisehir for this purpose. The aluminium works, which first started production in 1974, will be expanded under an existing framework agreement between the two countries. The expansion project includes a new furnace and two electrolysis mills.

TRANSPORT AGREEMENT SIGNED WITH BULGARIA

TA151109 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 15 Mar 80 TA

[Text] A protocol on cooperation between Turkey and Bulgaria on sea and land transportation was signed in Ankara today. Transportation Minister Huseyin Ozalp and Bulgarian Transport Minister Vasil Tsanov signed the protocol.

In a statement during the signing ceremony, Ozalp said that the protocol was the result of successful work conducted by the joint Turkish, Bulgarian transportation committee established in 1975. Also speaking at the ceremony, Tsanov said that many difficulties were solved in the talks held to promote cooperation between the two countries.

A TRT correspondent has learned that the protocol envisages establishing a ferryboat service between Turkey and Bulgaria to transport TIR [International Highway Transport] trucks. The ferryboats are expected to travel between Varna in Bulgaria and Trabzon and Samsun ports in Turkey. The protocol also solves difficulties connected with differences in oil costs for trucks and trains. The same fuel prices will be established in both countries for transiting trucks. The Bulgarian delegation headed by Transportation Minister Tsanov left Turkey today at 1200.

ECONOMIC ADVISER RETURNS FROM EUROPE, MAKES STATEMENT

TA161955 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 16 Mar 80 TA

[Text] Under secretary of the prime minister's office and deputy secretary of the State Planning Organization, Turgat Ozal, has said that he believed that the amount of loans to Turkey within the framework of the OECD and the rescheduled Turkish foreign debts would amount to over $4 billion. Ozal returned home today after completing a visit to the FRG, Britain, Belgium and France.

In a statement at Ankara's Esenboga Airport, Ozal said that a great part of the financial aid to be extended by the OECD to Turkey in accordance with its commitment meeting to be held in Paris on 26 March would be immediately available for use. Pointing out that discussions regarding the rescheduling of Turkish foreign debts reached a constructive phase, Ozal said that all preliminary work connected with the commitment meeting to be held in Paris was completed.

Ozal said that he held positive talks with government officials in Bonn, London, Brussels and Paris regarding the commitment meeting as well as the postponing of Turkish foreign debts. Ozal added that, during his visit, he briefed industrialists and businessmen on Turkey's new economic policies, giving details on the new foreign investment law. Ozal said that the issue of nonguaranteed trade debts was also discussed during his talks.

Ozal noted that, in a meeting with OECD Secretary General Van Lennep in Paris, the situation was reviewed once more at the threshold of the commitment meeting. Ozal said that after this meeting he felt that financial aid to meet Turkey's needs would be forthcoming. Ozel ended his statement by saying that he would go to Paris on 24 March in order to participate in the commitment meeting in which the OECD countries would determine the aid to be extended to Turkey for this year.

FINANCE MINISTER RETURNS FROM ISLAMIC BANK MEETING

TA151701 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1500 GMT 15 Mar 80 TA

[Text] Finance Minister Ismet Sezgin has announced that the aid to be extended by Saudi Arabia to Turkey this year will be finalized at the end of March and will be a significant amount. Sezgin, who attended the Islamic Development Bank's directors meeting in Saudi Arabia, returned to Ankara today. In a statement at Ankara's Esenboga Airport, Sezgin said that he held bilateral meetings with finance ministers from several Islamic countries including the Saudi finance minister during his stay in Saudi Arabia.

Commenting on his meeting with Saudi Finance and National Economy Minister Muhammad al-Ali Aba al-Khayl, Sezgin said that with the aid to be secured from Saudi Arabia, the foreign support necessary for the success of the government propgram would be insured.

Sezgin noted that the amount and form of this contribution will be finalized within 2 weeks.

NEW UK AMBASSADOR TO ANKARA INTERVIEWED ON AID, MIDEAST

TA151658 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1455 GMT 15 Mar 80 TA

[Text] Ankara 15 March (AA)--Britain's recently appointed Ambassador to Ankara Peter Harold Laurence said no political strings were attached to the ongoing negotiations for aid to Turkey. In an interview given to AA, Ambassador Laurence said all negotiations related to aid, whether connected with emergency aid under OECD auspices or with debt rescheduling, were conducted entirely within an economic framework. He added as far as Britain was concerned, there was no question of combining economic questions with the political.

Britain would join the activities aimed at helping Turkey out of economic difficulties as far as her limited possibilities would allow, he said.

Asked whether there was any change in British policy toward the Middle East, the ambassador noted British policy was formed in the light of world developments. He acknowledged peace in the Middle East was dependent largely on the settlement of the Palestinian question, and believed the Palestinian people had as much a right as others to live in peace without oppression and to fulfill the requirements of their beliefs. He declined to say, however, whether this meant acknowledging the right to an independent Palestinian state.

Pointing out the vital importance of the Middle East for Western interests, Ambassador Laurence believed, however, these interests should be developed from the political and commercial veiwpoint. He hoped the Soviet Union would not be led to fresh provocation in the region after Afghanistan, for in that case there may be no alternative left except to counter by force.

AIR FORCE COMMANDER LEAVES FOR PAKISTAN

TA141126 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 14 Mar 80 TA

[Text] Air Force Commander Gen Tahsin Sahinkaya left for Pakistan today for an official visit as the guest of the Pakistani Air Force Commander Gen (Enver Sanim). General Sahinkaya, who will visit certain Pakistani Air Force installations during his visit there, will return home on Friday, 21 March.

ISRAELI FREIGHTER HITS PIER, RUNS AGROUND AT DARDANELLES

TA151048 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 15 Mar 80 TA

[Text] The Lilakh, an Israeli freighter sailing from Constante in Romania to Piraeus in Greece, hit the pier at Eceabat in the Dardanelles in an effort to avoid a collision with Nicos, a Greek freighter coming from the opposite direction. A TRT correspondent reports that the incident occurred at 2335 last night and that the Israeli freighter ran aground as a result. No one was injured in the incident. Eceabat public prosecutor Alaettin Haksever said that work was under way to determine the damage.

Captain To Be Tried

TA161022 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 16 Mar 80 TA

[Text] The captain of the Lilakh, the Israeli freighter which hit the Eceabat pier in the Dardanelles and caused great damage 2 nights ago, has been detained on the grounds that he was responsible for the incident. The Eceabat public prosecutor has said that the captain, Avraham Greenberg, will be put on trial following a preliminary interrogation today. The prosecutor also said that a committee of experts was trying to determine the extent of the damage to the pier.

DEMIREL HOLDS NEWS CONFERENCE, DISCUSSES SHORTAGES

[Test] Pointing out that there was no need for panic or hoarding, Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel said that the shortage of basic commodities has ended and that everyone can find what he wants everywhere. Expressing his belief that national problems can be solved through trust and belief, Demirel calledcon the citizens to continue believing in his government. Demirel was speaking at a news conference held at the prime minister's office in Ankara today.

During his news conference, Demirel spoke about the condition of basic commodities in the market. Demirel said that his government had solved the shortage of oil by overcoming difficulties in oil distribution: He added that Turkey's diesel oil needs for march were 387,000 tons and that 237,000 tons had already been distributed by 15 March and that 582,000 tons of diesel oil would be distributed by the end of March. Demirel noted that this was 71 percent more than the market needs. Demirel said, no one should worry that this supply will not continue, and resort to hoarding.

Demirel said that cooking oil had been imported in order to meet Turkey's anticipated needs of over 4 months and that the first order of 10,000 tons out of the total amount of 82,500 tons was bought from Spain and France and was expected to arrive in Turkey at any time. Noting that 25,000 tons of cooking oil would arrive by the end of this month, Demirel said that this should meet Turkey's needs during this period.

Further Details

TA161650 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1640 GMT 16 Mar 80 TA

[Text] Ankara, March 15 (AA)--Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel called on citizens not to hoard or stockpile goods, which may cause further problems. At a press conference Sunday, he said certain shortages arose from transportation problems, which would be solved with the end of the diesel oil shortage. He claimed he had left behind a Turkey with everything available back in 1977, but found "a country of scarcities" when he returned to power at the end of 1979.

He criticized RPP leader Bulent Ecevit for going to Tarsus this weekend to address an outdoor rally, claiming the RPP government had turned everything for the worse in that region. Demirel cited figures for the years 1978-79 to support his allegation that RPP had practiced partisanship and divisionism in carrying services such as road constructing, drinking water, electricity and social services to the rural areas. He claimed villages which had voted for the RPP in the general elections had been "rewarded" while those who voted for the JP were "punished."

His government was trying to think of the future and prepare projects so that Turkey would not be facing greater difficulties in the days to come, he said.

Asked whether national problems could be solved more easily "without Ecevit and Demirel" on the political scene, Demirel rejected the idea of an "imposed government parachuted from above." He noted party leaders had been brought to office by the millions. "Democracy comes from the grassroots," he commented, and "you cannot have democracy without the people." He challenged anyone with complaints against him to settle his account at the Justice Party congress in October. National Salvation Party leader Necmettin Erbakan had a right to complain, he said, because he provided support to the government.

Demirel rejected the idea that anarchy was being fanned "from abroad," claiming "anarchy originates at home, but there are provokers abroad." There might be centers of provocation in Federal or Democratic Germany or Czechoslovakia, for example, he said, but this government could not do anything about that. What the government could do was to deal with the sources of anarchy at home, he added. The question had "nothing to do with freedom of thought," he commented, and the spectre of a so-called communist party of Turkey could not intimidate anyone.

Asked whether he was aware of how much meat a wage-earner could buy after his government's recent economic decisions, Demirel said he was no wizard, but was merely trying to "control" inflation.

The prime minister said there were "no difficulties" in the way of the defense cooperation agreement recently initialed between Turkey and the United States, but that the "supplements" to the agreement were being worked out. To be "candid," he said, Turkey wanted to know what military aid the United States could supply to Turkey over the next 5 years, in the form of arms and materiel, which was the "basis" of the supplements. Without specifying a date, Demirel said the agreement should be signed in the "not too distant future."

ECEVIT CRITICIZES DEMIREL GOVERNMENT FOR PARTISANSHIP

[Text] RPP leader Bulent Ecevit said that Demirel had claimed that "liberated areas" would be eliminated within 100 days, however, this is being spread to the (?most remote) corners of the country.

In a speech made in Icel's Mut District today, Ecevit said that the state cadres are being filled by militants, and terrorism, quarrels and oppression are thus spreading to all parts of the country directly by the state. Ecevit continued: Our society is being led toward chaos, our democracy toward an abyss and our state toward ruin through moves, on the one hand, to create an atmosphere favorable to instigators as a result of the crisis, which is further aggravated by the insufferable high cost of living and unemployment, and on the other hand, to transform differences of opinion, belief and sect into hostility and clashes by exacerbating them and to place bullets and instigators in government offices and schools. All this is aimed at fully establishing a system of exploitation whereby the oppressed and the exploited will not be able to raise their voices and seek their rights.

Ecevit noted that his party was able to take certain limited steps toward changing the exploitative system when it was in power and that these steps were limited because his party was not alone in government and it did not have a majority in the parliament. Noting that even this limited amount was sufficient to intimidate certain circles, whose interests [words indistinct], Ecevit added: [passage indistinct].

EEC FINANCE MINISTERS MEET ON BRITISH BUDGET ISSUE

[Alan Osborn dispatch: "Tough Going for EEC Budget Cut Decision"]

[Text] Brussels--EEC finance ministers met in Brussels for an hour and a quarter yesterday, but the row between Britain and the other members of the Common Market over the size of the United Kingdom's budget contribution is as bad as ever. Barring some small miracle at today's meeting of foreign ministers, when the same topic will come up, it looks as if Mrs Thatcher, the prime minister, will face a monumental rebuff when she meets other heads of government at the EEC summit in just less than fortnight's time.

Sir Geoffrey Howe, the chancellor, was not quite so gloomy as all this would suggest at the end of yesterday's meeting, though his reasons did not apparently convince others. He offered no new figures on either the British net contribution (probably more than 1,300 million pounds sterling this year) nor the size of the reduction the government is seeking.

His view that Britain's case is "overwhelmingly strong," has not been revised and he believes that because of this the rest of the Community will agree "quickly" on a solution. This was not challenged for the simple reason that no other minister spoke on the subject during the meeting. Sir Geoffrey thought this significant, especially in the case of France because yesterday's meeting would have been an ideal occasion for it to demand a precise solution from the Brussels Commission.

Last week the French cabinet said unless such a plan for the budget was produced France would not even be willing to discuss the matter at the summit. But the finance minister Mr Monory was silent on the matter yesterday.

Some hopes are being pinned to a meeting between the Dutch foreign minister, Mr Van der Stee, [as published] and government leaders in London today at which the Dutch minister will probably urge Britain to moderate its demands. But he said yesterday he was "very pessimistic" about a solution at the summit.

On other matters, Sir Geoffrey said the government hoped to have completed its review of the European Monetary System [EMS] by the time of the summit. This raises the possibility that Mrs Thatcher may be able to offer British participation in the system as some kind of bargaining counter on the budget, though the chancellor indicated little sympathy for the idea of "linking" subjects in this way.

Remarkably little time was taken up with a discussion of the new American anti-inflation measures, though ministers did discuss the EMS itself. One of the most striking things here was a review of the system's operations over the first year and an analysis of its problems, which caused some amusement among British officials by reading almost word for word the same views as the British experts gave when the EMS was being drawn up 18 months ago. The latest report from the EEC Monetary Committee warned to rising and divergent inflation rates, growing OPEC surpluses and the difficulties of devising a proper policy for the dollar.

Mr Lahnstein, the German [state] secretary for finance, denied that Germany was losing interest in the EMS. He said it wanted the system to take "a very big step forward." But he said this could not be done for legalistic reasons in the next 12 months and therefore the government had concluded the second stage would best be postponed.

PAHR VIEWS INTERNATIONAL ISSUES, FOREIGN POLICY

AU171430 Vienna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German 15 Mar 80 p 3 AU

[F. Katscher and G. Hoffmann-Osternhof interview of Willibald Pahr, Austrian foreign minister in ARBEITER-ZEITUNG--time and place of interview not given, presumably in Vienna prior to 13 March 1980]

[Text] Despite our condemnation of the Soviet intervention, our relations with the Soviet Union and the other Eastern states have not changed. With regard to the United States, we will pursue a policy that is in compliance with our interests. With Yugoslavia, there is a great parallelism of interests, and we are trying to maintain particularly good relations with Belgrade. This was stated by Foreign Minister Pahr in an interview with ARBEITER-ZEITUNG. His announcement about the PLO's recognition by Austria [made in the same interview] has already been published as an advance excerpt.

ARBEITER-ZEITUNG: The Austrian ambassador in Colombia, Dr Selzer, has been released. Is Austria's role in the hostage affair in Colombia now over, or does Austria still play a role in this issue?

Pahr: I believe our role must not be over, because it would be morally unjustifiable if we were now to say: We have achieved the release of our own ambassador, now we no longer care about the others. The taking of hostages, particularly involving diplomats, is indeed something that necessarily affects everyone. And just as we have always endeavored to do everything within our power for the American hostages in Tehran, this applies even more to Bogota, where we were directly involved. Hence one of the two Austrian diplomats whom I dispatched to Bogota to deal with the hostage affair has remained there. He is at the disposal of the group of the directly involved states, acting more or less as its secretary, and our residence is the place where the representatives of the 15 states meet.

Nicaragua Visit Planned

ARBEITER-ZEITUNG: Keeping to the topic of South America: Is it true that you will visit Nicaragua?

Pahr: In May I will pay an official visit to Brazil, and in view of my crowded schedule I do not intend, actually, to visit any other South American country. However, I do intend--if it is at all possible--to interrupt my return trip to go to Nicaragua for about 1 day. I do not want to pay an official visit there, but I want to look around to see in what way Austria can further support the endeavors of the new Nicaraguan Government.

Austria's Relations With the Soviet Union

ARBEITER-ZEITUNG: In what respect have our relations with Moscow changed in connection with Afghanistan, or have they remained completely unchanged?

Pahr: Our relations have remained unchanged. This has not altered anything about the fact, however, that we have said very plainly and very clearly that an intervention such as that of the Soviet Union in Afghanistan is condemned by Austria, because it is regarded as being in contradiction to the UN Charter and as an attitude constituting a serious jeopardy for the policy of detente. We have also adopted a corresponding position within the framework of the United Nations, at the special General Assembly session where the Afghanistan question was discussed.

ARBEITER-ZEITUNG: How have our relations with our direct neighbors in the East developed in connection with Afghanistan?

Pahr: As in our relations with the Soviet Union, there have been no changes. We have very clearly expressed our opinion about Afghanistan to these states, too. In this context, I should like to draw attention to my talks with GDR Foreign Minister Fischer. Even in my toast I very clearly referred to this problem. Our neighbors respect our views.

ARBEITER-ZEITUNG: America is trying to induce various countreies to side with its position. What is Austria's attitude in this respect?

Pahr: These endeavors by the United States are naturally quite understandable, and the states that are allied with the United States certainly have a commitment in this respect. We, however, will pursue a policy that is in compliance with our interests, for we are not allied with anyone, although we strongly sympathize with the United States, particularly for ideological reasons. However, we are not allies, and therefore the Austrian interests are our primary consideration, based also on the strength of the status of permanent neutrality, and we will let ourselves be guided only by these interests.

America's Foreign Policy

ARBEITER-ZEITUNG: In extremem situations--the Tehran hostage affair, Afghanistan--U.S. foreign policy has adopted a relatively hard line, but lately this policy seems to have become somewhat inconsistent. How do you interpret this situation?

Pahr: I do not want to criticize U.S. foreign policy, but I think anyone who has followed U.S. foreign policy in the past few years will notice that it has been virtually characterized by a certain inconsistency--and not just recently, but for quite some time. I am thinking, for example, of the loudly proclaimed human rights policy that today seems to have been completely forgotten, and also of the hard line taken vis-a-vis Iran in connection with the hostage affair, which then all of a sudden completely changed; now nothing is to be heard any more about the sanctions against Iran announced by the United States. Here one is bound to notice a rather quick change in the current views.

Yugoslavia: Artificially Played up

ARBEITER-ZEITUNG: You visited Yugoslavia and had talks with the foreign minister. What is your impression of Yugoslavia's situation in the period immediately before Tito's imminent demise? Are there any dangers, or is this something that has rather been played up by the press?

Pahr: I believe that this was artificially played up. We--and Chancellor Kreisky has repeatedly confirmed that recently--are frimly convinced that today Yugoslavia is an internally stable state, and that today it is not directly threatened from outside, either.

ARBEITER-ZEITUNG: In this context it has turned out that the relations between Austria and Yugoslavia are very good. Can you outline that for us in greater detail?

Pahr: Actually, I would like to repeat the characterization that I gave last year on the occasion of Yugoslav Foreign Minister Vrhovec's visit to Austria. At that time I pointed out that between Austria and Yugoslavia there is a very great parallelism of interests, perhaps more so than with any other country. This means that everything that is beneficial for Yugoslavia is also beneficial for Austria, and everything that is dangerous to Yugoslavia is also dangerous for Austria, and vice versa. Proceeding from this premise, in my opinion it is not only necessary to attempt to achieve particularly good relations with Yugoslavia, but also to support Yugoslavia as far as possible in attaining its objectives because this also serves the attainment of our own aims and wishes. [paragraph continues]

For example, if we can contribute something toward Yugoslavia's security, then that is also a contribution toward our own security.

DIE PRESSE: CARTER'S ECONOMIC PROGRAM 'PLAYING WITH FIRE'

AU181024 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 18 Mar 80 p 10 AU

["KH" commentary: "Playing With Fire"]

[Text] Afghanistan and the Tehran hostages are still diverting the public's attention from American domestic problems. But when the presidential campaign in the coming months increasingly shifts to domestic problems, Carter may well find himself in even greater difficulties than in the foreign policy field. The nearly 20-percent inflation constitutes an enormous social problem in a country where people provide for their old age almost exclusively through private life insurance without escalation clauses, and through security holdings. Millions of people who up to now were able to live relatively well on their savings now find themselves reduced to poverty. Others can no longer afford an apartment with a mortgage loan interest rate of 20 percent. If in addition Carter now boosts interest rates and energy prices as a long-term measure against inflation he is playing with fire. He will hardly succeed in getting the galloping inflation under control before the elections, but living conditions are going to continue to deteriorate. Carter is now being presented with the bill for years of absence on the economic front.

PRESS VIEWS RECOGNITION OF PLO REPRESENTATIVE

AU141125 [Editorial Report AU] The major Vienna dailies carry on 14 March extensive, mostly factual reports on the official recognition by the Austrian Government of Dr Ghazi Husayn, PLO representative to the international organizations in Vienna, as official representative of the PLO to the Austrian Government. They carry quotes from an article published in the Vienna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG on 13 March which first broke the news and a report by Vienna Domestic Service on 13 March on the recognition, which included interviews with Chancellor Kreisky, PLO representative Dr Ghazi Husayn, and the opposition party spokesman for foreign affairs, Dr Ludwig Steiner. In addition, most of the papers were granted further interviews by Chancellor Kreisky, Foreign Minister Pahr, PLO's Husayn, opposition spokesman Dr Steiner, and Israeli Ambassador in Vienna Ben-Ya'acov.

Asked to comment on the criticism voiced by the opposition party spokesman for foreign affairs, Dr Ludwig Steiner, Chancellor Kreisky is quoted by ARBEITER-ZEITUNG as saying: "I had announced all this in the United Nations; it was a known fact that we recognize the PLO. It only takes some time concerning a matter that is complicated in international law--normally we only recognize states; the Sovereign Order of the Knights of Malta is the only exception so far." "The OeVP [the Austrian People's Party] has always fought our Mideast policy. Now they can see with their own eyes that several West European states are following this policy." The same paper states that Israeli ambassador in Vienna, Ben-Ya'acov, refused to comment on the matter, confining himself to stating that "the matter is very serious" and that he was awaiting instructions from Israel.

DIE PRESSE quotes Dr Ghazi Husayn as having said that Austria's step goes far beyond anything the other West Europeans have done so far: "My status is definitely a better one than that of the PLO representative in Madrid." Husayn is reported as having expressed satisfaction because the Austrian decision complements "the daily growing support for the PLO in France, the FRG, and Great Britain." Asked by DIE PRESSE to comment on the recognition, Foreign Minister Pahr reportedly said: "Austria recognized the PLO already last year as representative of the Palestinian people."

The recognition of Dr Ghazi Husayn as representative of the Palestinian people in Austria therefore constitutes merely a consistent further step, Pahr continued, and assured that the PLO had not promised him any concessions as consideration for the recognition. "We do not recognize the PLO as a state but only as a representative of the people."

The KURIER interviewed Dr Ghazi Husayn, who is reported as having said that Austria had shown great understanding for the Arab point of view in the past and could now serve as an example for all of Western Europe, which is strongly called upon to contribute to a just and lasting peace in the Middle East, with due recognition of the Palestinians' rights. The Communist daily VOLKSSTIMME also asked Dr Ghazi Husayn for a comment and quotes him as having said that there are good prospects for France and Japan fully recognizing the PLO in the near future, and that a certain change of attitude towards the PLO for the better could also be observed in the FRG and Great Britain. On the criticism voiced by opposition party spokesman Dr Steiner, Dr Husayn reportedly said that it only served to illustrate yet again the pro-Israeli attitude of that party which runs counter to Austria's interests.

Further Reaction

AU171845 [Editorial Report AU] Most Vienna dailies in German on 15-17 March continue to give prominence to reactions to Austria's official recognition of the PLO. WIENER ZEITUNG on 15 March (page 1) reports that on 14 March Israel submitted a protest to the Austrian Government on Austria's recognition of the PLO. The paper also notes Israeli Ambassador Ben-Ya'acov's statement that the "so-called PLO is a bloodstained organization" that has not abandoned its goal of destroying Israel and that "the Austrian Government, by formally establishing relations with the PLO, has assumed a grave moral and political responsibility." The paper also cites Austrian Vice Chancellor Androsch as having declared at the end of his visit to Jordan that, by recognizing an official PLO representative, Austria "has taken the lead of a new, future-oriented Middle East diplomacy." In addition, the paper quotes statements by several West Bank mayors hailing the Austrian step and expressing the hope that more European countries will follow Austria's example.

KURIER on 16 March (page 3) claims that Austria's diplomatic recognition has given the PLO an important trump card that it intends to use for seeking recognition by the EEC. The paper contrasts the enthusiastic PLO reaction to the not very enthusiastic reaction by the West, noting the U.S. request to the Austrian Foreign Ministry for clarification of its decision to recognize the PLO and a Bonn spokesman's refusal to accept the Austrian step as an example for other Western states.

WIENER ZEITUNG on 16 March (page 1) reports that on 14 March Austria's Chancellor Kreisky had a long talk with PLO representative (Isam Sartawi). Noting that (Sartawi) has repeatedly acted as a contact between Kreisky and 'Arafat and that it was he who prepared 'Arafat's visit to Vienna in the spring of 1979, the paper says that his talks with Kreisky on Friday covered the discussion of "topical problems of the development of relations between Austria and the PLO."

Both WIENER ZEITUNG on 16 March and ARBEITER-ZEITUNG on 17 March note 'Arafat's telegram thanking Kreisky for the recognition of the PLO. ARBEITER-ZEITUNG also cites a report by the Palestinian news agency WAFA on Kreisky's reply to 'Arafat's telegram as saying that Kreisky "expressed the hope that he would soon have the opportunity to discuss with 'Arafat 'certain new problems.'" The paper carries this report with the headline "New Kreisky-'Arafat Meeting Forthcoming."

KURIER on 15 March (page 3) carries a Wolfgang Broer commentary: "Kreisky's Risk." The author claims that, by recognizing under international law an organization that neither has a territory nor an exiled government, Austria has set a precedent that is particularly dubious given Austria's enjoying such a high reputation in the world.

PRESS COMMENTS ON CARTER ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM

More Discipline Urged

DW171328 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 17 Mar 80 p 11 DW

[Report signed JS/C.K.: "Carter Demands More Discipline from the Americans"]

[Text] New York/Washington 16 March--Even after the announcement of an anti-inflation program by the President, America will have to reckon in the coming months with continuingly high inflation rates. The program itself with its planned price increase for credits and oil will touch off a short-term additional inflation thrust. The government does not foster any illusions in this respect. President Carter himself has said that in its "war" against inflation America cannot expect to score "quick victories." A clear slowdown of the price increases can be expected only by the end of the year. Not a word about recession was mentioned in his speech. There were merely talk of "discipline" to be maintained by the government, consumers, trade unions and enterprises. "As individuals and as a nation we must begin to spend only as much money as we can afford in the long run, and not as much as we can borrow on a short-term basis," said the President, hinting that way at the savings rate that has deteriorated to 3 percent.

With budget cuts, with intensified credit restrictions, energy-saving measures and long-term production improvements the virtue of moderation is supposed to be inculcated. But it is not a secret that the economic strategists of the government expect also less to come from the announced fourth anti-inflation program with regard to a stabilization of prices than from a recession which they believe has been programmed anyway by the policy pursued by the issuing banks in past months.

Initial commentaries from economic circles basically welcomed the government's intention to balance the budget. The announcement that the next budget would be the first balanced budget in 12 years is considered due to the insecure economic situation as being of more psychological than real significance. Economic and financial circles consider only the further credit restrictions particularly effective but not the budget cuts. The issuing bank, not the government, will have to bear the main burden of the new program in the fight against inflation. The program does not contain concrete suggestions for a long-term strategy of increasing production and promoting savings.

Although economic statistics do not indicate clearly that a recession is in the offing, economic experts believe that because of the recent and drastic increase of credit costs and the additional restrictions, a recession is likely to take place in the near future. It is being said that it will soon bring about a flatter inflation curve and a more rapid decrease of interest rates with regard to their present high level. Leading banks increased their prime rate this weekend to 18.5 percent.

The Carter government's fourth anti-inflation program is supposed to balance the budget for the 1981 fiscal year and bring the growth of the credit volume under control. The President's economic advisers expect the gross national product to decrease by 0.5 percent this year and to grow by 2.25 percent next year. The inflation rate for the current year is supposed to be 10 or 11 percent, while the unemployment rate, with an annual average of 7.5 percent, is supposed to stay a bit under the estimated figure. Since the program is aimed at the long-term aspectsof curbing inflation, even next year an inflation rate of somewhat less than 10 percent is expected.

Through expenditure cuts between $13 to $14 billion in the 1981 fiscal year and revenue increases of about $15 billion, the 1981 budget balance may even produce a slight surplus of $13 billion. While revenue increases as a whole reflect the rather high economic activity, and since only a small part of them comes from advance tax deductions with regard to interest, so far the government has not made detailed announcements on planned expenditures cuts. They are expected to be made by the end of the month together with the revised budget draft.

The government is firmly determined to achieve a balanced budget merely through a cut in expenditures. The planned revenue of about $10 billion due to the envisaged introduction of an oil import tax of $4.62 a barrel is in no case to be considered a substitute for necessary expenditure cuts that can be used for balancing the budget. The oil import tax that will be exclusively transferred to gasoline production, increasing the gasoline price for the consumers by 10 cents a gallon, only has the function of curtailing the country's dependence on foreign energy sources through a reduction of gasoline consumption.

In the first year the government expects to save 100,000 barrels a day, which in the coming years will increase to 250,000 barrels a day. The import tax, however, will increase the inflation rate immediately by 0.4 percent and indirectly by another 0.2 percent. With the agreement of Congress, the import tax is supposed to be replaced by a permanent gasoline tax of 10 cents a gallon. Simultaneously, the national gasoline consumption target for 1980 will be reduced by 5.5 percent to a total of 7 million barrels a day.

Federal Foreign Minister Otto Graf Lambsdorff [as published] has welcomed in the name of the Federal Government the austerity measures announced by President Carter. The minister stressed the timely information by the U.S. Government as being a clear sign of close cooperation between the U.S. and the German Governments.

'Improvisation'

[Commentary signed JS.: "Against 'Enemy Number One'"]

[Text] For the fourth time in his term, President Carter has sounded the bugle for an attack on "enemy number one: inflation." The first attack was launched with bow and arrow, the second with rifles. Now artillery is to be used. It was the alarming price hikes of the past several weeks and the ensuing chaos in the financial markets which prompted the employment of heavier arms against the tenacious enemy. Inflation, which had been expected to abate in line with a lessening boom, suddenly seemed to get out of control. The combination of annual price increase rates between 18 and 19 percent and interest rates of a similar level spread alarm and horror in the financial markets and even caused the President to admit that the economy was heading for a crisis. To its own surprise the government suddenly found itself compelled to make a move. A month or two of temporizing would probably have spoiled his election chances.

It is not worthwhile to waste many words about the program which the President submitted over the past weekend. Probably it is more important as a symptom than it is as a cure. It can at best have a psychological effect on the price climate this year that the President plans to submit a balanced budget for 1980-81 (1 October) for the first time in 12 years. The plan would have reaped him more honor a year or two ago than now near the end of the boom. Not that it is no longer worthwhile to think about more price discipline; yet like so many other projects of this administration this, too, seems to be more based on hurried improvisation than on a thorough analysis. [paragraph continues]

At a closer look the "comprehensive" program, which the President usually calls all his programs, shows only too clearly that its authors primarily consider it a concession to mass hysteria, which is threatening to spread from the financial markets to the voting population. As an exception they might not be so wrong here. In these days the scenery in the White House is reminiscent of Gerald Ford's far-fetched anti-inflation campaign shortly before the last recession. At that time, too, inflation was "enemy number one" and the government prepared for the great offensive. Yet even before it had brought its guns into position recession was there and the enemy image had changed.

Credibility at 'Absolute Low'

DW171320 Duesseldorf HANDELSBLATT in German 17 Mar 80 p 2 DW

[Klaus C. Enelen New York dispatch: "A Lot of Cosmetics"]

[Text] The intervals at which the U.S. President climbs into the ring as a determined anti-inflation fighter are growing shorter and shorter. Strangely enough the President's economic cabinet went into seclusion a few weeks after the presentation of the great budget and economic policy messages because of alarming escalations in inflation and interest rates, collapsing financial markets and growing insecurity about the whereabouts of the expected recession.

In a proper assessment of the excessively optimistic starting data and the still inflationary spending habits of the various levels of government, Wall Street gave the administration, which has been preparing for the presidential election campaign, a new vote of no confidence. When the Cassandras of the American finance and banking world, in view of the gloomier inflation prospects, proclaimed an "economic state of emergency" Carter's unsuccessful stability planners once again sat down at a table with the budget experts of Congress. The Washington haggle over the budget balance in the coming fiscal year demanded by Wall Street as Carter's minimum contribution lasted for all of 3 weeks.

What the President proclaimed last Friday after the stock exchange had closed as an "austerity program" is better than nothing, to be sure. At best Carter's latest correction of course might slightly tone down the inflation psychosis on the financial markets with the cooperation of the Federal Reserve Board and the Congress factions. Yet the options for exerting direct influence on the short-term price trend by the "disciplining" austerity package remain minimal, as even Carter's discredited economic advisers concede.

Whatever this U.S. administration ventures on the inflation front today, its credibility with respect to its good intentions has reached an absolute low after the many setbacks in stability policy in the past several years. Upon close examination the latest anti-inflation initiative of President Carter also shows a great deal of cosmetics but modest substance. The stability burdens, to the extent that the government does not shift them to the Federal Reserve Board, are being distributed, sparing important groups of voters, to moderate cuts and step estimates of the anticipated tax revenues.

Pensioners remain untouched as does the critical stratum of voters in the south and the west of the United States, which urges greater military spending after the dual shock of Iran and Afghanistan. Candidate Carter poses as a foreign policy hawk who combats inflation at home with determination.

Senator Edward Kennedy, the so far defeated main rival for the Democratic presidential nomination and election, is firing away at Carter's austerity program as "too late, too little, and unfair." The problem which the Republican presidential challengers have is that as long as the international crisis lasts, they have been unable as yet to exploit the inflation debacle as the great election campaign scoop.

'Positive' Reaction

DW181100 Duesseldorf HANDELSBLATT in German 18 Mar 80 p 8 DW

[Article signed KR.: "Carter's Program Considered Harsh"]

[Text] Handelsblatt, Frankfurt, Monday, 17 March 1980--The reaction to the new U.S. stabilization measures was mainly positive in the Frankfurt banking center, as can be clearly seen by the brisk increase in the dollar rate. Generally the package of measures is considered rather harsh; this assessment primarily applying to the credit policy restrictions.

At the headquarters of the German Federal Bank there was talk about a "rather convincing program." Hopefully the Americans will now succeed in getting a grip on the inflation rate. Yet the banks of issue do not anticipate an early effect on the price increase rate.

They say that parts of this program are even suited to encouraging the increase in prices even further for a short period, parts such as the oil import tax, for instance, but this must be accepted. There is, in contrast, no doubt about the long-term effects which, after all, are the ones that matter. In various instances people said that the U.S. administration is showing courage, lately it seems to be determined to risk even a more recessive economic development.

What met with particular attention in the German credit business, naturally, was the credit policy part of the package of measures. People were particularly impressed by the introduction of a "punitive bank rate" and the introduction of the credit institutions not affiliated with the reserve system into the obligatory minimum reserve commitment; after all, the number of institutions which had sought to dodge the reserve maintenance by resigning from the reserve system had increased considerably. German subsidiaries of American banks now do not rule out the possibility any longer that the prime rate will shortly exceed the level of 20 percent, which hitherto had been considered the psychologically important ceiling.

SCHMIDT SAYS FRANK TALKS HELD WITH GISCARD

DW171305 Hamburg ARD Television Network in German 2315 GMT 16 Mar 80 DW

[Statement by Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, presumably in Hamburg--recorded]

[Text] First of all I must express my most cordial thanks for the French President's visit. Just as we have done many times in the past 8 years, we discussed many problems very intensely and very frankly, problems that involve us jointly and singularly. Naturally this includes the situation in Southwest Asia, the situation in the Gulf states and in the Middle and the Near East, where the president has just gained special experience. It involves the common Western policy in this more serious world situation. But naturally we have not ruled out European affairs. We will meet again within a relatively short time--in 14 days--at the European summit conference.

PARIS REVEALS MORE DETAILS OF SCHMIDT-GISCARD MEETING

LD171424 Paris Domestic Service in French 1400 GMT 17 Mar 80 LD

[Text] Now we know a little more about the private meeting on Sunday between Giscard and Schmidt in Hamburg. At the Elysee it was pointed out a short time ago that the meeting covered the Euro-Arab dialog and European problems, in particular the coming Council session in Brussels on 31 March where many things must be settled.

On this point, Valery Giscard d'Estaing's position rests essentially on the fact that France has the political will to attain an equitable solution that conforms to the principles of the Community's organization. But to attain this, the Elysee spokesman said, it is necessary that this political will be shared.

INDIAN FOREIGN MINISTER ARRIVES FOR TALKS ON MIDEAST

LD171202 Hamburg DPA in German 1104 GMT 17 Mar 80 LD

[Excerpt] Bonn--Indian Foreign Minister Narasimha Rao arrived in Bonn today for a detailed exchange of views on the situation in the Middle East region and possibilities for political solutions following the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan. Rao arrived from Paris and immediately began his talks with Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher who had welcomed him at the Cologne-Bonn Wahn Airport.

Comments on Afghanistan

[Text] Bonn--India spoke out with unequivocal clarity today against any foreign intervention and military interference in Afghanistan and endorsed a political solution to the crisis, at the basis of which must be Afghanistan's independence and nonalliance. Indian Foreign Minister Narasimha Rao said in Bonn today that "a solution must be based on Afghanistan's independence and nonalliance. There must be no interference or military intervention from outside."

Rao, whose statement was seen as an obvious expression of India's nonalined policy, made a stopover in Bonn this morning on his way from New York to New Delhi, in order to consult with Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and Federal Chancellor Schmidt on the situation in the Near East. Yesterday, he had talks with Jean Francois-Poncet in Paris.

After an exchange of views, described as friendly and thorough by Genscher and Rao, the Indian foreign minister told journalists today that tension in the [Southwest Asian] region must be lowered and that the superpowers should not allow a confrontation to develop.

Genscher, who accepted an invitation to visit New Delhi in the first half of this year, paid tribute during the talks to the important role played by India in the nonalined movement and expounded in detail the European Community's proposal of 19 February, which aims at a guaranteed neutrality status for Afghanistan. In Bonn's view, the EC proposal has been positively received by India.

In the course of their meeting, Genscher and Rao agreed that both governments should continue to maintain close contacts. This applied now, in particular, in view of the difficult political situation that has arisen in the wake of the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan.

Rao declined to comment to journalists on the state of Indian-Pakistani relations. As far back as the beginning of the year, the Federal German Government promised Pakistan economic assistance as part of its contribution to solving the latest East-West crisis. But stress was always laid on the fact that Pakistan's neighbor, India, would continue to be an important candidate in economic cooperation. India receives 22 percent of Germany's overall aid to developing countries.

Observers found Rao's stand on Afghanistan exceptionally clear cut. India, which has a friendship treaty with the Soviet Union, abstained from the UN vote condemning Soviet intervention in Afghanistan.

Prior to meeting Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt this afternoon, Rao is to visit Federal President Karl Carstens. He is to continue his journey to New Delhi tomorrow.

Meets with Schmidt

LD171906 Hamburg DPA in German 1826 GMT 17 Mar 80 LD

[Text] Bonn--In an hour-long conversation in Bonn this evening Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and Narasimha Rao, India's foreign minister, discussed the situation in Central East Asia [as received]. Schmidt underlined, as did Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher before him, his "great esteem" for India's importance from a regional and world political viewpoint.

At a dinner for the Indian foreign minister Genscher said this evening that the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan has caused lasting changes in the world political situation. "We would like nothing more than for Afghanistan to regain its sovereignty, its political independence and its nonalined status," said Genscher, ascribing an important role to the nonalined states, and particularly India, in the solution of this conflict. He welcomed India's readiness to continue and strengthen its dialog with its neighbour Pakistan.

India's Foreign Minister Rao said his country views "the latest developments in its neighboring countries with deep concern." New Delhi has always supported every country determining its own fate without any interference or intervention from outside, "and now the cold war has been brought to our front door, so to speak," said Rao. Arms escalation and confrontation between the superpowers could threaten the peace and stability of the countries in that region. "The main thing now is to prevent an escalation of tension, exercise great restraint and relax the situation."

CSU CHAIRMAN STRAUSS VIEWS TALKS IN WASHINGTON

DW170929 Munich Bayerischer Rundfunk Network in German 1740 GMT 15 Mar 80 DW

[Excerpts from correspondent Trunk interview with Franz Josef Strauss, Bavarian minister president, CSU chairman, and chancellor candidate of the CDU/CSU, recorded in Washington]

[Text] [Question] Your visit to the United States is drawing to a close. It climaxed with your meeting with President Carter. What is the upshot of it all?

[Answer] This visit has shown me once again that even a very careful scrutiny of the U.S. newspapers, an analysis of all available information, cannot replace such talks as I have had here with many leading American personages, above all with President Carter. It was only here that I got a real inkling of the whole import of the U.S.-European relationship, the assessment of the world situation by the Americans, the judgement of specific events--be it the taking of hostages in Tehran or the inflation rate. I had a chance to obtain firsthand information here while, conversely, I had an opportunity to expound the position of the CDU/CSU in the matters at issue so unequivocally that no doubt about our stance is possible here any longer.

[Question] Do you have the impression that you are dissatisfied with the Federal Government here?

[Answer] I do not think that expressions such as satisfied or dissatisfied properly get to the point. To a certain degree they are satisfied, but in certain respects they are dissatisfied as well; what I mean to say is that they are partially satisfied and partially disappointed.

[Question] To what extent do you think the interests of the United States and Western Europe are congruent? After all, you were talking here about specific interests of the Europeans and specific interests of the Americans.

[Answer] I came out against the expression that Helmut Schmidt obviously emphasized, namely, the difference in interests--as though American and European interests were different in every respect--be it in the matter of the Olympic games, the economic measures, or be in with respect to military security. What I said, in contrast, was that under these three aspects, too, we have common interests. Granted, there are specific European interests and specific American interests yet as far as the great questions concerning the future are concerned, our military security, our economic security, we are sitting in the same boat. So people should cease talking so much about different interests. They should cease emphasizing that the 17 million Germans in the GDR are Soviet hostages for whose sake it is impossible to pursue a policy of full solidarity with the Americans. This is the wrong tone of voice. Besides, it is a wrong and slanted way of describing the real situation.

[Question] The watchword at the moment probably is division of labor. What do you think should it be like?

[Answer] Division of labor is a concept which primarily plays a part with respect to military security and perhaps also to economic security. The Federal Republic of Germany is not a naval power such as the United States is or Britain had been for quite some time--and, to a certain degree, still is today. What we are is a continental power. This is why we should not think so much of the need for a German military presence in the Gulf region or in Africa or in the Middle East. Whether some ships would be present for a joint demonstration of our common interests is a question which the others would have to pose to us and which we should not urge on them. But otherwise we should close the gaps in our own defense possibly caused by the pullout of allied units if and when they are needed in the Gulf region; that is to say, we should replace them through intensified efforts of our own.

And the principle of division of labor applies particularly to the military and economic assistance to Turkey. In that respect the Federal Republic should take charge of the managerial chores, which will not, of course, exclude the contribution of the others. But the Federal Republic should manage and coordinate the whole thing. This also is the general view here.

[Question] But does a mitigation of the U.S. military presence in Central Europe not entail dangers as well?

[Answer] I am not thinking so much of a mitigation of the military presence in Central Europe which we should not, and do not, wish at all. Yet if it becomes inevitable we would have to help close the ensuing gap. But I do not think that this matter is as topical as the question concerning the relocation of navy units--mainly antisubmarine forces--from the Atlantic to the Mediterranean or even more so to the Indian Ocean. And here we could then reasonably replace the loss, at least partially--if I think only of the construction of the additional six frigates which had been canceled at the time by the Federal Government.

[Question] You already mentioned economic sanctions. What are the conditions under which the Federal Republic should participate in sanctions against the USSR?

[Answer] I do not think that the Federal Government or the Federal Republic should embark on a unilateral action in that respect. They should not undertake any special action or expedition. Yet I do believe that the Federal Republic should participate in the compilation of the so-called COCOM [NATO Coordinating Committee] list of strategic commodities and then also strictly abide by this list in its trade. Beyond that, it is a matter of conditions and terms, of the financing of trade. And in this respect, we should not have our own way when it comes to common measures.

[Question] Do you deem it possible that common Western measures really will be achieved?

[Answer] Well, a common measure regarding grain supplies already exists. Some countries, however, do not cooperate for understandable reasons. It is quite possible that the allies will cooperate if the Americans will produce a clear conception. In any case, we should not abstain because we depend more on oil from the Middle East and on raw materials from Africa than the Americans. On the contrary, the Americans could even become independent if they exploited their reserves; we cannot--at least not in the next 20 years, and probably not in the next 50. Therefore, we ought to show full solidarity, even if that should entail economic disadvantages.

[Question] How great do you think the danger that the Soviet Union could succeed to decouple Western Europe from the United States is?

[Answer] If the West German socialists carry on as they did so far, if the leftist SPD wing continues to gain ground--and it looks as if the SPD faction in the next Bundestag will be even more leftist than the present faction--if the gibberish about the difference of interests between the United States and Europe gradually becomes a common term used by everybody, then a psychological gap will be created which some day could and will lead to political separation. But we will counteract that.

[Question] So you see a growing contrast between Helmut Schmidt and the SPD; that difference is probably greater already than the one between you and Helmut Schmidt?

[Answer] In part, but since Helmut Schmidt cannot rid himself of his party, considerable differences of opinionexist between him and me, differences that cannot be denied or suppressed publicly.

[Question] How do you assess the opinion one can hear in the SPD, namely, that Helmut Schmidt basically is pursuing a CDU policy?

[Answer] Wherever Helmut Schmidt is doing the right thing, he is pursuing a CDU policy. But wherever he does not do anything or does the wrong thing, he is not pursuing a CDU/CSU policy.

[Question] Your visit here in the United States was accompanied in the Federal Republic by election campaign polemics. Helmut Schmidt charged that you have been campaigning in the United States and that this was poor style. What is your answer?

[Answer] I have only been asked about the difference between me and Helmut Schmidt, the difference between the SPD and the CDU/CSU. A description of the difference as such--if truly made--naturally will lead to criticism of the SPD; for the SPD just the description of truth is already a burden.

[Question] Graf Lambsdorff also felt prompted to send you telegrams, and Minister Apel even telephoned with his colleague Brown. Did all that happen because of misunderstandings, or were there other reasons?

[Answer] Bonn is presently a cacophonous concert of different stances of the coalition parties, of different approaches within the coalition parties and the cabinet. Unfortunately they cannot stop making a fuss about everything. If Mr Lambsdorff sends a message to me about German-Russian trade--the contents of which were known to me for a long time, by the way--saying that no privileged financing exists in this respect, and if I give him a factual answer in a teletyped message--both messages were factual--must a fuss be made about it immediately? But they cackle when they lay an egg and they cackle when they don't.

[Question] What personal impression did you form of President Carter? Is there a difference in this respect between you and Helmut Schmidt?

[Answer] I can say only on the basis of the 1-hour talk I had with him that I gained a very good impression of him. He made a casual, self-assured, natural, hopeful although concerned impression. My personal impression of him--regarding the human side as well as the political aspect--is such that I can only express my agreement and concurrence.

[Question] You found insecurity here on the part of the senators in Washington. Does it mean that the United States is not quite certain what world political role it plays?

[Answer] It seems that one is not quite certain about many things, or not yet certain. It was not I who found that uncertainty, but my interlocutors in the Senate, in the House of Representatives--including significant senators with long years of experience, but also younger membets of the parliamentary bodies--have over and over again used an expression that I have not heard at all in my previous visits, or not all that frequently, namely the term "uncertainty." Uncertainty with regard to the future of the hostages, uncertainty with regard to the consequences of Afghanistan, uncertainty with regard to the stance of the allies, uncertainty regarding strategic changes, uncertainty with regard to economic developments--particularly the inflation rate. In short, the term uncertainty was like a red thread going through all the talks with the parliamentarians, not with the government members. I want to make a clear distinction here.

[Question] Does it mean that one must reckon with the development of some sort of crisis?

[Answer] [Passage indistinct] The awareness of problems has been weakened in the past 10 years on both sides of the Atlantic; in the Federal Republic it has been destroyed to quite some extent due to the wrongly understood policy of detente. It will therefore be necessary that the responsible politicians of all democratic forces achieve a realistic assessment of the situation and draw consequences from that assessment, consequences that must not be dictated by opportunism with regard to election campaigns.

[Question] How important do you assess a boycott of the Olympic games?

[Answer] I attribute considerable significance to it within the framework of the entire psychological-political framework. Only a boycott of the Olympic games and nothing else would not make such sense. One must not fool oneself with regard to one thing particularly: When the Olympic games take place in Moscow, one cannot return to the Afghanistan crisis later on as if nothing had happened. Taking part in the Olympic games means that the Afghanistan issue will be buried--I believe for an unpredictable time.

GISCARD COMMENTS ON MEETING WITH SCHMIDT

[Text] President Giscard d'Estaing returned to Paris during the night following a visit of a few hours to Hamburg for a quick summit with West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt. There were no leaks, no journalists under the table; one knows only that most of the big international questions were tackled, particularly the crisis with the British over "green Europe," the president's tour of the Persian Gulf, and the chancellor's visit to the United States. Here is a short comment by Valery Giscard d'Estaing made after the Hamburg tete-a-tete to our special correspondent Dominique Souchier:

[Begin Giscard recording] We had agreed with the chancellor, before departing for our respective journeys--he to the United States and I to various states of the Middle East--that we would meet on our return to exchange information and to deepen our analysis of the international situation. This is what we have done just now with the chancellor, and this exchange of views has been particularly useful to me in terms of preparing for the forthcoming meetings which are, as you know, important in Europe as well as in the international situation. GISCARD, EIRE'S HAUGHEY STRESS CLOSE TIES

[Unattributed report: "The Very Spirit of the Process of Building Europe Has Been Called Into Question"]

[Text] "The various files now before us whose solutions are of necessity connected call into question the very spirit of the process of building Europe and raise the risk of distorting the meaning we give to Community solidarity," Mr Giscard d'Estaing said at a lunch which he gave for Irish Prime Minister Haughey on Thursday, 13 March. He was referring to the British financial demands on the Community.

This solidarity, he added, "does not consist in seeking a direct balance between spending and benefits. Solidarity constitutes a dynamic choice aimed at strengthening unity among the member states and not giving them the means of maintaining their differences." He also paid tribute to Ireland's "courageous decision" to take part in the European monetary system and recalled that Irish agriculture is "the sister of ours."

In his reply Mr Haughey praised the "very special" ties between Paris and Dublin and said that France is Ireland's "most constant" ally in Europe.

Mr Haughey mentioned the situation in Northern Ireland during the talks but it is clear that Paris does not wish to interfere in an affair which is primarily a British responsibility.

According to the French side the main Community problems (agricultural prices, surpluses, lamb, British demands) discussed showed "a broad agreement." This agreement was also apparent in the discussion of major international questions. Ireland and France are said to "share the same views" on a boycott of the Olympic games. Mr Haughey announced that Ireland was going to sign a major contract for telephone equipment with a French company. The two prime ministers agreed to hold regular meetings. Mr Barre could visit Dublin on a date as yet unspecified.

FRANCOIS-PONCET, PAKISTAN'S AGHA SHAHI DISCUSS AFGHANISTAN

The French Foreign Ministry said the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan was discussed in the light of its affect on the entire region.

FRANCOIS-PONCET DENIES PLAN FOR 'ARAFAT VISIT

LD181029 Paris LE MONDE in French 15 Mar 80 p 46 LD

[Unattributed report: "There Are No Plans for Mr 'Arafat To Visit Paris"]

[Text] [French Foreign Minister] Jean Francois-Poncet reported to the Senate Foreign Affairs Committee on 12 March. According to the communique issued after the meeting the minister stated: "Israel's existence within its 1967 borders is a fundamental principle which, in France's view, cannot be called into question." The minister indicated that "the territorial framework for exercising the right to self-determination is that of the territories occupied in 1967, the evacuation of which was stipulated by UN Security Council Resolution 242."

The foreign minister affirmed that there were no plans for a visit to Paris by PLO leader 'Arafat. "Such a plan," he said, "could only be envisaged within the context of significant progress in the peace process."

MEDIA VIEWS IMPLICATIONS OF U.S. ECONOMY MEASURES

Radio Coverage

LD150933 Paris Domestic Service in French 0700 GMT 15 Mar 80 LD

[Text] A few hours after the announcement of Carter's anti-inflation plans the green note, the dollar, has rocketed. Yesterday it stood at 4.30 francs on the Paris Bourse. That is bad for the French, who will perhaps have to pay a little more for their oil. Last night, President Carter explained on television how he is going to crack an inflation that has reached 18 percent in a single year. Carter has worked out a sort of "Barre plan," give or take a few variations, with credit restrictions, pay restrictions and energy savings.

But, no sooner was it announced than the Carter plan was criticized by his two principal opponents in the White House [as heard]: the Republican Reagan, and the Democrat Kennedy. Ronald Reagan says it is insufficient, and Edward Kennedy that it is anti-social.

In New York's exchange circles there is skepticism. In fact, as Carter himself said yesterday, in the short term his plan will have no effect at all, and, paradoxically, could even turn out to be inflationary, especially because of the tax of 11 centimes on a liter of petrol. But in the medium term, that is to say by the fall, the first [word indistinct] will be making themselves felt.

Now, the fall means mainly the month of November, that is the elections. For no matter what the administration does this year, electoral prospects play a predominant role. That is why a good many economists this morning consider that the President has only put a plaster on the gaping wound of inflation.

LE FIGARO Dispatch

LD171501 Paris LE FIGARO in French 15-16 Mar 80 pp 1, 6 LD

[Charles Lambroschini dispatch: "Carter Clamps Down"]

[Excerpts] Washington--A balanced budget for the first time since 1969--this is the main weapon in Jimmy Carter's new anti-inflation program. Before the television speech which the President was to make announcing his plan, top White House officials revealed its broad outlines to journalists, probably in the hope of stopping criticism from experts who had been saying for several days that the remedies envisaged are far from constituting the shock treatment necessary to eliminate price rises of over 18 percent.

The measures announced by the head of state fall into two main categories: reduction of spending: by $14-15 billion; a tax on oil imports which it is hoped will both increase public revenue (at a rate of $4 per barrel it will yield $9 billion to $10 billion per year) and encourage a fall in consumption.

Tax on oil imports--Since Congress had made no secret of its reservations about reducing spending (that is, benefits for the voters) 7 months before the November 1980 election, Carter had to resign himself to finding a new tax in order to balance the budget. This tax will add $4 to the price of each of the 6.2 million barrels of crude oil which the United States imports every day. It will also affect the 175,000 barrels of gasoline bought each day from abroad.

This tax, which will amount to around 10 cents per gallon, will give the state an additional revenue of $9 billion to $11 billion. The problem is that in increasing the price of gasoline at the pump it is also likely to influence the price index--increasing it by 0.4 percent, according to the experts.

In addition to these two major categories the government is also giving itself the means to intervene in the credit sphere. The banks could be forced to keep a larger proportion of their assets in liquidity which they will not be entitled to lend.

All the indications are that the President will find it difficult to "sell" his plan. He has involved Congress in it, for fear that, as with his energy plan, the House and the Senate might eventually veto it. However, after 4 weeks of deliberation, the Congress leaders who worked with the administration in preparing this package seem anything but enthusiastic, so much so that they refused to allow the President to deliver his speech at a joint session of the two chambers. The labor unions are also unhappy because the President preferred to cut the social budget rather than the defense budget.

Similar reservations have been expressed on the tax on oil imports. Mike Waters, spokesman for the employers' petroleum associations, is worried: "OPEC will be tempted to increase its prices accordingly. The oil-producing nations have in fact never accepted that a consumer country could profit from their product. Moreover it is likely to think that the Americans can, all things considered, stand a higher price."

The President himself seems conscious of the gaps in a plan which, to succeed, should also hasten the recession and introduce a much more stringent credit-control system. When Congress refused to allow him to deliver his speech in the House and some people suggested the White House Oval Office as an alternative, Carter opposed the plan. He did not want this solemn environment to give the Americans excessive hopes.

FRANCE-SOIR Review

LD171129 Paris FRANCE-SOIR in French 16-17 Mar 80 pp 1, 6 LD

[Gabriel Farkas article: "The Carter Plan To Halt Inflation"]

[Text] Carter has taken the bull by the horns. In a television speech yesterday evening the U.S. President presented a new anti-inflation plan. This plan includes a drastic reduction in state spending, the introduction of a tax on oil imports, a limit on consumer credits and a "recommendation" on wages.

Reduction in state spending--For the first time in 12 years the administration will submit a balanced budget to Congress. For the fiscal year which begins in October Carter is reducing federal spending by $13 billion and increasing revenue by $13 billion.

"The government," Carter said, "must stop spending money we do not have and borrowing to make up the difference. Our whole society must try harder to live within its means."

Tax on oil imports--There will be a tax of $4.62 per barrel on U.S. imports. This tax will be reflected fully in gasoline prices which will rise by [the equivalent of] around 12 centimes per liter at the gas station.

"We will never be strong in this country unless we manage to solve the problems of excessive dependence on foreign oil. We will never be able to put an end to this dependence unless we reduce our excessive oil consumption."

Falling Savings

According to Carter the new tax should reduce U.S. consumption by 12.5 million tons per year. Next year it will bring in $10 billion in addition revenue. The Europeans are bound to applaud this measure. Indeed it is clear that curbing U.S. consumption would help restore the balance of the oil market to the consumer countries' advantage.

Credit curbs--For the first time in the United States there will be curbs on consumer credit. The restrictions, which will be announced in detail later, will nonetheless spare cars and housing.

The President justified the curb on consumer credit by the fall in savings, which are at a 20-year low. "Inflation is fueled by credit purchases," the President maintained, and he even mentioned that Americans are "abusing" their credit cards to "live beyond their means."

Dear Credit

In fact, the decisions announced in Washington yesterday evening merely strengthen the main element in the anti-inflation struggle--the credit limitation policy. Since the beginning of the year Carter has clearly given Federal Reserve President Paul Volcker a free hand. Volcker went to work with a will: The U.S. prime rate--in other words, the lowest interest rate granted to the best client--rose from 13 percent in October to 18.25 percent yesterday.

This policy of making money expensive to obtain explains the dollar's amazing rise and the collapse of the gold price. Since the beginning of the year the price of an ingot in Paris has fallen some 40 percent. Yesterday, in a single session, gold fell 7 percent.

The record U.S. interest rates are naturally attracting money into New York banks, so to avoid a mass exit of capital the European governments are in turn forced to make their credit dearer.

Therefore Carter took out his "big stick" yesterday to halt inflation. However, to prevent any misunderstanding, the President warned his compatriots that the measures taken will not have an immediate effect on prices, which have been rising at an annual rate of 18-20 percent in the last 2 months.

For the Americans there is nothing pleasant about the measures announced by Carter. However, their purchasing power has been falling for a year and public opinion is now convinced that it is high time the United States faced up to the inflation problem.

GENEVA TALKS ON 'RIVAL OLYMPICS' PREVIEWED

LD180905 Paris LE MONDE in French 15 Mar 80 pp 1, 3 LD

[Francois Janin article: "Forcing the Undecided"]

[Text] The Geneva meeting at which President Carter's adviser Lloyd Cutler will represent the United States, Home Affairs Minister Robert Ellicott will represent Australia and the minister of state for foreign and Commonwealth affairs, Douglas Hurd, will represent Britain, could mark an important stage in the operation to boycott the Moscow games launched by President Carter after the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan. The aim is simply to allow each camp to count its supporters and, for those in favor of a boycott, to fill a vacuum by proposing high-level alternative games. This would make it possible to satisfy the aspirations of the athletes in the countries concerned.

Provided they reach agreement in Geneva on the organization of these "rival games" the United States, Britain and Australia will therefore be in a position to check the determination of those who rallied to the boycott camp without making their stance entirely clear.

In theory 30 percent of the 146 countries invited to the Moscow games support the principle of a boycott while 15 percent are hesitant; they have until 24 May to announce their decisions officially.

It certainly seems that if the Geneva meeting produces serious and specific proposals many of those still undecided will be pushed into not waiting until 24 May to make their choice. Moreover that is one of the aims of the maneuver launched by the United States, Britain and Australia since time seems to be on the Soviets' side.

It is obvious that the success of the boycott rests largely on what decision the FRG takes. If the FRG rallies strongly and quickly to the United States, as the Bonn leaders have several times suggested it will, the other West European nations would probably be forced to join the boycott.

France has always said--and [Youth, Sports and Leisure Minister] Jean-Pierre Soisson reaffirmed this on Thursday--that the national sporting movement, in this case the French National Olympic and Sports Committee, is alone able to take a decision independent of any political pressure provided that the Moscow games do not merely become a "spartakiad" in which essentially only athletes from socialist countries compete.

It is not impossible that the move by the United States, Britain and Australia might serve to clear the consciences of those countries which would like to keep out of this struggle for influence. [paragraph continues]

If "rival games" are set up on Monday in Geneva or later there is a strong possibility that the two existing groups--supporters of the Moscow games and supporters of a boycott--will be supplemented by a third: Those who will observe an original Olympic truce by going neither to Moscow nor elsewhere.

LE MONDE SCORES AFGHAN CENSORSHIP; BACKS GAMES BOYCOTT

[Editorial: "Silence, Shooting in Progress"]

[Text] When the leaders--or occupiers--of a country close its doors to journalists one conclusion can safely be drawn: What the undesirables would be likely to see is not to the honor of the regime or its "protectors." This rule has often been proved correct whether it be in Pinochet's Chile, Pol Pot's Kampuchea or the Indonesian "province" of Timor. It is virtually a hard and fast rule. However, the reverse is not true: The United States, to mention just one example, quite openly waged in Vietnam one of the most cruel and devastating of wars.

After trying to impose censorship, Kabul and its occupiers have just chosen the radical course of silence. This is confirmed by the expulsion of our special envoy who is not the first independent journalist to be expelled. Only those journalists who can be relied upon to publish the official truth will henceforth be allowed into the Afghan capital. PRAVDA has already given us a foretaste of what is expected of them: long accounts of the Soviet Army's "social action" and on "fraternization" between the foreign army and the population all embellished with appropriate photographs showing Afghan peasants and Soviet tank operators deep in conversation.

The idyllic pictures we are receiving from Moscow can only convince those who attribute little importance to the Afghan situation and the Afghan people. All reliable reports confirm that the Soviet Army, weakly backed by an Afghan Army still suffering from major desertions, is preparing a general offensive for the spring. A rehearsal has just been held in Konar Province and it was particularly bloody. Even if the reports given by refugees should be taken cautiously, it is clear that the aim of this operation was to "sweep" the province "clean" of its inhabitants, not even to "pacify" it.

Under these circumstances it is understandable why Mr Karmal and his mentors are doing all they can to remove impartial witnesses. Even in Kabul the situation is tense and difficult to conceal from experienced observers. Therefore it is easier for the new leaders to blend propaganda and news and indignantly deny all reports from nationalist rebels and refugees by turning them instantly into "agents of imperialism." It is also easier to feed commentators throughout the world with a few "hints" from Mr Brezhnev on the country's possible neutralization and the guarantees which could be provided by the great powers. This wins time for the Soviet soldiers in the country, the civilian advisers in Kabul's ministries and Moscow's diplomats in international conferences.

The nonalined and the Western countries which judged the invasion of Afghanitan to be unacceptable will sooner or later have to draw new conclusions from these events: In addition to geopolitical considerations the Afghan crisis is likely to quickly raise the problem of the massacre of a section of the Afghan people. This is a basic humanitarian problem in view of which the participation of individual sports teams in the Moscow Olympic games is derisory. The president of the republic should approach the subject from this viewpoint if the "dialog" which he wanted to maintain with the USSR on Afghanistan turns out eventually to be simply a swindle.

OLYMPIC COMMITTEE STAND ON MOSCOW GAMES 'NOT CHANGED'

AU180837 Rome ANSA in English 0830 GMT 18 Mar 80 AU

[Text] Rome, March 18 (ANSA)--The attitude of the Italian Olympic Committee (CONI) towards participation in the Moscow Summer Olympic Games "has not changed". The largest Italian sport organization "reiterates its autonomy of judgement and decision and hopes that international controversies can be smoothed out", CONI President Franco Carraro said Monday evening in a press conference. Carraro spoke after a meeting of the CONI executive commission, which focused primarily on the scandal of Italian soccer players allegedly taking dives.

Carraro spoke of the problem of boycotting the Moscow games in reprisal for the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan in December and referred to the meetings that will take place in the next few days in Geneva, Brussels and Strasbourg. "The commission reiterated the decision reached February 7 by the National Council. The Olympic Committee will autonomously determine the issue. I can say that apropos the Geneva meeting on the possibility of alternative games, we know absolutely nothing, nor have we been informed on the position the Italian Government will take in Strasbourg in the meeting of minister of sport of the countries of the Council of Europe. In any case, our attitude has not changed".

L'UNITA: CARTER BUDGED 'FEEDS ON INFLATION'

LD181001 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 15 Mar 80 pp 1, 18 LD

[Unattributed report: "Carter Slams Brakes on U.S. Economy"]

[Excerpts] Washington--President Carter has authorized the Federal Reserve to impose selective controls on credit, introduced an import tax on oil and proposed measures to balance next year's budget. These are the chief points in the "anti-inflation" economic package which President Carter announced yesterday evening during a television broadcast.

Before Carter addressed the country on inflation, it had all already been said by the bankers. The Bank of America, Morgan, Citibank, the First National Bank of Boston and other major banks operating throughout the world have raised the interest rate for special customers, the prime rate, to 18.5 percent. The 18.25 percent reached yesterday was exceeded in 12 hours. Repercussions were felt throughout the world, almost simultaneously, with the revaluation of the dollar. Dollars are being bought, from Europe to Asia, at the same rate as they were being sold just 2 weeks ago.

It is said that Carter's intention was to show that he is "seriously" combating inflation. But what is the result of 2 weeks' consultations with Congress? The spending cuts, totalling some $15 billion, account for only 2-3 percent of the budget. The balanced budget is being waved as a propaganda tool, but one must take into account what lies behind it: the refusal to bring tax levels into line with inflation, which would mean the average U.S. family paying 4-5 percent more in taxes; and the indefinite postponement of the plan to bring welfare into line, even to a limited extent, with the cost of inflation.

In practice, Carter's budget feeds on inflation. Thanks to inflation it collects more taxes and also thanks to inflation it can pay welfare benefits at a devalued rate. Yesterday the administration announced that it will "accept" pay increases of 7.5-8.5 percent, but the inflation forecast for 1980 is still 12.6 percent. So is this a struggle against inflation or an exploitation of inflation? [paragraph continues]

Capital is flowing back into the United States from all over the world, and it is hoped that this abundance of capital and the drainage of capital from the rest of the world will encourage a recovery in investments and thus in productivity. The workers, together with broad strata of the middle class (the ones who purchase homes on easy credit), will be the ones to pay for the high profits which the United States is promising on capital from all over the world.

'FORTY-FIRST POSTWAR GOVERNMENT CRISIS' AT HAND

[Text] Rome, March 18 [ANSA]--The forty-first government crisis in post-war Italy is at hand. Debate on the fate of incumbent Premier Francesco Cossiga's minority government will begin tomorrow in Parliament after a report from Cossiga. Prospects for solving the crisis are not simple and some observers believe in the possibility of early elections for the second year in a row, despite the fact that one of the parties seem to welcome such an outcome. A crucial element should be the decisions of the Socialist Party (PSI) Central Committee meeting Thursday.

The Social Democrat Party (PSDI), which together with Cossiga's own Christian Democrats (DC) and the Liberal Party (PLI) make up the backbone of the government, may decide to go to the opposition, according to veteran party leader Giuseppe Saragat. Saragat said that the possibility of a five-party line-up (DC, PSDI, PSI, PLI and Republicans-PRI), is impossible in that the PSI, whose abstention, along with the PRI's, was crucial to keeping the government in power, has triggered the incipient crisis.

Constitutionally, passage of a no-confidence motion sanctions the crisis, but the premier has the right to be heard by Parliament for a "verification", if only to report on his Cabinet's activity, and he may say that he acknowledges the impossibility of continuing in his mandate. On Monday Cossiga had a feverish round of consultations at the Quirinal presidential palace and with the speakers of the Senate and lower house.

On Friday, the Christian Democrat Party had proposed bilateral encounters among the parties of the constitutional arc. However, Cossiga's decision to go before Parliament for a debate to verify the majority made the encounters useless. Many observers believe that Cossiga will be tapped again to try to form the next government. It is probable that Cossiga will go to President Sandro Pertini late tomorrow evening to announce to the chief of state his decisions, after the parliamentary debate. Last Friday, the Communist Party (PCI) Central Committee decided not to take part in the DC-proposed encounters and held firm to its "either in the government or on the opposition" stand.

On the same day, the Socialist Party leadership unanimously approved a document calling on the premier to appear before Parliament. The PSI is currently split into two groupings, with party Secretary Bettino Craxi's followers more flexible on the problem of the future government, while the "left" of the party is firmly of the belief that the next government must be all-encompassing and include the Communists. The PSI's decision Friday to accelerate the crisis timetable has formally healed the division within the party but there still remains the controversy which led to the resignation of party leftist veteran Riccardo Lombardi as party chairman, who stepped down in the wake of contrasts with Craxi.

PARLIAMENT VOTES IN FAVOR OF OLYMPIC BOYCOTT

[By PA parliamentary staff]

[Excerpts] The House of Commons tonight voted by a massive majority of 168 for a British boycott of the Moscow Olympics. The figures--315 to 147--reflected a number of abstentions, notably on the Tory side, and cross-voting among the parties in what was for backbenchers, a free vote. About a dozen Conservatives did not vote. In passing the government's motion "that this House condemns the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan and believes that Great Britain should not take part in the Olympic games in Moscow", MP's have firmly placed this controversial issue back on the desk of British Olympic Association Chairman Sir Dennis Follows and his officials.

Earlier, by 305 votes to 188 (majority 117) MP's had rejected an opposition demand, led by Mr Callaghan, to let British athletes make up their own minds whether to go to Moscow. The opposition amendment called for Soviet withdrawal from Afghanistan, but said an effective response on the Olympics could only be achieved by common agreement among governments and sporting organisations of the West. It criticised the government for failure to "consult properly with the sporting bodies."

During a noisy wind-up Environment Secretary Mr Michael Heseltine, interrupted by MP's on both sides of the House, assured MP's the government would make renewed efforts to prevent further shipments of farm surpluses to the Soviet Union. And in reply to questions over the transfer of sensitive technology to the Eastern bloc, he said that the government was considering how they could tighten up the rules applying to exports to Russia. Mr Heseltine insisted that the government was not asking British athletes to make a unilateral decision to boycott Moscow. "The world is already taking decisions in country after country. Many countries are making their views clear about where they stand on the Olympics."

Opening the debate, Deputy Foreign Secretary Sir Ian Gilmour had conceded: "Maybe we should have gone further than we already have...." He denied that the government had "harassed or bullied" Pritish athletes and defended the range of political, economic, cultural and diplomatic actions. "I know some MP's are worried about our continuing to trade with the Soviet Union. But generally the government believe trade should continue where it was profitable, but it should no longer be privileged."

But shadow Foreign Secretary Mr Peter Shore accused the government of "double standards". He said it had fed "the suspicions and resentment of the community of sport that they are being singled out and asked to make sacrifices that others are not being called upon to bear. I believe we have here, in this Olympics issue, all the makings of a total botch," Mr Shore said.

CARRINGTON DENIES CHANGE IN GOVERNMENT PLO POLICY

[John Bulloch report: "No Change in Policy on PLO, British Jews Told"]

[Text] Lord Carrington, foreign secretary, yesterday assured representatives of British Jewry that there had been no change in Britain's Middle East policy and said there would be no recognition of the Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO) until it accepted Israel's right to exist.

He also told questioners in the Lords that he did not regard the PLO as a terrorist organisation, although there had in the past "been some elements in the PLO which have been associated with terrorists."

"But it would be a great mistake to assume it is possible to get a settlement in the area without taking the PLO into account," he added.

After the meeting with Lord Carrington, Mr Greville Janner, president of the board of deputies of Jews in Britain, said he felt reassured by what Lord Carrington had said to the delegation. He accepted the foreign secretary's assurance that there had been no change in Britain's Middle East position.

Talks have been going on among European leaders to establish a common Middle East policy. President Giscard d'Estaing enunciated the latest position when he called for Palestinian self determination, but Britain has emphasised that this would have to be balanced by acceptance of Israel's right to exist within secure frontiers. Britain hopes to secure agreement to the introduction of an amendment to Resolution 242 in the United Nations, which would recognise the rights of the Palestinian people rather than speaking of them merely as refugees.

But Lord Carrington also assured the Jewish leaders, who spent 45 minutes with him, that Britain supported the Camp David peace negotiations. He also emphasised Britain's commitment to Israel's continued security.

The hastily-arranged delegation from the British board of deputies was part of a general campaign by European Jewry to block any moves towards recognition of the PLO, which Jewish leaders still regard as a terrorist group committed to the destruction of the State of Israel.

HAUGHEY INTERVIEWED PRIOR TO PARIS VISIT

LD171355 Paris LE MATIN in French 12 Mar 80 p 12 LD

[Richard Deutsch interview with Irish Prime Minister Charles Haughey: "Ireland: The Prime Minister Plays Giscard Against Thatcher"--date and place not specified]

[Text] Aged 52, blue-eyed and stocky, Charles Haughey personifies Ireland's new policy, that of the technocrats. Having held practically all the key government portfolios, he has a rare understanding of the files and has always declared himself a firm European. For the British, however, he remains an ardent nationalist whose main aim is the reunification of the Emerald Isle. Before coming to Paris tomorrow on his first official foreign visit, Charles Haughey explained some of his views to LE MATIN.

LE MATIN: What is your position on the Common Agricultural Policy?

Charles Haughey: France and Ireland agree on this point: The Common Agricultural Policy is fundamental to the Common Market. It cannot be accepted or rejected as circumstances dictate.

LE MATIN: Will you be examining energy problems within the EEC?

Haughey: In our case energy is an urgent and acute problem and has dramatic effects on our balance of payments. We import and consume a great amount of oil. We share the French viewpoint: A solution must be found by consumers and producers.

LE MATIN: Have you discovered oil off the Irish coast?

Haughey: Offshore and deep water oil-prospecting is of interest. We must now determine the quantities and find the technology necessary for extracting it.

LE MATIN: What is the present state of your nuclear program?

Haughey: We have not decided anything yet. We will speak in detail of France's nuclear experience, since we are at a formative stage in this sphere. It is true that we have discovered uranium; we do not know yet whether it will be worth mining it.

LE MATIN: Will you be talking about Northern Ireland?

Haughey: I hope to mention this subject. It is the main aim of our national policy. I would like my French colleagues to understand that. Of course, France will be welcome to help us in any way it can.

LE MATIN: Through the European Parliament?

Haughey: Through any means.

LE MATIN: Could Valery Giscard d'Estaing intervene as mediator?

Haughey: Not in such precise terms, I believe.

LE MATIN: What are you offering Britain for a settlement of the Ulster conflict?

Haughey: I believe that the moment has come for our two governments to work together in search of a solution which respects the positions of all the parties involved.

LE MATIN: Valery Giscard d'Estaing has stated his view on the Palestinians. What is the Irish Government's position?

Haughey: For a long time we have supported the idea of more significant Common Market participation in the Middle East. On 10 February in Bahrain we stated that the Palestinians have a right to self-determination and the creation of an independent state in Palestine within the framework of a negotiated peace agreement to include the principles of Security Council Resolutions 242 and 338. Ireland recognizes the PLO as representative of the Palestinian people.

PRINCE CHARLES TO ATTEND ZIMBABWE INDEPENDENCE CEREMONIES

[Excerpts] Prince Charles will represent the queen when the Union Jack is lowered for the last time in Rhodesia on April 17. This was announced by Buckingham Palace today. At midnight on that Thrusday he will witness the birth of the new nation Zimbabwe--and the independence celebrations which will follow.

Lord Soames, the British governor in Rhodesia, will return to London next week for two days of talks with the prime minister and foreign secretary, Lord Carrington on arrangements for the independence ceremony. Meanwhile, it was announced that Lord Soames would continue to exercise his responsibilities as governor until midnight on April 17. He and his team will then return to London. So far the Foreign Office has not announced who will represent the government at the ceremony. After independence Britain will open a diplomatic mission in Salisbury, but so far the head of the new mission has not been named.

BULGARIAN CP DELEGATION ARRIVES ON VISIT

NC170850 Nicosia DHIMOKRATIA in Greek 17 Mar 80 p 1 NC

[Text] A three-member delegation of the Bulgarian Communist Party [BCP] arrived in Cyprus by air last Saturday evening. The delegation, which will stay on the island until 22 March, was met at Larnaca Airport by Khr Petas, secretary of AKEL's Nicosia district committee; M Olimbios, district organizational secretary; and Bulgarian Ambassador in Nicosia Bangiev.

The visit of the delegation is within the framework of the exchange of visits between the AKEL district organization for Nicosia and Kyrenia and the Plovdiv district organization of the BCP.

The delegation comprises Ivan Panev, member of the BCP Central Committee, secretary of the Plovdiv district committee, member of the National Assembly and former mayor of Sofia; Khristina (Bonova), member of the district committee, plant manager; and (Rad Pachyev), member of the district committee and secretary of the party organization for the city of Plovdiv.

During its visit to Cyprus the delegation will meet AKEL cadres in order to work out a protocol of cooperation and so forth. They will also meet with other political and social figures. The delegation will visit cities, villages and enterprises as well archeological and other sites, and the grave of late President Makarios.

ROLANDHIS PROTESTS TO UN OVER DENKTAS' RECENT STATEMENT

NC171824 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1730 GMT 17 Mar 80 NC

[Excerpt] Foreign Minister Rolandhis has instructed Cyprus' permanent UN representative to proceed with strong representations to the international organization against the recent provocative statements by Turkish Cypriot leader Denktas and to circulate a relevant briefing document among all UN members. The foreign minister has also given instructions that similar representations be made by Cyprus' ambassadors to the countries that are permanent members of the Security Council.

The foreign minister stated that Denktas' statements were absolutely unacceptable, that they revealed Denktas' true intentions and that they undermined the UN secretary general's efforts for resuming the intercommunal talks.

EDEK CHAIRMAN ON RESOLUTION OF CYPRUS PROBLEM

NC180805 Nicosia TA NEA in Greek 18 Mar 80 pp 1, 3 NC

[Excerpts] "Now the ground is being prepared for acceptance of bizonality and of secure borders. In substance this would be tantamount to two separate state entities." This warning has come from EDEK Chairman Lissaridhis, who was speaking at Klirou.

The socialist leader added: "Instead of the pressure being put on Turkey, as envisaged by the UN resolutions, it is put on Cyprus, even by the UN secretary general who must, at last, realize his true role. At this moment an effort is being exerted to refine the American partitionist plan, and proposals have been put forward for the acceptance of a Cyprus Camp David, while with the pretext of balance of power some circles have been trying to create a climate of defeatism so that the foreign plans may be accepted."

Moreover, the EDEK leader said: "Some circles suggest that we agree in advance to delete the right of refugees to return to their homes, and in order to blunt sensation they speak about the payment of compensation (!)"

Dr Vasos Lissaridhis also said: "The people must be kept abreast of developments: They have already been briefed and they reject the catastrophic stand that in essence we are captives of Turkey and therefore we are obliged to accept any Turkish final plans.

"The supporters of such a line, realizing that it will be rejected by the people, are trying to promote it indirectly hoping that they will manage to deceive the public.

"Thus, an effort has been undertaken to refine the American partitionist plan and proposals are being made for the holding of a Cyprus Camp David. Moreover, with the pretext of balance of power they have been trying to create a climate of defeatism so that the foreign plans may be accepted. Within this framework an effort is exerted to describe the defense organization as an aggressive adventure that would lead to catastrophe. Thus, they even go further to suggest agreement in advance to delete the right of refugees from whole areas to return to their homes, claiming that in this way at least some of them will be able to go back. In order to blunt sensation, they speak about the payment of compensation. But the sole thing to be achieved by such a suggestion would be the legalization of usurpation that will finally affect all the refugees and will create the conditions for the displacement of the remaining Cypriots."

"The people are being given the poison in doses so that this may not be noticed. Proposals that were originally considered unacceptable are now gradually not only being accepted but are also being used as banner of struggle.

"We need strong hands to hold a sound foreign policy. We need a socioeconomic policy that would serve the struggle and all the people. Our economy is being led on a catastrophic course and we are compelled to give a warning about its effects on our very existence. Those who are trying by means of drugs to present a fake picture are doing the people and our national issue a disservice. Those who endorse this policy are equally responsible.

"We have suggested concrete measures for a change, but unfortunately the situation has deteriorated instead of improving. Today more and more people realize that only the line suggested by EDEK can lead us out of the deadlock and that only the EDEK proposals for a minimum program can provide a solution to our economic problems. The people have learned to trust EDEK. Thus, our obligation to prove worthy of the people's confidence is great. Guided by this, EDEK will carry on with the road for a change."

O AGON DOUBTS WALDHEIM'S CAPABILITY TO RESOLVE ISSUE

NC151110 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 15 Mar 80 p 1 NC

["My Opinion" column by 'The Observer': "Lost Investments; Waldheim Can Offer Us Nothing"]

[Excerpts] We do not know how much credit the government gives to the UN secretary general for resuming the intercommunal talks, and even more for finding a just solution to the Cyprus problem, but we have no doubt whatsoever that Mr Waldheim can offer us nothing in this direction.

In addition, we lose valuable time and help the Turkish plans and the consolidation of a fait accomplis by insisting on investing everything in Waldheim--knowing, unfortunately, that the UN secretary general can offer us nothing.

This is not the first time that this column has criticized the UN secretary general, but his recent activities regarding the resumption of the intercommunal talks have gone too far.

Waldheim is attempting to succeed in resuming the intercommuncal talks. Basing himself on the UN resolutions, he should have proceeded in drafting and imposing his proposals. And having these proposals as a basis, he should have convened the talks. The side that does not attend should then be exposed before world public opinion for its refusal to negotiate.

Waldheim should have followed this path. But what does he do?

He submits proposals on proposals and formulas on formulas that are irrelevant to the UN resolutions, but he also speaks against these resolutions. In addition, he has reached the stage--as we are informed--of cancelling points of his proposals that the Turkish side does not accept. And he also allows Denktas to tell him that the statement he will make before the beginning of the talks must be in the hands of the Turkish side in advance.

Waldheim has become the victim of Turkish demands, and under such circumstances it is futile to expect that he will succeed in resuming the intercommunal talks. Only naive people believe that it is possible that he would offer us a just solution to our problem.

TFSC WANTS GOVERNMENT TO LIFT NOTAM ON ERCAN AIRSPACE

TA142040 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 14 Mar 80 TA

[Text] The Turkish Federated State of Cyprus wants the Greek Cypriot administration to lift the NOTAM it imposed on the air corridors in the northern Cyprus airspace. The Turkish Cypriot minister of foreign affairs, defense and tourism, Kenan Atakol, has said that the failure on the part of the Greek Cypriots to lift the NOTAM will negatively affect the efforts for the resumption of the intercommunal talks.

The Turkish Federated State of Cyprus declared its airspace (?controlled by) Ercan in 1977 after the Greek Cypriot administration had declared in 1975 that it would not supply air traffic service in northern Cyprus. After Turkey lifted NOTAM 714 concerning the Aegean airspace, the Greek Cypriot administration declared that it opened to traffic under its own control the two air corridors passing from Ercan airspace.

Kenan Atakol summoned the UN secretary general's special envoy in Cyprus, Galindo-Pohl, to the presidency [as heard] today and stressed the danger created by the latest Greek Cypriot steps. In a statement after the meeting, Atakol said that he asked Galindo-Pohl to convey to Secretary General Waldheim that the Greek Cypriot NOTAM might lead to huge airplane accidents. Atakol said: We clearly stated that a failure on the part of the Greek Cypriots to lift this NOTAM will negatively affect the efforts for the resumption of the intercommunal talks, and even cast a shadow over the intercommunal talks. We asked Mr Galindo-Pohl to convey this to the secretary general and to ask him to make sure, within the framework of his authority, that the Greek Cypriots renounce this attitude.

TO VIMA PUBLISHES ROGERS PLAN ON NATO REINTEGRATION

[By TO VIMA Washington correspondent Yiannis Roubatis]

[Text] Today TO VIMA exclusively publishes the entire "Rogers plan" regarding Greece's return to the NATO military wing which thus far had been secret. Its publication breaks the veil of secrecy which thus far has surrounded the NATO supreme commander's proposals, and reveals that the "Rogers plan" is the closest to the Turkish positions of all the successive "formulas" which so far have been submitted to the Greek Government by the Atlantic alliance.

In a report from Washington (the entire text is on page 8), our correspondent Yiannis Roubatis reveals that General Rogers had placed the settlement of Greek-Turkish bilateral differences as a prerequisite for Greece's final return to NATO and actually stressed that until bilateral issues between Greece and Turkey have been settled Greece's return will be only temporary.

In the introduction of his plan, General Rogers characteristically wrote that so long as these differences were not solved, "Greece's return would not be possible or desirable." Thus, for the first time since 1974, Greece's negotiations with NATO officially fall within the complex of Greek-Turkish differences. Also, for the first time all the limits of command and control over the Aegean airspace and sea surface are being disputed and the possibility is afforded to Turkish military planes of entering the Aegean international area without any Greek control. At the same time, it is revealed that it is General Rogers who proposed the mutual lifting by Greece and Turkey of NOTAM's 714 and 1157 which, as is well known, took place last month.

The "Rogers plan" consists of nine articles which radically change everything that had been agreed upon between Generals Davos and Haig in July 1978.

The first article proposed the creation in the Aegean of a new zone for the exchange of information which for the first time in certain points divides Greek islands in two to the benefit of the Turks.

The second article states that only NATO radars will be used for the exchange of information in the airspace, thus satisfying the Turkish aim to cover the eastern Aegean side exclusively by NATO radars stationed on Turkish territory.

The third article limits the Greek national airspace from 10 to 6 miles "for NATO military purposes."

The fourth article gives Turkish military planes the ability to enter the Aegean international area without any Greek control.

The fifth article suggests the mutual lifting--which has already been implemented--by Greece and Turkey of the NOTAM's on air traffic in the Aegean.

Articles six through eight adopt the concept of "operational forces" in the Aegean Sea and thus abolish the NATO command on NATO's behalf [as published] in the Aegean which, until 1974, was headed by the chief of the Greek Naval General Staff.

The ninth article permits NATO's unrestricted use of the land, sea and air spaces in the Aegean area.

As is well known, the "Rogers plan" was rejected by the Greek Government. At the end of last week General Rogers went to Washington to discuss the situation which has now been created in the NATO eastern wing. In any case, it has not been learned yet whether Greece's refusal will influence a possible new plan for reintegration.

PAPANDREOU INTERVIEWED ON GOALS OF BAGHDAD, BONN VISITS

AT161630 Athens EXORMISI in Greek 16 Mar 80 pp 1, 11 AT

[Text] In an interview granted to EXORMISI, leader of the majority opposition and chairman of PASOK, A. Papandreou, analysed the goals of his visit to Baghdad and Bonn. He stressed the fundamental role of the nonalined countries--which remain outside military coalitions--in the struggle for preservation of detente and peace. At the same time he stressed the necessity for coordination--on a worldwide scale--"of the actions of political forces that contribute, to a greater or a lesser degree, to the defusion of international tension."

The coordinated action of these forces, Papandreou stressed in his interview, for the defense of peace at this critical period is of a decisive nature.

PASOK intends to contribute with all its strength to a worldwide crusade against polarization and against armaments by following a path that will lead to the weakening of the cold war camps, toward attaining independence and self-determination of nations and to the strengthening of peace.

The text of Papadreou's interview is as follows:

Question: After your visit to Hungary last November you began a new series of visits to foreign countries in 1980. These visits were carried out at a time which is particularly critical for humanity. If we bear in mind that the center of gravity of these developments is in the Middle and Near East, then your visit to Iraq, as already stressed by the leaders of this country, had special significance. What would you like to say about this visit?

Papandreou: I believe that it was a very important visit particularly because it was undertaken at a period when once again humanity appears to be slipping toward a cold war confrontation by the superpowers. The collapse of the shah's satellite regime in Iran, the U.S. decision to install Eurostrategic weapons in West Europe and the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan are simultaneously both the causes and the symptoms of this course toward the confrontation of the two superpowers.

Within the framework of deterioration of relations between the two superpowers there is an attempted unification of their "allies" and a declaration of their solidarity toward Washington and, on the other hand, toward Moscow.

At the same time it is attempted, in the Western front, to force the NATO member states to actively participate in the hardening of relations toward the Warsaw Pact countries and to adopt reprisals against the USSR invasion of Afghanistan. The countries of West Europe, however (with the exception of Britain) avoid their full alinement with the United States. This particularly applies to France and to a certain degree also to West Germany. Over and above the importance of economic and trade relations between Europe and the USSR and the Warsaw Pact, for the people of Europe who directly lived through the horror of two world wars, detente is a strategic goal of primary importance, which they are not prepared to sacrifice on the altar of the cold war policy of the United States.

At this critical period the role of the nonalined countries, the countries which remain outside the two military coalitions, is of particular significance. They directly contribute to preventing polarization and they create the historic framework for a course that leads to the dissolution of the military coalitions and to active opposition of the inherent threat to world peace.

Iraq, without question, is in the vanguard of the nonalined in the Arab world. The proposal of Saddam Husayn to the Arab countries--a proposal with eight points on nonalined policy--has already been greatly welcomed. At least 14 Arab countries, which adopted the Iraqi proposal, will be taking part in the Baghdad summit conference.

Similar initiatives must be undertaken in the Mediterranean area and more generally in the European area. PASOK intends to contribute with all its strength to a crusade against polarization and armaments, to a course which will lead to the weakening of the cold war camps, to the attainment of independence and self-determination of nations and to the strengthening of peace.

In Baghdad I was given the opportunity to exchange views with the leadership of Ba'th and with the president of Iraq, Saddam Husayn. We reached agreement on the critical points of formulating an active nonalined policy and on promoting the independence of nations and world peace.

Question: It is obvious that great dangers have been created today for Europe and detente after the transition from "militant coexistence" to cold war. In your address to the Central Committee you stressed that today there are possibilities--provided all progressive forces react in a coordinated and positive way--of once again returning to "militant coexistence" since the cold war also incorporates the danger of an "apocalypse." Knowing that European countries and parties have expressed their opposition to the new climate that has been created, could we consider your visit to Germany and your meeting with Willy Brandt as one further step toward implementing your proposal in the Chamber of Deputies? (PASOK will undertake a broader effort to coordinate the efforts of the forces that believe in detente and peace.)

Papandreou: Coordination--on a worldwide scale--of action by political forces which contribute, to a greater or to a lesser degree, toward diffusion of international tension and to the defense of peace is of great significance at this critical period when the survival of humanity is at stake. It is true that my meeting with Willy Brandt will have this meaning. Willy Brandt played an important role in the rapprochement of West Germany to East Germany and the Soviet Union. This very rapprochement is today threatened by the clash of the superpowers and particularly by the policy of "reprisals" which the United States is trying to enforce upon Europe. During my meeting with Brandt I will have the opportunity to exchange to views on the developing scenario of the clash between the United States and the USSR.

VOTCP SCORES CHRISTOPHER STATEMENTS ON AID TO COUNTRY

TA141135 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 14 Mar 80 TA

[Unattributed commentary]

[Text] U.S. Deputy Secretary of State Warren Christopher has said that economic aid to be extended to Turkey would also be beneficial for the United States. Noting that a loan of $452 million would be extended to Turkey during 1981, Christopher said that this included economic as well as military aid and added that foreign aid played a significant role in realizing U.S. foreign policy objectives. Christopher, dear listeners, is speaking candidly. In fact, imperialist politicians do not feel the obligation to hide the objectives of the so-called aid extended to our country. FRG Chancellor Schmidt also made statements on this subject during his recent visit to Washington saying: "Turkey is our only agent in the Middle East, and in the future, we shall harvest the results of these aids." Is it not true that imperialist countries consider our country as a colony?

Meanwhile, with the erosion of some of Washington's positions in the Middle East, the West has announced its plans of aid to Turkey. As openly noted by Christopher, the aid process has a special place in U.S. foreign policy. In regions where it cannot establish its hegemony through bloody coups arranged by the CIA, the Washington administration resorts to the aid machine. The IMF promises to extend aid and then asks for several political prerequisites. The U.S. aid is followed by the establishment of new aggressive bases on our soil. The United States is trying to drag Turkey into the emergency force plan established with the aim of preserving its national interests in the region. Through the aid machine, the United States is trying to benefit from our country in the economic and military spheres for the sake of its imperialist interests. The main objectives of the so-called aid are to monitor the Soviet Union from bases on our soil and to establish its hegemony over the Aegean and the Mediterranean seas.

In its editorial of 27 February, the Soviet daily PRAVDA has pointed out the fact that the establishment of new aggressive bases for the sake of aid by the imperialists would be dangerous for Turkey. As also stressed by 51 RPP deputies, the nuclear heads stored in the aggressive bases on our soil for the sake of the so-called U.S. aid, represent a danger that would turn Turkey into a nuclear cemetery in a probable war. The reactionary, fascist and Maoist press and those like [Senator] Metin Toler and Erkmen--who conceded to U.S. and NATO aggressive aims for the sake of the so-called aid--reacted with an outcry against the realistic stand by the PRAVDA newspaper, intensifying the anti-Soviet campaign in accordance with Carter's directives.

Dear listeners, our people and the working class are also witness to another kind of aid. This aid is the real aid extended by socialism and the Soviet Union. From the day of its establishment the Soviet Union has pursued goodneighborly and friendly policies toward Turkey. The Nazilli and Kayseri textile installations, built by aid and loans extended by the Soviet Union and Soviet equipment and technology, along with the Seydisehir aluminum mills, the Aliaga oil refinery, the Iskenderun iron and steel mills, the Bandirma sulfuric acid factory and several dams are the vivid monuments of this friendship. Not only the realistic politicians of the bourgeoisie but reactionary and capitalist writers such as Guneri Civaoglu are forced to admit these genuine aids. In his article published in the Istanbul daily TERCUMAN on 11 March 1978, Civaoglu said: It is true the Soviet Union is extending aid to Turkey, but this aid is flowing to the public sector and not the private sector. Dear listeners, what is there for us to add to this statement? This statement openly points out the difference between the so-called aid by imperialism and the real and genuine aid by socialism.

FOREIGN MINISTER SUPPORTS TFSC POSITION ON CYPRUS AIRSPACE

[Text] Turkish Foreign Minister Hayrettin Erkmen said: We support the initiatives of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus [TFSC] regarding Cyprus airspace. In a statement to the Turkish daily, CUMHURIYET, Erkmen stated that Turkey supports the steps taken by the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus with the aim of insuring the security of civilian flights over northern Cyprus.

Erkmen pointed out that even though NOTAM 714 did not concern Cyprus, in practice civilian flights going to [Greek] Cyprus used to take a different route, until last month when the Greek Cypriot administration issued new NOTAM's whereby civilian flights began to fly into [Greek] Cyprus directly, over Karpas [Karpasha]. Erkmen added: That is, the direction has changed. However, we have long had a flight between Ankara and Lefkosa [Nicosia]. Consequently, this new situation has created certain risks to flight security in that region. The Turkish Federated State of Cyprus has made certain representations to the International Civil Aviation Organization in connection with this matter. The aim is to insure flight security. We support the Turkish Cypriot representations made to the International Civil Aviation Organization.

The Turkish foreign minister stressed that the issue concerned only civil flights and had no military aspect.

PRIME MINISTER DEMIREL ON ELECTION OF NEW PRESIDENT

TA141853 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 14 Mar 80 TA

[Excerpts] Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel has said that during the election of a new president, Turkey would show to the world once more that democracy works in the country. He also said that it was natural for all parties to work together and make it easy for that problem [presidential election] to be resolved.

President Fahri Koruturk received Demirel at the Cankaya Mansion at 1700 and held his weekly meeting with him. After the 1-hour meeting, Demirel told reporters that the government was trying with all its might to solve the two main problems of the country, namely anarchy and the economic difficulties.

Demirel said all the other countries that were in Turkey's situation were taking the same measures. He stressed that, by saying "there is only one way to solve the problems," he meant the path he was pursuing now. He pointed out that no one had come up with an alternative plan for the solution of the problems so far.

Demirel said that a presidential election will be held at the Turkish Grand National Assembly on 22 March because President Koruturk's term of office ends on 6 April. Demirel said:

[Begin Demirel recording] The presidency is a lofty duty; the president of the Turkish Republic is, in fact, an extremely important office. Coming to or leaving this post is regulated by certain rules. I hope, and I am absolutely convinced, that during the presidential elections, Turkey will show to the world once again that democracy works in the country. No matter what the arguments or debates, the Turkish Grand National Assembly will successfully carry out its duties. I do not think there is any reason for alarm as long as we all remain within the rules and regulations and believe that the rules and regulations will bring about a solution. [end recording]

A journalist recalled Ecevit's remarks to the effect that the two big parties must cooperate during the presidential election and his call for a dialog with the Justice Party. The journalist asked the prime minister what the attitude of the Justice Party would be regarding the issue. Demirel replied:

[Begin Demirel recording] The presidential election is an extremely important issue. When the atmosphere of the election is created and the conditions emerge, it is very natural for everyone to be in contact and to exchange views with each other in order to help the Turkish Grand National Assembly achieve success. (?Our duty) is to protect our institution, to protect its prestige and to make it function in a way deserving of our nation. At this stage there is no need to do anything yet. We will deal with the situation when the time comes. We will emerge from this situation with dignity.

MARTIAL LAW COORDINATION MEETING DISCUSSES RECENT INCIDENTS

[Text] The expanded martial law coordination meeting has ended. The meeting, which began at the General Staff headquarters at 0930 under the chairmanship of Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel, lasted 8 hours. The incidents which occurred in martial law enforcement areas and other areas since 17 February were discussed during the meeting. A general assessment of the incidents was made and the measures which should be taken in the future were also discussed during the meeting.

Chief of the General Staff Gen Kenan Evren, the relevant state ministers, the justice, defense, interior, foreign, finance, national education, public works, customs and monopolies, transportation, labor, industry and technology, energy and natural resources and youth and sports ministers, the ground and naval forces commanders and the general commander of the gendarmerie attended the meeting. The deputy chief of General Staff, the Defense Ministry under secretary, martial law commanders and other officials were also present at the meeting.

ECEVIT WARNS DEMIREL ON ROLE OF ARMED FORCES

TA161618 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1557 GMT 16 Mar 80 TA

[Text] Tarsus, 16 Mar (AA)--Republican People's Party [RPP] leader Bulent Ecevit charged Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel with "in a sense provoking the armed forces." Speaking at an outdoor rally in Tarsus, Ecevit claimed acts of violence were gradually being "transformed" into "mass conflict" mainly due to the "provocative behaviour" of the government and its supporters. Ecevit charged Demirel with attempting to provoke the armed forces in a sense when he said the armed forces must reach a "decisive result" in the campaign against terrorism.

The RPP leader explained martial law had been effective in fulfilling the original purposes for which it was declared, namely to stop the fanning of sectarian differences into open hostilities between people, and to speed up court trials of terrorists. To pretend that beyond this, to end hit-and-run acts was primarily a function of the army was in fact to force the armed forces into an activity beyond its proper functions. This was "unfair" and "highly undesirable" besides, he added.

The prime minister, who insisted on blaming only one side for the acts of terror, and ignored the large number of convicts who kept escaping from prison, had "no right to put the blame on others, and the responsibility on the armed forces," Ecevit commented.

Within the 100 days in which Demirel had promised to straighten things out, inflation had soared to unforeseen proportions, production, export revenue, foreign exchange sent in by Turkish workers abroad, and the exchange rate had all declined, while "the only two things that kept rising" were "prices and political murders," Ecevit charged.

He claimed the government had gone bankrupt in all senses even before the 100 days were out, but Demirel, who said he would step down if he failed, and who "kept none of his promises to the people," was obliged to stay on in order to keep his commitments to the "domestic and foreign exploiters" who expected him to build the "South American model" in Turkey.

The RPP leader claimed the "mobile scale" bill drafted by the government would "shelve" labor's right of collective bargaining and the right to strike. He warned, however, in order to shelve labor rights, one had "first to shelve democracy" and no one could do this in Turkey.

NAP FINDS GOVERNMENT 'INADEQUATE' IN FIGHTING ANARCHY

TA161510 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1425 GMT 16 Mar 80 TA

[Text] Ankara, 16 Mar (AA)--Nationalist Action Party [NAP] leader Alpaslan Turkes said his party wishes the current government success, but finds its policy against anarchy inadequate "to defeat the enemy."

Speaking at the local NAP Congress in Tokat, Turkes claimed the police had not been reorganized as desired, and that critical posts in the Education Ministry were still under the control of "a certain association's militants."

The government could not "stand by" to watch "hospitals, factories, schools, and other institutions" remain "under occupation" he said, nor acquiesce in the face of "passive resistance" on the excuse that there were no outright disturbances.

Turkey was facing a "total attack," Turkes claimed, which aimed at subjecting the country to "communist slavery." He called on the government, "which shares the same diagnosis", to take "appropriate action."

It was deplorable, he said, that "communist and secessionist armed gangs of treason" had led the Turkish Armed Forces and security forces to adopt a "posture of defense," which was the wrong strategy against guerrillas with men assigned to defending banks, police stations, and other buildings, and thus tied down. There was not enough force left to deal decisively with the enemy, he claimed.

Calls For Early Elections

TA171639 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 17 Mar 80 TA

[Text] Nationalist Action Party [NAP] Deputy Secretary General Omer Cakiroglu has said that has party wants early elections which will insure that the national will is fully reflected at the National Assembly. In a statement in Ankara, Cakiroglu pointed out that the conditions in the country and the arithmetical situation at the National Assembly called for early elections. He said: We call on RPP leader Ecevit not to run away from the elections or from the people.

Cakiroglu recalled that Ecevit described the persons who had created incidents at his [Ecevit's] open air rally in Tarsus as fascists disguised as revolutionaries. Cakiroglu stressed that this confirmed the RPP's protection of communists.

USSR PROMISES TO BUY MORE SHIPS FROM FINLAND

LD172306 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1530 GMT 17 Mar 80 LD

[Text] The Soviet trade representative in Finland, M.V. Gubanov, has promised that the Soviet Union will increase its orders for ships built in Finland. Gubanov, who spoke in Helsinki at the opening of a photographic exhibition of the Soviet Merchant Marine, said Soviet orders will increase in both value and volume.

During 1981-85 the value of orders will be about Fmk12 billion, Gubanov noted. He said that since 1945 Finland has delivered more than 2,000 vessels to the Soviet Union.

KREISKY OUTLINES POSITION ON PLO RECOGNITION

AU181300 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1143 GMT 18 Mar 80 AU

[Erich Aichinger, Zita Bernardi report on Vienna press conference following the Cabinet meeting on 18 March]

[Excerpt] In conclusion, there were shifts of emphasis to foreign policy, concretely to the recognition by Austria of the PLO as representative of the Palestinian people. Asked about a U.S. request for an interpretation of this decision, Kreisky declared that one could not demand anything from Austria, one could only ask for such an interpretation--and what would happen if the USSR were to urge an explanation for any foreign policy step taken by Austria? The only ones who might be entitled to such an explanation were perhaps the Israelis, the chancellor added. In reply to the question whether Austria might also consider for other ethnic groups steps similar to those taken regarding the Palestinians, Kreisky said that if similar prerequisites existed as in the case of the PLO--such as recognition by the United Nations--he might take certain things into consideration.

GENERAL KUNTNER SPECULATES ON USSR INVASION OF YUGOSLAVIA

DW181256 Hamburg DER SPIEGEL in German 17 Mar 80 pp 162-169 DW

[Correspondent Inge Cyrus undated interview with Austrian General of Armored Forces Wilhelm Kuntner in Vienna]

[Text] SPIEGEL: General, could it happen that the Western world might wake up one day and find with a shock: The Soviets are invading Yugoslavia?

Kuntner: This could happen only if the West were put into a state of chemical deep sleep 14 days earlier. Otherwise this is absolutely out of the question, because the Soviet Union cannot do that without preparations.

SPIEGEL: Because its troops in Hungary--two armored divisions, two motorized infantry divisions, and a front airborne army with a total of about 60,000 men--are too weak for an invasion?

Kuntner: Yes, the Soviet Union would have to relocate at least another 25 divisions into the Yugoslav border region of the Warsaw Pact states. The West in turn would be bound to spot this easily just by satellite reconnaissance. The few railroad lines can easily be watched, and the same is true for the ferry operations between Odessa and Varna.

SPIEGEL: Before we go on talking about troop strengths, do you deem a Soviet attack on Yugoslavia conceivable at all militarily and politically?

Kuntner: Had you asked me 10 years ago I would have said that it is inconceivable. Today I must tell you: It is not totally inconceivable.

SPIEGEL: Why not?

Kuntner: Ten years ago we had balanced military and political forces in Europe. This balance of forces at the beginning of the detente process at the time would not have allowed a military change. Now such a balance exists only between the United States and the USSR through the intercontinental missiles. In the case of the Eurostrategic potential, targeted on Europe, in contrast, there is a preponderance of the Soviet Union which will continue to exist for the next 4,5 years. This at least puts some more force behind potential political objectives of the Kremlin because the reply of the counterpressure is inadequate at the moment.

SPIEGEL: In other words, if it were in the Kremlin's political concept to occupy Yugoslavia at some given time and to advance to the Mediterranean, the Kremlin would have to do that prior to 1985 because afterwards it may hardly be in the position to do so any longer because of the restored European East-West arms balance in Europe.

Kuntner: This is correct. Mutual deterrence, which at the moment has been somewhat lost, would later become more effective again. But by this I do not mean to say at all that the Soviet military strategists recommend a Soviet intervention in Yugoslavia at this time. It is necessary to assess things soberly.

SPIEGEL: So?

Kuntner: The only thing that is calming about the present world situation is that we have time for crisis management. This is all the more true for Yugoslavia. It is thanks to Tito's long strength of physical resistance in agony and the physicians in the clinic at Ljubljana that the Western and Eastern worlds, and naturally also the people of Yugoslavia, have won a pause for reflection. Gradually hysteria could return to realism. Despite their dynamic foreign and power policies, the politicians in the Kremlin will certainly ponder the question of whether they will want to destroy completely, for the sake of some possible power increases in Europe, the detente process from which the Soviet Union could continue to profit. The military people, in turn, definitely know that Yugoslavia is a hard nut to crack.

SPIEGEL: The great Soviet Union has a population of 262 million. Small Yugoslavia has but 22 million, and consists of six nationalities to boot which do not necessarily stick together. Sixty Soviet warships are cruising in the Mediterranean. The border between Yugoslavia and the Warsaw Pact states including Romania is about 1,700 kilometers long. In the light of these dimensions...

Kuntner: ...Yugoslavia's defensive potential should not be rated as minor at all. After all, ever since the Soviet intervention in the CSSR Tito has not only settled his political succession in the state and party leadership, but also drawn the military conclusions from August 1968, meaning he has completely turned his defense concept upside down.

Up to 1968 this concept had been based on the mobile army commanded by the central states. Then Tito again recalled his successful guerrilla army and created the territorial armed forces which are subordinated to the republics. These are pure regional armed forces, differently trained, differently led and naturally also differently equipped, without any combat tanks and similar gear. Small hamlets must put up a group of soldiers, larger villages an entire company, cities a battalion up to a brigade. All told this involves a million men which can be increased to 3 million in case of emergency.

SPIEGEL: Provided the guest workers are brought home in good time.

Kuntner: Yes, all of them have their uniforms in the wardrobe and obtain arms and ammunition at central points in their immediate neighborhood.

SPIEGEL: Psychologically it is quite understandable that Tito is again putting his stakes on guerrilla warfare with which he succeeded in tying up 10 German divisions in World War II. But is Yugoslavia's present military situation even remotely comparable to that of the years between 1941 and 1945?

Kuntner: No, it is not comparable. To begin with, in World War II Germany was fully engaged on the eastern front and could send only 10 occupation divisions to Yugoslavia. Secondly, guerrilla warfare at the time was untested. It just developed gradually of itself. Now it has been practiced for a decade on a continuous basis.

SPIEGEL: In World War II the Germans were not as strong as the Soviets are now, the Yugoslavs are stronger today than they were then. Is this so?

Kuntner: Exactly, that is the way it is. The Yugoslavs have further developed the old guerrilla experiences to a combat technique which is modern indeed.

SPIEGEL: ...Which can become effective only, however, if the prosperous Yugoslav citizens of 1980 can muster a readiness for sacrifices similar to that of their fathers in 1941.

Kuntner: Anyone knowing Yugoslavia and the Yugoslavs as well as I do is also aware of their national pride and knows that it is a nearly unbearable thought for all--regardless of whether they are Serbs, Croats or Slovenians--to live under an occupation regime.

SPIEGEL: Suppose you were chief of the Soviet General Staff and facing the task of occupying Yugoslavia. How would you go about it?

Kuntner: Thank God, I am not the chief of the Soviet General Staff. If I were I would first of all urge the politicians not to renounce the long border between Romania and Yugoslavia.

SPIEGEL: Hence, massive pressure on Bucharest to either go along in a "fraternal assistance" against Yugoslavia or at least make Romania available as the deployment area for other troops of the Warsaw Pact.

Kuntner: This is to be expected. Militarily, no member of the General Staff can overlook the fact that Yugoslavia offers ideal conditions for an armored attack from Hungary and, in part, from Romania. The lowlands there constitute a veritable tank highway to Belgrade, provided one operates directly with paratroop components, tying up essential Yugoslav forces at the Bulgarian border, which is topographically less suited for attack.

SPIEGEL: To go by what you are saying, the Soviets could not be stopped before Belgrade?

Kuntner: If the Soviets plan on a large-scale action and make use of the vast resources of a superpower--which they would definitely do in the event of an intervention--then an advance on Belgrade cannot be halted.

SPIEGEL: When would the Rissian troops reach the Yugoslav capital?

Kuntner: According to Soviet literature about strategic aims, the thinkers of Moscow's General Staff expect in combat and march movements to make 100 kilometers a day where they launch an attack with all available means. Even if the Yugoslavs do not voluntarily abandon one square meter of their territory, such a massive attack ought to reach Belgrade in 3 days at the latest. Conquering the city, however, would take much more time because of territorial defense where the whole populace will become an army. As is known, nothing is more unpleasant for an attacker than densely populated area.

SPIEGEL: And then?

Kuntner: The next military aim of the Soviet ought to be finding a land connection to the Mediterranean, to the great northern ports of the Adriatic. That corridor would most probably be approximately between the two pillars of Belgrade and Zagreb--possibly bypassing these two in an initial thrust--and reaching as far as Rijeka. This would help the effect of supporting action from the sea. The Soviets have landing craft that cannot be immediately recognized as warships.

All that can be done if the Soviets use their front divisions that are mostly equipped with the most modern tank, the T-72. That can be done with the support of airborne divisions so that relatively small losses will occur. Yugoslavia can put up against the T-72 tanks only 1,500 comparatively old types of tanks, some T-34 grandpas from World War II, and otherwise T-54/55 and the American M-47 tanks. The T-72 license production is starting just now and Western observers believe that in the final production stage difficulties might come up in connection with the electronic equipment.

SPIEGEL: How many tanks could the Soviet Union muster for action in Yugoslavia, and how many airborne divisions?

Kuntner: It would certainly not attack with less than 5,000 to 6,000 tanks. It has a total of eight airborne divisions. One of them is tied down in Afghanistan, as we know; of the others one part ought to be programmed for East Asia. Yet the first round would be no problem. It would undoubtedly be won by the Soviets. Thereafter, however....

SPIEGEL: ...The Yugoslav territorial forces would become really active, in other words the partisans?

Kuntner: In the first phase of an aggression the Yugoslav territorial army cannot be more than a delaying factor. Thereafter, however, and together with the forces of the Yugoslav People's Army that have not been destroyed, it would become a most unpleasant factor for the entire duration of the aggressor's presence. Imagine 3 million people trained in the strategy of 1,000 needle stabs! The modern attack armies of the superpowers in particular are extremely dependent on the umbilical cords of their supply. Whenever they are disrupted, the whole apparatus comes to a stop.

A superpower can hardly accept such a scenario unless it were convinced that large parts of the country would join it voluntarily, but the Soviets certainly cannot hope for the latter in the case of Yugoslavia. Despite all the rivalries between the individual ethnic groups in the republics, the Yugoslavs are rather likely to merge in the event of external pressure.

SPIEGEL: How long could a partisan army last against the Soviets with its bases located in eastern and western Yugoslavia on both sides of the Soviet corridor?

Kuntner: With the corresponding morale, very long. In order to clear up the situation after months of fighting, the Soviets would have to move in considerably more units.

SPIEGEL: Even more than the 29 divisions mentioned?

Kuntner: Yes, of course! There ought to be considerably more divisions--I would say 40 to 45--and they should be of a different structure. The classic areas of partisan warfare cannot be brought under control with mechanized units and tank divisions. That pertains not only to Bosnia, it also pertains to the southern part of Croatia, such as the Plitvicka Lakes where Tito had his headquarters for a time in the war. He who has seen that area knows that he can only achieve something here with strong infantry units, if at all.

The 10 German divisions never got that area under control. Over and over again war spread from there to the vitally important parts of the German occupation forces. The Germans did not succeed in "smoking out" the nests of the partisans. The Soviets probably would not succeed either, at least not with their present forces.

SPIEGEL: Does it mean that the Soviet Union is not at all equipped for this kind of fight?

Kuntner: This is exactly what it means. The Soviet Army is helpless against partisans. It has geared the entire structure of its military strength for a conflict with another highly technical system. One need only view the structure of the Soviet Army! There are fewer and fewer infantry elements and more and more technical elements, because it has always seen its adversaries in the industrial nations of the West and because it had adapted itself to them.

SPIEGEL: Which would explain why it seems to be obviously poorly equipped for Afghanistan.

Kuntner: Very much so. It is only strong there if it flies around with modern helicopters like fortresses to put down revolts. The Soviets at present have nothing effective to counteract partisan warfare as planned by Yugoslavia. In order to do that one needs enormously strong infantry units, which the Soviet Union no longer has today and which it cannot have. In order to set them up it would have to take hundreds of thousands of young people from production to train them intensely for at least half a year. Will it really do all that to itself just because the Yugoslavia--in view of the real ideological adversary? It would at any rate be most problematic.

SPIEGEL: You have said before that in the next 5 years NATO will be inferior to the Soviets. Must one conclude from this that it would have to keep out of a Russian-Yugoslav conflict? And if so, how could President Carter's offer to help Yugoslavia be implemented militarily?

Kuntner: Not through NATO but through the United States, and that with nuclear means. It would take weeks before the United States would have other means at its disposal in Europe. They do not stand there ready for action. Compared with the task of moving a conventional replacement army across the ocean, the Soviet troop transport problems prior to an invasion of Yugoslavia look like a cinch.

SPIEGEL: Then we would have nuclear war because of Yugoslavia, the destruction of the world.

Kuntner: Yes, but I am convinced that the Soviet Union reckons with this most carefully. All in all my thesis is the following: The Kremlin will decide to make an intervention in Yugoslavia only if it can first expect that Yugoslavia will defend itself to a small extent or not at all, and second that the West will look on completely inactively at this process. Every risk will bring influence to bear on a decision not to intervene.

SPIEGEL: General, we thank you for this talk.

SIMONET: DETENTE NEEDS 'BALANCE OF WILLS AND MEANS'

LD191019 Brussels LE SOIR in French 15 Mar 80 p 3 LD

[Unattributed report: "Mr Simonet: Preserving East-West Balance"]

[Text] Mr Henri Simonet and Mr Vacarel, Romanian ambassador in Brussels, attended an official reception at the Romanian Embassy to mark the 100th anniversary of diplomatic relations between Belgium and Romania.

While Mr Vacarel's speech was dedicated above all to celebrating 100 years of harmonious relations between our two countries, Mr Simonet dealt quite bluntly with the theme of detente.

"Neither your country nor mine is responsible for present problems," he stated. "The primary condition for detente is preservation of the balance of wills and means. It would not survive long in the face of the reemergence of irresistible temptations arising from the superiority of one camp or division within the other."

Making clear reference to the events in Afghanistan, Mr Simonet concluded: "One cannot separate the defense of international law and, particularly, of the principles of the independence of states from noninterference in their internal affairs.... We desire these bases for detente, which cannot be confined to Europe."

The reaffirmation of these principles of independence is the common ground between Belgian diplomacy and Romanian foreign policy which, within the Warsaw Pact, has always kept its distance from Soviet hegemonism, a convergence which does not shatter the "idyllic" framework of the history of Belgian-Romanian relations (except during the early days of the cold war).

Belgium, in fact, played an important role in Romania's struggle for independence by welcoming Romanian revolutionaries driven from Paris by the advent of the second empire. Our 1831 Constitution and Belgian civil and commercial legislation have also served as models to Romanian legislators.

COMPANY SIGNS 3-YEAR OIL CONTRACT WITH SAUDIS

LD191003 Brussels LE SOIR in French 14 Mar 80 pp 1, 7 LD

[F.D.B. report: "Belgian-Saudi Contract Achieves Better Balance in Our Oil Market"]

[Excerpt] Economic Affairs Minister Willy Claes has announced that the seminationalized Distrigaz company has signed a 3-year contract with Saudi Arabia for the purchase and delivery of 5 million tons of crude oil per year. Belgium has acquired this oil at a base price of $26 a barrel, that is, at the usual Saudi rate, which is the lowest among prevailing OPEC prices.

Mr Claes explained that this was not a question of the state setting up a parallel market but rather of protecting the country against a possible breakdown of conventional supplies (by the companies) and, in this event, of enabling independent distributors of petroleum products to find a regular supply to permit them to serve their customers. In fact, these independents buy their products on the Rotterdam free market, where prices fluctuate greatly, sometimes making it impossible to buy because of Belgium's fixed maximum retail price.

FRENCH PREMIER ARRIVES FOR TALKS WITH VAN AGT

LD181348 Paris Domestic Service in French 1200 GMT 18 Mar 80 LD

[Text] Raymond Barre has arrived in The Hague. The premier is to have talks in the Netherlands with Netherlands Prime Minister Mr Van Agt. After the Giscard-Schmidt summit in Hamburg, during which, as you know, European issues were discussed, this meeting in The Hague is also connected with the European summit to be held in Brussels, which will be very important for the future of the Community. The French premier will explain to Mr Van Agt the Paris standpoint on the lamb problem and European agricultural issues. The British attitude to the difficult issue of the EEC budget will also be discussed.

Another item on the agenda is the important French-Dutch problems. The pollution of the Rhine has divided the French and the Dutch for a long time. Indeed, the Netherlands accuses France, and more precisely the Alsatian potash mines, of pouring far too much salt into the river, which causes serious damage to the river in its Netherlands stretch.

VAN DER KLAAUW COMMENTS ON MIDEAST PROBLEMS

NC191126 Cairo MENA in Arabic 1002 GMT 19 Mar 80 NC

[Text] Cairo, 19 March--The Netherlands foreign minister, Christoph Van der Klaauw, has affirmed that there will be no European initiatives before 26 May. He said: We cannot impede the current negotiations held by Egypt, the United States and Israel. As long as negotiations are in progress it means that issues are being discussed and views exchanged and it also means that there is progress.

In an interview published today by the AKHIR SA'AH magazine, the Netherlands foreign minister says that the idea of a European initiative came from Britain, which is not the official spokesman. This, he says, does not mean that there will be European initiatives. [sentence as received] However, he adds, after 26 May and until Europe presents initiatives, there must be recourse to the United States.

Answering a question on the amendment of UN Security Council Resolution 242, Van der Klaauw says that the issue is now unquestionably one of a Palestinian people wanting a homeland, not just a group of Palestinian refugees. He adds: We know that the PLO exists but we do not know whether or not it represents all the Palestinians. I am a democratic man, and to say that the PLO represents all the Palestinians, this must be a result of free elections, as happened in Rhodesia and Tehran. Robert Mugabe now really represents the majority of Rhodesians.

The Netherlands foreign minister also says that there is no difference between the declared and undeclared policies of the Netherlands and the Nine.

He adds: On the question of settlements our position is clear. The settlements obstruct the peace process. We are against Israeli settlement in the occupied Arab territories and we are against the military rule and the occupation of territory by force. We support the full recognition of the Palestinian people's right to determine their own future and we say that all the peoples of the area should live within secure borders, including Israel.

CARTER'S AUSTERITY PROGRAM ELICITS CRITICISM

DW191025 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 19 Mar 80 p 6 DW

[Article signed WHP/FK: "Carter Program Triggers Great Sobering"]

[Excerpts] New York/Frankfurt--No doubt U.S. President Jimmy Carter with his new anti-inflation program has given the dollar a vitalizing injection. Having already gained more than 3 pfennigs against the German mark over the weekend, the U.S. currency at the beginning of the week reached a "fixed rate" of nearly DM1.99. And yet the initial euphoric reactions in the U.S. economy have given way to strong sobering.

Most experts feel that the U.S. president has placed emphasis on the wrong points. Thus by means of an oil import tax as a result of which the gasoline price will go up 10 cents a gallon, he proposes to reduce imports and thus push the world market price down, yet it is deemed hardly probably that U.S. motorists will be forced to be thrifty just because the gasoline price goes up by a few cents.

While the dollar is profiting from the enormous U.S. interest rate increases of the past several weeks, banks and experts in the United States are warning of potential interest rate warfare in the wake of the Carter program. The soaring dollar rate makes imports more expensive for the Federal Republic and for other countries; this is particularly true for the European oil imports which are paid for without exception in dollars. This is turn gives impetus to inflation and urges the banks of issue to take countermeasures. Ultimately, people are afraid. This may well trigger a worldwide recession.

Comment on Dollar Strength

DW191035 Munich SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG in German 19 Mar 80 p 4 DW

[Article signed Th.: "Awakened From the Gold Rush"]

[Text] A painful "oh" went through the financial world when by the end of the year the gold price for the first time in history surpassed the $500 (per ounce) limit. Since then the markets have been obviously reeling under a new gold rush. Such a phenomenon is not good not only because in such cases common sense is usually ruled out; much more important, such a phenomenon indicates a weakening confidence in money. Actually the further deterioration of the dollar which came dangerously close to an exchange rate of DM1 .70 took place rather parallel to the rapid increase of the gold price by more than $350.

Is some sobering up taking place now? Or is it just because of the extremely high interest rates in the United States that the gold price has again dropped under the $500 level, while the dollar is coming close to DM1.90 and may some day again reach DM2? Although the increasing exchange rate of the dollar creates some real problems at present, because it is again increasing import prices of raw materials and particularly oil, a sound dollar in the long run would be more advantageous for the world economy than an ailing dollar. However, such hopes are deceptive, just a glance at the high inflation rate and the equally high deficits in the U.S. budget suffice to indicate that the dollar remains very shaky.

But, after all, it has received a pause to catch its breath. That alone is worth a great deal. No other currency of the world, including the Deutsch mark, can take over the role of leading Western currency. [paragraph continues]

To some extent the development of the currency and gold markets must be viewed positively, particularly since in times of increasing German balance of payment deficits it cannot be negative for exports to be facilitated somewhat and for trips to foreign countries to become a little more expensive. But there is still no basis for the full recovery of the dollar, at least from the point of view of economic facts.

HUONKER INTERVIEWED ON FOREIGN, DOMESTIC POLICY ISSUES

DW171405 Saarbruecken Saarlaendischer Rundfunk Network in German 1705 GMT 15 Mar 80 DW

[Reporter Gasper interview with state secretary of the federal chancellor's office Gunter Huonker in Bonn--recorded]

[Text] [Question] After the return of the federal chancellor from the United States it looked as if relations between the United States and us were settled in the best way. Now one hears from the Bavarian minister-president in the United States that he feels some uneasiness and it is not he alone who feels uneasy. It is also the American President, and Federal Defense Minister Hans Apel had to call his colleague in Washington to make sure that everything was fine in the defense policy sector. Is that a game to confuse people? What does it look like really now?

[Answer] No doubts at all can exist with regard to the fact that the visit the federal chancellor has paid to the American president was a complete success. If the Bavarian minister-president now pretends that there were differences of opinion and divergences, that is not so. Naturally one will find now and again individual congressmen or senators who are not so well informed about the thoughts of President Carter, who do not know too well how the talks have been running, who say what Mr Strauss wants to hear with a view to making statements here in the election campaign which certainly will not serve German interests. I would like to add that it is an unusual event that a German politician criticizes his own government abroad. As an example illustrating how one ought to act, I can quote how the federal chancellor has defended Mr Strauss, who has been strongly attacked in Moscow. I find it regrettable, and certainly as not serving German interests, for Mr Strauss to act the way he is acting during his stay in the United States.

[Question] In the Washington talks and the talks that certainly have been held between the foreign office and the ambassador, there is still talk of trade restrictions vis-a-vis the Soviet Union. Will that issue remain on the table, or is it off the table for the Federal Government in view of the special situation here in Europe?

[Answer] I think that our American allies have very well understood that trade with the East for the Federal Republic--this pertains particularly but not only to trade with the USSR--is of special significance not merely because trade with the East, compared with the overall export of the Federal Republic, is much more important for us than for the United States. In addition, trade with East Bloc countries for us also has always had a political dimension within the framework of cooperation and detente policy. I think I can say that this position has been understood in the United States. I must add, however, that the Federal chancellor declared the FRG's preparedness, its natural preparedness, that whenever the so-called COCOM [NATO Coordinating Committee]-list comes up--the list containing strategically important goods whose export usually is not desired or whose export must be especially permitted--the Federal Government will be prepared to cooperate in an extension of the so-called COCOM list.

[Question] You just mentioned the keyword detente policy. The Leipzig Fair is some sort of barometer for the state of intra-German relations. To what extent is detente policy between the two German states endangered because of the international situation?

[Answer] I am happy to be able to say that relations between the two German states are good, very good, that talks are being continued. We listened with great attention to the speech by the chairman of the GDR State Council, the speech he gave at the Leipzig Fair. I may add that negotiations for the improvement of transport connections are being continued in a good atmosphere and with good prospects, so that we have good reason to assume that we will be able to conclude agreements within a not too distant future.

[Question] What does the international crisis cost us actually? The project aimed at creating property of workers and employees seems to have failed so far, as Federal Finance Minister Matthoefer said recently. In addition the tax package with its family policy parts is under discussion. My question: Is it certain that the tax package will be implemented the way it has been discussed and passed by the coalition, or must cuts be made?

[Answer] Let me comment on your question. Federal Finance Minister Matthoefer did not say that the creation of property has died or has been frozen. He has pointed out that in view of the difficult financial situation there are problems in connection with financing a law for the participation of workers in productive property. This project has not been frozen at all. On the contrary, the responsible department ministers continue to discuss it. There are just one or two points on which agreement remains to be achieved. I believe it is most likely that such a bill will be passed by the cabinet in this legislative period. As regards when this bill will be implemented, one must naturally very carefully take into consideration the general financial situation. Since the tax package with most of its parts will be implemented on 1 January 1981, it could mean that the law on the establishment of property will be implemented at a time later than 1981.

[Question] Is it certain that the tax package will be implemented as it stands on 1 January 1981?

[Answer] As regards the tax package problem I must point out that the cabinet stated in its session on 20 February that the Federal Government assumes that this bill will be implemented in its full extent. It was pointed out at that time, however, that of course financial repercussions could result from international developments. Such repercussions, such additional measures--I just name the assistance program for Turkey, for example--naturally could have an effect on the federal budget. But the Federal Government unequivocally believes that a resulting stronger burden for the federal budget first of all ought to be coped with by our legal financial-constitutional system. In other words: A changed distribution of the turnover tax revenue ought to put the Federal Government in a better position. I do not think much of speculations at the present time on whether the tax package will be implemented or not. And I think even less of entering into a discussion now on what parts could be implemented if the whole package could not be implemented.

[Question] But you have certainly not failed to see that the opposition has stated that it is prepared to cut the tax package it has presented if it were necessary and if sacrifices must be made. It also said that it would be equally prepared to cooperate if cuts should be made with regard to the coalition's tax package.

[Answer] I have heard that message very well, but I fail to believe it. If the opposition says here in Bonn that the citizens must make sacrifices, and if I know on the other hand what an unrestricted election campaign is being waged regarding issues of excessive taxation--if everybody is being promised almost every possible tax reduction--I believe that this is transparent double-dealing. It will not divert us from our plans. I can assure you that the submitted tax package will be most carefully fitted into the financial-economic framework that will be available when the bill is adopted.

'DIRECT ACTION' COMMANDOS FIRE ON MINISTER'S OFFICES

NC181750 Paris AFP in English 1745 GMT 18 Mar 80 NC

[Text] Paris, March 18 (AFP)--A couple today shot up a French minister's office and the dining room where he had just given an official lunch, but no one was hurt in the attack. The couple left leaflets protesting against French military intervention in Africa and calling for armed struggle against "the slaving state". About 30 bullets from automatic weapons holed armchairs and paintings in the offices of French Overseas Cooperation Minister Robert Galley. The dining room where he had just given a lunch and the ministry's press department were also hit.

The couple said they were members of the "Direct Action" commandos, and the leaflets said the operation was a protest against the French military presence in Africa "aimed at preserving the prosperity of the neocolonial trade in goods and labour."

Eye-witnesses said the attackers, a young man and a tall blonde woman, got out of a grey Mercedes and calmly fired rounds from the boulevard across the ministry gardens through iron railings. The woman's gun jammed, the witnesses said, but she took the time to fit a new clip and resume firing. The gardens are at the back of the ministry and are not guarded. Mr Galley made no statement on the attack. Police found the abandoned Mercedes later.

BANGLADESH FOREIGN MINISTER HOLDS TALKS ON AFGHAN CRISIS

BK181110 Dacca Domestic Service in English 0835 GMT 18 Mar 80 BK

[Text] Bangladesh and France have agreed to make concerted efforts to insure the Soviet withdrawal from Afghanistan. This was stated by Foreign Minister Prof Shamsul Haq after a meeting with his French counterpart Jean Francois-Poncet in Paris yesterday. The two countries also agreed that a political solution of the Afghan crisis should be found and foreign troops withdrawn immediately from there so that the Afghans can choose their own government freely. During the meeting the two foreign ministers also discussed the Western proposal for a neutral Afghanistan after the Soviet pullout. Prof Shamsul Haq reiterated that Bangladesh unequivocally supports the Soviet withdrawal from Afghanistan. He said Bangladesh is also willing to work in close cooperation with all peaceloving nations to eliminate all sources of friction, tension and conflict in the region. The French foreign minister already had similar talks with his counterparts from Pakistan and India.

BERNARD-RAYMOND ATTACKS THATCHER'S EEC BUDGET PROPOSALS

LD190902 Paris Domestic Service in French 0700 GMT 19 Mar 80 LD

[Excerpts] While nothing is settled in green Europe's quarrel and the heads of state and government are due to meet again at the end of the month in an attempt to solve the issue, the British Iron Lady, Mrs Thatcher, is raising the bid still higher by purely and simply threatening to pay only part of the English contribution to the Common Market budget. Interviewed by (Quentin Dickenson) this morning, the secretary of state to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Pierre Bernard-Raymond, hammered the nail home by replying sharply--make no mistake about that--to Mrs Thatcher, on behalf of Europe.

[Begin Bernard-Raymond recording] I consider that such statements are not likely to create a climate suitable for a compromise during the forthcoming European Council session.

In fact, I find it inadmissible, if I may say so, that a country which is asking for a reform of the basic rules of the Community at the financial level should, in the end, be threatening to interrupt the functioning of that Community if it does not obtain satisfaction. I believe that all the members of the Council wish to arrive at a solution but, as far as France is concerned, they also wish to defend, inch by inch, the fundamental principles of the Community, whether it be the principles of the Common Agricultural Policy or the financial principles, that is the principle of proper resources. [end recording]

MARCHAIS URGES HUMAN RIGHTS INQUIRY IN EEC COUNTRIES

LD171259 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 12 Mar 80 p 9 LD

[Apparent text of PCF Secretary General Marchais speech to European Assembly: "The PCF Secretary General's Speech"]

[Text] "On behalf of the PCF and associated deputies, I propose the setting up of an inquiry commission into human rights violations in the EC countries, apart from any within the EEC's institutions. This is the first such proposal since our assembly was elected. Certainly, the words 'human rights' have often been uttered here. No fewer than 89 proposals have been made on this matter in 8 months. There would be cause for rejoicing but for the fact that 88 of those 89 resolutions concerned countries outside the European Community. Thus you only seem interested in world human rights so as to stifle more effectively the daily violations of these rights in our own countries. We do not accept this hypocrisy. We call for this dossier finally to be opened now.

"We call on you, ladies and gentlemen of the German Social Democrats, Liberals and Christian Democrats, to clarify in particular the cases of the 4,000 of your country's citizens barred from public service by the disgraceful professional ban system, and the 2 million or so people subjected to police inquiries.

"We call on you, ladies and gentlemen of the British Conservative and Labor Parties, to clarify in particular the Northern Ireland situation where, because of you, there is today still a military occupation, torture and prison camps.

"We call on you, ladies and gentlemen of the French middle class, to clarify in particular the labor union and political rights violations, the discrimination against women, young people and immigrant workers, the fettering of the great information media and the plots against people in public life.

"Finally, we call for the suppression of the so-called security inquiries and the political-police questionnaires within the European institutions, and an end to all types of Community pressure on the peoples of the Third World. These are just a few of the many facts which justify our call for an emergency debate on our resolution in this assembly."

NUCLEAR SALE TO IRAQ SAID TO COMPLY WITH AGREEMENTS

[Text] Rome, March 19 (ANSA)--Italy's recent sale of nuclear technology to Iraq "strictly complied with the nonproliferation treaty and the London agreements", according to the head of the SNIA TECHINT nuclear laboratory suppliers. The company's director-general, Marino Fiorelli, issued a statement to the ANSA news agency last night in response to the news that the United States State Department has expressed formal apprehensions over the sale. According to an article in yesterday's New York TIMES, the Washington administration feared that the nuclear equipment sold to Iraq by Italy and not-better-defined "other countries" could be used to extract enough plutonium to produce a nuclear bomb in one year's time. Unidentified State Department sources were quoted in the article as saying that the so-called "hot cell" lab sold by Italy was "not necessary" for Iraq's current level of peaceful nuclear programming.

Refuting the assessment, Fiorelli told ANSA last night that the four laboratories Italy sold to Iraq with a February 1978 contract "could in no event be converted for military use". The four devices were described as a radio-chemical laboratory, delivered in April 1978, a laboratory for producing radioactive isotopes for use in medicine and industry, a chemical engineering laboratory and material-testing laboratory. The latter three are due for delivery at the end of this year. "No nuclear bomb has ever emerged from (a radio-chemistry laboratory) of this type", Fiorelli stated, "designed for university-level probes into the properties and reactions of radioactive substances". Fiorelli went on to say that the knowledge that may be obtained from the laboratory "did not represent a transfer of technology in the sense of the London agreement", since all of the motions that it may produce have already appeared in scientific literature and in international congresses and conventions.

The testing laboratory will be supplied by the state-held AMN company for the price of some $52 million. The SNIA TECHINT director-general also noted that Italy's national nuclear energy commission as well as the Italian industries were involved in the deal. He also specified that France was the only other country that sold nuclear technology to Iraq and was supplying the Middle Eastern state with a 30-megawatt nuclear research reactor that runs on enriched 235 uranium at 93 percent. Italian sources indicated here last night that CNEN [National Board for Nuclear Energy] has supplied the United States with extensive assurances about the impossibility of using the laboratories for military purposes. They also said that the Italian-Iraq contract contained the clauses of the London agreement barring nuclear technology exporters from (?selling) materials that may go to belligerent use. The same specialized sources also pointed out that Iraq has underwritten and ratified the nuclear nonproliferation treaty and is subject to inspection by the Vienna-based international nuclear energy agency.

RED BRIGADES CLAIM RESPONSIBILITY FOR SHOOTING JUDGE

AU181530 Rome ANSA in English 1520 GMT 18 Mar 80 AU

[Excerpt] Rome, March 18 (ANSA)--A 61-year-old Rome judge, Girolamo Minervini, was shot to death this morning aboard a crowded Rome city bus by two terrorist gunmen. Minervini was on his way to the civil and criminal court building when the killers shot him five times in the head and body. Two other passengers aboard the bus were wounded during the assault. The gunmen slipped through one of the doors, blocked in an open position by the driver, and fled the scene. An hour later, an anonymous telephone caller told ANSA headquarters in Rome, "We have executed Girolamo Minervini. A communique will follow and signed off, "Red Brigades".

WORLD ISLAMIC CONGRESS SECRETARY GENERAL ARRIVES IN TFSC

TA190729 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 0415 GMT 19 Mar 80 TA

[Text] World Islamic Congress Secretary General In'amullah Khan has said that his organization considers the problems of the Muslim Turkish Cypriot community as its own. In'amullah Khan arrived in Cyprus last night to attend the 8th meeting of the World Islamic Congress, which will begin in Magusa [Famagusta] on 23 March. In a statement at Ercan State Airport, In'amullah Khan said that his organization, which was in favor of implementing justice when the attacks started against the Turkish Cypriots, was the first one to raise its voice in saying that the Turkish Cypriot community should be protected. He noted that his organization favors the peaceful and just solution of all political, economic, social and cultural problems in the world. Pointing out that the World Islamic Congress came to the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus in a bid to conduct concrete work and not to engage in propaganda, In'amullah Khan expressed the conviction that this work will be successful.

In his statement, the Singapore representative Haji Muhammad Khan, who arrived in Cyprus together with the secretary general of the World Islamic Congress, said that, apart from the congress' work, he will try to determine how and in what fields his country can assist the Federated State. Recalling that the Muslim Turkish Cypriot community has proved to the world that it can stand on its own feet and defend its rights, Haji Muhammad Khan added that he brought assurances of support from his country.

Over 40 Islamic countries and 7 Islamic organizations are expected to participate in the 8th Congress, which will be held between 23 and 27 March in Magusa. President Rauf Denktas will make the opening speech of the congress, which will be chaired by the president of the World Islamic Congress. The problems of Islam, peace and humanity as well as threats directed against the Islamic world, the problems of Muslim minorities in the world and the strengthening of the solidarity of the Islamic world will be discussed during the congress. A joint communique is expected to be issued at the end of the congress.

Meets With Denktas

TA190946 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 0900 GMT 19 Mar 80 TA

[Text] President Rauf Denktas received today the secretary general of the World Islamic Congress, In'amullah Khan, and conferred with him for some time. Also attending the meeting were the deputy secretary general of the World Islamic Congress, Islamullah Khan, and the Singapore representative, Haji Muhammad Khan, who will participate in the congress. In a speech during the meeting, Denktas expressed the belief that the 8th meeting of the World Islamic Congress to be held in Magusa [Famagusta] will yield important results for the Islamic world as well as for world peace. Recalling that, as an old Islamic institution, the World Islamic Congress is closely interested in the problems of the Islamic world and world peace, Denktas said that the congress was the first organization which held the first meeting and made the first decision regarding the Cyprus issue and defended the Turkish Cypriots before the Islamic countries. Pointing out that the World Islamic Congress assisted the Turkish Cypriots in voicing their opinion in the Islamic world, Denktas said: Northern Cyprus is the [Islamic countries'] country as well. It is their soil as well. The fact that the voice of Islam is heard from this soil, on which martyr's blood has been shed, and that such a conference is being held to strengthen further the unity of Islam, constitute a positive step for all of us. It is an event which will gladden the souls of our martyrs. I wish the congress success. In his statement, In'amullah Khan noted that the cause of the Turkish Cypriot community is a just cause. He added that the World Islamic Congress is in favor of a realistic and just world peace.

DENKTAS ON STATUS OF TFSC, PROSPECTS FOR TALKS

NC191100 Nicosia Turkish Cypriot NEWS BULLETIN in English 19 Mar 80 pp 1,4 NC

[Text] The president of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus, Mr Rauf R. Denktas, has pointed out that the TFSC is as independent as the Greek Cypriot administration of south Cyprus, and said that intercommunal talks can be resumed once the Greek Cypriot administration denounces the latest UN resolution on Cyprus. Asked by reporters yesterday morning to comment on press reports that the Greek Cypriot Kiprianou regime of south Cyprus had lodged a complaint to the UN about the statement he made at Ercan [Tymbou] State Airport last Saturday, President Denktas said:

"The Turkish Cypriot people living in the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus have their own government within the framework of their constitution approved by a referendum quite separate from the Greek Cypriots and their administration is as independent as that of the administration of south Cyprus. If the Greek Cypriot side, who expelled through use of force the Turkish Cypriot cofounder partners of the republic from the joint legitimate government in 1963 and who have waged their ruthless aggression against us for 11 years, lodge a complaint to the United Nations about my latest statement, this will only please me. Because such a complaint will provide us the opportunity to bring the facts to the notice of the UN members.

"Those who launched their armed aggression and were helped and abetted by Greece in order to Hellenize Cyprus believe that they have usurped the legitimate government, and it will give us new pleasure to prove that they are not masters of it. The Greek Cypriot leadership which has made it a habit to present themselves as the 'government' of Cyprus, do not want to acknowledge the existence in Cyprus of the Turkish Cypriot people and the fact that these people have their own state and government. However, while they were planning to destroy, through use of force, the bicommunal partnership government, they should have realised that one of the alternatives they would have encountered could be for the Turkish Cypriot partner to master its own rights. They should have thought of this. As a result of the Greek Cypriot aggression and Greek occupation of Cyprus from 1963 until 1974, there are in Cyprus today two states and two governments. They are equal in every respect. The way to come together in a federation can be found by acknowledging this open fact."

Asked whether the intercommunal talks can be resumed, President Denktas said: "The latest UN General Assembly resolution denies the existence of the Turkish Cypriot people in Cyprus and is nothing but a repetition of Greek Cypriot propaganda. We rejected this resolution. We declared both before and after its adoption that this resolution would impede the resumption of the intercommunal talks. The formation of a committee within the framework of this resolution is not possible without our consent. A committee to be formed without our consent would be stillborn and cannot be conducive to a Cyprus settlement. As a matter of fact, a committee to be formed within the framework of that resolution can never have the competence or identity that would be helpful to a Cyprus settlement.

"To push this resolution aside is within the means of the Greek Cypriot leadership who strived and deceived the world for its adoption. We are still awaiting for them to do so. Otherwise, initiatives to be launched by Mr Waldheim within the framework of the program envisaged by this resolution cannot yield results, because we have informed him and the world in advance that we could not consent to the holding of talks even under the shadow of such a resolution. This resolution which regards the Greek Cypriot administration as the legitimate 'Government' of Cyprus, contradicts every principle of the summit meetings. Since the intercommunal talks are envisaged to be held within the framework of the summit meetings, it is up to the Greek Cypriot leadership to make this resolution ineffective."

TO VIMA DISCLOSES CONTENTS OF ROGERS' PLAN ON REINTEGRATION

[By TO VIMA Washington correspondent Yiannis Roubatis]

[Text] Washington, 15 March--The course of negotiations for Greece's return to the NATO military wing has been cloaked with absolute secrecy by both the Greek and the allied sides. From the first moment discussions began between the Greek Government and the NATO supreme command for the conclusion of an agreement which would map out Greece's return to the NATO unified military structure, nothing was officially announced about the terms Greece would have to accept in order to make its return to the Atlantic Alliance possible.

In the letter on 28 August 1974 in which he announced his decision to "withdraw from the NATO military wing but remain a member of the alliance," Prime Minister Karamanlis stated that "Greek national sovereignty" had been limited because of Greece's participation in NATO and the presence of foreign military installations and facilities on Greek soil (see TO VIMA 28 August 1979). At the same time, the Greek prime minister assured the Greek people that "our withdrawal from the NATO military wing was final and irrevocable."

The Greek Government's decision caused various reactions within the alliance. Finally, the U.S. position prevailed among the various views that were expressed on NATO reaction to the Greek withdrawal. According to this viewpoint, the initiative for reintegration should be left to the Greeks. Despite all the hesitations of Karamanlis on the limitation of Greek national sovereignty emanating from Greece's participation in NATO and despite all his assurances that the withdrawal was "final and irrevocable," the Greek Government asked to return to NATO 14 months after the second Turkish invasion of Cyprus.

According to the Greek viewpoint, the return should be made on the basis of the Norwegian model, that is, all Greek military forces should be under national control in peacetime and gradually pass to allied control depending on the dangers NATO would face in the event of a clash. NATO, however, did not hasten to adopt the Greek positions. Almost 3 years passed before the summer of 1978 when the Haig-Davos agreement finally was reached.

The Agreements, Characteristics

There were two main characteristics of this agreement: First, the agreement did not have a final character. In accordance with the NATO position, the agreement offered "a feasible framework for Greece's return to the NATO unified military structure under temporary military arrangements until such time as the remaining political issues were finally resolved." (see TO VIMA, Sunday, 10 February 1978).

Second, Greece accepted the return under conditions that not only restored but even improved for NATO the "status quo ante," that is, the situation which was in force prior to Greece's withdrawal from NATO in August 1974. Furthermore, the Norwegian model was abandoned, since part of the Greek military forces, for operational reasons, would be under the command of the supreme NATO commander even in peacetime.

The Haig-Davos agreement also contained another basic Greek concession which was destined to play a significant role in the next 2 years. Greece had accepted that its possible return to NATO did not create a precedent for the definition of boundaries for Aegean air defense. In July 1978, the Greek Government agreed "to discuss" the definition of these boundaries in the future.

The NATO International Military Staff (IMS) [acronym in English] in August 1978 unanimously consented to the agreement. In an initial assessment of the agreement, the alliance's Military Committee decided that it constituted a positive step. The Turkish representative expressed certain reservations and the representative of Luxembourg asked some questions, but ultimately the committee's decision on the agreement was issued without dissent. In a second meeting of the committee a few days later, a more detailed assessment of the agreement was made. All countries accepted that the agreement was positive. Turkey, however, disagreed. The new decision that was issued by the Military Committee contained the minority opinion, that is, of Turkey.

The Turkish representative announced to the committee that, so that Turkey might give its consent to Greece's return to NATO, first a new status for the allied collective defense of Aegean airspace should be created. In addition, Turkey demanded that Greece accept the reinstatement of the zones of responsibility and the adoption of the concept of task forces for the naval defense of the Aegean. The Turkish position on this point was strengthened by the fact that in May 1977 the defense ministers of NATO member-countries had agreed with the viewpoint that the creation of task forces constituted the most effective solution for allied defense of the Mediterranean and the Aegean. Thus, new problems were created in October 1978 for Greece's return to NATO by Turkish intransigence and Greek eagerness to "discuss" the definition of boundaries for Aegean air defense.

The basic principle defining Turkish positions on the settlement of boundaries for command and control in the Aegean is contained in the following sentence: "Either new command boundaries or no boundaries." Since October 1978, this principle has been adopted absolutely by the alliance, too, and by the basic element in NATO, the United States.

The alliance and the United States had no reason in October 1978 to exert pressure on Turkey to be more conciliatory. In August and September 1978, the U.S. House of Representatives and Senate lifted the arms "embargo" against Turkey with only a tepid and delayed Greek reaction. More significantly, however, in early October a CIA report on Greece and Turkey concluded that "the Karamanlis government has so obviously and unreservedly supported the West that it has an acquired political interest in lessening the significance of differences in negotiations with the United States and the alliance."

The same report stressed that should there be problems for the Americans in the eastern Mediterranean after the lifting of the "embargo," these would emanate from Turkey and not Greece.

A new meeting was held between Generals Haig and Davos on 2 March 1979. The Greek side made concessions hoping that this would lead to some Turkish conciliation. Specifically, the Greek Government announced to NATO that it accepted the reduction of national airspace for NATO military purposes to 6 nautical miles, instead of 10. On 12 March, General Haig met in Ankara with Turkish General Evren and informed him of the new Greek concession. However, Turkey insisted that in order to consider the Greek concession officially it should be included in a new agreement different from that of July 1978.

The Meeting in Verona

In the secret meeting between Haig and Davos that was held on 6 May at the Verona airport in Italy inside the personal plane of General Haig, the chief of the NATO military forces in Europe handed to General Davos the new proposals for return. These proposals unreservedly adopted the Turkish position on the total renegotiation of zones of responsibility in the Aegean. (See TO VIMA, Sunday, 20 May 1979.) With these proposals NATO accepted the cancellation of everything that had been in force regarding military control in the Aegean prior to August 1974.

The Verona plan adopted the two basic aims of the Turks, namely: the establishment of new boundaries for the command and control of air defense in the Aegean and the establishment of task forces [last two words in English] for the naval defense of the Aegean. Furthermore, the reduction of Greek national air space to 6 miles for NATO military purposes and the increase of Turkish influence in the Aegean was made official with the proposals.

This plan caused the Greek Government to react by finally rejecting it. However, General Haig prepared a new plan in cooperation with Admiral Shear, commander of allied forces in the Naples headquarters. On 29 May, NATO submitted this plan to the Greek Government.

How the "Plan" Changed

The plan was merely a variation of the Verona plan and contained no improvement in the conditions under which Greece could return to NATO. Most "improvements" had been made in the rhetorical expression of the conditions. The plan created a special status in the Aegean because it proposed new arrangements for the exchange of information (cross-tell) [previous two words in English]. Specifically, paragraph 3A proposed the creation of a new zone for the exchange of information which would include the entire national and international airspace contained within the eastern and northern coast of mainland Greece and the northern and western coast of mainland Turkey in the Aegean, up to the boundaries reached by NATO radar in the south. The exchange of information between Greece and Turkey within this zone would be "complete and without restriction." That is, Greece should inform Turkey about the movement of planes even inside Greek national airspace, which would be included in this new zone.

Furthermore, the new proposals referred only to the NATO radar system (NADGE [NATO Air Defense Ground Environment System] integrated sources) [previous three words in English] which meant that Greek national radar would play no role in the allied defense of the Aegean.

Paragraph 3C of the plan established a new center for air operations (ARAOC) [acronym published in English] which would have commanders from third countries. They would be the ones who would decide on the defense of the national and international areas lying in the new zone that was being created.

Paragraph 5 of the plan stated that planning, exercise, command and control and the method of operations of allied naval forces in the Aegean would be decided upon by the chief of the NATO headquarters in Naples who would make decisions taking into consideration "the operational needs and interests of the forces" of Turkey and Greece. Thus, even the "improved" variation of the Verona plan was adopting the two basic Turkish aims in the Aegean: new limits for command and control for air defense and implementation of the concept of task forces for Aegean naval defense.

Haig's Letters

On 30 May 1979, Haig sent a letter to General Davos containing the following paragraph which constitutes a revealing assessment of the "improved" plan:

"After a lot of thought and many hours of study by Admiral Shear, myself and our staffs, we have reached the conclusion that this proposal is simultaneously reasonable and equitable as a temporary solution. Indisputably, the proposal does not give to the interested parties all the things they would have liked to achieve. It is clear that this proposal (about the return) does not directly deal with the issue of boundaries (command and control), nor does it directly dispute these boundaries. More precisely, the method for approaching the problem here is to avoid having the final settlement of this complex issue as a prerequisite for Greece's immediate return to the unified military structure (of NATO)."

Haig stressed in his letter that "if Greece is prepared to accept the clarifications, we (note: that is, NATO) shall exert pressure on General Evren for a favorable reply from the Turkish side."

It seems that the two plans which Haig had submitted in May for Greece's return to NATO created fundamental anxiety for the Greek Government concerning the further course of negotiations with NATO. In a letter to Haig in the middle of June 1979, General Davos asked that experts from NATO headquarters in Belgium and Italy be sent to Greece to clarify a number of Greek questions.

On 27 June, General Haig sent General Davos a long reply consisting of five closely written pages. Two days later, Haig surrendered his duties to the new chief of military forces in Europe, U.S. General Bernard Rogers.

"I must agree with you," Haig wrote to General Davos, "that it would be very useful to send experts to Athens to give clarifications on the anxiety you expressed in your letter dated 15 June 1979. Colonel (Papageorge) from my general staff and Admiral Byrd from Admiral Shear's general staff, whom you know, will be available to meet with your general staff at any time or place of your choosing."

Referring to the plan for reintegration, Haig wrote to the Greek general that "although perhaps it does not constitute an ideal final solution...it offers a workable and equitable temporary military arrangement which will allow the immediate return of Greece to the NATO unified military structure. There should be no insurmountable difficulties for the implementation of these proposals."

The June Meeting

According to U.S. military sources in Washington, General Davos met with Haig on 29 June after the ceremony when Rogers assumed his duties as chief of NATO forces. From the relevant U.S. side memoirs, to which these sources referred, it emerges that Haig insisted that the negotiations on reintegration should continue at the military level and should not proceed at the political level. Haig reiterated many of the points which he had mentioned in his letter 2 days earlier and stressed that "the opportunity should not be lost" for Greece's return to NATO.

It seems the U.S. general was surprised by the Greek general's tough position, especially by General Davos' reference to the "expediencies which had led to the submission of the Verona plan." The oral explanations which Haig gave did not improve the plan he had submitted on 29 May. On the contrary, those clarifications confirmed the alliance's intention to proceed with the complete refutation of the Haig-Davos agreement of July 1978.

The confrontation by the alliance of the problem of Greece's return to NATO in a way that would infringe on Greek national interests, which to that moment even Turkey had not disputed, created a new atmosphere on part of the Greek Government. The Haig-Davos meeting on 29 June caused such concern to the alliance and the U.S. Government that for the second time in the last 4 years U.S. officials began to demand guarantees that, regardless of what happened regarding reintegration, facilities for U.S. forces in Greece would continue. These guarantees were given by leading members of New Democracy.

A New Variation

The NATO experts General Davos requested arrived in Greece on 10 September. Their replies to the 27 Greek questions did not change the basic points of Haig's plans. On 8 November 1979, General Rogers submitted another variation on the Verona plan. [paragraph continues]

According to this variation there would be no boundaries at all to define the zones of responsibility of Greek and Turkish tactical air forces (six ATAF and seven ATAF), [terms in English]- and the two allied tactical air force headquarters (the Izmir headquarters which already existed and the headquarters at Larisa which would be established) would come under the allied headquarters in Naples. The allied chief in Naples would decide which air force would undertake operations in the Aegean airspace. That is, in essence the concept of task forces would create for the airspace a situation similar to the one that had been established in the naval defense of the Aegean. This variation was not accepted by the Greek Government.

The Political Disagreement

The most recent plan for Greece's return to the NATO military wing was submitted by General Rogers to the Greek Government on 11 February. This plan is perhaps the most undisguisedly pro-Turkish plan that has thus far been prepared. In the plan's preamble the settlement of Greek-Turkish differences on bilateral issues is posed by NATO as a prerequisite for Greece's final return to the alliance. The preamble stresses that until bilateral issues between Greece and Turkey are resolved, Greece's return will be only temporary. As long as these differences are not resolved, Greece's return is neither possible nor desirable, the preamble of the Rogers plan stipulates.

For the first time since 1975, discussions between NATO and Greece were presented as a part of the more general Greek-Turkish differences. Furthermore, for the first time all boundaries of command and control in the airspace and on the sea's surface were completely disputed. Rogers writes in the preamble: "For the time being, the issue of boundaries is set aside."

What They Envisage

The nine articles which compose the plan radically change everything that had been agreed upon between Haig and Davos in July 1978.

The first article proposes the establishment of a new zone of responsibility for the exchange of information on air defense, taking as a basis a line consisting of broken lines which follow vertically the Athens FIR line; this zone consists of the airspace which extends 20 miles east toward Turkey and 40 miles west toward continental Greece. This line appears for the first time and at certain points it divides Greek islands in two. At certain other points this line more than covers the line which the Turks had drawn with NOTAM 714.

The second article states that only the radars of the NATO system will be used for the exchange of military information on the airspace. For many years this has been one of Turkey's basic aims. By ignoring the contributions of the Greek national radar system Rogers' proposals strengthen Turkish claims that the eastern Aegean is not covered by radar and strengthen the Turkish objective of having the coverage of this area entrusted to NATO system radars on Turkish soil.

The third article refers to the decision of the NATO Military Committee known as MC 66/1. This decision states that NATO European airspace should coincide with the territorial land and sea areas of alliance members. The article's reference to "respect" by Greece of MC 66/1 is for Greece to officially repeat the concession it made in March 1979 when it limited national airspace from 10 to 6 miles for NATO military purposes.

The fourth article concerns Aegean air defense. According to the article, air defense will be implemented in accordance with the prevailing NATO operational air defense plan. There are four ways in which operations can be conducted in the airspace contained by the new zone created by General Rogers' plan:

Greek air forces can continue to be under Greek command regardless of where they may be in the zone. The Turkish forces can continue to be under Turkish command. Greek forces can be placed under Turkish command when they are in the part of the area that will be under Turkish control, and finally, Turkish forces can be placed under Greek command in the part of the zone that will be under Greek control.

The Aegean for NATO

According to the plan, because the last two solutions "cannot possibly be implemented at present," the first two solutions will be implemented. Thus, Turkish planes will be able to enter and leave the Aegean international area without any Greek control. The way in which this zone was created makes inevitable the flight of Turkish planes over the Greek national area without the need to request permission from Greece.

The fifth article refers to the mutual lifting by Greece and Turkey of NOTAMs 714 and 1157.

The sixth, seventh and eighth articles specify the way in which naval defense in the Aegean will be implemented. Once again these articles adopt the task force [last two words in English upper case] concept and legally dispute completely the boundaries of responsibility of the allied command for the eastern Mediterranean (COMEDEAST) [last word in English] stationed in Athens under a Greek commander. According to the plan, the naval headquarters in Naples will decide on Aegean defense, taking into consideration "yardsticks of operational interest" by Greece and Turkey.

These articles contain an entirely new point. Because of "technical reasons" which are not mentioned but which make it impossible for Turkish forces stationed in the Black Sea to hold exercises there, Turkish forces will be allowed to hold exercises throughout the Aegean under a Turkish commander.

The ninth and last article of the Rogers plan mentions that nothing of what will be agreed upon will be able to limit the NATO right to unrestricted use of the land, sea and air of the Aegean region. It adds that the arrangements which are being proposed will not limit the sovereign rights of the alliance's member-countries. If one takes into consideration the total of the proposals, this last clarification is almost ridiculous.

The Greek Government rejected the Rogers proposals in the last half of February. At the end of last week General Rogers went to Washington to discuss the situation in NATO's southeast wing with the U.S. Pentagon and the State Department.

According to other reports from Brussels, Rogers has advised the Greek Government that he will have nothing new to report prior to 15 March. Last Tuesday [11 March 1980], Rogers returned to NATO headquarters in Brussels. It has not yet been learned whether the Greek Government's refusal to return to the NATO military wing unless a satisfactory solution has been found has influenced a possible new plan for reintegration. The cloak of absolute secrecy which has surrounded the course of negotiations since 1975 continues even today to surround the things which are happening and which will have decisive repercussions on our country's future.

KARAMANLIS LETTER TO CARTER ON REINTEGRATION REPORTED

AT181325 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 18 Mar 80 pp 1, 2 AT

[By TO VIMA Washington correspondent Yiannis Roubatis]

[Text] Washington, 17 March--Citing the "danger" that the Greek opposition, generally, and PASOK, specifically, will "exploit" the impasse in the negotiations on Greece's return to the NATO military wing, on at least two occasions Prime Minister Karamanlis asked the help of the U.S. Government in resolving outstanding issues both in Greek relations with the alliance and in bilateral Greek-U.S. issues.

The U.S. Government, which some time ago had been indirectly informed about the Greek prime minister's uneasiness regarding NATO and the U.S. bases in Greece, had already asked for assurances from the "Atlantic" wing of the Greek ministers that any Greek decision connected with a complete withdrawal from the military and possibly political wing of NATO would not mean the closure of U.S. bases in Greece. There are indications that these guarantees have been given by leading members of New Democracy without this implying that the guarantees were given with Karamanlis' knowledge.

In a letter transmitted to Carter by the Greek ambassador in Washington, Tzounis, on 12 October 1979, Karamanlis explained to the U.S. President that he was not prepared to let the opposition benefit from Greece's withdrawal from NATO "and resultant severance of U.S. facilities" in Greece. Karamanlis asked President Carter to "help him deal with the problems" in a way that would prove the good will of the United States and the alliance.

"You understand that if you do not have to deal with me you will have to deal with the opposition, the ideas of which, as Papandreou has repeatedly expressed them, are known to you," Karamanlis wrote to President Carter. The Greek prime minister stressed that the United States did not react to the Turkish invasion of Cyprus and that with its activities since 1974 it has shown that "it is prepared to help Turkey ignore Greek rights and Greece's strategic significance, both bilaterally and within the alliance."
